The learned counsel for the respondent argued, and we think correctly, that the present case ought to de decided according to English law. Act No. XI of 1855 of the Governor General in Council, s. 4, which applies only to cases under English law, secures to bona fide holders under defective titles the value [81] of buildings erected or improvements made by them in the belief that they had an estate in fee simple or other absolute estate. That Act has, by Act XV of 1874, s. 3, been declared to be in force in the whole of British India, except the scheduled districts. The appellants, however, wish to retain possession of the property in dispute, in preference to being paid the value of the buildings erected on the land. In the case of Beni Madhab Banerjee v. Jai Krishna (1), which came before Sir Barnes Peacock, C.J., and two other Judges in 1869, the first appellate Court (Kemp, J., and Glovey, J.) being divided in opinion, Sir Barnes Peacock, who agreed with Mr. Justice Kemp, said that that learned Judge thought that, in equity, the plaintiff was not entitled to turn the defendant out of the lands, because he stood by and saw them erecting pucka buildings on the land without any objection whatever. Sir Barnes Peacock then said that, if the plaintiff allowed the defendants to erect pucka buildings upon the land without objecting, it appeared to him that he was bound in the same way, in equity, as if he had granted them a potta with the privilege of building pucka houses on the land, and he thought that Mr. Justice Kemp was right in holding that the plaintiff was precluded by his conduct from turning the defendants out of possession. He then said: "Independently of this, speaking for myself, I should say that if one man grants a tenure for another for the purpose of living on the land, that tenure, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, would be assignable. I know of no law which prohibits a man who gets land for the purpose of building from assigning his interest in it to another. By assigning his interest he does not necessarily get rid of his liability to pay the rent reserved." The two other Judges concurring, Mr. Justice Kemp's decision was affirmed. That decision was approved of and followed in Lalla Gopi Chand v. Liakut Hossein (2).

In Gungadhur Shikdar v. Ayimuddin Shah Biswas (1), decided in 1882 by Garth, C. J., and Mitter, J., where it was conceded that the land in dispute was not let for agricultural purposes, [82] and it was found that after the grant (whatever it was) buildings of a substantial character were erected some sixty years ago by the defendant's ancestors, and that they and their ancestors had lived there ever since, the Court held that under these circumstances they thought that the Courts below were at liberty to presume, if they thought fit, that the land was granted for building purposes, and that the grant itself was of a permanent character. The Court added that this had been explained in several recent cases, and, amongst others, in the case of Prosunno Coomar Chatterjee v. Jagun Nath Bysack (2).

We are of opinion that there is in the present case evidence from which the Court can reasonably presume that the land was granted in or about 1866 to Tricum Sewji for building purposes. It was a small plot of ground facing the Arthur Road, which, though doubtless marked out, and its direction well known, was not, as, in answer to a question put by us to the Municipal Commissioner for the City of Bombay, we have been courteously informed by him, actually made until 1868. The position of the ground, and the rent reserved, preclude any idea that it was let for agricultural purposes. In that locality and on the other portions of the Flats in and near the centre of that part of the island, which, as is well known, until the erection of the Hornby Vellard during the time of Mr. Willian Hornby (who was Governor of Bombay from 1776 to 1784), which closed the main breach of the sea from Mahalaxmi to Love Grove, and rescued the Flats from being flooded each tide with salt water, only rice crops could be grown. The soil is bad, and unless a layer of earth be placed over it, little else than rice can be cultivated.

Tukaram Moroji must have seen, and knowing what he had granted, of course made no objection to Tricum erecting the building on the ground. Even if the Court were not justified in holding that the grant was originally for building purposes, the fact that the building which Tricum Sewji placed upon the ground was not objected to by Tukaram, who, according to his son's evidence, lived until 1874, or since then by his son, and [83] that he and his son received the rent, at first yearly, but afterwards at shorter intervals until nearly twenty-five years afterwards, by his attorney's letter of the 30th September, 1891, (Ex. XI) the respondent treated the appellants as his monthly tenants and required them to vacate on the 1st November, 1891, shows that the position which he then took up was a mistaken one, and that, by his father's and his own conduct, he was, and is, precluded from recovering the land and premises from the appellants in the manner he seeks.

The decree, therefore, dismissing the suit with costs must be reversed, and in lieu thereof this Court passes a decree in favour of the appellants in terms of paragraph (a) of the prayer of the plaint. (His Lordship read the paragraph and continued.) The respondent must deliver forthwith to the appellants possession of the land and premises, of which on or about the 13th August, 1892, he was put in possession under the decree in suit No. 25011 of 1891 passed by the Bombay Court of Small Causes. And in the event of parties not agreeing, there must be a reference to the Commissioner of this Court to take an account of the rents and profits received by the respondent since he was so put in possession, which, after making all

PUNDLIK (Original Plaintiff), Appellant v. ACHUT (Original Defendant), *Respondent. [10th January, 1893.]

Limitation—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), s. 5—Review of judgment—Application for review—Sufficient cause for delay in filing an appeal.

Though under certain circumstances the presentation of an application for review may be considered as sufficient cause for delay in filing an appeal, the appellant is bound to satisfy the Court that such circumstances did exist in his case, and that he had sufficient cause for not presenting the appeal within the prescribed period.

The plaintiff obtained a decree for possession of certain land in the Court of first instance. This decree was reversed by the appellate Court on 28th October, 1890. The plaintiff applied for a review of judgment of the appellate Court on 27th January, 1891. The petition of review was rejected on 18th March, 1891. Thereupon the plaintiff preferred a second appeal to the High Court on 13th April, 1891.

Held, that the second appeal was time-barred. The time taken in prosecuting the application for review could not be deducted in calculating the period of limitation, as the plaintiff had not shown that he had reasonable grounds for asking for a review.

[F., 33 C. 1323=3 C. L. J. 545 (546)=10 C. W. N. 986; 1 L. B. R. 313 (314).]

THIS was a second appeal from the decision of Arthur H. Unwin, District Judge of Kanara, in appeals Nos. 169 and 192 of 1890 of the district file.

The plaintiff sued to eject the defendant from the lands in dispute, alleging that defendant was a trespasser in wrongful possession.

The Court of first instance passed a decree awarding possession to the plaintiff as prayed for.

This decree was reversed, and plaintiff's claim was rejected, on appeal, on 28th October, 1890.

On 27th January, 1891, the plaintiff applied for a review of the judgment of the appellate Court. The petition of review was rejected on 18th March, 1891.

* Second Appeal, No. 511 of 1891.

Thereupon plaintiff preferred a second appeal to the High Court on 13th April, 1891.

At the hearing of the appeal the respondent's pleader raised a preliminary objection that the appeal was time-barred, having [85] been filed more than 90 days after the date of the lower appellate Court's decree.

Shamrao Vithal (with him N. G. Chandavarkar), for appellant.—We applied for a review of the lower Court's judgment on the ground of the discovery of new evidence. The time occupied in the review should be excluded from computation—Trimbakraj v. The General Traffic Manager of the G. I. P. Railway Company (1).

Ghanasham Nilkanth, for respondent.—The mere presentation of a petition of review is not a sufficient reason for filing an appeal beyond time. The appellant must show that he had reasonable grounds for asking for a review. This he has not done in the present case. There is nothing to show that the lower Court was wrong in refusing to grant a review. The delay in filing the appeal should not, therefore, be excused.

JUDGMENT.

CANDY, J.—We think that the appellant in this case has failed to show that he had reasonable grounds for asking for a review and, therefore, the time taken in prosecuting the application for review cannot be deducted in calculating the period of limitation, and thus the present appeal is time barred. The only evidence before us in regard to this matter is a copy of the order of the District Judge rejecting the application for review on the ground that no sufficient reason had been shown why the evidence referred to in the application was not adduced at the original hearing of the suit, while there was "every reason why, if relevant, it should have been adduced before all other." No copy of the application for review has been referred to before us, nor has any attempt been made to show when the fresh evidence was discovered, and how long afterwards the application was made, or that the District Judge was in error in the strong opinion which he expressed.

The ruling in Trimbakraj v. The General Traffic Manager of the G. I.P. Railway Company (1) shows that, under certain circumstances, the presentation of an application for review may be considered as sufficient cause for delay in filing an appeal. But in the present case we do not think that such circumstances are proved to exist. Under the proviso to Rule 9 (VI) of [86] chap. I of the High Court Rules, it was incumbent on appellant to be prepared to satisfy the Court that he had sufficient cause for not presenting his appeal within the time prescribed by law. This he has not done, and his appeal must be dismissed. All costs on appellant.

Appeal dismissed.

Before Sir Charles Sargent, Kt., Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Candy.

LOMBA GOMAJI (Original Plaintiff), Appellant v. VISHVANATH AMRIT TILVANKAR (Original Defendant), *Respondent.

Mortgage—Sale of property subject to a mortgage in execution of a money decree obtained by plaintiff against mortgagor—Subsequent mortgage of same property by original mortgagor and first mortgagee paid off—Possession taken by new mortgagee—Suit for possession by plaintiff as purchaser in execution—Right of purchaser to recover—Right of second mortgagee to be repaid his advances by plaintiff keeping alive the first mortgage.

On the 10th June, 1885, Tikaram mortgaged the property in dispute to Ganpat along with some other property. In 1886 the plaintiff obtained a money decree against Tikaram and in execution of his decree he sold the property in dispute and obtained a certificate of sale on the 1st November, 1886.

On the 13th February, 1888. Tikaram mortgaged the property, in dispute along with other property to the defendant and paid off Ganpat's mortgage. Ganpat thereupon returned the mortgage-deed to Tikaram with a receipt for payment endorsed. After payment of Ganpat's mortgage the defendant took possession of the property. In July, 1888, Tikaram executed a further mortgage of the property to the defendant for Rs. 8,000.

On the 30th August, 1888, the plaintiff having attempted to take possession was obstructed by the defendant. Thereupon the plaintiff brought this suit for possession.

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to possession. The mortgage to the defendant was subsequent to the plaintiff's purchase of the equity of redemption. The defendant did not know of that purchase. He took the mortgage from Tikaram, to whom he advanced the money to pay off the previous mortgage to Ganpat. There was nothing to show that there was any intention to keep Ganpat's mortgage alive in favour of the defendant.

Gokul Doss v. Rambux (1) distinguished.

Held, also, that as plaintiff was seeking to recover property which but for the defendant's payment to Ganpat would have been burdened with Ganpat's mortgage, [87] and as the defendant when he advanced the money to Tikaram to pay off that mortgage did not know that Tikaram was no longer the owner of the equity of redemption, the plaintiff should give credit to the defendant for the sum paid by him; but as the defendant's mortgage comprised other properties besides the one in dispute, the plaintiff should recover possession on payment to the defendant of a proportionate part of Ganpat's mortgage-debt having regard to the value of the property in dispute and that of the other mortgaged properties.

SECOND appeal from the decision of T. Hart-Davies, Assistant Judge of Poona.

On the 10th June, 1885, one Tikaram Lachhiram mortgaged the property in question with other properties to Ganpat Dalsaram for Rs. 500. The mortgagee was given possession.

On the 18th June, 1886, the plaintiff, who had obtained a money decree against Tikaram (the mortgagor), caused the mortgaged property to be sold in execution, and at the sale himself became the purchaser. The sale to him was confirmed in November, 1886.

* Second Appeal No. 454 of 1891.

(1) 11 I.A. 126.

(2) 2 I.A. 7.

On the 13th February, 1888, Tikaram executed a mortgage of the property in dispute along with other properties to the defendant for Rs. 5,000. Ganpat Dalsaram joined in this transaction, and on the 14th February, 1888, his mortgage was paid off out of the Rs. 5,000. He returned his mortgage-deed to Tikaram with an endorsement of satisfaction of his debt as follows:—"I, the creditor named Ganpat Dalsaram Gujar, having entered satisfaction on the back of this mortgage, have received moneys as follows:—Rs. 500, I have received Rs. 500 in respect of the said mortgage right. . . . The above-mentioned amount of Rs. 3,606, which is caused to be paid by Vishvanath Amrit Tilvankar . . . for redeeming two mortgaged fields, two bungalows and two houses in all, which I held in mortgage, and for mortgaging the same to Tilvankar, I have received in full. Now there is nothing whatever due to me on the property. I have relinquished all my mortgage rights, and have delivered all the letters and papers to him for enjoyment."

The new mortgage-deed to the defendant contained the following passage:—"We have received, in all, from you Rs. 5,000 of [88] the Surat currency for paying to Rajeshri Ganpat Dalsaramshet in order to redeem our property which is mortgaged to him and to mortgage the same to you . . We . . . have of our own free will received payment in respect of this mortgage-deed. The details are as follows: having paid Rs. 3,606 in cash to Rajeshri Ganpat Dalsaramshet we have obtained the mortgage deed with an intention of satisfaction thereon, &c."

Upon the execution of this mortgage the defendant took possession, the previous mortgagee (Ganpat Dalsaram) having been paid off as already mentioned.

On the 5th July, 1888, Tikaram executed a further mortgage of the property to the defendant for Rs. 8,000.

On the 30th August, 1888, the plaintiff attempted to take possession of the property under his sale certificate, and he was resisted by the defendant. He then applied to the Court executing the decree to have the obstruction removed, but his application was rejected.

The plaintiff thereupon brought the present suit to have the order rejecting his application set aside, and for possession of the property.

The defendant contended (inter alia) that as he had satisfied Ganpat Dalsaram's mortgage lien, which was prior in date to the plaintiff's purchase and had been put in possession and that the plaintiff was aware of that fact, that the plaintiff's remedy was a suit for redemption and not for possession.

The plaintiff preferred a second appeal.

Inverarity (with Mahadeo Bhaskar Chavbal), for the appellant (plaintiff).—When the plaintiff purchased the property in execution of his decree, Ganpat's mortgage lien was in existence. Subsequently to that purchase Tikaram paid off Ganpat's mortgage, and the result was that when the plaintiff sought to recover possession in execution, the property was free from that mortgage. The documents clearly show that the parties to the transaction of February, 1888, intended simply to wipe off Ganpat's mortgage; if they had intended otherwise, the defendant would have taken an assignment of the mortgage from Ganpat. The plaintiff is, therefore, [89] entitled to recover possession without paying anything to the respondent—Ram Tuhul Singh v. Biseswar Lall (1), Gadgeppa v. Apaji (2) Krishna Reddi v. Muttu Narayana Reddi (3). Supposing that the plaintiff is liable to make any payment to defendant on account of Ganpat's mortgage lien on the ground that that lien was prior to his purchase, this liability should be limited to the property which he purchased. He should not be made liable to pay the whole of the lien, which extended over some other property which he has not purchased.

Mahadeo Chimnaji Apte, for the respondent (defendant).—The intention to keep alive Ganpat's mortgage lien in the defendant's favour is shown by the endorsement made on his mortgage-deed and also by the conduct of the parties. If Ganpat's mortgage had been merely wiped off, the mortgage-deed would not have come into the defendant's possession. The endorsement distinctly says that Ganpat's mortgage was paid off for the purpose of mortgaging the property to the defendant. Therefore the transaction is tantamount to an assignment—Gokuldoss v. Rambux (1); Gangadhara v. Sivarama (2), Mahomed Shumsool v. Shewakram (3). The defendant had no notice of the plaintiff's purchase, and, therefore, he paid off Ganpat's mortgage, and advanced money to the mortgagor. But now owing to the plaintiff's purchase the defendant's transaction was, by the lower Court, held to be abortive. A man paying an incumbrance honestly, though unauthorisedly, is entitled to be recouped in justice, equity and good conscience—Nilo Pandurang v. Rama Patloji (4).

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—As the defendant's mortgages in 1888 were subsequent to the plaintiff's purchase at auction-sale on 18th June, 1886, of Tikaram's equity of redemption, it is plain that the defendant can have no defence to the plaintiff's suit for possession, unless Ganpat Dalsaram's mortgage, to which the property was subject when the plaintiff purchased it, can be regarded: for there was no formal assignment of it, as having been kept alive in his favour. We agree with the Joint [90] Subordinate Judge that no such intention can be gathered from what took place when the first mortgage was passed to defendant.

Mr. Apte relied on the Privy Council's decision in Gokul Doss v. Rambux (1) to show that the intention ought to be presumed, but the principle laid down in that case only applies where, as their Lordships explain it, "the estate is burdened by a succession of mortgages, and the owner of an ulterior interest pays off an earlier mortgage, in which case (in England) it is a matter of course to have it assigned to a trustee for his benefit as against intermediate mortgagees to whom he is not personally liable." Such was the case in Gangadhara v. Sivarama (2), which proceeded on the ruling in Gokul Doss v. Rambux (1). But here there was no intermediate mortgage to be protected against from which an intention to keep Ganpat's mortgage alive can be gathered, nor has it ever been suggested in either Court, that the defendant was aware of the plaintiff's purchase. On the other hand, the evidence that defendant took no part in paying off Ganpat's mortgage, and that the receipt endorsed on it was in favour of Tikaram, together with the recital in defendant's mortgage-deed that the mortgage had been paid off out of the money advanced by defendant, without any words showing an intention to keep it alive, indicates that the only object the defendant had in view was to insure the property being cleared from Ganpat's mortgage.

(1) 11 I. A. 126. (2) 8 M. 246. (3) 2 I.A. 7 (17). (4) 9 B. 35.

It remains, however, to consider whether this is a case in which the Court ought, as Mr. Apte contends it should, on the principle acted on by the Privy Council in Mahomed Shumsool v. Shewukram (1), to refuse to give the plaintiff possession except on the condition of his recouping the defendant for what he paid to satisfy Ganpat's mortgage, and thus freeing the estate from an incumbrance to which it would have been liable in his lands. The cases of Ram Tuhul Singh v. Biseswar Lall Sahoo (2) and Gadgeppa v. Apaji (3) were relied on by Mr. Inverarity for the plaintiff. In the case before the Privy Council it is to be observed that the plaintiff was the party who had [91] paid the money, and he sought to recover it from the defendant who had benefited by it, and their Lordships at the bottom of page 141 distinguished it on that ground from the case of Bellamy v. Sabine (4) before Lord Cottenham and others of that class where the plaintiff seeks the aid of a Court of Equity and the Court proceeds on the broad ground that he who seeks to be relieved on equitable grounds must do equity. Moreover, the money was paid in that case against the will of the party who was said to have benefited by it. In Gadgeppa v. Apaji (3) the plaintiff was also the party who had paid the money, and the Court relied on Ram Tuhul Singh v. Biseswar Lall Sahoo (2).

Those cases, therefore, differ from the present one, in this important respect that the plaintiff is here invoking the aid of the Court to recover the property from defendant, which, but for defendant's payment to Ganpat, would have been burdened with Ganpat's mortgage; and unless defendant knew that Tikaram was no longer the owner of the equity of redemption, when he advanced the money to Tikaram, which, as found by the Subordinate Judge, was not the case, and was not relied on in the lower Court of appeal, it is difficult to see how the present case is in principle to be distinguished from Mahomed Shumsool v. Shewukram (1). In both cases there is a subsisting charge on the property paid off by the person in possession, which, as their Lordships say, makes it "equitable when the plaintiff reclaims the estate, that credit should be given to the purchaser (in this case the mortgagee) for the payment of the mortgage which the plaintiff would otherwise have had to meet."

It was said, however, and we think rightly, that plaintiff cannot be called on to pay more than a proportionate part of the money paid in satisfaction of Ganpat's mortgage-debt, as his mortgage security consisted of other properties as well as the one in dispute. That is all the defendant would have had ultimately to meet, as, even if he must have paid the whole mortgage-debt to recover the property in question, he would have been entitled to contribution by Tikaram in respect of the rest of the mortgaged property.

[92] We think, therefore, that the decree must be varied by directing that the plaintiff do recover the property on payment to the defendant of the proportionate part of Ganpat's mortgage-debt, having regard to the values of the property in question and that of the other mortgaged properties. The sum to be so paid to be determined in execution. Parties to pay their own costs of this appeal.

Decree varied.

DESAI MOTILAL MANGALJI (Original Plaintiff), Appellant v. DESAI PARASHOTAM NANDLAL (Original Defendant), *Respondent.

Registration—Evidence—Act III of 1877, s. 17—Retrospective operation of section—Document not registrable under Act in force (XX of 1866) when executed, but requiring registration under Act III of 1877—Immoveable property, what is—Hereditary allowance attached to office of Desai not immoveable property under Act XX of 1866—Deed of gift of such property originally not registrable—Hereditary office when immoveable property by Hindu law—Desaigiri sukhdi.

Section 17 of the Registration Act (III of 1877) should not be construed as requiring a document to be registered which would not have required registration when it was executed.

Raju Balu v. Krishnarav (1) distinguished.

An instrument which did not require registration under Act XX of 1866 is not inadmissible in evidence by reason of Act III of 1877.

Dues incidental to an office such as that of a Desai, which is capable of being held by a person other than a Hindu, were not immoveable property when the Registration Act XX of 1866 was enacted.

[F., 8 A.L.J. 609 = 10 Ind. Cas. 314.]

SECOND appeal from the decision of T. Hart-Davies, Joint Judge of Ahmedabad.

The plaintiff Desai sued to recover Rs. 99 on account of his share in the Desaigiri sukhdi allowance for three years. He alleged that he and the defendant were members of the family of the Bania Desais of Godhra; that the sukhdi allowance was received from the Government treasury by a senior representative [93] of the family; that a dispute having arisen between the defendant's father, and the plaintiff's father, it had been agreed that the defendant's father and his descendants should continue to recover the allowance and should pay Rs. 33 out of it to the plaintiff's father and his descendants every year, and that an agreement to that effect had been accordingly executed by the defendant's father on the 24th May, 1866. The defendant had refused to pay the plaintiff's share of the allowance since 1886.

The defendant denied the plaintiff's right to a share in the allowance, disputed the genuineness of the agreement sued on, and contended that it was inadmissible in evidence for want of registration.

The Subordinate Judge found that the agreement sued upon was a deed of gift which being unregistered was not admissible in evidence. He, therefore, rejected the claim.

The plaintiff preferred a second appeal.

Gokuldas K. Parekh, for the appellant.—Hereditary allowances are for the first time included in immoveable property for the purposes of registration by s. 3 of the Registration Act III of 1877. The document in question was passed in 1866; and at that time hereditary allowances were not immoveable property for the purposes of registration. Act III of 1877 has no retrospective operation—Ram Coomar Singh v. Kishari (2).

---

* Second Appeal No. 754 of 1891.

(1) 2 B. 273.

(2) 9 C. 68.

Hereditary allowances may be immoveable property under Hindu law; but the office of a Desai is not such as is incapable of being held by persons other than Hindus. We find that even Mahomedans and Parsis are Desais. Therefore the question whether Desaigiri sukhdi is immoveable property for the purposes of registration, cannot be governed by Hindu law—Maharana Fattehsangji v. Desai Kallianraiji (1).

Rao Saheb Vasudeo J. Kirtikar (Government Pleader), for the respondent (defendant).—The Registration Act III of 1877 has retrospective operation—Lachman Das v. Dip Chand (2); Raju Balu v. Krishnarav (3). As the suit is between Hindus, the question whether Desaigiri sukhdi is immoveable property should [94] be determined by Hindu law. Hereditary offices are immoveable property under Hindu law—Balvantrav v. Purshotam (4); The Government of Bombay v. Gosvami Shri Girdharlalji (5); Krishnabhat v. Kapabhat (6).

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—The plaintiff in this suit, which has arisen out of a dispute between two branches of the Bania family of Desais of Godhra, sues on an agreement (Ex. 3), dated 24th May, 1866, by which the defendant undertook that he and his descendants would pay the plaintiff's father and his descendants an annual sum of Rs. 33 out of the sukhdi allowance payable out of the Government treasury at Godhra and which was to be collected by the defendant and his descendants. Both the lower Courts have held that the document was a deed of gift of immoveable property and required registration under s. 17 of Act III of 1877, and not being registered, was not admissible in evidence.

Act XX of 1866 was the Registration Act applicable to the document when it was executed, and much argument has been addressed to us on the question whether such a sukhdi was immoveable property when that Act came into force. It was common to both parties that the sukhdi was an allowance incidental to the hereditary office of Desai, and, as such, it was contended for the respondent that, on the authority of the decisions in Balvantrav v. Purshotam (4) and The Government of Bombay v. Gosvami Shri Girdharlalji (5), it was of the nature of immoveable property. On the other hand, it was contended by Mr. Gokuldas, for the appellant, that the rulings in these cases only applied to hereditary offices which could only be held by Hindus such as that of a village Joshi, and that the office of Desai, any more than that of a patil, was not necessarily held by a Hindu, and might be held by a Mahomedan or Parsi. This latter statement was admitted by Mr. Vasudev, but he contended that the rulings applied to all hereditary allowances.

It is to be remarked that what was actually decided in Balvantrav v. Purshotam (4) was that the dues incidental to an hereditary [95] office such as a village Joshi was by Hindu law regarded as immoveable property. In The Government of Bombay v. Gosvami Shri Girdharlalji (5), where the question was as to the nature of allowances to a Hindu temple, Mr. Justice Melvill no doubt refers to the last case as deciding that "allowances incidental to hereditary offices are immoveable property." However, in Maharana Fattehsangji v. Desai Kallianraiji (1), their Lordships of the Privy Council treat the ruling to be that for the interpretation of s. 1, cl. 12 of Act XIV of 1859 immoveable property must, when it concerns the rights of Hindus, be taken to include whatever Hindu law classes as immoveable, and their Lordships say they see no objection to the rule within proper limits, and express approval of the decision on the ground "that Hindu texts were legitimately used to show that, in the contemplation of Hindu law, hereditary offices in a Hindu community incapable of being held by any person not a Hindu were in the nature of immoveables."

We think it is impossible, with due regard to these remarks of the Privy Council, to hold that the dues incidental to an office such as that of Desai were immoveable property when Act XX of 1866 was enacted, and it becomes necessary to consider the view taken by the Joint Judge that, whatever may have been the character of a Desaigiri sukhdi at the time Act XX of 1866 was enacted, the document in question required to be registered under s. 17 of Act III of 1877, which includes hereditary allowances in the interpretation of "immoveable property." This raises a question of some difficulty on which the High Courts of Calcutta and Allahabad have apparently differed—Ram Coomar Singh v. Kishari (1) and Lachman Das v. Dip Chand (2)—the former Court being of opinion that neither s. 17 of Act III of 1877 nor the similar sections of the preceding Acts have the effect of rendering a document, which was not registrable under Act XVI of 1864, inadmissible in evidence under the succeeding Acts without registration. Mr. Justice Green had to consider s. 17 in Raju Balu v. Krishnarav (3) with respect to a document [96] dated 15th July, 1865. After referring to the peculiar language of s. 17 and pointing out that "the greater strictness of the requirements of Act VIII of 1871 and the earlier Registration Acts has been mitigated, and the Act was framed as it is, very probably with a view to admit to the benefit of such mitigatious documents though executed before the day on which the Act came into force," he arrives at the conclusion that "the practical result is, that the provisions of Act III of 1877 apply to all documents tendered in evidence on or after 1st April, 1877." It is to be remarked that the document in question, which was held to require registration in that case, was clearly one which ought to have been registered under Act XVI of 1864. The case, therefore, has no direct bearing on the present question whether s. 17 of the Act is to be construed as requiring a document to be registered which would not have required registration when it was executed. It is plain that if it is so regarded, as the Act provides no means of registering such a document (unless perhaps it was executed within three months before the Act of 1877 comes into force), the section will have the retrospective effect of invalidating for all practical purposes documents which when they were executed were free from defects according to the existing law. The presumption is of course against the Legislature having such an intention. The actual question here arises from the change in the interpretation clause which in the Act of 1877 includes "hereditary allowances" without any restriction in immoveable property, and we think that such a change cannot on principle affect instruments executed before the Act.

We must, therefore, reverse the decree of the Court below and send back the case for a fresh decision, having regard to the above remarks. Costs to abide the result.

[97] CRIMINAL REVISION.

Before Mr. Justice Candy and Mr. Justice Fulton.

QUEEN-EMPRESS v. SHIDGAUDA.* [13th February, 1893.]

Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), s. 263 (h) – Summary trials—Magistrate's finding to contain a statement of the reasons for a conviction.

Under s. 263 (h) of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882) a Magistrate, in recording his reasons for a conviction, must state them so that the High Court on revision may judge whether there were sufficient materials before him to support the conviction.

THIS was an application under the criminal revisional jurisdiction of the High Court [s. 435, Criminal Procedure Code (X of 1882)].

The accused was charged with having committed criminal trespass on certain land in respect of which the complainant had obtained a decree for possession in the Mamlatdar's Court.

The case was tried by the First Class Magistrate of Belgaum in a summary way under the provisions of Chap. XXII of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882).

The Magistrate convicted the accused under s. 447 of the Indian Penal Code, and sentenced him to a fine of Rs. 25.

The Magistrate's judgment was as follows :—

"The complainant states that the accused prevented his tenants from keeping fuel and rubbish in the place decided by the Mamlatdar to be his, to cause annoyance to him. The witnesses called by the complainant support the complainant. The accused pleads not guilty and has called two witnesses to prove his innocence. The witnesses do not say that the accused has not committed the offence. I, therefore, direct that the accused should pay Rs. 25, or, in default, should undergo rigorous imprisonment for thirty days."

The accused applied to the High Court, under s. 435 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, for a revision of the Magistrate's proceedings.

[98] Vasudeo G. Bhandarkar, for the accused.

Chitgupe (with him Messrs. Chitnis, Motilal and Moulvi), for the complainant.

JUDGMENT.

CANDY, J.—The Magistrate's "brief statement of the reasons for conviction" (s. 263 (h), Criminal Procedure Code) is simply,—"The witnesses called by the complainant support the complainant. The witnesses (for the accused) do not say that the accused has not committed the offence." We are of opinion that this is not a compliance with law. We agree with the ruling in Empress v. Panjab Singh (1) that a Magistrate under this section in recording his reasons for the conviction should state them so that the High Court on revision may judge whether there were sufficient materials before him to support the conviction. The conviction must, therefore, be set aside, and the fine, if paid, refunded.

Conviction and sentence reversed.

Mortgage—Decree on mortgage—Sale in execution—Claim on property ordered to be sold under a mortgage decree—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 278 and 287—Jurisdiction.

Himatram obtained a decree upon a mortgage against Dewji in 1891, and applied in execution for the sale of the mortgaged property. On the proclamation of the sale being issued, Khushal intervened, alleging that the property had been sold to him by Dewji in 1883 at a private sale. The Subordinate Judge allowed his claim, and stopped the sale, being of opinion that he had power, under s. 287 of the Civil Procedure Code, to make this order.

Held, that the order was made without jurisdiction, and must be discharged. Proceedings by way of claim as provided by s. 278 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) are not applicable where the property is directed to be sold under a mortgage decree, and s. 287 had no application.

[99] THIS was an application under the extraordinary jurisdiction (s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code, Act XIV of 1882) against an order passed by Rao Saheb V. G. Kaduskar, Joint Subordinate Judge of Nasik.

In 1891 one Himatram obtained a decree in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Nasik against Dewji on a mortgage. The decree directed the payment of the mortgage-debt within six months, or, in default, the sale of the mortgaged property. Default having been made, and the defendant being an agriculturist, the Subordinate Judge sent the proceedings to the Collector that he might sell the property, and realize the amount of the decree.

Before the date fixed for the sale, one Khushal Jethiram claimed the property in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, alleging that he had bought it from Dewji in 1883. He prayed for a declaration that the property was not liable to attachment. The Subordinate Judge cancelled the proclamation, and stopped the sale, and referred Himatram to a regular suit. He was of opinion that although s. 278 of the Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882) did not apply to this case as there had been no attachment, yet that under s. 287 of the Civil Procedure Code he could deal with Khushal's application and make the order. He held that the ruling of the Calcutta High Court in Deefholts v. Peters (1) was not applicable to the case.

Against the above order Himatram applied to the High Court in its extraordinary jurisdiction (Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882), s. 622), contending that the Subordinate Judge had acted illegally and without jurisdiction. He obtained a rule nisi to set aside the above order. The rule now came on for argument.

Shivram V. Bhandarkar, for the applicant, in support of the rule.—The Subordinate Judge had no jurisdiction to make the order stopping the sale. It is admitted that the order could not be made under s. 278 of the Civil Procedure Code, as there was no attachment. Nor could it be made under s. 287, which does not contemplate such an application at all.

[100] N. G. Chandavarkar, for the opponent, showed cause:—Technically no doubt s. 278 does not apply, because the property was not attached; but although not attached, yet as it was directed to be sold in execution of a decree, it should be regarded as practically attached for the purpose of a sale, and that being so the claimant's application should be dealt with. If property to which claims are made, is put up for sale, the purchaser runs the risk of buying what may turn out to be property which does not belong to the judgment-debtor, and which ought not to be sold. This inconvenience ought to be prevented by the Court.

ORDER.

SARGENT, C. J.—We agree with the opinion expressed by the Calcutta High Court in Deefholts v. Peters (1) that proceedings by way of claim as provided by s. 278 of the Civil Procedure Code are not applicable to a case of this kind. As to s. 287, it has no application to a case of this nature. The Subordinate Judge has acted, therefore, without jurisdiction. The rule must be made absolute, and the Subordinate Judge's order discharged. Costs of this application to be paid by the opponent.

Held, that the suit was one for a declaration and consequential relief under s. 7, cl. 4 (c) of the Court-Fees Act, and that as the claim was valued at [101] Rs. 230 only, the appeal lay under Act VII of 1887, s. 8, to the District Court.

and removing timber from certain forests, or, in the alternative, for a direction to defendant to keep correct and proper accounts of timber removed from those forests.

Defendant contended (inter alia) that the Court had no jurisdiction to try the suit.

The First Class Subordinate Judge held that as plaintiff's object in bringing the suit was to get division by actual partition, they must apply, in the first instance, to the Talukdari Settlement Officer under s. 11 of Bombay Act VI of 1888, and dismissed the suit.

From this decree plaintiffs preferred an appeal to the High Court.

Inverarity (with Ganpat Sadashiv Rao), for respondent (defendant).—There is a preliminary objection to this appeal. I contend that the appeal lies not to this Court, but to the District Court. The plaintiffs sue for a declaratory decree and consequential relief. The suit falls within s. 7, cl. 4, sub-ss. (c) and (d) of the Court-fees Act, VII of 1870. Under this section the plaintiff is, no doubt, at liberty to put his own valuation upon the reliefs sought. But the valuation will determine the jurisdiction of the Court. Under s. 8 of Act VII of 1887, in a suit like the present, the valuation for purposes of Court-fees and the valuation for purposes of jurisdiction are the same. The plaintiffs value their claim at Rs. 230. This valuation should be taken for purposes of jurisdiction as well as Court-fees. The appeal, therefore, lies to the District Court.

He referred to Bhagvantrai v. Mehta Bajurao (1).

[102] Jardine (with Gokuldas K. Parekh), for appellants (plaintiffs).—The objection that no appeal lies to the High Court, practically amounts to saying that the First Class Subordinate Judge's Court had no jurisdiction to try the original suit, and the objection about jurisdiction having not been raised in the original Court, it is not open to the respondent to say in this Court that no appeal lies.

This is not a case, under sub-cl. (c), cl. 4, s. 7 of Act VII of 1870, of a suit to obtain a declaratory decree where consequential relief is prayed. A prayer for partition which necessarily follows from the declaration would be consequential relief, but not a prayer for injunction; if a declaration is made in plaintiff's favour, his right to injunction would not follow as a matter of course. In a suit for a declaration the Court-fees duty is fixed, and not ad valorem. The suit would not have been held bad if the prayer for injunction had been omitted. If the prayer in the plaint had been limited to a mere declaration of title, there would have been no objection to this appeal. By adding the further prayer for injunction, this Court would not become deprived of its jurisdiction.

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—This is a regular appeal from the First Class Subordinate Judge of Ahmedabad, and a preliminary objection has been taken that the appeal does not lie to this Court, the value of the suit for the purpose of determining the jurisdiction of this Court to hear the appeal being, it is contended, only Rs. 230, viz., the sum at which the plaintiffs have valued the relief sought in their plaint.

In Khushalchand v. Nagindas (2) in a suit for account and a decree for the balance to be found due where the plaintiff had valued the relief at Rs. 510, it was held that the appeal lay to the District Court, and not to the High Court. This decision was come to independently of the effect of s. 8 of Act VII of 1887. In Bhagvantrai v. Mehta Bajirao (1) the High Court, in a similar suit, followed Khushalchand v. Nagindas (2), pointing out at the same time that the law so laid down had already been embodied in s. 8 of Act VII of 1887, when that decision [103] was passed. The question is whether that section is applicable to the present suit.

(1) 18 B. 40.

(2) 12 B. 675.

It was contended for the respondent that it is a suit for "a declaratory decree where consequential relief is prayed" as contemplated by s. 7, cl. 4, sub-cl. (c) of Act VII of 1870. It was urged for the appellants that an injunction is not such "consequential" relief as is intended by that expression in sub-cl. (c). "An injunction" is undoubtedly in the nature of consequential relief, and the following sub-cl. (d) shows that the Legislature considered it was a form of relief which might be valued in a suit which asked for it. Moreover, in the present case the relief sought is not merely an injunction, but, in the alternative, for an account of the timber which defendant might cut before the actual partition. We think, therefore, that the above rule applies to the present suit, and that the relief having been valued at only Rs. 230, the appeal lay to the District Court, and we must, therefore, return the appeal for presentation in that Court. Appellants to pay the costs incurred in this Court.

Appeal returned for presentation to proper Court.

SECOND appeal from the decision of L. G. Fernandez, First Class Subordinate Judge, A. P., at Nasik.

On the 30th May, 1869, the first defendant mortgaged with possession to the plaintiff's father certain property attached by sanad to the office of Kazi in the villages of Wani and Sewali in the district of Nasik. The mortgagee continued in possession until 1883, but in that year the property was restored to the first and second defendants, who were Kazis in these villages in pursuance of an order of the Collector in exercise of the power vested in him by the Watan Act (Bombay Act III of 1874), s. 9.

The plaintiff's father died, and the plaintiff sued to recover the mortgage-debt. He prayed for the sale of the mortgaged properties, or for possession of them until the amount of debt was paid.

The defendants pleaded (inter alia) that they had been put into possession by the Collector under the Act, and they contended that the property in question was service inam property, and as such inalienable without the sanction of Government.

[105] The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit. He held that he had no power to interfere with Collector's order. On appeal the decree was confirmed.

The plaintiff preferred a second appeal.

Daji Abaji Khare, for the appellant (plaintiff).—The question is whether a Kazi is a watandar under the Watan Act. The appointment of Mahomedan law officers was made under Reg. XXVI of 1827. But that Act was repealed by Act XI of 1864, and thereupon Mahomedan officers ceased to be officers of Government. A Kazi is now no longer an officer connected with the civil administration of the country, and is, therefore, not a watandar under the Watan Act (III of 1874). He is not an hereditary officer under the Act—Jamal valad Ahmed v. Jamal valad Jallal (1); Daudsha v. Ismalsha (2).

To be a watandar under that Act, payment must be received from Government for service performed. If, then, the defendants are not watandars under the Act, the Collector was wrong in restoring the mortgaged property to them, and s. 9 of the Act does not afford them protection.

Govardhanram M. Tripathi, for the respondents (defendants).—A Kazi is connected with the civil administration of the country—Muhammad Yusub v. Sayad Ahmad (3). The question here is as to the property and not the office of a Kazi. It is within the cognizance of the Collector to determine whether a property is watan or not, and he having once held that the property in dispute is watan, it is inalienable, and consequently not liable to the appellant's mortgage.

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C.J.—The judgments of both the Courts below proceed on the assumption that the Collector's order was made under the Watandars

(1) 1 B. 633. (2) 3 B. 72. (3) 1 B.H.C.R. App. xviii.

Act of 1874. The decisions in Jamal valad Ahmed v. Jamal valad Jallal (1) and Daudsha v. Ismalsha (2) are, however, conclusive that the office of Kazi is not an hereditary one, unless perhaps by a special custom of a locality, and there is no evidence of any such established custom in this case. The [106] Watandars Act, III of 1874, relates to watan property, which by that Act is defined to be "property acquired or assigned for providing remuneration for the performance of the duty appertaining to an hereditary office." The properties in question which, by the sanad, were attached to the office of Kazi were, therefore, not watan property under the Act, and not such as the Collector had power to recover from the defendants under s. 9 of the Watandars Act.

However, an examination of the Collector's order shows that he acted under a Resolution of Government (No. 512 of 1882 (3)), which he considered entitled him to order the lands to be handed over to the defendants on the ground that they had been granted for public service. That Resolution may have enabled such lands to be resumed by the Collector, but it is plain from the subsequent Resolution of Government on 25th August 1833 (4) that by the "resumption" in that Resolution was only meant the levying of full assessment from the person in occupation [107] other than the grantee and his descendants. The Collector had, therefore, no legal authority to make the order for the handing over of the properties to the defendants.

We must, therefore, reverse the decree of the Court below, and direct that the lands in question be restored by the defendants to the plaintiff as mortgagee. Appellant to have his costs throughout.

Decree reversed.

(1) 1 B. 633. (2) 3 B. 72.

(3) Bombay Government Resolution No. 512 of 1882.—Bombay Act III of 1874 does not appear to be applicable to village servants useful to the community. All the sanads which have been issued to such servants prohibit alienation of the property to which they relate. Under the terms of the settlement, land which ceases to be held as remuneration for service to the village community may be resumed. (Nairne's Hand Book, p. 526).

(4) No 6310.—Revenue Department, 25th August, 1883. RESOLUTION.—Government concur with the Commissioner, Central Division, and the Remembrancer of Legal Affairs that the terms of the settlement made in the case of village servants useful to the community should be held applicable to all cases in which their service lands have ceased to constitute the remuneration of such servants, and that the lands should be resumed at once irrespective of the date of alienation.

2. It should be borne in mind that by resumption in such instances is only meant the levy of full assessment from the person in occupation other than the original grantee or his descendants. The present holders should, therefore, be allowed to remain in possession on payment of the full assessment to which the lands are liable.

3. If the original holders or their descendants have thought proper to alienate their lands in which they had only a life interest, and have thus deprived themselves of the remuneration provided for the performance of their duties, they themselves are to blame for their own action, and the Governor in Council does not consider them to be entitled to any consideration. The full assessment to be levied in the case of these alienations should accordingly be credited to Government.

Landlord and tenant—Notice to quit—Plea of permanent tenancy.

The plaintiff sued to eject the defendants from certain land. The defendants pleaded that they were permanent tenants under a lease granted to their ancestor by the plaintiff's grandfather in 1805. The Court of first instance awarded the plaintiff's claim. On appeal, the District Judge held that the lease on which the defendants relied was one determinable on the grantee's death, but as the grantee's heirs (the defendants) had continued in possession paying the stipulated rent, they were entitled to a reasonable notice to quit. The District Judge accordingly passed a decree, directing the defendants to vacate the land at the expiry of six months from the date of the decree.

Held, that the District Judge could not, in his judgment, give the notice which the plaintiff was bound to give to his tenants. Plaintiff's suit must fail for want of notice.

The plaintiff sued to eject the defendants from the land in dispute.

The defendants pleaded (inter alia) that they were permanent tenants, holding under a lease granted by the plaintiff's grandfather in 1805 to their ancestors.

The lease contained the following stipulation on the part of the lessor:—"I will take back the land when you yourself surrender it. I for my part will not ask you to quit."

[108] The Subordinate Judge held that the lease in question was a lease for life only, and that on the death of the lessee the tenancy came to an end. He, therefore, passed a decree, awarding possession of the land to the plaintiff.

On appeal, the District Judge was also of opinion that the lease was one for life, determinable on the death of the grantee. But he held that as the grantee's heirs had continued in possession paying the stipulated rent, they were entitled to a reasonable notice to quit. He, therefore, amended the decree of the Court of first instance by directing that the defendants should surrender the land in suit to the plaintiff at the expiry of six months from the date of the decree.

Against this decision the defendants appealed to the High Court.

Manckshah Jehangirshah, for appellants.—Plaintiff has not given us any notice to quit. He is not, therefore, entitled to recover. The District Judge has no power to do that which the plaintiff was bound to do. The plea of permanent tenancy which we had set up does not dispense with the necessity of a proper notice—Vithu v. Dhondi (1). That case is conclusive on the point.

CANDY, J.—The District Judge held that defendants 8 to 13 were entitled to notice, and the plaintiff has taken no objection to that ruling. The District Judge, however, has in his judgment given the notice which he thought the plaintiff was bound to give his tenants. This he could not do. On the authorities collected in Vithu v. Dhondi (1) we must reverse the decree of the District Judge and reject the claim. All costs on plaintiff.

Registration Act III of 1877, s. 17 (d)—Lease—Lease for life of the lessee—Registration.

A lease of immoveable property for the life of the lessee is a lease for a term exceeding one year. It, therefore, requires registration.

SECOND appeal from the decree of Khan Bahadur N. N. Nanavati, First Class Subordinate Judge, with appellate powers, of Dhulia, confirming the decree of Rao Saheb D. S. Sapre, Second Class Subordinate Judge of Nandurbar in suit No. 994 of 1889.

The plaintiff sued to recover possession of a piece of land, alleging that it was leased by him to Nana Prayag for his life under an agreement dated 25th March, 1878; that in violation of this agreement Nana had assigned 7 gunthas of this land to defendant No. 2, and that after Nana's death his heir, defendant No. 1, refused to vacate the land.

The agreement, on which the plaintiff relied in support of his claim, provided as follows:—

"I (the lessee) shall continue to pay each year Re. 0-12-5 to you in the month of February, and I shall enjoy the said land as long as I live."

The Subordinate Judge held that the agreement in question was compulsorily registrable, being a lease falling under sub-s. 1, cl. (d) of s. 17 of the Indian Registration Act III of 1877; that as it was not registered, it was inadmissible in evidence; and that as it was the foundation of the plaintiff's case, he must fail. He, therefore, rejected the plaintiff's claim.

This decision was confirmed by the lower appellate Court.

The plaintiff thereupon preferred a second appeal to the High Court.

Narayan Vishnu Gokhale, for appellant.

Daji Abaji Khare, for respondent.

JUDGMENT.

[110] CANDY, J.—We consider that a lease for the life of the lessee is a lease for a term exceeding one year, as it entitles the lessee to hold for more than that period if he live so long. It is not a lease terminable at the end of a year or at the option of the lessor. It, therefore, requires registration. We confirm the decree, with costs.

Decree confirmed.

DODHU AND OTHERS (Original Defendants Nos. 12 to 18), Appellants v. MADHAVRAO NARAYAN GADRE AND OTHERS (Original Plaintiff and Defendants Nos. 1 to 11).* [23rd January, 1893.]

Landlord and tenant—Suit for possession—Denial of landlord's title—Plea of permanent tenancy—Notice to quit—Yearly tenant—Practice—Procedure—Second appeal—Point taken for first time on second appeal—Specific performance, suit for—Parties made defendants who were not parties to the agreement.

The plaintiff sued the jaghirdars of a certain village (defendants Nos. 1 to 11) and certain of their tenants (defendants Nos. 12 to 18) for specific performance of an agreement made between the plaintiff and the jaghirdars, by which the jagirdhars agreed to give up to the plaintiff possession of certain lands, which were in possession of the tenants (defendants Nos. 12 to 18). The jaghirdars (defendants Nos. 1 to 11) pleaded that they were unable to give possession, as the tenants (defendants Nos. 12 to 18) were permanent tenants and refused to quit the land. The tenants (defendants Nos. 12 to 18) put in a separate defence, also alleging that they were permanent tenants of the jaghirdars. The lower appellate Court held that the tenants (defendants Nos. 12 to 18) were yearly tenants and did not hold in perpetuity, and that the jaghirdars (defendants Nos. 1 to 11) had power to eject them. That Court, therefore, passed a decree for the plaintiff, for specific performance of the agreement as against the jaghirdars (defendants Nos. 1 to 11) and for possession as against the other defendants (Nos. 12 to 18). The latter defendants (the tenants) appealed to the High Court. They there contended that if they were yearly tenants as held by the decree of the lower Court they could not be dispossessed without notice to quit, and that no such notice had been given.

Held (1) that the objection was good, and that no decree against the tenants (defendants Nos. 12 to 18) could be made in favour of the plaintiff, and that he was only entitled to a declaration that the said defendants were mere yearly and not permanent tenants.

[111] (2) That the tenants (defendants Nos. 12 to 18) had claimed to be permanent tenants before the suit was filed and at that time they were not tenants of the plaintiff but of the jaghirdars (defendants Nos. 1 to 11). Under the circumstances that claim could not be taken to have worked a forfeiture of their tenancy as a denial of their landlord's title, or in any case it must be deemed to have been waived by the jaghirdars (defendants Nos. 1 to 11). The plaintiff, therefore, could not rely upon it as an answer to the defendants' contention that a notice to quit was necessary.

(3) That the objection as to the necessity of notice to quit was one which might be taken in second appeal.

Held, also, that an objection that certain of the defendants should not have been made parties to a suit for specific performance, because they were not parties to the agreement, could not be taken for the first time in second appeal, as it only involved a question of practice.

SECOND appeal from the decision of Rao Bahadur N. N. Nanavati, First Class Subordinate Judge of Dhulia with appellate powers.

Suit for specific performance of an agreement and for possession of land.

The plaintiff sued for specific performance of an agreement by which defendants Nos. 1 to 11, Bhivrao Govind and others, who were jaghirdars, agreed to grant to plaintiff a sanad in respect of two pieces of land and to deliver possession to him of the said lands, and that, in the event of the lands being found to contain less than 70 bighas, to give other land of the same quality in accordance with the agreement. The plaintiff also charged defendants Nos. 12 to 18, who were tenants of the jaghirdars, with colluding with them, and prayed that possession be given him by all the defendants.

Defendants Nos. 1 to 11, Bhivrao Govind and others, answered that they could not give the plaintiff the lands mentioned in the agreement, as defendants Nos. 12 to 18 were permanent tenants and were reluctant to quit, but that they were ready to give the plaintiff other land in lieu of those mentioned in the agreement.

Defendants Nos. 12 to 18 pleaded that the land called Hari Mali Vale had been granted in permanent tenancy to them by the father of defendants Nos. 1 to 8, and that as regards the other piece of land it belonged to defendants Nos. 13 to 18, and that the jaghirdars were only entitled to assessment.

[112] The Subordinate Judge found that the agreement relied on by the plaintiff was proved, and also that defendants Nos. 12 to 18 were entitled to hold the land as long as they paid assessment.

On appeal by the plaintiff the Court found that the jaghirdars had the right to eject the defendants Nos. 12 to 18, and passed a decree for specific performance as against defendants Nos. 1 to 11 and for delivery of possession as against defendants Nos. 12 to 18.

Defendants Nos. 12 to 18 preferred a second appeal.

Jardine (with Ganpat Sadashiv Rao), for the appellants (defendants Nos. 12 to 18).—As these defendants were not parties to the agreement of which the specific performance is sought, they were wrongly joined in the suit. A suit for specific performance of an agreement cannot lie against a stranger.

[SARGENT, C.J.—That objection was not taken in either of the lower Courts.]

Our next point is that the Judge found these defendants to be yearly tenants, and that being so the suit ought to have been dismissed, so far as they are concerned, for want of notice to quit—Vithu v. Dhondi (1).

Mahadeo Chimnaji Apte, for the respondent (plaintiff).—The objections taken have been now raised for the first time. They cannot be taken in second appeal. In the lower Courts the appellants alleged a permanent tenancy. Such a plea being a direct denial of the landlord's title, no notice to quit can be held necessary. In the case relied on, the question of permanent tenancy was raised after suit. Here the appellants disputed the plaintiff's title to possession before the suit was filed.

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C.J.—This was a suit by the plaintiff for specific performance of an agreement by which the defendants Nos. 1 to 11 agreed to grant plaintiff a sanad in respect of certain lands in their jaghir and to deliver possession to him of the said lands, and in the event of the lands being found to contain less than 70 bighas, to give other land of the same quality in accordance with the agreement. The plaintiff also charged defendants Nos. 12 to 18, who were tenants of the jaghirdars, with colluding with [113] them, and prayed that possession be given him by all the defendants.

The defendants Nos. 1 to 11 by their written statement said they could not give the plaintiff the lands mentioned in the agreement, as defendants Nos. 12 to 18 were permanent tenants and were reluctant to quit, but that they were ready to give the plaintiff other lands.

The defendants Nos. 12 to 18 pleaded that the land Hari Mali Vale had been granted in permanent tenancy to them by the father of defendants Nos. 1 to 8, and that as regards the other piece of land it belonged to defendants Nos. 12 to 18, and the jaghirdar was only entitled to assessment. The agreement was found proved by the Subordinate Judge, who also held that the defendants Nos. 12 to 18 were entitled to hold the lands as long as they paid assessment. On appeal by plaintiff the Court found that the jaghirdar had the right to make the defendants Nos. 12 to 18 quit the land, and passed a decree for specific performance as against the defendants Nos. 1 to 11 and for delivery of possession against the defendants Nos. 12 to 18.

Defendants Nos. 12 to 18 now appeal on the authority of Javherbai v. Haribhai (1), and have taken the objection that defendants being strangers to the agreement, they could not be made parties to a suit for specific performance; this objection, however, was not taken in either of the Courts below, and as it only involves a question of practice cannot be taken for the first time on second appeal. It has also been objected to the decree that notice to quit not having been given to the defendants Nos. 12 to 18, who have been found by the lower Court of Appeal to be yearly tenants, a decree for possession could not be made against them. This objection raises a question on which there has been some difference of judicial opinion and decision. It was urged, indeed, that it could not be taken for the first time on second appeal. But it has been already decided, and we think rightly, that it can be so taken—Vithu v. Dhondi(2), following Haji Sayad v. [114] Venkta(3), Abdulla v. Subbarayyar (4), and Subba v. Nagappa(5). In Vithu v. Dhondi (2), where the effect of a defendant setting up a permanent tenancy by his written statement is fully discussed, it was pointed out that, according to English law, the plaintiff could not rely on a disclaimer of title operating as a forfeiture of the tenancy, when the disclaimer had been made subsequent to the day mentioned in the writ of ejectment as the time when the plaintiff was entitled to possession, and that on general principles the same rule would apply where the plaintiff, in this country, filed his suit before the disclaimer took place. In the present case, however, although there is no distinct finding on the question, it can scarcely be doubted that the defendants Nos. 12 to 18 had set up a permanent tenancy as the ground of their objection to quit before the suit was filed. Assuming this to have been so, it remains to consider what would be the effect of that claim being set up by the tenants. It is to be remarked that they were not the plaintiff's tenants when they set up the claim, and so far as the defendants Nos. 1 to 11 are concerned, it cannot, under the circumstances of the case, be taken to have worked a forfeiture of the tenancy, or in any case it must be deemed to have been waived by defendants Nos. 1 to 11.

(4) 2 M. 346. (5) 12 M. 353.

We are of opinion, therefore, that no decree for possession as against defendants Nos. 12 to 18 can be made in favour of the plaintiff in this suit, and that he is only entitled to a declaration that the said defendants are only yearly and not permanent tenants. We must, therefore, reverse the decree, so far as it directs the defendants Nos. 12 to 18 to deliver possession to plaintiff, and direct that a declaration be inserted in the decree that the said defendants are only in possession of the land as yearly tenants. In other respects the decree is confirmed. Appellants to have their costs of this appeal.

KANJI BAVLA (Plaintiff) v. ARJUN SHAMJI AND OTHERS (Defendants). [10th August, 1893.]

Caste-matter—Custom of caste—Funeral ceremonies—Right to assistance of fellow-members of caste—Refusal to assist—Cause of action—Suit not maintainable.

The plaintiff, a Hindu and kharva by caste, alleged in his plaint that, pursuant to a usage of his caste, he, on the occasion of his child's death, called upon the defendants, who were his caste-fellows, to assist him in removing the dead body and performing caste ceremonies incidental thereto; that the defendants refused to do so, and induced other members of the caste to refuse also; that, in consequence thereof, the plaintiff was injured in his caste-status, and he prayed for a declaration that the defendants' acts were unlawful, and that he was lawfully entitled to exercise and enjoy all his customary caste-rights and privileges; and also for damages and for an injunction restraining the defendants from preventing other members of the caste from recognising him and treating him as a member of the caste.

Held, that the plaint disclosed no cause of action, and must be rejected.

IN chambers. The plaintiff presented a plaint alleging that he was a member of the kharva caste of Hindus in Bombay; that it was a custom in the caste that, in case any death took place in the house of any member of the caste, such member was entitled to call upon his caste-fellows to assist him in the removal of the dead body to the burial-ground and to take part in performing the customary caste ceremonies connected with the funeral; that in January, 1893, his child died, and he called upon the defendants, two of whom were trustees of the caste, to aid him and take part in the customary performance of caste rites, but they maliciously and without any cause refused to do so, and induced others also to refuse, and that, in consequence thereof, the plaintiff suffered in his status and character as a member of the caste, and was treated as if he had been out-casted. He prayed for a declaration: (1) that the acts of the defendants were illegal, and contrary to the usages of the caste; (2) that he was still a member of his caste, and had done nothing to forfeit the rights and privileges of his caste, and was lawfully entitled in every respect to exercise and enjoy all his customary caste rights, and reciprocate the same to his fellow-castemen. He further prayed for damages and for an injunction restraining the defendants from [116] preventing other members of the caste from recognising the plaintiff as a member of the caste.

On presentation of the plaint to the Judge in chambers (Starling, J.), objection was taken that it disclosed no cause of action. Subsequently counsel appeared to argue the point.

Vicaji, for the plaintiff:—The plaintiff complains that he has been treated as an out-caste by the defendants, who are fellow-members of his caste, without cause, and without enquiry, and out of malice. He sues, therefore, to have it declared that he has not lost caste, and that the defendants' acts are unjustifiable and contrary to the usages of the caste. Such a suit is one of a civil nature and cognisable by Courts of law. In the Mofussil of Bombay it would be governed by Regulation II of 1827, s. 21 (1). That enactment expressly provides for "the trial of any suit instituted for the recovery of damages on account of an alleged injury to the caste and character of the plaintiff arising from the illegal act or unjustifiable conduct of the other party." The same Regulation declares that "no interference on the part of the Court in caste-questions is hereby warranted." The present suit is not a case of such interference; for interference has been held not to include cases in which "evidence of the customary law of a caste" is taken, or where the law of the caste has been recognised. The Courts are free to deal "with a caste-question where the membership and the character of a member have been unjustly injured"—Pragji Kalan v. Govind Gopal (2). The Madras High Court has held that "a question of caste-status in respect of a caste institution "is a right of "a civil nature and within the [117] cognisance of the Civil Courts"—Venkatachalapati v. Subbarayadu (3). Loss of caste was held so far back as 1867 to be a civil wrong in Gopal Gurain v. Gurain (4), which was a suit for restoration to caste and damages for the cost of such restoration. In Sonaram v. Obhoyram (5) the Courts held a suit to gain re-admission to caste maintainable. These cases are distinguishable from suits of the class of Raghunath v. Janardhan (6) for the enforcement of sumptuary rights by plaintiffs to be invited to social entertainments.

Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

STARLING, J.—In this case the plaintiff, who is a member of the kharva caste, in his plaint alleges that by a custom of the caste a member thereof, in whose family a death has taken place, is entitled to call upon the other members of the caste, apparently without limitation in number and without regard to their place of residence, to come to his house and assist in the removal of the dead body to the burial-ground and to take part in performing the customary caste ceremonies incidental to the funeral. He further alleges that, on the 19th January, 1893, on the death of a child, then a few days old, the defendants—two trustees and three members of the caste—refused to assist him in removing the dead body, and induced others of the caste to refuse also, in consequence of which the plaintiff and his family have suffered in their status and character, as the treatment they have received is such as would be meted out to those who were outcasted. He then asks that it may be declared that the aforesaid acts of the defendants were illegal and contrary to the usages of the caste; that he may be declared to be lawfully entitled to exercise and enjoy all his customary caste rights; that the defendants may be restrained from preventing other members of the caste from recognising the plaintiff as a member of the caste, and for damages.

When the plaint was first presented to me I refused to admit it until I had heard the attorney on the record, or counsel on the point, whether the plaint disclosed any cause of action cognizable by the Civil Courts. Accordingly Mr. Vicaji appeared and argued [118] that point. He cited Regulation II of 1827. s. 21; Pragji Kalan v. Govind Gopal (1), which, however, involved a question of the right to caste property; Gopal Gurain v. Gurain (2), which was a suit for a declaration of the plaintiff's right to be restored to caste and for the cost of such restoration; and Venkatachalapati v. Subbarayadu (3), which was a suit for a declaration of the plaintiff's right to enter a certain portion of a quasi-public building, viz., a Hindu temple. None of these cases seem to me to govern the present one, which, in my opinion, belongs to that class which has often been before the Courts, and in which relief has been constantly refused, viz., where the plaintiff has sought a declaration that he is entitled to be invited to dinner with his fellow-castemen, and to insist upon their coming to dinner with him. I think this case is on all fours with that of Sudharam v. Sudharam (4), where the plaintiff had invited the defendants to a dinner party, which invitation they had accepted, but did not come. At the end of his judgment, Bayley, J., after citing Joy Chunder v. Ramchurn (5), said: "No decree can be executed declaring a person's right to the membership of a society, as the effect of such a decree would be to require that other persons do accept the plaintiff's invitation and do partake of his food though against their will, and that they in their turn must give him similar invitations and dine with him whether they like to do so or not." This case was cited and followed in Raghunath v. Janardhan (6), wherein the case of Shankar v. Hanma (7) was also cited. I think these cases and the majority of the older cases, collected and reported in 3 Beng. L. R. (A. J.) 91 show that the present suit is not maintainable, as the decree to be of any effect would have to declare that all members of the kharva caste whom the plaintiff chose to call to his house on the occasion of a death in his family, must go, whether they were willing or not; and that the defendants were never to state any reason to any of their fellow-members why they should not accept the plaintiff's invitations, and I fail to see how such a decree could be enforced.

[119] Consequently I shall follow the decision in Sudharam v. Sudharam (4). If the defendants are in fault at all it is because they have broken some social rule of the caste, and in such a case it is to the caste the plaintiff must go for redress. There is no question of property involved, nor can I see that the defendants have by their alleged acts slandered the plaintiff so as to give him a right to sue for damages. I, therefore, reject the plaint.

Company—Directors of company—Liability of directors for funds of company applied in transactions ultra vires*—Dealing in shares of other companies—Stale demand—Limitation—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), s. 10.*

The plaintiff company was formed in 1864. By its memorandum of association its object was declared to be commission agency and general trading in cotton and also in goods and commodities suited for market in the interior of India. The memorandum contained the following words:—"If found desirable, the company may effect purchases of cotton and produce in Bombay and ship to England and carry on such local trade as may seem profitable." The company went into liquidation in 1867. In April, 1890, the present suit was filed against the defendant, who had been one of the directors of the company, and it was alleged that after the formation of the company the defendant and his co-directors had carried on speculative dealings in shares of other companies and had used the funds of the company for this purpose, which was not warranted by the memorandum of association. The plaintiffs alleged that their dealings, which were duly set forth in their plaint, had resulted in a heavy loss to the company, and they now sought to recover from the defendant the sum of Rs. 3,37,700-13-5. There had been originally five directors of the company, but at the date of suit two of them were dead and two had become insolvent. The plaint was filed in April, 1890.

Held (affirming the decision of Parsons, J.) (1) that the memorandum of association did not justify the directors of the company in dealing in shares of other companies, and that the transactions complained of by the plaintiffs were ultra vires.

(2) That the directors were liable to replace the moneys of the company which they had misapplied by applying them to a purpose which was ultra vires.

[120] (3) That s. 10 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) does not apply to directors of companies, the directors not being persons in whom the property of the company is vested as contemplated by that section.

(4) That in any case the staleness of the demand was a valid defence to the action, the liquidators of the company having had full knowledge of the facts since the company went into liquidation, but no suit was filed until the expiration of twenty-three years.

SUIT to recover Rs. 3,37,700 from the defendant, who had been a director of the company.

The company was duly registered as a limited company on the 23rd June, 1864, under Act XIX of 1857. Its capital was Rs. 12,50,000 divided into 125 shares of Rs. 10,000 each.

* Suit No. 187 of 1890.

SEP. 22.

ORIGINAL CIVIL.

18 B. 119.

The company went into liquidation in 1867, and at the date of suit was still in liquidation (see para. 16 of the plaint, infra).

The following were the objects of the company as stated in the memorandum of association :—" Commission agency and general trading in cotton and other staple products to be procured, as far as possible, direct from the producers in Kathiawar, Gujarat, Marwar and other parts of the interior of this country; disposing of them either in Bombay or shipping them to England; commission agency and general trading in goods and commodities suited for market in the interior of India, introducing cotton churkas in the interior; or erecting factories, establishment and agencies for trading purposes. If found desirable, the company may effect purchases of cotton and produce in Bombay and ship to England and carry on such local trade as may seem profitable."

The plaint after stating the above facts set forth that the directors of the company were Virchand Dipchand (the defendant), Bharmal Parbut, Jugjivandas Hemji, Gopalrao Bulwant and Dowlatchand Hukumchand, who, as such, were entrusted with, and had the management and control of, the funds of the said company.

The plaint then stated that after the formation of the company the said directors speculated with the company's funds in the purchase of shares in other companies and invested and applied large portions of the funds of the company in the purchase of such shares. It set forth, in detail, the various dealings complained [121] of, which resulted in heavy losses to the plaintiff company, and then continued :—

" The plaintiffs say that the said purchases of shares and the application of the funds of the said company in manner aforesaid were wholly unauthorized by the memorandum and articles of association of the said company and were breaches of trust on the part of the said directors. The plaintiffs believe that some of the shares purchased as aforesaid were the shares of one or other of the said directors, and in particular the plaintiffs say that the said shares of the Imperial Banking and Trading Company, Limited, were purchased from the defendant.

" 15. The plaintiffs also say that the said directors in the case of some of the said purchases when they had not moneys of the said company in their hands, sufficient to pay for the same, obtained money for that purpose on the credit of the said company.

" 16. In consequence of the funds of the company having been applied as aforesaid, the said company was unable to meet its liabilities, and it was duly resolved to wind the same up voluntarily, and by an order on the 21st January, 1867, it was ordered that the same winding up should be continued under the supervision of this Court. Pestonji Merwanji Narielwalla, the official liquidator of the said company, having been appointed to that office, by an order dated the 6th day of July, 1886, is now winding up the affairs of the company.

" 18. The plaintiffs submit that under the circumstances aforesaid the defendant is liable to repay to the plaintiffs the said sums aforesaid, amounting in all to Rs. 3,37,700-13-5 and interest thereon at the rate of 9 per cent. per annum from the said 21st January, 1867."

The plaintiff company accordingly claimed to recover the said sum from the defendant. The suit was filed on the 2nd April, 1890.

Of the five directors above mentioned, two (viz., Bharmul Parbut and Dowlatchand Hukumchand) were dead at the date of the suit, and two (viz., Jugjivan Hemji and Gopalrao Bulwant) had become insolvent.

In his written statement the defendant admitted that the company traded in shares, and alleged that trading in shares was at the time one of the principal trades in Bombay, and seemed to be and was considered to be a profitable trade. He stated that some of the plaintiffs' transactions had resulted in loss and some in profit, and he submitted that the plaintiffs were not entitled to select exclusively those transactions in which there was a loss. He admitted all the transactions set forth in the plaint, which he said appeared in the company's books and were known to the liquidator in the year 1867 when the company went into liquidation. [122] He denied all liability to the plaintiff company, and submitted that the said transactions in shares were not ultra vires of the company or of the directors. The concluding clauses of his written statement were as follows:—

"7. Neither the defendant or his co-directors ever concealed or attempted to conceal from any one that the plaintiff company had carried on the said share transactions as part of their business, nor had they any reason to do so, as they believed that such transactions were intra vires of the plaintiff company.

"8. This defendant says that this suit, brought twenty-three years after the plaintiff company went into liquidation, is barred by the Limitation Acts in force from time to time during that period."

At the hearing the following issues (inter alia) were raised:—

(1) Whether the claim in this suit is barred by the law of limitation?

(2) Whether, apart from the law of limitation, this claim is unsustainable as being a stale demand?

(3) Whether the purchases of shares and the application of the funds of the company stated in the plaint, were unauthorized by the memorandum and articles of the company as alleged?

Lang (Acting Advocate-General) and Scott, for plaintiffs.

Macpherson and Inverarity, for defendant.

The judgment of the Court (Parsons, J.) was as follows:—

30*th January*, 1893. PARSONS, J.—(After stating the facts and referring to the pleadings his Lordship said):

I will deal with the third issue first. It is contended for the defendant that the words in the third clause of the memorandum of association —"carry on such local trade as may seem profitable"—would include the purchase of the shares in question. I am not, however, able to assent to this contention. Speculative dealing in shares is not trade in the usual sense of the term, and the memorandum itself clearly shows that the trade of the company was to be in cotton and produce only, certainly not in shares. I find the third issue in the affirmative.

The first issue raises the question of limitation, and its decision depends upon whether s. 10 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) applies to the case or not. It can do so only if the defendant as a director of this company was a person in whom property had [123] become vested in trust for some specific purpose. The point is not without authority. [In In re Oxford Benefit Building and Investment Society(1) Kay, J., says: "It is settled by authorities which I cannot dispute, that(1) directors are quasi-trustees of the capital of the company, (2) directors who improperly pay dividends out of capital are liable to repay such dividends personally upon the company being wound up * * * * and (5) such an act is a breach of trust and the remedy is not barred by the statute of limitation."] In In re Sharpe; In re Bennett; Masonic and General Life Assurance Company v. Sharp (1), Lindley, L.J., says: "A director of a company is certainly not a mere agent. It is his duty, amongst other things, to protect the company and to enforce its rights even against himself, and the conflict between his interest and his duty when he has misapplied the company's money prevents the statute of limitations from applying to an action brought against him by the company in order to recover such money;" and I take it from Buckley in his work on Companies, pp. 495 to 497 (6th Ed.), that directors are undoubtedly trustees of the powers entrusted to them as between themselves and the shareholders, for the assets of the company are entrusted to them to be applied for certain defined objects, and they are responsible as for a breach of trust if they apply them to other objects. There can, therefore, I think, be no doubt that s. 10 does apply to the present suit; for, as ruled by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Balwant Rao Bishwant v. Purun Mal (2), the expression "for the purpose of following in his or their hands such property" means for the purpose of recovering the property for the trusts in question; that when property is used for some purpose other than the proper purpose of the trust in question it may be recovered without any bar of time from the hands of the persons indicated in the section. I find the first issue in the negative.

The second issue raises the question of staleness of demand. The principle and application of the doctrine of laches is set out most clearly in the judgment of Sir Barnes Peacock in the case of Lindsay Petroleum Co. v. Hurd (3). In his judgment [124] (p. 239) he says: "The doctrine of laches in Courts of Equity is not an arbitrary or a technical doctrine. Where it would be practically unjust to give a remedy, either because the party has by his conduct done that which might fairly be regarded as equivalent to a waiver of it, or where by his conduct aud neglect he has, though perhaps not waiving that remedy, yet put the other party in a situation in which it would not be reasonable to place him if the remedy were afterwards to be asserted, in either of these cases lapse of time and delay are most material. But in every case, if an argument against relief, which otherwise would be just, is founded upon mere delay, that delay of course not amounting to a bar by any statute of limitations, the validity of that defence must be tried upon principles substantially equitable. Two circumstances, always important in such cases, are, the length of delay and the nature of the acts done during the interval, which might affect either party and cause a balance of justice or injustice in taking the one course or the other, so far as relates to the remedy." The same doctrine is discussed in the cases of Erlanger v. New Sombrero Phosphate Co. (4) and In re Mammoth Copperopolis of Utah (5).

A consideration of those cases and of the remarks also in the case In re Sharpe (1) leads me to the conclusion that if there ever was a case to which the principle ought to be applied, the present is such a one; for here the dealings were perfectly open and above board, they were fully set out in the books of the company and must have been known to the shareholders and to all the liquidators since the winding up, and yet the suit is not brought until after the expiration of twenty-four years. There is no allegation of fraud, and the directors of this company were only doing what in those times was universal, and are not shown to have been actuated by any other motive than desire for the welfare and benefit of the company. It seems to me that the length of the delay in the present case and the nature of the acts done during the interval and the changed circumstances of the defendant would make it very inequitable and unjust now to award the [125] claim. I find the second issue in the affirmative, and dismiss the suit, but without costs.

The plaintiffs appealed, on the ground that the Judge was wrong in holding—

(1) that the alleged staleness of the claim disentitled them to a decree;

(2) that the doctrine of laches had any application to the case;

(3) that the delay and the nature of the acts done during the interval and the changed circumstances of the defendant would render a decree for the plaintiffs unjust and unequitable.

The defendant also filed cross objections to the decree. He contended that the Judge erred (1) in not holding that the suit was barred by limitation; (2) in holding that the words "local trade" in the memorandum and articles of association of the company did not include dealing in shares.

Lang (Acting Advocate General) and Scott, for the appellants (plaintiffs) :—The defendant was one of the directors of the company. As such he was a trustee. He and his co-directors invested the money of the company in the purchase of shares. The Court below has found the first and third issues in our favour, but has dismissed the suit, as it found the second issue for the defendant. Under the memorandum of association the directors were not justified in dealing in shares—In re Asiatic Banking Corporation (1); Chadwyck Healey on Companies, p. 21; Ashbury Railway Carriage, &c., Co. v. Riche (2). As to whether the suit was barred by limitation, the following authorities were cited :—Section 10 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877); Metropolitan Bank v. Heiron (3); Balwant Rao v. Purun Mal (4); In re Oxford Benefit Building and Investment Society (5); Flitcroft's case (6); Ramskill v. Edwards (7); Buckley on Companies (6th Ed.), pp. 495 to 497; In re Hallett's Estate (8).

Where the Act of Limitation applies, the equitable doctrine with regard to staleness of claim does not apply. Inverarity (with Macpherson) for the respondent (defendant).—We contend that the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) applies to this case, and that the suit was barred at the end of six years by art. 120 of the schedule of that Act. In cases to which s. 10 of that Act applies it is true that no lapse of time is a bar to an action. But that section does not apply here. It applies only when the suit is a suit against "persons in whom property has been vested in trust for some specific purpose." But a director of a company is not such a person. He is not a trustee, and he is not a person in whom property is vested for a purpose. He is, no doubt, in a fiduciary position and may be guilty of a breach of duty or a breach of trust, but that does not necessarily make him a trustee. Persons in a fiduciary position are loosely and for convenience called trustees, but they are not necessarily trustees. Section 10 does not apply to all persons in a fiduciary position. It does not apply to all cases of breach of duty or breach of trust. It is expressly limited to breaches of trust by persons who are strictly and properly trustees. Compare Stat. 3 and 4 Will. IV, s. 25, from which s. 10 is taken. For a definition of breach of trust, see Wharton's Law Lexicon, p. 102. No person is properly called a trustee except a person in whom property is vested. Directors of a company have merely an authority or power to manage the property of the company, but no estate is vested in them. As to the meaning of "vest," see [127] Lord Westbury's judgment in Dickenson v. Teasdale (1); Kherodemoney v. Doorgamoney (2); Coverdale v. Charlton (3); Greender v. Mackintosh (4). Compare the Indian Insolvent Act (Stats. 11 and 12 Vic., c. 21), s. 7; Act V of 1881, s. 4; Bombay Municipal Act III of 1888, s. 298; Rolls v. The Vestry of St. George, the Martyr of Southwark (5); Queensbury Industrial Society v. Pickles (6); Lindley on Companies (5th Ed.), pp. 364—374. Directors are not trustees: see per Bowen, L. J., in Imperial Hydropolis Hotel Company v. Hamson (7); In re Faure Electric Accumulator Co. (8); Sheffield, &c., Building Co. v. Aizlewood (9); Knowles v. Scott (10); Smith v. Anderson (11); The London Trust Co. v. Mackenzie (12).

Under the Indian Trusts Act a director is not a trustee: see s. 3. That Act regards a trustee as owner of the property: see s. 88. Bank v. Heiron (1); Stroud's Judicial Dictionary (1890); The English Judicature Act, 1873, s. 25.

JUDGMENT.

[128] SARGENT, C. J.—The suit, which has given rise to this appeal, was brought by the liquidator of the Kathiawar Trading Company against the defendant, who was one of the directors during the short existence of the company before going into liquidation, to recover the balance of money expended by the directors in the purchase of shares of various companies, and which have not been accounted for, on the ground that such share transactions were ultra vires, the company and, therefore, the directors. The transactions as alleged in the plaint are not disputed by the defendant, who is the only surviving director with the exception of Jugjivan Hemji and Gopalrao Bulwant, who have become insolvents.

The first question, therefore, for consideration is whether the trading in shares by the directors was within the words of the memorandum of association, which determines the purposes for which the company was incorporated. (His Lordship read the clause in the memorandum above set forth and continued :—)

It has been contended for the defendant that it came within the general words "and carry on such local trade as may seem profitable." It would, we think, be difficult to say that the term "trading" necessarily excludes trafficking in shares ; but such general words must, according to well-established principles of construction, be read in conjunction with what has gone before in the memorandum. The case of Ashbury Railway Carriage, &c., Company v. Riche (2) is a good illustration of the application of that principle of construction. Now the primary object for which this company was established was to do commission agency, a general trading in cotton and other staple products, to be procured, as far as possible, from the producers in Kathiawar, Gujarat, Marwar and parts of the interior of the country, with the view of disposing of the same either in Bombay or shipping them to England ; and, secondly, general trading in goods and commodities suited for the market in the interior of India. So far the object of the company (as stated by the memorandum of association) is to trade with the interior of India ; but, if found desirable, the company might purchase cotton and produce in [129] Bombay and ship to England and "carry on such local trade as might seem profitable." In other words, the memorandum contemplates the possibility of its being found desirable to purchase cotton and produce in Bombay for the purpose of shipping to England and carrying on such local trade as may seem profitable." By "such local trade" must be meant trade in Bombay of the same nature as before mentioned, viz., goods and commodities ;" the choice being left as to the particular goods and commodities they should trade in. "Goods and commodities" cannot, we think, according to the ordinary use of those terms, be held to include, "shares in companies," and we agree, therefore, with the Judge of Division Court that the transactions were ultra vires.

Assuming, then, that the moneys of the company were misapplied by the directors in the sense of being applied to a purpose, which was ultra vires, there can be now no doubt, upon the English authorities that the directors are liable to replace the moneys. I need only refer to the judgment of Sir G. Jessel in In re National Fund Association(3) where the payment of dividends out of capital was held to be ultra vires, and of Lord Justice Lindley in In re Sharpe(1) when he says " as soon as the conclusion is arrived at that the Company's money has been applied by the directors for purposes which the company cannot sanction, it follows that the directors are liable to replace the money, however honestly they may have acted."

The more difficult question in the case remains for consideration, namely whether the right to recover the moneys by the liquidator is barred by the Act of Limitation or by the staleness of the demand on the principles laid down by the Privy Council in Lindsay Petroleum Co. v. Hurd(2) and Lord Blackburn in Erlanger v. New Sombrero Phosphate Co.(3). Apart from the operation of s. 10 of the Act of Limitation on which the plaintiffs rely, such a claim would be barred, we apprehend, in six years under art. 120 of the Act, which period has long expired, and it has been contended for the defendant that the language of the above section is not applicable to the present case. Now that directors are quasi-trustees in respect of the capital [130] of the company, and it is said that, in the event of their applying the funds of the company in a manner which is ultra vires the memorandum of association, the relief which the Court will give against them is not barred by the Statute of Limitations is treated as settled law by Kay, J., in In re Oxford Benefit Building and Investment Society(4), and was so regarded by the Court of Appeal in In re Sharpe (1).

It is, however, to be remarked that directors of a company are precluded, in England, from pleading the bar of the statute by virtue, either of a general rule of the Court of Equity applicable to all trustees or quasi-trustees, or else by the Judicature Act of 1873, which is applicable to all persons "holding" property upon trust, but that the question, whether they are precluded in this country, depends exclusively upon whether they can, in the language of s. 10 of the Statute of Limitations, be regarded as "persons in whom the property of the company is vested in trust for a specific purpose." It is certainly not vested in them, as is the case with trustees of a settlement or will. Lord Justice James remarks on this distinction in Smith v. Anderson. (5) He says : "The same individual may fill the office of director and also be a trustee having property, but that is a rare, exceptional and casual circumstance."

Mr. Justice Kay in In re Faure Electric Accumulator Co. (6) alluding to the same distinction says : "One obvious distinction, (i. e., between directors and trustees of a settlement or will), is that the property of the company is not legally vested in them, but at the same time they have large powers of management and control vested in them over the property of the company." It is doubtless by reason of such management and control that they are held liable for the misappropriation of the trust funds, as explained by Sir G. Jessel in In re Forest of Dean Coal Mining Company(7) but it is certainly contrary to the ordinary accepted meaning of the term "vesting" to say that property is vested in persons by reason merely of their having control over it. "Vesting" as explained by Brett and Cotton, JJ., in Coverdale v. [131] Charlton(8) when applied to the subject-matter of property according to its ordinary legal acceptation gives the property in it and not merely the control over it. Again, in Dickenson v. Teasdale(9) Lord Westbury construing " vesting " in 3 and 4 Will. IV s. 25, which is substantially the same as s. 10 of the Limitation Act of 1877, c. 27, held that "vesting" implied property in the subject-matter that a person who had merely power to charge the land did not, therefore, come under the section. On the whole, although directors of a company are quasi-trustees, we think it would be unduly straining the language of s. 10 to say that they are persons in whom the property of the company is vested as contemplated by that section. It may perhaps be subject of regret that such should be the conclusion on the language of the section. If so, it will be for the Legislature to amend the section.

This is sufficient for the decision, but we think it right to express an opinion that, in any view of s. 10, the staleness of the present demand is a valid defence to the action. In In re Mammoth Copperopolis of Utah(1), Hall, V. C., held that the claim against the directors could not be enforced on the ground of great default on the part of the liquidators and the difficulty in which the directors would be consequently placed by such default. It is true that in In re Sharpe two of the Lords Justices, Lindley and Fry, L. JJ., reserved their opinions whether the doctrine of staleness of the demand is applicable to a demand against directors to restore the funds applied ultra vires, but as the liquidation is for the purpose of settling all claims arising out of the working of the company and all interests, whether of the creditors or the shareholders, are fully represented for that purpose by the liquidators, it is difficult to understand why the doctrine when the liquidators are in fault should not equally apply to such a demand. In the present case the liquidators, as admitted by the present liquidator, had full knowledge that the capital of the company had been applied in trafficking in shares. That is shown by the directors' report and the schedule of debts [132] produced by the liquidators at the commencement of the liquidation. Nevertheless the liquidators never made any claim or took any steps to make the directors liable until the present suit was brought. During the long period of twenty-three years which has elapsed since the company went into liquidation the co-directors of the defendant have either died or become insolvent, and the defendant's right to contribution from them in the event of his being held liable is thus rendered practically valueless—a circumstance much relied on by Lord Campbell, in Bright v. Legerton (2), as showing the unreasonableness of a stale demand in that case and which the cases show is the foundation of the doctrine. In Erlanger v. New Sombrero Phosphate Co., Lord Blackburn says: "It must always be a question of more or less dependence on the degree of diligence which might reasonably be required and the degree of the change which has occurred whether the balance of justice or injustice is in favour of granting the remedy, or withholding it." In the present case, after such a period of time and such changes, we cannot doubt the balance is in the favour of the latter, and that the Division Court was right in so holding.

For these reasons we must confirm the decree, except as to costs. The plaintiff to have his costs here and in the Division Court.

An entry in the Settlement Officer's record referred to in s. 17 of the Khoti Act (Bombay Act I of 1880) is conclusive as to the nature and amount of rent. The words "conclusive and final evidence of the liability" in s. 17 have the effect of shutting out any other evidence on the subject which might be adduced before the Civil Court.

The words "when not final" in s. 21 of the Act refer to the finality ascribed in s. 17 to the entries of the nature therein mentioned, and which follow as contemplated in s. 20 on the survey officer arriving at his decision.

For the purpose of construing an Act, the debate upon the Bill when before the Legislative Council is not to be referred to.

SECOND appeal from the decision of J. Fitzmaurice, Acting District Judge of Ratnagiri.

[134] The plaintiff sued to recover from the defendant the balance of profits for the years 1886-1887 and 1887-1888 on account of the cultivation of certain lands in a village of Doncavali, of which the plaintiffs' agent was the managing khot. The suit was filed on the 20th July, 1888.

Defendant contended (inter alia) that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover thal (rent in kind) for the lands which were liable only to a permanent makta (rent in cash); that on the 12th June, 1887, it had been decided by the Special Assistant Collector and Settlement Officer that the lands were liable to makta; that the suit not having been instituted within one year from the date of that decision was time-barred; that the makta for the year 1886-1887 was already paid, and that he was ready and willing to pay the balance of makta for the year 1887-1888, but the plaintiff had declined to accept it.

* Second Appeal, No. 725 of 1891.

The following are the sections of the Act referred to:—

† 17. The other records prepared under the said section shall specify the nature and amount of rent payable to the khot by each privileged occupant according to the provisions of s. 33, and any entry in any record duly made under this section shall be conclusive and final evidence of the liability thereby established.

‡ 20. If it shall appear to the survey officer, who frames the said register or any other record, that there exists any dispute as to any matter which he is bound to record, he may, either on the application of any of the disputant parties, or of his own motion, investigate and determine such dispute and frame the said register or other record accordingly.

§ 21. In any such matter the decision of the said survey officer, when not final, shall be binding upon all the parties affected thereby until reversed or modified by a final decree of a competent Court.

¶ 22. No suit shall lie against the said survey officer, or against Government, or any officer of Government to set aside any such decision of a survey officer; but the record from time to time be amended by the said survey officer, or when the survey settlement is concluded by the Collector, in accordance with any such decree as aforesaid which the parties may obtain inter se on an application, accompanied by a certified copy of such decree, being duly made to the said survey officer, or to the Collector for that purpose.

APPELLATE CIVIL.
18 B. 133.

The Subordinate Judge found that the custom of the payment of the makta alleged by the defendant was proved: that the suit was not barred by the order passed by the Settlement Officer, but that it was barred by art. 14, sch. II of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) only with respect to the lands comprised in that order and not with respect to others. The Subordinate Judge, therefore, allowed the claim to the extent of Rs. 28-3-10.

The plaintiff appealed to the District Court, and the defendant presented cross-objections under s. 561 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882).

The District Judge held that the entries of the nature of the amount and rent contained in the decision of the Settlement Officer were absolutely final. In his judgment he said:—

"Now s. 17 of the Khoti Settlement Act, 1880, says that 'any entry in any record duly made under this section shall be conclusive and final evidence of the liability thereby established.' Sections 20 and 21 must relate to disputes as to other matters than 'the nature and amount of rent payable to the khot by each privileged occupant;' for s. 21 says 'in any such matter the decision of the said survey officer, when not final, shall be binding * * * until reversed or modified by a final decree of a competent Court.'

[135] "A distinction is plainly made between the effects of entries in regard to the particular matters referred to in s. 17 and the effects of those made under s. 20, the latter being liable to be upset by the Civil Courts, while the former are 'conclusive and final evidence of the liability thereby established.'

"That the entries under s. 17 are intended by the Legislature to be final,—that is, not liable to be upset by the Civil Court,—is, I think, shown by the debate in Council on the Bill, which took place on the 6th January, 1880." (The Judge then quoted passages from the debate and continued:—) "I am, therefore, of opinion that the entries shown in Ex. 18 referring to some of the lands in dispute are final evidence that those lands are liable to makta at the rates laid down."

The Judge having come to the above conclusion, the parties consented to a decree being passed for the plaintiff for the amount awarded by the Subordinate Judge with costs; the right of appealing against the decision of the Judge being reserved.

The plaintiff preferred a second appeal to the High Court.

Ganesh Krishna Deshamukh, for the appellant (plaintiff):—The lower Court has misconstrued s. 17 of the Khoti Act. That section must be read along with s. 22. An entry made by a settlement officer under the provisions of s. 17 is conclusive of the liability mentioned in the entry itself and no further. The entry is final and conclusive so long as it exists, but not for ever. Section 22 contemplates the modification of the entry made under s. 17. Section 17 should be construed in a manner consistent with the tenor of the whole Act. A Civil Court cannot go behind the entry so long as it stands, but a Civil Court may entertain a suit for the cancellation of the entry. If the Legislature had intended that the entry should be final, then the section would have ended with the word "final," and there would have been no addition of the other words. The present suit is brought for the purpose of getting the entry cancelled. In interpreting ss. 17 and 21 of the Khoti Act the Judge was wrong in referring to the debate in the Legislative Council. Act X of 1876, s. 12, was cited.

[136] Ganpat Sadashiv Rao, for the respondent, was not called upon.

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—The District Court was wrong in referring to the debate on the bill for the purpose of construing s. 17 of the Act, but we agree with him in his conclusion that the entry in the Settlement Officer's record was conclusive as to the nature and amount of the rent. The words "conclusive and final evidence of the liability" must, in the ordinary and grammatical meaning, have the effect of shutting out any other evidence on the subject which might be adduced before the Civil Court.

It was argued indeed that s. 21 provides for the entries being only binding on the parties until the decision of the survey officer has been reversed by a competent Court, and that the words "when not final" in s. 21 refer only to such matter as by the Revenue Jurisdiction Act of 1876 has been withdrawn from the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts. If that had been the intention we should expect it to be expressed in very different terms. The object of ss. 20, 21, 22 is to point out the course the survey officer is to pursue, when there are disputes between the parties, in order to enable him to make the entries required by s. 17. And the words "when not final" can only, therefore, properly refer to the finality ascribed in s. 17 to the entries of the nature therein mentioned and which follow as contemplated by s. 20 on the survey officer arriving at his decision.

We must, therefore, confirm the decree with costs.

Decree confirmed.

DEVSHANKAR NARANBHAI AND OTHERS (Original Plaintiffs), Appellants v. MOTIRAM JAGESHVAR (Original Defendant), *Respondent. [30th January, 1893.]

Hindu law—Will—Bequest to dharmada—Dharmada—Dharma.

A bequest in favour of dharmada is void by reason of uncertainty. The law on this point is the same in the Mofussil as in the Presidency town.

[137] SECOND appeal from the decision of G. McCorkell, District Judge of Ahmedabad, reversing the decree of Rao Saheb Maneklal Narotamdas in suit No. 589 of 1889.

The plaintiffs sued, as executors of the will of one Jethalal Jageshvar, to recover possession of certain moveable property belonging to the testator, or for its value, and for an injunction restraining the defendant from obstructing them in taking possession of the property in dispute.

The material portions of the will in question were as follow:—

"After my death my executors shall cause my obsequies to be performed by my brother Motilal and his son Amritlal conformably to the custom of my caste and with reference to the amount of my property. The executors shall pay out of my property Rs. 100 to my brother Motilal and his sons. Should they not perform my funeral ceremonies the same should be performed by my sister's son. And the amount ordered to be paid to my brother should be paid to him. The ceremonies should be performed up to my anniversary. Should any property remain after what is expended as above, the whole of it should be expended for dharmada after my death by the trustees as they think proper."

The defendant contended (inter alia) that the will was invalid, and that the residuary bequest to dharmada was void for uncertainty.

The Subordinate Judge held that the will was valid; that the residuary bequest was not void on the ground of uncertainty, and that the plaintiffs, as executors, were entitled to recover the property in dispute. He, therefore, awarded the plaintiffs' claim.

This decision was reversed, on appeal, by the District Judge, who held, on the authority of Lakshmishankar v. Vaijnath (1), that the bequest to dharmada was void, and that though the will was valid so far as it related to the performance of the funeral ceremonies and the payment of Rs. 100 to the testator's brother, the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover, as the funeral obsequies had been already performed by the deceased's brother, who was willing to allow his claim for those expenses to be merged in his general title.

[138] Against this decision the plaintiffs preferred a second appeal to the High Court.

Goverdhan M. Tripati, for appellants:—The question in this case is whether a gift in dharmada is void for uncertainty. The word dharmada is not synonymous with dharma. The latter is a term of very wide import, as denoting religion, charity, benevolence, virtue, justice, &c., whilst the term dharmada is restricted in its meaning to charitable gifts alone. Bequests to charity are valid under the English law—In re Douglas (2); Wilkinson v. Lindgren (3); In re Sutton (4); Lewis v. Allenby (5). But assuming that dharmada and dharm are convertible terms, still the law on this subject, as laid down by this High Court in the Presidency town, has no application to the Mofussil. The rulings in Gangbai v. Thavar Mulla (6) and Cursandas Govindji v. Vundravandas (7) do not govern the present case. These cases are decided by analogy to Statute 43 Eliz., c. 4. But it would be wrong to extend the analogy of this statute to cases arising in the Mofussil—The Advocate General v. Vishvanath (8); Parmanandas Jivandas v. Venayekrao (9).

Manekshah Jehangirshah, for respondent.—There is no difference in meaning between dharma and dharmada. Dharmada is property set apart for dharma. It would be wrong to restrict the meaning of dharmada to charitable gifts alone. The reason why a bequest to charity is valid under the English law is because the Courts of Equity in England have always attached a definite meaning to the term "charity." Has the word dharma such a definite meaning here? It means any kind of charitable, religious, or benevolent objects. It is too vague and uncertain. It is on this account that a bequest in dharma is held void. The Court cannot give any effect to such bequest. And the law on this point is now too well settled to be called in question.

JUDGMENT.

FULTON, J.—We have carefully considered the arguments of Mr. Govardhanram, but are unable to hold that there is any real distinction between a bequest to be expended on dharmada and [139] a bequest for dharm. If it be the case that the latter is void as being too vague a specification of the objects on which the testator desired his money to be expended, it appears to us to follow that a bequest for dharmada must equally fail by reason of uncertainty.

Mr. Maneklal Narotamdas, in an able judgment, questioned the correctness of the decisions in which it has been held that bequests for dharm are ineffectual; but we think that the point has been settled in this Presidency for so long a time that it is now impossible to reconsider it. The earliest ruling on the subject to which our attention has been called is that of Sir Erskine Perry and Sir W. Yardley in the Advocate General v. Damothar (1), which was followed in Pranjivandas v. Deokuvarbai (2) by Sir M. Sausse, C.J., and recently by Mr. Justice Parsons in Cursandas v. Vundravandas (3). It was urged that these decisions were passed either by the Supreme Court or by the High Court on its original side, and were, therefore, not determinative of the law in the Mofussil; but it appears to us that in a matter of this kind there can be no difference between the law in force in the Presidency town and that of the other parts of the Presidency. The Charter of the Supreme Court required it to be guided by the laws and usages of the Hindus, just as the Mofussil Courts are bound by Reg. II of 1827 to give effect to them. It can hardly be contended that there was any established law or usage regulating the phraseology of Hindu wills in the island of Bombay at variance with the law and usage on the same subject in the district of Ahmedabad; and, therefore, it follows that, if the Supreme Court correctly applied that law and usage in the case of Advocate General v. Damothar, that application must be followed in the Mofussil just as much as in the town of Bombay. This principle appears to have been recognised by Melvill, J., in Lakshmishankar v. Vaijnath (4), in which he does not seem to have doubted that a devise to dharm without any qualifying expression was too vague an indication of the testator's intention to constitute a valid gift to charity, or to have questioned the propriety of relying [140] on the decisions above referred to as precedents in a Mofussil case.

Whatever, then, might have been our opinion, if the matter had come before us unaffected by previous decisions, we do not feel justified now in re-opening the subject. It is clear that, when the object of a bequest is so vaguely described that it cannot be ascertained, the gift must fail, but the exact point at which the line should be drawn between reasonable certainty and vagueness must necessarily give rise to a good deal of difference of opinion. If, then, there is to be any consistency in the decisions of Courts, and each case is not to be left to the individual opinion of the Judge who happens to try it, it is manifest that, when the vagueness of a word or expression has been pronounced in a course of decisions by Judges of high authority to be such as to render void the bequest to which it has been applied, it becomes the duty of other Judges to accept their views, unless it can be said with reasonable certainty that they are erroneous. In the present case, however, this cannot be said; for though there may be some difficulty in distinguishing between many of the objects included in the word "dharm" and those comprised in the term "charity," and it may be unsafe to hold that the latter covers a narrower range than the former, we think that the ground on which the decision in the Advocate General v. Damodhar was based, namely, that the reasons which led the Court of Chancery to uphold the validity of gifts to charity, were inapplicable to gifts to dharm, can hardly be disputed. Other reasons might possibly be assigned for holding that the expression "dharm" or "dharmada" is not vague or indefinite; but apart from English precedents, we think that this question is of so uncertain a character that we ought to be guided by the decisions of the Judges who have already considered it. In a purely discretionary matter of this kind the earlier decisions must prevail in settling the law.

We, therefore, hold that the bequest in favour of dharmada was void by reason of uncertainty, and confirm the decree. All costs throughout to be paid out of the testator's estate.

Decree confirmed.

Landlord and tenant—Joint family—Manager—Lease granted by manager—Right to sue for rent under such lease—Co-sharers—Parties—Practice.

A manager of a joint Hindu family who, as such, has granted a lease, is during his lifetime the only person to sue for rent due under the lease, but after his death his son, who has not succeeded his father in the management, cannot sue without joining the other members of the joint family as parties.

SECOND appeal from the decision of J. B. Alcock, District Judge of Surat.

Suit for rent. The plaintiff sued the defendants for Rs. 139-8, the balance of rent for the year 1946 due on a rent-note alleged to have been passed by the defendants to the plaintiff's father Dayabhai Morarji.

Defendants Nos. 1 and 4 pleaded (inter alia) that they had passed the rent-note to the plaintiff's father Dayabhai as the manager of the united family to which the plaintiff belonged, and that the plaintiff could not sue alone, as the other members of the family had a share in the sum sued for.

Defendants Nos. 2 and 3, Bhula Sura and Bhimbhai Bhulabhai, admitted the claim.

The Subordinate Judge held that the plaintiff could not sue alone, as the land in question was admittedly joint family property, and that the plaintiff was not shown to be manager of the family. He held that the other co-sharers were necessary parties, and he, therefore, dismissed the suit as against defendants Nos. 1 and 4.

On appeal by the plaintiff, the District Judge held that, as the defendants had paid rent to the plaintiff, they were estopped from disputing his title to receive rent from them, and that the other members of the family were not necessary parties. He reversed the lower Court's decree and awarded the plaintiff's claim.

[142] Defendants Nos. 1 and 4 preferred a second appeal.

Manekshah J. Taleyarkhan, for the appellants (defendants) :—The plaintiff succeeded his father as one of the heirs, but not as manager of the family. Therefore, the suit brought by him alone without joining the other co-sharers, who are equally interested in the estate, cannot lie.

Mahadeo Chimnaji Apte, for the respondent (plaintiff). He cited Dada v. Bhau (1) ; Sayad Fatulla v. Bola (2) ; Jethu Jadhavji v. Ganpatrav(3).

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—The decisions in Dada v. Bhau (1) and Sayad Fatulla v. Bola (2) show doubtless that the plaintiff's father, who was manager and has such granted the lease, was the only person to sue for the rent whilst he was alive. But when he died, the plaintiff did not succeed to the management, and had, therefore, no exclusive right to sue for the rent.

We must, therefore, reverse the decree with costs here and in the lower appellate Court, and restore that of the Subordinate Judge.

Decree reversed.

[143] The opponent Sitaram Atmaram Vagh brought a suit against Francis Pedru and his mother Manaku in the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge of Karwar, in its Small Cause jurisdiction, to recover Rs. 476-9-0 due upon a promissory note jointly passed by them. At the hearing only the first defendant appeared and resisted the claim. The second defendant, Manaku, was absent. The Subordinate Judge passed a decree against both the defendants. Subsequently Manaku (defendant No. 2) applied to set aside the decree, and the question arose as to whether, if the application were granted, the case would be re-opened with respect to defendant No. 1. The Subordinate Judge referred the question as follows :—

"Whether an application by a co-defendant praying for setting aside an ex-parte decree in a Small Cause suit, if granted, re-opens the case against the defendant or defendants who were present and who conducted the defence in the original trials in cases where there is a common cause of action against all the defendants."

The opinion of the Subordinate Judge was in the negative. He referred to the following cases :—Brojonath Surmah v. Anund Moyee Debia (1) ; Huro Krishno Doss v. Motee Chand Baboo (2) ; Dookhee Khan v. Rajessuree Ranee (3) ; Nistarinee Dassee v. Debnath Bose (4).

KRISHNAJI (Original Plaintiff), Appellant v. WAMNAJI (Original Defendant), *Respondent. [9th February, 1893.]

Fraud—Plaint—Form of plaint—Charges of fraud—Amendment of plaint—Practice—Procedure.

Where a plaintiff seeks relief on the ground of fraud, and the plaint contains general allegations, but no specific instances, of the alleged fraud, it ought to be immediately, on presentation, rejected or returned for amendment, as it does not disolose a cause of action.

The plaintiff sued to recover damages caused by the defendant's fraud during his management of the plaintiff's estate from 1870 to 1884. The plaint disclosed no specific instances of the fraud imputed to the defendant. The Court of first instance, without going into evidence, rejected the plaintiff's claim, on the preliminary ground that the plaintiff had no right to sue during the lifetime of his adoptive mother. In second appeal, the respondent objected that the plaint was defective. The plaintiff's pleader asked for leave to amend it by specifying certain instances of the alleged fraud.

SECOND appeal from the decision of J. Fitzmaurice, Acting District Judge of Ratnagiri, in appeal No. 270 of 1889.

The plaintiff sued to recover Rs. 3,000 as damages sustained by him by reason of defendant's fraud and misconduct whilst acting as agent under plaintiff's adoptive mother in the management of his estate.

The plaint was as follows :—

"One Ramchandra Bapuji Thakur adopted me (the plaintiff) and died in March, 1870, whilst the plaintiff was a minor.

"Ramabai, the plaintiff's mother, carried on the management of the whole estate through the defendant Therein he committed a good many frauds, and misappropriated considerable property, and removed the documents. And with a view to escape the consequences of his fraud he gave up the management in July, 1884, and fraudulently obtained a release from Ramabai by misrepresenting and misstating matters therein.

"[145] Subsequently in August, 1884, Ramabai delivered over to me, the plaintiff, all the management, the letters and documents, &c., received by her. Thereafter on my examining the said letters, documents and accounts relating to the management of the defendant, I found that he had not faithfully carried on the management of my property as my agent from March, 1870, to August, 1884, but had greatly benefited himself by fraudulently misappropriating the said property and writing false accounts.

"The plaintiff seeks to recover the damages caused by the defendant's fraud and breach of trust."

Defendant denied the alleged fraud and contended that the plaintiff had no right to sue during the lifetime of his adoptive mother, inasmuch as his adoptive father had left a will under which an absolute right of management was conferred on her during her lifetime.

Both the lower Courts rejected the plaintiff's claim on the preliminary ground that, under the will of plaintiff's adoptive father, Ramabai (the adoptive mother) was absolute owner and manager of the estate during her lifetime ; that defendant was accountable to Ramabai alone ; and that as she did not come forward to complain of his mismanagement, plaintiff had not the right to do so.

Against this decision the plaintiff preferred a second appeal to the High Court.

Mahadeo Chimnaji Apte, for the respondent, took the objection that the plaint disclosed no cause of action and ought not to have been accepted. It did not mention any specific instances of fraud. It contained merely general allegations of fraud—Gunga Narain Gupta v. Tiluckram Chowdhry (1).

Manekshah Jehangirshah :—I admit that the plaint is defective. But I ask to be allowed to amend the plaint by specifying certain instances of fraud, which are proved in the case. A plaint can be amended even at this stage—Joseph v. Solano (2) and Mohummud Zahoor Ali Khan v. Mussumat Thakooranee Rutta Koer (3).

JUDGMENT.

[146] FULTON, J.—We think that the objection, taken by Mr. Apte, that the plaint discloses no specific instances of fraud, must be allowed.

The decision of the Privy Council in Ganga Narain Gupta v. Tiluckram Chowdhry (1) shows that "with regard to fraud, if there be any principle, which is perfectly well settled, it is that general allegations, however strong may be the words in which they are stated, are insufficient even to amount to an averment of fraud of which any Court ought to take notice." Such being the case the plaint ought, immediately on presentation, to have been rejected or returned for amendment, as it did not disclose a cause of action. Mr. Manekshah admits the defective nature of the plaint, but asks to be allowed to amend it by specifying certain instances alluded to in the Commissioner's reports, and offers to pay the costs of both appeals. Had the evidence on both sides, regarding these alleged frauds, been taken, this course might, perhaps, have been adopted; but the Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit on another point without taking the evidence for the defendant, or finishing the evidence for the plaintiff. The frauds are alleged to have taken place before 1884, and the effect of the amendment would be that now, in the year 1893, the defendant would be required to give evidence to defend himself from charges of fraud which have never yet been clearly specified, and which were not embodied (and could not on the pleadings be embodied) in the issues in the Court of first instance. Under these circumstances, we think the amendment should not now be allowed.

We were referred to the decisions in Joseph v. Solano (2) and Mohummud Zahoor Ali Khan v. Mussumat Thakooranee Rutta Koer (3) as showing at how late a stage amendment may be allowed; but in the latter case (which was followed in the former), it appears that there was a total misconception of the nature of the suit. In the present case this does not seem to have occurred. Either the plaintiff when he presented his plaint, knew the instances of fraud alleged to have been committed by the defendant, in which case his omission to specify them suggests the belief that he [147] preferred not to do so, with a view to keeping it open for himself to shape his allegations as he went along to meet the evidence; or he did not know of them and began a suit without any ground to go upon and simply in the hope that he would be able to make out a ground by evidence later on. In either alternative, it does not seem desirable now, nine years after the alleged frauds, to allow the amendment of the plaint. Without such amendment, however, it is clear that the suit must fail, as it is well settled that when fraud is charged, the evidence must be confined to the allegations.

On these grounds, then, we confirm the decree of the Courts below with costs.

JANKIBAI (Original Plaintiff), Appellant v. MAHADEV AND OTHERS (Original Defendants), *Respondents. [10th February, 1893.]

Hindu law—Joint family—Family debt—Liability of family property—Manager—Decree against manager—Execution sale—Questions for Court to decide in determining the quantum of interest which passes to the auction-purchaser.

Where the manager of a joint Hindu family is sued for the recovery of a debt, and his right, title and interest in the family property are sold in execution, the questions which the Court has to decide in determining the quantum of interest which has passed to the auction-purchaser are : (1) whether the debt was one for which the entirety might, by proper procedure, have been brought to sale, and (2) whether, as a matter of fact, the purchaser bargained and paid for the entirety.

A, and his three younger brothers B. C. and D were members of a joint Hindu family. A was the manager of the family. After A's death, B, C, and D were sued as his legal representatives in respect of a debt which A had contracted for the benefit of the family. A decree was passed against them as A's representatives, directing the recovery of the debt by sale of A.'s estate. In execution of this decree, A's right, title and interest in certain family property was put up to sale.

Held, that the sale affected the rights of all the members of the joint family. Under the circumstance what was meant to be brought to sale was the right, title and interest of the family of which Sakharam had been the manager, and for the benefit of which the debt had been incurred.

[148] SECOND appeal from the decision of Rao Bahadur N. G. Phadake, First Class Subordinate Judge, A. P., of Satara in appeal No. 282 of 1889.

Suit for redemption of certain land. The land in question was family property and belonged to four brothers, viz., Sakharam, Sitaram, Govind and Antaji.

Sakharam was the manager of the family. In 1871 he mortgaged the property to Vinayak, the father of defendant No. 1.

In 1872 and 1873 he passed two other bonds in favour of Vinayak to secure certain debts contracted for the benefit of the family.

After Sakharam's death, his brothers were sued as his legal representatives on the two bonds of 1872 and 1873, and a money decree was passed against them, directing that the decretal amount should be recovered out of the property of the deceased Sakharam.

In execution of this decree, Sakharam's right, title and interest in the property in dispute were put up to sale on the 13th October, 1875, and purchased by defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4.

By a deed of sale dated 15th February 1884, Sitaram, Govind and Lakshumibai, widow of Antaji, conveyed their interests in the lands in suit to plaintiff No. 1.

In 1887 the present suit for redemption was filed by plaintiff No. 1. Plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3 were joined subsequently to the institution of the suit, as persons interested in the equity of redemption.

The main question at issue between the parties was, whether the interest of Sakharam alone, or the interests of his brothers also, passed to the defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4 at the Court-sale held in 1875 in execution of the money decree obtained by Vinayak, the father of defendant No. 1.

On this point both the lower Courts found that Sakharam was manager of the family; that the debt for which the decree was passed, and the property sold in execution, was contracted [149] by Sakharam for the benefit of the family, and that, therefore, the interests of all the brothers passed to the defendant Nos. 2, 3 and 4 as auction-purchasers.

The lower Courts, therefore, held that the plaintiffs were not entitled to redeem that portion of the property which was purchased by defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4.

Against this decision plaintiff preferred a second appeal to the High Court.

Mahadeo Chimnaji Apte, for the appellant:—The decree in execution of which the property in dispute was sold, was a decree against Sakharam's property in the hands of his heirs. It was a money decree for the recovery of a debt contracted by Sakharam alone. The decree and the sale in execution affected only Sakharam's interest in the family property. Even in the case of a father, a sale in execution of a money decree against him passes his interest only, in the absence of any special circumstances showing an intention to put up to sale the entire interest of the family—Maruti Sakharam v. Baboji (1); Pandu v. Maniklal (2), Basaya v. Fakirgavda (3).

M. B. Chaubal, for respondent No. 1.

Shivram Vithal Bhandarkar, for respondents Nos. 2 to 4:—What was sold is a question of fact, and both the lower Courts have found, as a fact, that the interest of the whole family was put up to sale and purchased by the respondents. This finding is conclusive in second appeal—Appaji Bapuji v. Keshav (4). At the time of the suit, Sakharam's brothers were not minors. They were parties to the suit, and they raised no objection in the execution proceedings to the sale of the entire family estate. They are, therefore, estopped, and so is the plaintiff, their assignee, from contending that Sakharam's interest alone passed to the auction-purchasers. Mahadeo Chimnaji Apte, in reply:—The decree is plain on the face of it. It binds only Sakharam's interest in the family property—Kisansing Jivansing v. Moreshwar (13).

JUDGMENT.

FULTON, J.—The only point argued in this appeal was whether the District Court was correct in holding that the rights of Sitaram, Antaji and Govind in certain portions of the property in dispute were conveyed to defendants Nos. 2 to 4 by the auction sales referred to in certificates 84, 86 and 88.

Sakharam was, it has been found, the manager of the family, and the debt, to recover which the auction sale took place, was, according to the finding of the Court of first instance, contracted for family purposes. Against this finding no express appeal was made to the District Court, and no issue was sought for on the subject. Under these circumstances, we think the District Court could rightly regard the debt as a family debt, and that we are bound to treat it as such. When the suit was brought to recover this debt, Sakharam was dead, and it was accordingly filed against his brothers Sitaram, Govind, and Antaji as his representatives. A decree was passed against them in this capacity directing the recovery of the debt by the sale of Sakharam's estate. In execution of this decree the deceased Sakharam's right, title and interest were sold, and the question now arises whether the sale affected the rights of all the members of the joint family in the property or not.

As the debt was a family debt it is obvious that all those rights could be sold to satisfy it, and the question, therefore, is narrowed to one of procedure. Strictly speaking, at the time of the sale, Sakharam's estate had ceased to exist; for, at his death, his interest, in the joint property, passed to his brothers, but under the circumstances we think the lower Court was right in holding that what was meant to be brought to sale and conveyed was the right, title and interest of the family of which [151] Sakharam had been the manager, and for the benefit of which the debt had been incurred. An examination of the various reported decisions in suits in which a manager, whether a father or a brother, has been sued for the recovery of the debt and in which his right, title and interest have been sold in execution, leads to the conclusion that the questions, which the Court has to decide, are whether the debt was one for which the entirety might by proper procedure have been brought to sale, and whether, as a matter of fact, the purchaser bargained and paid for the entirety—Hari Vithal v. Jairam Vithal (1), and this conclusion seems, in no way, inconsistent with the decision in Pandu v. Maniklal (2), which merely shows that the sale of a manager's interest will not, in the absence of the above special circumstances, affect the rest of the family.

In the present case the suit was brought in a very awkward form against the three brothers as representatives of their deceased brother, but we think that the principle which governed the decision in Hari Vithal v. Jairam Vithal(1) and other cases relating to the same subject, left it open to the District Court to decide whether the purchasers, as a matter of fact, bargained and paid for the whole family interest. On this issue the First Class Subordinate Judge's judgment (though not quite so clear as might have been desired) amounts to a finding in the affirmative. This finding is in accordance with probability, as the Court cannot have intended to sell, or the purchasers to buy, merely an interest which was non-existent at the time of the sale, and Sitaram, Antaji and Govind, who were parties to the suit, do not seem to have made any objection to the proceedings in execution; but in any case it is not a finding which we can now question.

We must, therefore, confirm the decree of the First Class Subordinate Judge, A. P. The appellant to pay separate costs for the respondents, represented by Mr. Chaubal and Mr. Bhandarkar respectively.

BHIMBHAI AND OTHERS (Appellants) v. ISHWARDAS JUGJIWANDAS AND ANOTHER (Respondents.)* [20th February, 1893.]

Company—Indian Companies Act (VI of 1882), s. 13—Contributory—Increase of capital—Illegal issue of shares—Reduction of capital.

The Nawab of Beyla Spinning, Weaving Manufacturing Company, Limited, was registered under the Indian Companies Act (X of 1866). The original capital of the company consisted of Rs. 4,00,000, divided into 1,600 shares of Rs. 250 each. In 1882 the capital of the company was increased by Rs. 1,00,000 divided into 1,600 shares of Rs. 62-8. The resolution to increase the capital was not passed in accordance with the articles of association, i.e., "with the sanction of a special resolution of the company passed at a general meeting." On the 5th November, 1884, a resolution was passed at a general meeting of the company that the shareholders should take up the 459 shares of the original capital and 1,027 shares of the increased capital, which were then in the hands of the company, in the proportion of one share to every two shares already held by them. In pursuance of this resolution the appellants took up several shares of the original capital as well as of the new capital. On 19th October, 1885, a general meeting of the company was held at which it was resolved that the resolution of the 5th November, 1884, and all acts done in connection with it should be set aside, that the shares taken by the shareholders in pursuance of that resolution should be taken back by the company, and such amounts as had been paid by them on those shares should be credited to their names in the company's books. This was accordingly done, and the shares were transferred to the name of the company. In October, 1896, the company was wound up by order of the Court. In settling the list of contributories, the District Judge of Surat held that the appellants were liable, as contributories, in respect of all the shares which they had taken up in pursuance of the resolution of 5th November, 1884. On appeal from this decision,

Held, that with respect to the shares of the original capital, the resolution of the 19th October, 1885, was illegal and invalid. It operated, not as an investment by the company of its funds in its own shares, but as an extinguishment of the shares, and such extinguishment was virtually a reduction of the capital, which could not be done without complying with the provisions of s. 13 of the Indian Companies' Act (VI of 1882). The holders of such shares were, therefore, properly placed on the list of contributories.

Held, also, that the issue of the shares of the new capital was illegal, as the resolution to increase the capital had not been come to in accordance with the articles of association. It was, therefore, open to the company to set aside the resolution of 5th November, 1884. When it was set aside, the persons who held the new shares ceased to be shareholders, and could not, therefore, be held liable as contributories.

[153] APPEALS from the orders of J. B. Alcock, District Judge of Surat, in the matter of settling the list of contributories of the Nawab of Beyla Spinning, Weaving and Manufacturing Company, Limited, in liquidation.

The company was formed and registered in 1881 under the Indian Companies Act X of 1866.

The original capital of the company consisted of four lakhs of rupees, divided into 1,600 shares of Rs. 250 each.

In November, 1882, the capital of the company was increased by a lakh of rupees by the issue of 1,600 shares of Rs. 62-8-0 each.

* Appeals Nos. 121, 146, 147 and 166 of 1892.

The resolution to increase the capital was not passed, in accordance with the articles of association, under which "the sanction of a special resolution of the company passed in a general meeting" was required before the capital could be increased. No such sanction was obtained for the issue of the new shares.

On 5th November, 1884, a general meeting of the company was held, at which a resolution was passed calling on each shareholder to take up one additional share either of the original or of the new capital for every two shares originally held by him. The material portion of the resolution was to the following effect:—

"At present there are in the Company's hands 459 shares of the original capital of Rs. 250 each, and 1,027 shares of the increased capital of Rs. 62-8-0 each. The present shareholders must take up the unallotted shares in the proportion (of one share for every two shares already held). The shareholders must pay the whole of the amount due on the said shares within eight days from this date and take the shares."

In pursuance of this resolution the appellants, in common with the other shareholders, took up a certain number of shares of the original as well as of the new capital.

On 19th October, 1885, it was resolved at a general meeting of the shareholders to set aside the resolution of the 5th November, 1884, and all acts done under that resolution. This resolution was to the following effect:—

[154] "It is hereby resolved that the resolution (of the 5th November, 1884) and the notices issued thereunder and all orders passed and acts done in connection therewith be set aside. And in order to return such amounts as have been paid by the shareholders under the said resolution, the same are to be credited to the names of such shareholders with interest at 12 annas per cent. per mensem from the date on which the same may have been paid by them; and when the company gets money, it is to pay to such shareholders all such moneys with interest as may stand credited in their names. And the company is to take back from the shareholders the share certificates issued to them under the said resolution hereby set aside. And the moneys received under the said resolution having been credited to the names of the shareholders, who may have paid them, are to be deducted from the capital account, and the shares taken back are to be shown as a balance in the capital account."

Accordingly on the 19th June, 1886, the shares, which the appellants had taken up in pursuance of the resolution of the 5th November, 1884, were taken back and transferred from their names to the company, and the moneys which they had paid on those shares were credited to their account in the company's books.

On 30th October, 1886, the company was wound up by and under the order of the Court.

In settling the list of contributories of the company, the District Judge of Surat was of opinion that the resolution of the 19th October, 1885, was illegal and ultra vires, as it had the effect of reducing the capital of the company without the formalities required by s. 13 of the Indian Companies Act (VI of 1882), and also because the company had no power to purchase its own shares, in contravention of s. 282 of the Act. He, therefore, held that the appellants were shareholders of the company at the date of its winding up, and as such liable to be placed on the list of contributories, in respect of all the shares they had taken up in pursuance of the resolution of the 5th November, 1884.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Against this decision the present appeals were preferred to the High Court.

[155] Kalabhái Lalubhai (with Manekshah Jahangirshah and Manchubhai Narsidas Choksi), for appellants :—The appellants are not liable in respect of the shares taken by them under the resolution of the 5th November. As to the new shares the resolution by which the capital of the company was increased was illegal and ultra vires. It was not a 'special resolution' as required by the articles of association. Nor was the resolution of the 5th November, 1884, compelling the shareholders to take up additional shares against their will, legal and binding on the shareholders. The company saw its mistake in time, and cancelled this resolution. The lower Court has held that this could not be done, as it had the effect of reducing the capital. This view of the matter is clearly wrong. It was perfectly competent to the company to undo an illegal act, and cancel the new shares which had been illegally issued. We never acquiesced in the illegality ; we are, therefore, not estopped from pleading it as a complete defence to the present proceedings. Campbell's case (1) has no application to the present case. If any person is estopped, it is the official liquidators as representing the company. It is not open to them to say that the resolution of the 19th October, 1885, passed by the whole body of shareholders was null and void. That resolution does not effect, and was not intended to effect, a reduction of the capital of the company. It only transfers the shares back to the company, and amounts to an "investment by the company of its funds in its own shares" as provided by cl. (j) of s. 3 of the memorandum of association. The official liquidators cannot, therefore, impeach the exercise of this power as illegal or invalid—In re Mercantile Credit and Financial Association (2) ; Jehangir Rustomji Modi v. Shamji Ladha (3) ; Sewell's case (4) ; Feiling's and Rimington's case (5).

Gonpat Sadashiv Rao, for respondents (official liquidators).—The shares in respect of which the appellants are placed on the list of contributories are partly shares of the original capital and partly of the new capital. As regards the shares of the original [156] capital, the resolution of the 19th October, 1885, was absolutely null and void. The company had no power to take back these shares, and credit the shareholders with the moneys they had paid on those shares. That had clearly the effect of reducing the original capital, and this could not be done except in accordance with s. 13 of Act VI of 1882. It is admitted that the formalities prescribed by that section have not been complied with. The resolution, therefore, so far as it effects a reduction of the original capital, is illegal. It is, however, urged that the effect of the resolution is to invest the funds of the company in its own shares, and that cl. (j) of s. 3 of the memorandum of association empowers the company to make such an investment. The proper construction to put upon this clause in the memorandum of association would be that such investment can only be made if there is actual cash in the hands of the company. But at the date of the resolution in question the company had no funds in its hands. It was deeply indebted. If there were no funds to invest, how could there be any investment at all? The object of the resolution was not to make the investment as suggested, but to cancel the shares and reduce the capital pro tanto. Such a reduction was illegal. Even if the transaction be treated as a purchase by the company of its own shares, it is still invalid. See s. 249 of Act VI of 1882, and Trevor v. Whitworth (1). Under either aspect of the case, the resolution of the 19th October, 1885, should be treated as null and void.

As regards the shares of the new capital, there was, no doubt, an irregularity in the issue of these shares. But that will not relieve the shareholders from liability as contributories. They took the shares with full knowledge of the irregularity. They have acquiesced in it. They are, therefore, estopped from impugning the validity of the issue of the shares—In re Miller's Dale and Ashwood Dale Lime Company (2); Challis case (3); Hare's case (4); Stace and Worth's case (5); Campbell's case (6); Sewell's case (7).

JUDGMENT.

[157] SARGENT, C. J.—The question in these appeals from the orders of the District Judge directing the appellants to be retained on the list of contributories turns upon the legal effect of the proceedings of the company commencing in 1882 and down to 10th October, 1886, when the order for winding up the company began to operate. It appears that in 1882, the company being anxious to extend its business, the directors passed a resolution that each of the shareholders should take up a new share of Rs. 62-8-0. Some shares were accordingly taken up under this resolution; but the requisite capital not being forthcoming, a general meeting of the company was held on the 5th November, 1884, on which occasion it was resolved that the shareholders should take up the 459 shares of the original capital at Rs. 250 per share and 1,027 shares of increased capital at Rs. 62-8-0 then in the hands of the company in proportion to the shares held by them, and in pursuance of that resolution a great many shares of the original and new capital were taken up, both of which form the subject of one or other of the present appeals.

The shares in respect of which it is sought to place the appellants on the lists of contributories were taken up in pursuance of that resolution. However, on the 19th October, 1885, at a general meeting it was resolved "that the resolution of 5th November, 1884, and the notices issued thereunder and the orders passed and all the acts done in connection therewith be set aside, and in order to return such amounts as had been paid by the shareholders under the said resolution it was resolved that the same should be credited to the names of such shareholders with interest whatsoever it might amount to at 12 annas per cent. per mensem from the date on which the same might have been paid by them, and when the company should get money it should pay such shareholders all such moneys and interest as might stand credited in their names, the company to obtain receipts from them and to take back from the shareholders the share certificates granted to them under the said resolution so set aside, the moneys received having been credited to the names of the shareholders who may have paid them to be deducted from the capital account and the shares taken up to be shown as a balance in the capital account." The important question in the case is as to [158] the effect of this resolution on the shares taken up by the resolution of 5th November, 1884.

First, we will consider its effect on the shares which formed part of the original capital. They could of course be issued whenever the company might think proper, but when issued they became part of the capital of the company, which could only be subsequently reduced by complying with the provisions of s. 13 of the Companies Act of 1882, which was admittedly not done in this case. But it was said that what was intended to be done by the resolution of October, 1885, was the extinguishment or cancellation of shares, and was not in form a reduction. It is plain, however, that it would virtually be a reduction, as pointed out by Lord Justice James in Hope v. International Financial Society (1). Referring to the transaction of that society he says: "It was either a purchase of shares in the sense of trafficking in shares, which is a purchase not authorized by the memorandum of association," or "it is an extinguishment of shares and, therefore, a reduction of capital." These remarks are referred to with approval by Lord Herschell in the important case of Trevor v. Whitworth (2). Again, it has been contended for the appellants that the resolution operated as an investment by the company of its funds in its own shares, and which, it was said, was authorized by sub-cl. (j) of s. 3 of the memorandum of association, which provides that among the objects for which the company was established "was to invest the funds of the company from time to time in the shares of the company, provided that the company shall at no time hold more than one-fourth of the total number of shares for the time being of the company." In answer to this it has been argued for the official liquidators that such a power of investment by the company being virtually a power to purchase its own shares was ultra vires although found in the memorandum of association. There is no express decision of the English Courts, although a strong opinion was expressed by Lord Macnaghten to that effect in Trevor v. Whitworth (2). It is true that by s. 249 of the Act of 1882 a purchase by a company of its own shares is strictly forbidden, which Act was in force when the transaction in [159] question took place; but every "right acquired" under the Act of 1866, which would, we think, include a right of the company to invest in its own shares under its memorandum of association registered under that Act, was saved by cl. (b) of s. 2 of the Act of 1882. However, it is not necessary, in the view we take of the transaction, to express a decided opinion as to whether such a power of investment could have been validly exercised in 1885, as we are clearly of opinion that the transaction in question cannot be sustained as an investment, but that it was really an extinguishment of the shares. The resolution is distinct in its terms as undoing what had been done in November, 1884, with a restitutio in integrum—the money was to be returned with interest to the shareholders, and the share certificates taken back by the company, and the shares "shown as a balance in the capital account." There was no intention of re-issuing these shares, and the result of the resolution, if carried out, would, therefore, have been, not an investment of the funds of the company in its shares, but the extinguishment of the capital represented by those shares. This is clearly pointed out by the present Master of the Rolls in Hope v. International Financial Society (1), and by Lord Herschell in Trevor v. Whitworth (2). It is impossible, therefore, in our opinion to say that the resolution operated as an investment of the company's funds in its shares, and we must, therefore, decide that the holders of such shares were properly placed on the list of contributories to the extent of so much of the Rs. 250 on each share as had not been already paid to the company at the time of the winding up.

(1) 4 Ch. D. (327) 340.

(2) 12 Ap. Ca. 419.

As to the shares of the issue of new capital, they stand on a different footing. That issue was admittedly invalid, the resolution to increase the capital not having been come to in accordance with ss. 4 and 5 of the articles of association,—that is, "with the sanction of a special resolution of the company passed in general meeting." The shares, therefore, not having been validly issued by the company, and the invalidity not having been subsequently cured, as was done in Sewell's case (1), they never became a legal part of the capital of the company ; and it [160] was, therefore, in the power of the company by a resolution of a general meeting to set aside the resolution of November, 1884, so far as that issue of shares was concerned, and validly undo what had been done under that resolution. This was effected by the resolution of 19th October, 1885, which set aside all that had been done under the resolution of 5th November, 1884, and virtually cancelled the shares issued under it. The persons who had taken up these shares ceased then to be holders of the shares and became creditors of the company in respect of the moneys they had paid on the shares and for which they were credited in the company's books in June, 1886 ; they cannot, therefore, be regarded as having been shareholders in respect of those shares when the winding up commenced. This case differs, therefore, from In re Miller's Dale and Ashwood Dale Lime Company (2), where there had also been an invalid increase of capital, but which had never been undone, and the shareholders who sought not to be placed on the list of contributories had kept the shares which had been invalidly issued for several years and were on the list of shareholders when the winding up commenced.

We must, therefore, reverse the orders appealed from of the Court below and send back the cases for fresh decisions having regard to the above remarks. Costs to abide the result.

Orders reversed.

[161] his security in the first instance out of the property not mortgaged to the second mortgagee. Jardine, J., diss.

The English doctrine of marshalling of securities applies to mortgages in the Mofussil.

SECOND appeal from the decision of the First Class Subordinate Judge with appellate power at Ahmedabad, in appeal No. 11 of 1890.

Baria Pahadbhai Jalumji mortgaged two fields (Survey Nos. 83 and 695) to Vithaldas Bhagvan for Rs. 2,000 by a san-khat dated 15th November, 1876.

After the death of Vithaldas, his son Chunilal (defendant No. 2) and his grandson (the plaintiff) made a division of their joint family property. At that division the mortgage-debt due under the san-khat of 1876 was divided equally between the plaintiff and Chunilal (defendant No. 2).

In 1888 Chunilal obtained from the mortgagor a fresh mortgage-bond for his share of the debt due under the san-khat of 1876, and, by this new mortgage, field No. 83 alone was mortgaged.

Plaintiff then filed the present suit to recover his half share of the debt secured by the san-khat of 1876 and prayed for the sale of both the fields (Survey Nos. 83 and 695) included in the san-khat.

Defendant No. 1 (the mortgagor) pleaded that under the second mortgage-bond of 1888, which he had executed in favour of Chunilal (defendant No. 2), the latter had agreed to satisfy the plaintiff's half share of the debt, and that, therefore, he (the defendant No. 1) was not liable for the claim.

Chunilal (defendant No. 2) pleaded (inter alia) that the plaintiff must first proceed against field No. 695, and that, if any part of the money due to him remained unpaid, he might then be allowed to enforce his mortgage lien against the other field (No. 83), which was included in his own further mortgage of 1888.

The Subordinate Judge passed a decree for the plaintiff for Rs. 1,467-6 and costs to be realized by the sale of half of each of the two fields (Nos. 83 and 695), allowing the remaining half of both fields to defendant No. 2 for the portion of the debt due to him.

[162] On appeal, the lower appellate Court was of opinion that the English doctrine of "marshalling of securities" was not applicable to mortgages in the Mofussil, and following Lala Dilawar Sahai v. Dewan Bolakiram (1) and Tadigotla Timmappa v. Lakshmamma (2) held that Chunilal was not entitled to compel the plaintiff to proceed first against field No. 695. As a puisne mortgagee he had, however, a right to redeem plaintiff's mortgage.

The decree of the Subordinate Judge was, therefore, varied by declaring that Chunilal (defendant No. 2) had a right to redeem the plaintiff's mortgage on payment of Rs. 1,467-6-0 within three months from the date of the decree. On failure to redeem as directed, the plaintiff was at liberty to recover his debt by sale of both fields Nos. 83 and 695.

Against this decision Chunilal (defendant No. 2) preferred a second appeal to the High Court.

Rao Saheb Vasudev J. Kirtikar, for appellant (defendant No. 2).

Gokuldas Kahandas Parekh and Nagindas Tulsidas, for respondent (plaintiff).

The following authorities were cited in argument:—

1*st August*, 1892. JARDINE, J.—Defendant No. 1 mortgaged his two fields Nos. 83 and 695 to Vithaldas for Rs. 2,000 by a sankhat. After the death of Vithaldas, his heirs, the plaintiff and defendant No. 2, divided the interest of the mortgagee between them, taking in moieties, each moiety being, like the mortgage itself, secured on both the fields mortgaged. Afterwards defendant [163] No. 2 obtained from defendant No. 1 (the mortgagor) a fresh mortgage for his moiety of the debt; and for this fresh mortgage the field No. 83, and not the field No. 695, was made security. When the present suit was brought by the plaintiff to recover his moiety of the mortgage-debt by sale of the two fields, defendant No. 2 called evidence to prove that the plaintiff had relinquished in his favour his right to proceed against No. 83. The lower Court of appeal has found, on the facts, that there was no such relinquishment.

The case differs from those for which the 81st section of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) will make provision when that Act is extended to this Presidency, as it only applies the equitable rule of marshalling to cases where the subsequent mortgagee is without notice of the prior mortgage. This is the rule as stated in the second volume of Fisher on Mortgage from Lanoy v. Duke of Athol (9). As Chunilal had notice of the original mortgage, the case of Khetoosee Cherooria v. Banee Madhub Doss(10) is in point. There, after suggesting a quære whether the doctrine of marshalling securities should be introduced into India, the learned Judges declined to apply it in the case before them.

It is said at p. 491 of Macpherson on Mortgages (7th Ed.) that there does not appear to be a case in which the doctrine of marshalling has been applied to Mofussil mortgages. The case does not resemble Moro Raghunath v. Balaji Trimbak(2), where equity was applied, because the mortgagee had himself become interested in the equity of redemption. In the case of Tadigotla Timmappa v. Lakshmamma (8) the Court refused to apportion the debt, holding that the mortgagee was at liberty to claim that his security shall not be divided against his will. In Indukuri Rama v. Yerramilli Subbarayudu (11), the Court declined to deprive him of his legal rights. The English doctrine of marshalling is limited to cases where it will not prejudice the mortgagee's rights or improperly control his remedies. In the present case the [164] maxim "sic utere tuo ut alienum non lædas," on which Story in his Equity Jurisprudence, s. 633, bases the doctrine, does not apply in derogation of rights, as defendant No. 2 at the time of the partition or afterwards might have made arrangements with the plaintiff.

I am of opinion that the lower Court of appeal was right in declaring that the plaintiff might recover his mortgage-debt by sale of both the fields, and that the appellant, defendant No. 2, has no good reason to complain about the decree made, which I would, therefore, confirm with costs.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

18 B. 160.

But as I have the misfortune to differ from my learned brother, we refer the appeal, under s. 575 of the Code, to the Acting Chief Justice.

1*st August*, 1892. TELANG, J.—The question which arises for decision in this case, on the facts found by the Court below, is whether when two properties are mortgaged to one person, and one of those properties is subsequently mortgaged to another person with notice of the former mortgage, such second mortgagee has any equity to call for a marshalling of the securities in his favour, so as to require the first mortgagee to proceed to realize his security, in the first instance, out of the property not mortgaged to the second mortgagee. The Subordinate Judge with appellate powers has decided, that the puisne mortgagee in this case has no such equity, relying on the decision in Lala Dilawar Sahai v. Dewan Bolakiram(1). In that case, however, the subsequent mortgagee's contention, which was negatived by the Court, went a good deal further than the contention we have to deal with, for there, as the Court points out, the defendants contended that "the plaintiff is not entitled to a declaration that the property is liable to attachment and sale, unless he has shown that he has exhausted the other property." The decision there consequently does not govern the present case. In the course of the judgment, however, reference is made to a case before Lord Chancellor Sugden, in which he pointed out, that while there might be a difficulty in working out a subsequent mortgagee's equity in England, where the prior mortgagee has "a right to compel [165] the debtor to redeem, or he may foreclose," it might be done in Ireland, "where the decree is ordinarily one not for foreclosure but for sale, and the mortgagee would be entitled to no more than his money, and the Court would deal with the surplus in such manner as it might think fit." This opinion of Sir E. Sugden is of very special authority in this Presidency, where, as Westropp, C. J., has laid down, the ordinary decree on a mortgage ought to be, as in Ireland, one, not for foreclosure, but for sale, and where the mortgagee is only entitled to his principal, interest and costs—Ganpat v. Adarji (2).

The learned Subordinate Judge relies also on two other authorities. The first of these—Tadigotla Timmappa v. Lakshmamma (3)—appears mainly to have turned on an entirely different question than the one before us, namely, the question raised by the claim of the defendant there to split up the mortgage security, and pay only a part of the whole mortgage money proportionate to the share of the mortgaged property purchased by him. This the High Court did not permit. Besides, the question there was apparently raised when the plaintiff had already sold and himself purchased the property on which he and the defendant both had a claim. That was a period when it would be too late to raise any question of marshalling. In the other case, too, it would appear that the attempt of the party who stood in the position of a puisne incumbrancer was, in the language of the Court, to "deprive" the prior incumbrancer "of his legal rights," and to affect the interests of third parties which had been created in the course of their enforcement. For there, too, the prior incumbrancer had sold the property to a stranger. And before the sale no question of marshalling had been raised at all.

It is well established in England, that the rule of marshalling will not be applied in favour of a subsequent incumbrancer when that will either really prejudice the rights of the prior incumbrancer or the rights of third parties (1). And the cases now referred to were clearly well decided, according to that principle. Mr. Gokuldas, for the respondent, also relied on the case of [166] Gaya Prasad v. Salik Prasad (2), But it is difficult to say from the report what the real decision of the Court was on the point now under consideration. Pearson, J., was evidently in favour of marshalling so far as to direct that the plaintiff should first try to recover his amount by the sale of the property in the hands of the mortgagor, before he proceeded against the properties in the hands of the mortgagor's alienees, the second, third and fourth defendants—all of whom he placed on the same footing. It is not clear from the judgment of Oldfield, J., that he took the same view as regards the second defendant. But Straight, J. (p. 695,and seeagain p. 697) says that " the points upon which the difference of opinion has occurred between my two honourable colleagues relate to the claim of the plaintiffs as against defendants Nos. 3, 4" —who were prior mortgagees as well as subsequent purchasers, while the second defendant's only title was under a subsequent purchase. It is to be remarked, further, with reference to one of the points made in that case, and which would have a bearing on the case before us, that the property sold to the plaintiff was sold, as Sir C. Sargent points out in Moro Raghunath v. Balaji (3), by a private sale,—that is, as I understand, not by a sale for realizing the mortgage security; and, therefore, it was held, and if I may say so rightly held, that the defendants had no equity to compel the plaintiff to proceed to sell that property as if it was still liable to the mortgage. By the transaction of sale that property had become discharged from the mortgage lien before the second defendant had anything to do with any of the properties of the mortgagor, the first defendant.

If, then, the cases relied on are inapplicable, the question again arises, whether there is any such equity in favour of the subsequent mortgagee as is here claimed. In England, the doctrine is broadly laid down that such an equity exists. The cases go back ultimately to a decision of Lord Hardwicke, who laid it down that " if a person who has two real estates, mortgages both to one person, and afterwards only one estate to a second mortgagee, who had no notice of the first, the Court, in order to relieve the second mortgagee, has directed the first to take [167] his satisfaction out of that estate only which is not in mortgage to the second mortgagee, if that is sufficient to satisfy the first mortgage, in order to make room for the second mortgagee, even though the estates descended to two different persons" (4). And the note of Mr. Tudor points out that that statement of the doctrine is correct, except that the absence of notice is not an essential condition for its application. It is unnecessary to discuss, in detail, the authorities there referred to. They seem to bear out the view expressed, and in Aldrich v. Cooper (5), Lord Eldon nowhere refers to notice as in any way entering into the consideration of this equity. Further, it seems reasonable that this equity should be enforced, both in cases of notice and of no notice, because to refuse so to enforce it would have the effect not only of enabling the first mortgagee to disappoint a subsequent mortgagee—which is what the English cases say equity will seek to avoid—but also of frequently enabling the mortgagor to defraud such subsequent mortgagee.

This result must generally follow, unless the help of another doctrine of equity is called in, and the subsequent mortgagee is allowed to stand as a creditor against the other property although not mortgaged to him, as. for instance, is done in those cases mentioned in the judgment in Aldrich v. Cooper and in the notes to that case, where the Crown taking mortgaged property under an extent, other property of the mortgagor not mortgaged, but against which the extent might have been enforced, is treated in equity as if it was subject to the mortgage (1).

It must be admitted, that under the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) this equity is by s. 81 made subject to the puisne incumbrance being without notice. But as the Act is not applicable to this case, we are not at present bound to adopt that rule as there laid down, and we may, I think, properly follow the rule laid down in England, which is not in any way unfair to the substantial claims of the prior incumbrancer, and which [168] avoids an injustice and possible fraud upon the rights of the puisne incumbrancer.

It is true that in Khetoosee Cherooria v. Bance Madhub Doss (2) the High Court of Calcutta made some remarks expressive of a doubt as to whether the equitable doctrine of marshalling should be applied in this country. These remarks, however, were merely made obiter, and were not intended to be decisive on the point. On the other hand, I think the doctrine is one of justice, equity and good conscience, and I see no objection to its application within due limits. And it may be pointed out, that the doctrine has, in fact, been already applied by this Court, even in cases of partition of Hindu family property—cases which the Courts are bound to decide according to Hindu law pure and simple. A purchaser or mortgagee for value of the share of an individual co-parcener in joint family property, even with notice that he is buying such a share, has been held entitled to have the family property marshalled in his favour, so far as that can be done "without doing injustice to prior incumbrancers or co-parceners" (3). This decision can only rest, I think, on the equity administered by the English Courts, as above explained,, and must have been adopted to avoid the possible fraud to which I have adverted.

In the present case, there is no finding or proof or even allegation that any injury may be occasioned to the defendant by his having to sell, in the first instance, the property which is not mortgaged to the plaintiff. I am, therefore, of opinion that the Judge below was wrong in refusing to give the appellant the relief which he sought, except in so far as he claimed to redeem the respondent's mortgage. To that relief he was, no doubt, entitled. But he was also entitled, I think, to a decree declaring that, in the event of the appellant's failure to redeem as provided by the Subordinate Judge's decree, the plaintiff would be at liberty to sell the property mortgaged to him, but subject to the proviso that he must first sell the field No. 695 which is not mortgaged to the appellant, and only proceed against the other field in the [169] event of the proceeds of the first sale not being sufficient to satisfy the amount of his decree.

The Judges having differed in opinion, the case was referred to the then Acting Chief Justice (Bayley, J.) and was argued before him on the 13th December, 1892.

Rao Saheb Vasudeo J. Kirtikar, for appellant (defendant No. 2).—The question is whether, when the subsequent mortgagee has notice of a prior mortgage, he has any equity to require the prior mortgagee to proceed in the first instance against such of the mortgaged property only as is not comprised in the subsequent mortgage. We contend that although we had notice we have a right to call for a marshalling of the securities in our favour. The doctrine of marshalling applies in India. The following authorities were referred to:—Moro Raghunath v. Balaji (1); Nawab Azimat Ali Khan v. Jowahir Singh (2), Nanee Tara Naikin v. Allarakhia Soomar (3); Story's Equity Jurisprudence, 634 (a); Ghose on Mortgages, p. 299; 2 White and Tudor's Leading Cases (6th Ed.), p. 109; Heyman v. Dubois (4); Hughes v. Williams (5); Liverpool Marine Credit Co. v. Wilson (6); Tidd v. Lister (7); Bishonath v. Kisto Mohun (8); Mussamat Nowa Koowar v. Sheik Abdul Ruheem (9); Nanabhat v. Lakshman (10).

Goculdas K. Parekh, for respondent (plaintiff):—We contend that in India the doctrine of marshalling securities has not been adopted where the subsequent mortgagee has had notice of the prior mortgage. In this case there was notice—Lala Dilawar Sahai v. Dewan Bolakiram (11); Tadigotha Timmappa v. Lakshmamma (12); Indukuri Rama v. Yerramilli (13); Fisher on Mortgage (4th Ed.), p. 667; Lanoy v. Duke of Athol (14); Rodh Mal v. Ram Harakh (15).

[170] Rao Saheb Vasudeo J. Kirtikar in reply.—In the case of Nanabhai v. Lakshman (10) there was notice, yet marshalling was allowed—Toolsee Ram v. Nunno Lall (16).

Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

20*th February*, 1893. BAYLEY, C. J. (Acting).—The question for decision in this appeal is, whether when two properties are mortgaged to one person, and one of them is subsequently mortgaged to another person with notice of the former mortgage, such second mortgagee has any equity to call for a marshalling of the securities in his favour so as to require the first mortgagee to proceed to realise his security in the first instance out of the property not mortgaged to the second mortgagee.

The first mortgage was dated the 15th November, 1876. By s. 8, of "The Transfer of Property Act, IV of 1882" this equity is made subject to the second mortgage having been made without notice of the former one, but that section has no application to this case, as the Act was not extended to the Bombay Presidency until the 1st January 1893, (Notification, dated the 27th October, 1892, by the Government of Bombay).

Although it is said in Macpherson on Mortgages, p. 491, (7th Ed.) that there does not appear to be any case in which the doctrine of marshalling has been applied to Mofussil mortgages, and although a doubt was expressed by the High Court at Calcutta in 1869 as to whether the doctrine of marshalling of securities ought to be introduced into India, and thereby (as the Court said) to interfere with the legal rights of parties—see Khetoosee Cherooria v. Banee Madhub (17)—I entertain no doubt that such doctrine has been so introduced.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

16 B. 160.

In two cases which came before Mr. Justice Couch and his colleagues in the High Court of Bombay in 1865, viz., Dada v. Babaji (1) and Webbe v. Lester (2), it was held that although the English law is not obligatory upon the Courts in the Mofusssil, they ought, in the absence of special law and usage, in deciding a case according to "justice, equity and good conscience" (Regulation IV of 1827, s. 26), to be guided by the principles [171] of English law applicable to a similar state of circumstances. The Courts, however, will not, in such a case, apply rules of English law, which, though well-established and binding on English Courts, are yet so special in their nature and origin as to be inapplicable to the different circumstances of this country, and accordingly the Court of first instance (Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction), refused to apply the rule in Shelley's case to an agreement by the members of a Parsi family relating to an estate in the Island of Salsette, in the Mofussil of this Presidency—see Mithibai v. Limji Nowroji Banaji and others (3), a decision which was affirmed in the Court of appeal (I. L. R. 6 Bom. 151)—both Courts holding that such well-established rule was a law of property or tenure based on feudal considerations and was unsuited to the circumstances of India. It is unnecessary for me to point out, in detail, what Mr. Justice Telang has already done, and I venture to think correctly, in his judgment in this case, that the authorities relied on by Mr. Goculdas K. Parekh, the pleader for the respondent (original plaintiff in the Court below), are inapplicable and may be distinguished from the present case. I am of opinion that there is such an equity in favour of the subsequent mortgagee (the present appellant) as is claimed on his behalf. In the argument before me I did not understand it to be denied that the doctrine of marshalling had been applied in the Courts in India, but it was urged that it had not been carried further than that it is applicable where the second mortgagee had no notice of the first mortgage. No doubt in the case before Lord Hardwicke (Lanoy v. The Duke of Athol (4), reference is made to the second mortgagee having no notice of the first mortgage, but subsequent decisions pay no regard to the absence of such notice, and do not refer to notice as in any way entering into the consideration of this equity. In the note in Tudor's Leading Cases in Equity, Vol. 2, p. 109, (6th Ed. 1886) Mr. Tudor says that it seems to be immaterial whether the second mortgagee has notice of the first mortgage or not. In the leading case of Aldrich v. Cooper (5), decided by Lord Chancellor Eldon in 1803, he says (p. 388) 'If a party has two funds, a person [172] having an interest in one only has a right in equity to compel the former to resort to the other if that is necessary for the satisfaction of both.' See also at p. 394 the instances he gives of the rule that a person having a double fund shall not by his option disappoint another who has only one. In Baldwin v. Belcher (6) the Lord Chancellor of Ireland (Sir Edward Sugden, afterwards Lord St. Leonards) states the rule without any qualification. He says: 'The rule of law is perfectly settled. If there are two creditors who have taken securities for their respective debts, and the security of the first creditor ranges over two funds, while the security of the other is confined to one of those funds, the Court will arrange or marshal the assets, so as to throw the person who has two funds liable to his demand on that which is not liable to the debt of the second creditor.' In Gibson v. Seagrim (7), two properties X and Y were mortgaged to A, and afterwards X was mortgaged to B. The Master of the Rolls held that B was entitled to have the securities marshalled so as to throw A's mortgage, in the first instance, on estate Y. See also Re Mower's Trusts (1) to the same effect.

The learned pleader for the appellant, Rao Saheb Vasudev Jagannath Kirtikar, cited two passages in Ghose's Tagore Lectures for 1875-76, p. 299, where it is stated that the doctrine of marshalling had been adopted by the Courts in India as a rule founded in equity and good conscience, and that although in some of the earlier cases it was laid down that marshalling could not be insisted on by an incumbrancer with notice of the prior mortgage (Lanoy v. The Duke of Athol (2)) the rule was considered too narrow, and that the distinction had since been abolished (Gibson v. Seagrim (3) ; Tidd v. Lister (4)). The appellant's pleader relied upon a decision of Melvill and Kemball, JJ., in Nanabhat v. Lakshman (5) as a case of marshalling with notice of the first incumbrance. As it is difficult to collect what are the facts of the case from that report, I have examined the record and the notes of the argument in Mr. Justice Melvill's note-book. From [173] these it appears that Lakshman (original defendant No. 1) on 3rd January, 1868, mortgaged certain trees on his land to Nanabhat (original plaintiff) to secure Rs. 150 then borrowed, payable in two years. The suit was brought on the 3rd January, 1876, to recover the above sum, and a like sum for interest, or to recover possession of the mortgaged trees. The mortgage bond had been registered in Book I relating to immoveable property. Nanabhat in suit No. 51 of 1870 sued Lakshman for Rs. 100, and on the 15th March, 1870, obtained a decree, attached the field and trees, besides other property. A prohibitory order of 23rd January, 1871, published on the 11th February, 1871, expressly mentioned the mortgage. On the 6th July, 1871, the property was purchased by Vishnu Gopal, who, on the 6th September, 1871, sold to Narayan, father of Vaman (original defendant No. 2). The Subordinate Judge found that the bond was proved, that the plaintiff had not possession of the mortgaged trees, and only decreed that plaintiff should recover Rs. 300 from Lakshman, and dismissed the claim against Vaman, laying his costs on plaintiff. The District Judge confirmed the decree with costs.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court on, amongst others, the following grounds :—(1) that the lower Court had erroneously held that the mortgaged property (viz., 9 mango and 20 babul trees) was moveable property ; (3) that the lower Court erroneously held that the appellant's lien upon the trees would not follow the trees into the hands of the purchaser at a Court sale, who had purchased the trees with full notice of the mortgage lien ; (4) that the judicial sale of the trees having been clearly made subject to the mortgage lien, the purchaser was bound to pay the mortgage amount on the trees.

For the appellant it was argued before Melvill and Kemball, JJ., that registration was sufficient notice, and that, at any rate, the auction-purchaser was bound even if the sale had not been made expressly subject to the mortgage. On the other side, it was contended that the land was not mortgaged, only the trees, and that by Act XX of 1866 standing timber is moveable property, and that plaintiff ought to recover his debt from the whole moveable property.

LATE CIVIL.

"If notice be necessary, in order to affect a purchaser at a Court-sale, the registration of the plaintiff's mortgage bond was sufficient notice. Vishnu Gopal purchased both land and trees at the auction-sale, and if he had searched the register, as he was bound to do, he would have ascertained the existence of the plaintiff's lien on the trees by virtue of his mortgage bond, which was registered in Book I relating to immoveable property. Under these circumstances, we consider that the plaintiff's lien upon the mortgaged property remains valid, though in execution he should be obliged to proceed, in the first instance, against any portion of the mortgaged property which may remain in the hands of the mortgagor before he proceeds against any of the property held by the defendant Vaman. If the defendant Vaman or his father has made away with any of the trees, he is liable for their value, which must be ascertained at the time of the execution. We amend the decrees of the Courts below and award the plaintiff's claim for Rs. 300, and direct that the same be recovered from the defendant Lakshman personally, or from the mortgaged property, and also from the defendant Vaman personally, to the extent of the value of any of the mortgaged trees which may have been cut down after the land came into the possession of his father Narayan. Costs on defendants throughout."

It will thus be seen that the High Court considered that the plaintiff's lien upon the mortgaged property remained valid, though in execution he should be obliged to proceed, in the first instance, against any portion of the mortgaged property which might remain in the hands of the mortgagor before he proceeded against any of the property held by the defendant Vaman,—that is, it compelled the plaintiff to proceed against his mortgagor and such mortgagor's property before he proceeded against Vaman, the son of Narayan, who had purchased from Vishnu Gopal the auction-purchaser. The Court in that manner arranged or marshalled the assets available for the satisfaction of the original mortgage lien of the 3rd January, 1868.

In the present case, as pointed out by Mr. Justice Telang, there is no finding, or even allegation, that any injury will be occasioned [175] to the prior incumbrancer by his having to sell, in the first instance, the field which is not mortgaged to the appellant.

For the above reasons, I am of opinion that the view taken by Mr. Justice Telang is the correct one, and I concur in the form of the decree which he proposes should be made. Appellant to have his costs throughout.

Decree varied.

Stamp—Stamp Act (I of 1879), sch. I, arts. 16-21—Decree—Execution—Sale of property subject to mortgage—Valuation of property sold—Computation of purchase-money—Certificate of sale—Proclamation of sale—Mortgages noted in proclamation of sale—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 282-287.

Mortgages noted in the proclamation of sale as claims upon the property sold, should not be entered in the certificate of sale, or be computed as part of the purchase-money, unless they have been admitted by the parties, or established by decree, or unless they have been declared, under s. 282 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), to be charges on the property, and the Court has seen fit to sell it subject to them, but they should be entered in the certificate and computed as part of the purchase-money if they have been thus admitted or established, or if they have been declared under s. 282 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), and the sale has been held subject to them.

Claims admitted by parties or established by the decree of a Court should be entered in the proclamation of sale as charges upon the property, though they have come to the knowledge of the Court in an enquiry under s. 287 only, and have not been made the subject of an order under s. 287 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882).

[Rel., 15 Ind. Cas. 5 (8) = 15 O.C. 211.]

THIS was a reference made by Rao Saheb H. S. Phadnis, Subordinate Judge of Kumta in the Kanara District, under s. 49 of the Stamp Act (I of 1879) and s. 617 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882).

[176] One Subrao Ramchandra Yellapur obtained a decree against Rayapa Shivapa Shetti and in execution attached and sold certain property subject to four different mortgages. The property was purchased at the Court sale by one Shantappa Chedambaraya, who was the holder of one of the four mortgages. He applied for a certificate of sale, and relying upon the decision in In re Ramkrishna (1) contended that his mortgage and one of the other three mortgages should not be inserted in the certificate of sale and computed as purchase-money, as they had not been admitted by the parties or established by the decree of a Court. The Subordinate Judge, being of opinion that the decision relied on was irreconcileable with the ruling in Sha Nagindas v. Halalkore Nathwa (2), referred the following questions:—

"I. Should not the mortgages specifically noted in the proclamation of sale as being charged upon the property sold, be so entered in a certificate of sale, and be computed as part of the purchase-money?

"II. Should claims admitted by the parties, or established by the decree of a Court, be entered in the proclamation of sale as charges upon the property to be sold, supposing they have come to the knowledge of the Court in an inquiry made under s. 287 only, but are not covered by an order under s. 282?"

The opinion of the Subordinate Judge on the first question was in the affirmative and on the second in the negative.

JUDGMENT.

We think that the first question, put by the Subordinate Judge, should be answered by saying that mortgages, noted in the proclamation of sale as claims upon the property sold, should not necessarily be entered in the certificate of sale, or be computed as part of the purchase-money, unless they have been admitted by the parties, or established by decree, or unless they have been declared, under s. 282 of the Civil Procedure Code, to be charges on the property and the Court has seen [177] fit to sell it subject to them, but that they should be entered in the certificate, and computed as part of the purchase-money, if they have been thus admitted or established, or if they have been declared, under s. 282 of the Civil Procedure Code, and the sale has been held subject to them.

As regards the second question, we consider that claims admitted by the parties, or established by decree of a Court, should be entered in the proclamation of sale as charges upon the property, though they have come to the knowledge of the Court in an enquiry under s. 287 only, and have not been made the subject of an order under s. 282 of the Civil Procedure Code.

PARVATI AND ANOTHER, MINORS (Original Plaintiffs), Appellants v. GANPATRAO BALAL AND OTHERS (Original Defendants), *Respondents. [27th February, 1893.]

Hindu law—Joint family—Manager—Gift by manager of part of family property—Illegitimate daughters—Maintenance—Gift—Alienation of family property—"Dasiputra" (son of a slave).

Ramchandra, the manager of an undivided Hindu family, gave certain shares in a spinning and weaving company, which had been purchased out of family funds, to Ganesh for and on behalf of the plaintiffs, who were Ramchandra's illegitimate daughters. After the death of Ramchandra and Ganesh, Ramchandra's illegitimate daughters sued the surviving members of the family for a declaration that the shares belonged to them, and that they had a right to have them transferred to their names in the company's books.

Held, without deciding whether illegitimate daughters are entitled to simple maintenance from the family property, in any case, Ramchandra, as manager, could not alienate the shares for that purpose, as there were no emergent circumstances requiring it.

APPEAL from the decision of L. G. Fernandez, First Class Subordinate Judge of Poona.

The plaintiffs were the minor illegitimate daughters of one Ramchandra Ganesh, deceased. They sued the defendants, who were the legitimate sons of Ramchandra, for a declaration that [178] certain shares in the Morarji Goculdas Spinning and Weaving Company belonged to them, and that they had a right to have these shares transferred to their names in the books of the company.

They alleged that the deceased Ramchandra in 1876 had given these shares to one Ganesh Bapuji for and on their behalf; that he had intended to transfer them into the name of one Ganesh Bapuji Marathe, who passed an agreement to the plaintiffs that he held the shares for them and on their behalf, and that the company declined to transfer the shares to the plaintiffs' names owing to the defendants' opposition. They prayed, therefore, for the above declaration and for an injunction restraining the defendants from interfering with the plaintiffs' rights and from drawing the dividend on the said shares.

The defendants Balvant, Sadashiv and Hari, sons and representatives of the deceased Ramchandra Ganesh, pleaded (inter alia) that the suit was time-barred, that Ramchandra was not competent to alienate the shares, which had been purchased out of the family funds, and that the gift being incomplete was invalid.

At the hearing it was proved that the family was joint, and that the shares had been purchased out of the family funds. Ganesh Bapuji had died in 1880. The Subordinate Judge disallowed the claim, holding that the gift to the plaintiffs was not proved, and that the donor Ramchandra had no authority to make the gift. In his judgment he said :—

"The facts which have been proved beyond all doubt are these :— That the defendants' family was joint; that the shares in dispute were purchased with the ancestral funds belonging to the joint family by Ramchandra ; that the said Ramchandra attempted to make a gift of these shares to Ganesh Bapuji ; that he wrote to the secretaries and treasurers of the Morarji Goculdas Spinning and Weaving Company to transfer these shares to Ganesh Bupuji's name, which they refused to do owing to the defendants' objections ; that Ganesh Bapuji brought a suit claiming those two shares as his ; that the costs of that suit were defrayed by Chimma, the plaintiffs' guardian ; that [179] Chimma herself claimed the shares from the company as hers. These facts undoubtedly disprove the assertion that the shares were given in gift to the minor plaintiffs as alleged by them. It is for them to prove their assertion that these shares were given to them as alleged, and that the gift was completed by the necessary formalities. These the plaintiffs have clearly failed to prove. Were it otherwise, the shares were purchased with joint ancestral funds by Ramchandra. Hence he cannot make a gift of those shares as against his co-owners, who not only did not give their consent, but actually repudiated the transaction.

Inverarity (with Balaji Abaji Bhagavat), for the appellants (plaintiffs). —The management of the family property was in the hands of Ramchandra, who purchased the shares in dispute in his own name in or about November, 1875. In the year 1876 he was ill and desired to go on a pilgrimage to Benares, where his father Ganpatrao was then living. The plaintiffs' mother Chimma had been Ramchandra's mistress for several years, and prior to his going to Benares he desired to make provision for the plaintiffs who are his illegitimate daughters. He had a separate account in the family books, and he debited to himself the price of fiveshares and credited it in the accounts of the family. In fact, he bought five shares from the family estate. Out of them he gave two to Ganesh Bapuji orally upon a secret trust in favour of his daughters (the plaintiffs). In the year 1878, Ganesh passed an agreement in favour of the plaintiffs with respect to the shares. The Subordinate Judge has held that agreement to be proved. The question as to the gift has arisen in other judicial proceedings. The story as to the gift, therefore, is not a new one. The only question to be determined, then, is whether the gift was complete or not. The fact of the gift is not disputed. The contention is either that Ramchandra had no power to make the gift, or that the gift was incomplete. The lower Court wrongly held that there was no gift. The shares were given for the maintenance of the plaintiffs. The illegitimate children of a person belonging to the twice-born [180] class are entitled to maintenance; and the assignment in favour of the plaintiffs being complete, they are entitled to take the benefit of that assignment.

The delivery, by Ramchandra, of the share certificates to Genesh and the execution of the transfers with the oral direction to Ganesh to hold the shares for the benefit of the minor plaintiffs show that there was a perfectly created trust valid in law. It could not be rendered incomplete by the fact that the name of Ganesh was not entered in the shareholders' register. Ramchandra having done everything in his power to get Ganesh's name registered, the trust was complete—Lewin on Trusts, p. 66. The legal estate was divested from the settlor, and that was sufficient. When the owner creates a trust for the benefit of a third person by appointing a trustee, it is not necessary that the legal interest of the owner should be entirely divested from him if the trustee can acquire that legal estate without any further act on the part of the owner. When there is nothing further to be done by the donor, the gift is complete—In re Richards; Shenstone v. Brock (1). It is not necessary for the purpose of passing the interest in the shares that the transfer should be registered—Buckley on Companies (6th ed.), p. 93; Roots v. Williamson (2); The Societe General de Paris and G. Colladon v. Jenet Walker (3).

Assuming that the legal estate did not pass to Ganesh, still under the circumstances the plaintiffs might have compelled the company to transfer the shares to their names under the articles of association. That being so, they could have asserted their right against Ramchandra even if he had been alive.

The rules as to a gift under Hindu law are not applicable to this transaction. We contend that the transaction is not a gift, but a mere transfer effected for the purpose of a legal object, namely, the maintenance of the minor plaintiffs, who, though illegitimate, are entitled to maintenance under Hindu law.

Jardine (with Mahadeo Chimnaji Apte), for the respondents (defendants).— The shares were purchased by Ramchandra with [181] ancestral funds; they were, therefore, family property. At the time of the alleged transfer, Ramchandra, although the manager of the undivided family, had only a limited interest in the family estate which he could not give away even to the extent of his own share—Ramanna v. Venkata (4); Ponnusami v. Thatha (5); Vasudev v. Venkatesh (6); Gangubai v. Ramanna (7) Lakshman Dada Naik v. Ramchandra Dada Naik (8). the gift, still the above authorities show that the gift was bad. But we contend that there was neither any legal nor moral obligation to support the plaintiffs, being illegitimate daughters. The Hindu texts lay down that it is only a dasi-putra (son of a slave) that is entitled to inherit—Rahi v. Govind (1). Illegitimate sons may be entitled to maintenance, but illegitimate daughters are not. The word in all the texts being dasi-putra (son of a slave), it excludes a daughter. No doubt in the reported cases the words used are "illegitimate children," but none of the texts uses the word "children," the word throughout being putra (a son)—Vyavahar Mayukha, Ch. IV, s. 14, pl. 29-32; Daya Bhaga, Ch. IX, pl. 28; Mitakshara, Ch. I, s. 12; Kirpal Narain v. Sukurmoni (2). Even if the transaction in dispute be considered to be a gift, it is invalid according to Hindu law. The gift was not complete. It was argued that the transfer might have been compelled, but the thing to be considered is what was actually done. There was no transfer made, and Ganesh acquiesced in the objection raised by the company to the transfer. Ramchandra might have intended to make a gift which was not completed before his death. Such a gift is invalid—Hirbai v. Jan Mahomed (3).

Inverarity, in reply:—In support of our contention that illegitimate daughters are entitled to maintenance, we rely upon Salu v. Hari (4); Inderun Valungypooly Taver v. Ramasawmy Pandia (5); Sri Gajapathi Radhika Patta Maha Devi Garu v. Sri Gajapathi [182] Nilamani Patta Maha Devi Garu (6); West and Bühler, pp. 263. 432. No doubt the word "son" occurs in the texts, but we contend that the word "son" should be held to include "daughter," as the word "brother" has been held to include "sister."

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C.J.—The plaintiffs in this suit, who are the illegitimate children of one Ramchandra Ganesh, ask for a declaration that certain shares in the Morarji Gokuldas Spinning and Weaving Company, which had been purchased by their father, belonged to them, on the ground that they had been given by him to one Ganesh Bapuji for and on their behalf. The Court below found that the gift to plaintiffs was not proved; that the shares were purchased with ancestral funds by Ramchandra, and that he could not make a gift of them without the consent of the defendants, who are his legitimate children; that the gift, if at all, was to Ganesh and not to the plaintiffs, and that the gift, in any case, was incomplete, and accordingly dismissed the suit.

The appellants (the plaintiffs) have not attempted to argue that the Court was not correct in its finding as to the family having been joint and the shares having been bought with ancestral funds. The first question, therefore, in this case is whether Ramchandra could give the shares to the plaintiffs, or rather to Ganesh in their behalf, supposing the gift to be one which the Court would otherwise give effect to.

Ramchandra, it is admitted, was acting as manager of the family whilst his father Ganpatrao Balal was at Benares, and it has been argued that the support of Ramchandra's illegitimate children by Chima was a legal obligation on the entire family, and that a gift by Ramchandra as manager for that purpose could not be impugned, but that, at any rate, it was good as an alienation of his own share for that purpose. There is, doubtless, express authority for holding that an illegitimate son of one of the family is entitled amongst the regenerate classes to maintenance. See Chuoturya Run Murdun Syn v. Sahub Purhulad (1) and Muttusawmy v. Vencataswara (2), and indeed in the case of Rahi v. Govind (3), Westropp, C. J., states it to be the result of the authorities that [183] amongst the three regenerated classes illegitimate "children" are entitled to maintenance. It is to be remarked, however, that the real question in that case was as to the meaning of 'dasi' in the text relating to the rights of illegitimate children, and that the authorities on which Westropp, C. J., relies in support of that statement, and which are mentioned in the note at p. 102, only deal with the case of a dasi-putra, i. e., illegitimate son. In the Mitakshara, Ch. I, s. 12, cl. 3, Yajnavalkya is cited as saying that "the son begotten on a female slave does not obtain a share even by the father's choice, but if he be docile he receives a simple maintenance" and the same passage is referred to by the author of the Mayukha at Ch. IV, s. 4, and it is on these authorities that Sir T. Strange in his Hindu Law, Vol. I, p. 70, states the right of illegitimate "progeny" to maintenance. Unless, therefore, the expression "dasi-putra" can be held to include "daughter," there is no authority for a daughter having a claim to maintenance. It was said that a "son" is to be construed as including a daughter, as "brethren" was interpreted as including "sisters" by Nanda Pandita. But that mode of interpretation has been much controverted, as may be seen by the discussion of the authorities in the judgment in Vinayak v. Lakshmibai (4), which was decided upon the authority of the Mayukha. Moreover, the right of illegitimate children to be maintained by the family is clearly an exceptional one as shown by the language of the text; and as the right to maintenance is laid down, in terms, in favour only of illegitimate sons, the proper inference, from the absence of any express provision for daughters, is, we think, that they were not contemplated as having the same right.

But in any view of that question it is clear that the plaintiffs' claim to the shares is not sustainable. Even if the daughters were entitled to simple maintenance out of the family property it cannot be contended that it was within the power of Ramchandra, even as the de facto manager, to alienate the shares for that purpose, as there were no emergent circumstances requiring it. The case of Gangubai v. Ramanna (5) shows this could not be done even in the case of a legitimate daughter.

[184] Lastly, as to the suggestion that the gift might be supported as an alienation of Ramchandra's interest in the family property, even if it could be regarded as an "alienation for value" so as to satisfy the decision in Vasudev v. Venkatesh (6), it would be sufficient to say that such was not the plaintiffs' case. But independently of that objection it is plain, on the authorities, that a suit would not lie against the other members of the family to have the shares declared to belong to plaintiffs and transferred into their names.

For these reasons, and without discussing the question whether there was such a possession by Ganesh as to create a valid gift by Hindu law, or whether the evidence suffices to establish that the gift was to Ganesh as a trustee for the benefit of the plaintiffs, we must hold that the plaint was properly dismissed, and confirm the decree with costs.

Decree confirmed.

The Municipal Commissioner v. Patel Haji Mahomed (1), followed.

[185] An appeal lies to the High Court from a decision of the Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court of Bombay granting compensation to the owner of land taken by the municipality in case of a set-back under the Municipal Act III of 1888, ss. 298, 299, 301.

APPEAL to the High Court against the decision of the Chief Judge of the Small Causes Court (see Act XII of 1888, s. 3).

The respondent had claimed compensation from the appellant in respect of certain lands, together with the buildings thereon, situate at the junction of Apollo Street and Byrne Lane and in Byrne Lane in the City of Bombay, which were taken up by the appellant on behalf of the municipality, and the Chief Judge had awarded to the respondent a sum of Rs. 25,665-8-3 as compensation and interest thereon, at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum, from the 8th February, 1882, until payment.

From this decision the Municipal Commissioner appealed to the High Court.

Inverarity and Scott, for the appellant.

Lang (Acting Advocate-General) and Macpherson, for the respondent.

Lang raised the point that no appeal lay. The only section giving an appeal to the High Court is s. 3 of Act XII of 1888, but the appeal there given was only in cases under ss. 503 and 504 of the Municipal Act (III of 1888). He referred to ss. 298, 299, 301, 345 and 346 of the Municipal Act (III of 1888).

JUDGMENT.

STARLING, J.—The question for determination in this appeal is the amount to which the respondent is entitled in compensation in respect of a piece of land on the south side of Bruce Lane, [186] and running from Apollo Street to Church Lane, taken up by the Municipal Commissioner as a set-back. That amount is to be the value of the land as acquired, and that would be the market value of the land at the time when possession was taken by the municipality. That value, in our opinion, is the price which a man, intending to use the land, of which the set-back was a portion, for the purposes for which it could be most profitably employed at that time, having regard to all its surrounding circumstances, would probably give for it.

The basis of valuation adopted by the surveyors, who were called on behalf of the respondent, seems to us to be faulty. In the first place, they calculate the value the land might have to the purchaser after he has built upon it and let out his building to tenants. They assume that the building will at once be fully let (allowing only for average casual vacancies), and theyassume that a person buying to build will be content, at the time of purchase, to look forward to a net return of only 4 or 5 per cent. on the total cost of land and buildings, assuming his speculation to be entirely successful. It seems to me that a man buying a piece of land as a speculation for building purposes would require a larger percentage than that, certainly in this country, and would not pay a price for the land alone which would only enable him to get that comparatively small percentage after he had erected his buildings and run the risk of their letting well or not. There are also other minor items, which seem to us to have been taken too favourably for the owner. Consequently we do not think that such a basis of valuation should be accepted in any case, certainly not when there is any more practical basis to work on.

In the present case there are materials of a much more practical character to hand, viz., the price given within the last few years for land of a similar character in the immediate neighbourhood, the price given by the respondent for the large plot of land of which the portion taken by the municipality forms a part, and, lastly, the price which he offered to take for the very piece.

In Ex. No. 3 there are three plots marked which have changed hands comparatively recently. That coloured green [187] was purchased by Haji Allarakhia Nathu at the beginning of 1891 to build on at a price which showed the rate per square yard was about Rs. 46. It had no building on it at that time, so that the difficulty which arises in determining how much is to be allowedfor buildings does not arise; but it is not so well situated as Sirdar's Palace is, for Apollo Street is there only half the width; it is opposite the respondent's property. Of the blue piece, plot A is, however, in our opinion, in quite as good a position as the respondent's property, though it has not so large a frontage to Apollo Street. The whole of the blue plot was sold in 1885 at a price which worked out a rate of about Rs. 100 a square yard, including buildings, the value of which is disputed; but, taking all things into consideration, we are of opinion that the value of the land itself cannot be taken at more than Rs. 50 a square yard for the whole plot; and assuming that the value of part A, as facing the wide part of Apollo Street, was worth double that amount, that would only give Rs. 100 a square yard for that portion, which we consider a very full rate for that piece.

The property coloured red was purchased in 1886 for a price which worked out to under Rs. 60 a square yard including buildings, and, deducting the value of the buildings, would probably leave the value of the land at about Rs. 30 a square yard.

This last plot is not in anything like as good a position as the front portion of the respondent's premises, though it is somewhat better than that of those abutting on Church Lane.

In 1886 the respondent purchased the whole plot of land known as the Old Secretariat, of which the strip now in dispute is a portion, at a price which, after deducting the value of existing buildings, would give about Rs. 30 a square yard, and on the 21st July 1888, he offered to sell the strip to the Municipality at the rate of Rs. 50 a square yard.

Within the last few years there does not seem to have been any material change in the value of land in the Fort. Consequently, all the foregoing materials can be used in this case without making any allowance for possible change of value.

[188] In calculating the compensation payable to the respondent, the strip of land has been divided into three portions; one coming up to Apollo Street containing, as finally settled by the Chief Judge of the Small Causes Court, 74·72 square yards, another at the Church Lane end containing 17·60 square yards, and the third between those two containing 183·93 square yards. Now, taking into account all the facts we have just drawn attention to, we think the respondent will be amply compensated if he is allowed Rs. 80 a square yard for the first portion, Rs. 50 a square yard for the second, and as a high value has been put upon the two end pieces because of the open space between them, which space must be kept open or with only low buildings thereon, in order to justify the value we have put on them, we think that the third piece cannot be worth more than Rs. 20 a square yard. That will work out as follows :—

17·60 at 50 =	880·00

Of course these amounts are to a certain extent only approximate; but, in a matter of this kind, it is absolutely impossible to ascertain a mathematically exact value of any piece of land, and the utmost that can be done is to take into consideration all the surrounding circumstances and from them deduce, as a jury, the value which the owner ought to receive.

To the amount of Rs. 10,536-3-2 as calculated above must be added the sum of Rs. 181-12-3, the value of old erections allowed by the Chief Judge and not appealed against, which brings the total compensation up to Rs. 10,717-15-5.

The respondent by his objections has asked that he should be allowed 15 per cent. on the amount awarded him as on account of the compulsory nature of the acquisition. That point has already been decided against the respondent in the case of The Municipal Commissioner for the City of Bombay v. Patel Haji Mahomed (1), and we see no reason to differ from the decision in that case.

[189] The award of the Chief Judge of the Small Causes Court must, therefore, be varied by inserting the sum of Rs. 10,717-15-5 in the place

Before Mr. Justice Starling and, on appeal, before Sir Charles Sargent, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Bayley.

JIJIBHOY MUNCHERJI JIJIBHOY AND OTHERS, (Plaintiffs), v. BYRAMJI JIJIBHOY AND OTHERS (Defendants).* [13th and 16th October. 1893.]

Costs—Taxation—Attorney and client—Trustees—Bills of costs paid by majority of trustees—Right of dissenting trustee to have bills taxed even after payment.

In a suit relating to a charitable trust the decree directed that the costs of all parties thereto, when taxed, should be paid out of the trust fund. Certain bills of costs were subsequently furnished to the trustees by the attorneys. Two of the trustees thought the bills reasonable and agreed that they should be paid. The third trustee objected to the amount of the bills as exorbitant, and desired that they should be taxed. Notwithstanding his protest, however, the other trustees paid the bills without taxation. He, thereupon, took out a summons calling upon his co-trustees and the attorneys to show cause why the bills should not be taxed and why they should not refund any sum which had been overpaid.

Held, that the dissenting trustee was entitled to have the bills taxed, although they had been paid, and that the High Court had jurisdiction to order taxation to be made.

BY the decree made in this suit on the 5th January, 1889, it was ordered that a scheme should be prepared for the management of certain charities called the Jijibhoy Dadabhoy Trusts. The scheme was subsequently settled in chambers,and an order was made directing (inter alia) that the costs of all parties to the suit when taxed as between attorney and client should be paid out of the Trust Fund.

[190] The trustees of the charities were the plaintiffs in the suit, and were three in number, viz., Jijibhoy Muncherji Merwanji, Rustomji Nanabhoy Byramji and Dadabhoy Bomanji Jijibhoy. In the month of September, 1890, the trustees changed their solicitors, and the suit and matters connected with it were tansferred to Messrs. Ardesir Hormasji and Dinsha, who, on the 12th April, 1893, by request sent in their bills of costs for work done from September, 1890 to the end of March, 1893. There were two bills of costs sent in, one for Rs. 11,329-13-0 and the other for Rs. 842-2-0. These bills less (an abatement of Rs. 500) were paid by the two first mentioned trustees on the 21st June, 1893.

On the 21st August, 1893, the third trustee, Dadabhoy Bomanji Jijibhoy, took out a summons calling on his co-trustees and the solicitors (Messrs. Ardesir Hormasji and Dinsha) to show cause why the said bills of costs should not be taxed by the Taxing Master, and why such sums as might be taxed off should not be refunded to the charities by the solicitors.

The objecting trustee (Dadabhoy Bomanji Jijibhoy) in his affidavit stated that the bills sent in appeared to him to be exorbitant, and that he had called upon his co-trustees to get them taxed before settling them, but that notwithstanding his repeated protests the bills had been paid on the 21st June. On the 13th July, 1893, he requested his co-trustees (through his solicitor) to get the bills taxed, and on the same day enquired of Messrs. Ardesir Hormasji and Dinsha if they were prepared to get them taxed; otherwise he would bring the matter before the Court. He set forth in his affidavit the items in the bills to which he objected.

The co-trustees also filed an affidavit, in which they stated that the bills of costs had been carefully examined and found to be reasonable; that the solicitors had rendered very valuable services to the charities, and that many charges which they might have made had been omitted by them from these bills. They said that these facts being brought to their knowledge they (i. e. the two co-trustees) had met and passed a resolution for payment of the bills. Their affidavit contained the following statements:—

[191] "5. We, Jijibhoy Mancherji Merwanji Jijibhoy and Rustomji Nanabhoy Byramji Jijibhoy, say that, having regard to the provisions of the trust-deed and the practice hitherto observed by the trustees, we were justified in passing the resolution aforesaid and paying the solicitors' costs without taxation.

"6. Several days after the aforesaid resolution we were informed that Mr. Dadabhoy objected to the bills being paid without taxation, but it is not true that he alleged the same to be exorbitant or improper. As it was competent to us to pay solicitors' costs without taxation, we made payment. A large portion of such costs had previously been paid pursuant to a resolution passed by the trustees, including the said Dadabhoy, on the 30th day of April, 1892.

"7. We say that we, the present trustees and our predecessors in office for four years past, have paid solicitors' bills without taxation, and that Mr. Dadabhoy is a party to payment of costs of other solicitors connected with this suit without taxation."

The solicitors (Messrs. Ardesir Hormasji and Dinsha) also filed an affidavit denying that their charges were exorbitant and alleging that they were reasonable and proper charges according to the scale in the Taxing Master's office. They stated that between the 12th April, 1893 (the day on which the bills were sent in) and the 21st June, 1893 (on which day they were paid) the objecting trustee had not communicated with them directly or indirectly, and that they had no intimation that he required the bills to be taxed, or that he considered them "heavy" until they received his letter of the 13th July. They stated that the trustees had full opportunity of examining the bills and getting them taxed if they so desired before payment, and they further alleged that they had caused enquiries to be made in the office of the Taxing Master and had ascertained that within the previous twenty-two years there was no precedent for a reference for taxation after payment, and they submitted that the Court had not the power to direct taxation after payment on a summary proceeding by summons.

The summons was argued on the 2nd September, 1893.

Lang (Acting Advocate General), for Dadabhoy Bomanji Jijibhoy in support of the summons.

Inverarity, for the two co-trustees, showed cause.

Macpherson, for Messrs. Ardesir Hormasji and Dinsha, also showed cause.

[192] 26*th March*, 1893. STARLING, J.—This matter arises out of a suit which was brought for the settlement of a proper scheme for the management of the Jijibhoy Dadabhoy Trust Charities, in which, by the decree directing a scheme to be prepared and by a subsequent order approving the scheme, the costs of all parties to the suit when taxed as between attorney and client were ordered to be paid out of the Trust Funds.

After September, 1890 Messrs. Ardesir, Hormasji and Dinsha acted as solicitors for the trustees of the Charity Funds, and a large amount of costs became due to them in respect of the preparation of the scheme and other matters connected with the carrying out of the decree of this Court. The solicitors had received, on account of their costs, a sum of Rs. 7,000. In April, 1893, they sent in their bills of costs to the trustees which, by the secretary to the Trust Funds, were circulated among the trustees for their orders. The balance then appearing to be due to the solicitors was Rs. 5,482-15-0. Two of the trustees minuted "should be paid off." The third trustee, Dadabhoy Bomanji, wrote a long minute in which he said the amount of the bills was exorbitant and that they should be taxed as ordered by the Court, and thereafter the proper balance should be paid to the solicitors. Subsequently, the two trustees got a deduction of Rs. 500 from the solicitors and paid the balance without taxation.

On the 21st August, 1893, the dissenting trustee obtained a summons calling upon the other two trustees and the solicitors to show cause why the bills should not be taxed and why they should not repay any sum which had been overpaid. I think the two trustees were rightly made parties to the summons under the circumstances of the case, but I do not think I could in this summary proceeding make them repay any portion of the Trust Funds which they may have improperly expended.

I treat the summons as one by a trustee who is dissatisfied with a payment of costs made by his co-trustees asking that the bills of the solicitors to whom the payment was made may be taxed, and joining his co-trustees as defendants, because they will not take any part in the matter.

[193] Now it was argued that the Court has no jurisdiction to order costs to be taxed after payment, on the ground that such jurisdiction is in England given by statute, and that there is no statute applicable here. It is true that various Acts have been passed in England regulating the admission, duties and liabilities of attorneys there, and that by them the Courts in England have to be guided in their decisions; it seems also that the first Act so passed was in 1729. Consequently none of these Acts are in force in this country. What the practice was before 1729, I am unable to say, and I know of no treatise from which the information could be obtained. It is also true that there are no such Acts in India, and the only rules we have are rules of the High Court regulating the admission of attorneys and their right to recover their costs in a summary manner, but that to my mind is no reason why the Court should not exercise a jurisdiction of this kind over its officers according to equity and good conscience guided by the general principles laid down by English cases. Consequently, I am of opinion that, upon a proper case being made out, the Court can in a proper manner call a solicitor to account in respect of the amount of his bill even after it has been paid.

It was then argued that, if the Court has such a power, it will not exercise it summarily, but only on a proper suit being filed. That may have been the case in former years, but in the latest case reported, where an alleged agreement between the attorney and client was in question—

OCT. 16.
ORIGINAL CIVIL.
18 B. 189.

In re Frape (1)—Lindley, L.J., says: "Upon this appeal it was argued that if there is reason to suppose the agreement is unfair or unreasonable, yet you cannot impeach it on such a summons as this, but that some kind of formal proceeding—which, I suppose, according to the present practice, would be an action to set it aside—must be instituted. The language of the Act seems rather to favour that view. But when you consider it carefully, it appears to me there is really nothing in the argument; because so long as the solicitor has a proper opportunity of resisting taxation, it cannot matter whether the application to tax is by writ, or by a special petition to tax, or a summons to tax, as in this case. The [194] client may say. "I want an order to tax, notwithstanding the agreement." The agreement can be no answer to that, if he can show reasons why there ought to be a reference to the Taxing Master to enquire into that agreement." That was, in my opinion, a much stronger case for not going into the matter on a summons in chambers than the present one, and I shall follow the spirit of that ruling and hold that the present matter can be enquired into under the present summons.

Has, then, a case been made out for referring these bills to the Taxing Master? "The old rule that you must show either gross, fraud or pressure or overcharge, does not obtain as an absolute rule. A decision in the Court of appeal In re Boycott (2) intimates that it is not an absolute rule;" per Kay, L.J., In re Frape. Of course under ordinary circumstances I should not think of making an order to tax a bill, if it had been paid by a client who was sui juris, and dealing with his own money, after he had had an opportunity of examining it, and especially after he had discussed the matter with his solicitor and obtained from him a reduction in the amount. But that is not the case in the present instance. Messrs. Ardesir, Hormasji and Dinsha were solicitors for trustees, and they knew that the Court had ordered that certain costs taxed as between attorney and client were to be paid out of the Trust Funds, and they must have known that, if the trustees' accounts were called in question, no proof of the correctness of the payments to them would be accepted except the allocatur of the Taxing Master. Consequently, it was their duty to have so advised their clients, and it was their duty also to have had their bills taxed before they demanded payment of the balance. The fact that none of these things was done seems to me to be a very sufficient reason why the amount of the bills should be inquired into.

It was further argued that as two out of three trustees agreed to pay the bills without taxation, their action binds the third, and that he, consequently, cannot now ask to have the bills taxed. I don't think so, especially as the funds were Trust Funds and could only be dealt with in carrying out the trust or under an [195] order of this Court. It is quite clear that on the 12th June, 1893, the present applicant, whatever might have happened before, expressed his opinion that the costs ought to be taxed. In spite of this, the other two trustees on the 21st June, without obtaining the consent of their co-trustee or giving him any notice, paid the costs without taxation. On the 13th July, the applicant asked for an explanation from Messrs. Ardesir, Hormasji and Dinsha and again on the 7th August, but to neither of these letters did he get any reply, though as one of their clients, I think, he was by courtesy entitled to some explanation. Was he, then, to let the matter drop and run the risk at some future time of being called to an account for this payment at a time possibly when his means of proving it was proper payment even on taxation might be absent? In my opinion, he was not bound to do so, but was entitled to bring the matter before the Court and prevent himself being hereafter harassed by a suit.

I, therefore, hold that these bills of costs must be taxed, and I refer them to the Taxing Master for that purpose, and I direct Messrs. Ardesir, Hormasji and Dinsha within fourteen days from this day to lodge the bills in question with the Taxing Master for the purpose of taxation. The remainder of the summons, including the question as to who is to pay the costs of taxation and costs of and incidental to this summons up to this time, to stand over till the allocatur of the Taxing Master is produced.

The two consenting trustees and the solicitors appealed.

The appeal came on for hearing before Sargent, C. J., and Bayley, J., on the 13th October, 1893.

"The attornies, solicitors and proctors shall not in any instance receive or demand the amount of any bill or part thereof, except reasonable advances to be accounted for before the Master, till the same shall have been taxed by the Master, who shall after taxation register the same in books to be kept by him for that purpose in his office, and shall be allowed to charge for the registering of such bill half a rupee per folio."

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—We think that the order made by Mr. Justice Starling must be affirmed. The decree in the suit directed that the costs should be paid out of the funds of the charity when taxed. It is clear, then, that in paying bills which have not been taxed, the trustees have not observed the direction contained in the decree. The payment appears to have been made notwithstanding the protest of one of the trustees, who, in requiring taxation, was acting strictly within his right and his duty. Even if other bills have been paid without taxation to his knowledge, we do not think that he thereby lost his right to have these bills taxed. A trustee of a charity cannot in such a case waive his right to require the taxation of bills of costs connected with the charity. The solicitors in acting for the trustees in this case must be regarded as acting for the charity, and we think the Court has jurisdiction in the matter.

[197] We have also been referred to the rule by which it is ordered that all bills of costs are to be taxed. The existence of this rule no doubt adds force to the argument for the respondent; but, quite independently of that rule, the Court in a case like the present would, in our opinion, have power to enforce taxation.

We are asked to add words to this order to the effect that it is made without prejudice to the rights of the solicitors to claim in respect of certain items of charge which they have omitted from these bills of costs. I do not think we ought to add anything to this order. No case of error or omission has been argued before us, and the affidavits which have been filed do not deal with the subject. Under these circumstances we shall leave the order as it stands.

KRISHNABAI (Original Defendant), Appellant v. KHANGOWDA (Original Plaintiff), *Respondent. [27th February, 1893.]

Hindu law—Partition—Minor—Partition effected without taking into account a minor co-parcener—Such partition invalid—Limitation.

A partition effected without reserving any share for a minor member of the family, and without the consent of some one authorized to act on his behalf, is invalid as against the minor.

Three brothers S. L. and K. were members of a joint Hindu family. In 1862, S. and L. divided the whole of the family property between them without reserving any share for their brother K. who was then a minor. K. lived with L. as a member of his family. L. died in 1867 leaving a childless widow with whom K. continued to live till his death in 1876. K. left an infant son (the plaintiff), only a year old. Subsequently S. died in 1887, leaving two widows without issue. In 1889 the plaintiff, being still a minor, sued by his next friend to recover either [198] the whole or one-third of the family property in the possession of the widows of L. and S. The principal defences to this suit were (1) that it was time-barred, and (2) that the plaintiff was not entitled to claim more than one-third of the property in suit.

Held, that the partition made by S. and L. in 1862 was invalid, as it was made without reserving any share for their minor brother K. and without taking him into account. K's son was, therefore, entitled to recover the whole of the ancestral property as the sole surviving male member of the family.

Held, also, that the suit was not barred by limitation either under Act IX of 1871 or Act XV of 1877 in the absence of any evidence showing that K. ever demanded partition and was refused, or that he was excluded to his knowledge from all participation in the family property.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

18 B. 197.

The property in dispute belonged to one Khangowda, who died about thirty years ago. Khangowda left behind him three sons, namely, Shidgowda, Linggowda and Kalgowda.

In 1862 Shidgowda and Linggowda divided the whole ancestral property between themselves without giving any share to Kalgowda, who was then a minor.

Kalgowda lived with Linggowda as a member of his family. On Linggowda's death without issue in 1867, he continued to live with Linggowda's widow Krishnabai (defendant No. 3). She got him married and he and his wife lived with her till his death in 1876.

At Kalgowda's death in 1876 his son (the plaintiff) was an infant, only one year old.

In 1887 Shidgowda died, leaving two childless widows (defendants Nos. 1 and 2).

In 1889 the plaintiff, who was still a minor, sued by his next friend to recover possession of the immoveable property in the defendant's possession, alleging that his father and uncles were members of a united family; that on the death of Shidgowda the whole of the ancestral property passed to him by right of survivorship, and that even if it were held that the family property was divided, he was at least entitled to one-third share of the property in dispute.

Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 did not contest the suit.

[199] Defendant No. 3 (the widow of Linggowda) pleaded that the plaintiff's father had been dedicated to a math, that after his dedication his brothers Linggowda and Shidgowda had, in 1862-63, divided the whole family property into two equal shares, and that since then they had been in separate possession and enjoyment of their respective portions as absolute owners, and that the suit was, therefore, time-barred.

The Subordinate Judge held that the alleged dedication of plaintiff's father was not proved; that the suit was not time-barred; that the partition made by Linggowda and Shidgowda was not binding on plaintiff's father, as he was not a party to it, and as, moreover, it was effected in fraud of his right; that there being no valid partition the family remained joint and, that the plaintiff as the sole surviving member of his family was entitled, to the whole of the family property. He, therefore, passed a decree awarding possession of the whole property to the plaintiff.

Against this decree the defendant No. 3 appealed to the High Court.

Inverarity (with him Mahadev B. Chaubal) for appellant (defendant No. 3):—We contend, in the first place, that the claim is barred by limitation. There was an actual division of the family property. It took place so far back as the year 1862. Ever since then both Linggowda and Shidgowda have dealt with the portions in their possession as their own absolute property. Their possession has been clearly adverse to the plaintiff and his father for more than twelve years. Plaintiff's father attained majority in 1876. He was then entitled to sue for partition. The present suit was not filed till 1889. The suit is, therefore, barred by limitation. Even if the claim be not time-barred, the plaintiff is not entitled to more than one-third of the property in suit.

Jardine (with him Ganpat Sadashiv Rao), for the respondent:—Where there are three brothers, two of them cannot divide the family property without consulting the third. In this case Linggowda and Shidgowda divided the ancestral property without reserving any share for their minor brother. The division is, therefore, invalid and cannot bind the minor. That being the case, so far as the minor is concerned, he is entitled to regard the [200] family as still a united family. And as a matter of fact the minor Kalgowda lived with his brothers as a member of a joint family. He came of age in 1873, when the Limitation Act IX of 1871 was in force. Under that Act, and until there was a demand for partition and a refusal, limitation did not begin to run against a co-heir seeking partition. In this case there is no evidence to show that Kalgowda ever demanded partition and was refused. He died within three years after attaining majority, leaving behind him a minor son, the plaintiff in this case, who is still a minor. The suit is, therefore, not barred by limitation. Refers to Kazi Ahmed v. Moro Keshav (1); Kane Bable v. Antaji Gangadhar (2).

JUDGMENT.

CANDY, J.—In this case, in my opinion, the question as to the right of the plaintiff to claim one-third share or the whole of the ancestral property does not arise. For the plaintiff's right to obtain possession of the family property which was in the possession of the widows of Shidgowda is admitted. The only question is as to the property which has been for many years in the exclusive possession of Krishnabai, the widow of Linggowda. If limitation had not begun to run against plaintiff's father Kalgowda as regards this property, when he died in December, 1876, then there can be no bar; because, admitting Krishnabai's adverse possession since December, 1876, up to the present time, the present plaintiff was one year old only when Kalgowda died, and the present suit has been filed by his mother and guardian, he being still a minor. It is evident, on the facts established by the evidence, that limitation was not running against Kalgowda when he died as regards the property which was managed by Linggowda after the partition in 1862, till his death in 1867, and after his death by his widow Krishnabai. Whatever may have been the motives of Shidgowda and Linggowda in entirely ignoring their infant brother Kalgowda in the partition of 1862 (possibly they then thought that he would be dedicated to the service of the math), it is clear that Kalgowda when he came back from the math lived with Linggowda as a member of his family. After Linggowda's death in 1867 he continued to live with Krishnabai; she got him married in her house, and he and his wife were united in food and [201] residence with her till the day of his death in December, 1876. He allowed her to continue in management of the lands, but his existence as a member of the family and co-parcener in the property was recognized. On two mortgage bonds of 1871 his formal assent was taken. How far he was, and his son now is, bound by the acts of Krishnabai, who was allowed to exercise the rights of managership in respect of the property, need not now be considered. But it is evident, that Kalgowda could, at any time, have claimed possession of the property, and thus the present claim is, in no way, barred. Under this view of the facts, it is clear that the decree of the Subordinate Judge must be confirmed with costs.

FULTON, J.—The only points urged by the learned counsel for the appellant were:—(1) Whether on the facts found proved by the Subordinate Judge the plaintiff was entitled to recover more than one-third of the property in dispute? (2) Whether the suit was not time-barred? On both questions the answer must, in my opinion, be in favour of the respondent.

There were three brothers, Shidgowda, Linggowda and Kalgowda, of whom the first two divided the property between themselves, in 1862, without reserving any share for their minor brother Kalgowda, or apparently taking him into any account. Possibly, the reason for this action was their belief that he had been dedicated to a math; but it has been found that there was, in fact, no such dedication, and the finding is not disputed. In these circumstances, it seems clear that, so far as Kalgowda was concerned, the partition was not binding on him. Whatever may be the right of the father of a Hindu family to effect partition among his sons without their consent by the exercise of his own will, and whether or not a fair partition among the adult male co-parceners with the reservation of a minor's proper share may be binding on the minor, there seems no authority for the proposition that a partition, such as was here effected which did not consider the minor at all, could have any effect whatever on his position or leave him otherwise than a member of (what so far as he was concerned remained) an undivided family. Hindu law recognizes the equal rights of brothers in ancestral property, and [202] its authority cannot be relied on to uphold a partition manifestly inconsistent with its provisions. Apart from Hindu law, it was not suggested that two joint owners could, without the consent of the third, or of some person legally authorized to consent on his behalf, alter his position as joint owner of the whole property.

The only question, then, remaining for consideration is whether the plaintiff's claim to recover the whole property is time-barred. Linggowda died about 1867; Kalgowda, the father of the plaintiff, in 1876; and Shidgowda in 1887. The exact date at which Kalgowda came of age is not quite certain, but probably he attained the age of majority under the Hindu law then in force about nine years before his death or in 1867 (vide Ex. 50). This is the view put forward by the appellant's counsel, and for the sake of argument I accept it as the one most favourable to his case. It is clear, however, that Kalgowda's rights in the property were not extinguished either by Act XIV of 1859 or by Act IX of 1871. The former Act did not remain in force for twelve years after the partition of 1862, and it is not alleged that there was ever any demand for partition by Kalgowda such as would render applicable art. 127 of Act IX of 1871. We have then to consider whether time had begun to run against him under art. 127 of the present Act. The burden of proving the fact of Kalgowda's exclusion to his knowledge rests on the defendant, and it does not seem to me that there is anything in the evidence to establish such exclusion. It was urged that he must have known of the third defendant's enjoyment of a part of the family property, but I do not think it is shown that he was aware of an intention to exclude him from his rights when he chose to assert them. He was a party to her mortgage (Ex. 50); but the fact that it was thought necessary to make him a party, indicates rather an acknowledgment than a denial of his rights. According to Krishnabai's evidence he lived principally with Shidgowda, but he died in the house of Krishnabai, with whom he was evidently on good terms (1). No attempt was ever made to allot him any separate share whatever, and it cannot be assumed that he ever assented to the partition made [203] during his minority; for it would require very strong evidence to show an assent to his own entire exclusion from his rights. Exhibit 50 shows that he was aware of the partition deed of 1862, but the omission to allot him any share indicates that the matter was allowed to rest, and that no attempt was made to define his interest in the property. Under these circumstances, I do not consider that limitation ever began to run against him, nor has it ever begun to run under art. 127 against the present plaintiff, who is still a minor. Consequently, up to the death of Shidgowda in 1887, the plaintiff still retained his right to sue for partition, and the appellant's tenure of the property, in her possession, is not proved to have been adverse to him up to that period. On the death of Shidgowda, plaintiff's right to sue to enforce his right to share in the property probably ceased, and his right to sue for possession of the whole property commenced. To such a suit art. 144 would apply, but as less than twelve years have elapsed since Shidgowda's death, and as, moreover, the plaintiff is a minor, his right to sue is clearly not barred under this article.

The decree must accordingly be confirmed with costs.

THIS was an appeal from an order passed by Rao Bahadur Chunilal Maneklal, First Class Subordinate Judge of Poona, in execution of a decree.

The plaintiffs sued the defendants to recover certain ornaments and clothes or their value, namely, Rs. 1,332-8-0. They also claimed Rs. 5,001 for damages. On the 24th July, 1889, the Subordinate Judge passed a decree for the plaintiffs with respect to some of the ornaments and clothes, or their value, Rs. 940-4-0. The rest of the plaintiffs' claim was dismissed. The defendants did not appeal against the decree, but the plaintiffs appealed to the High Court (the amount of the original claim being more than Rs. 5,000) against the decree so far as it dismissed part of their claim. The High Court confirmed the decree of the Subordinate Judge on the 10th September, 1891.

On the 9th September, 1892, the plaintiffs presented an application (darkhast) for the execution of the decree. The Subordinate Judge rejected the application and passed the following order:—"This darkhast is beyond time and should be rejected. . . . The High Court confirmed the decree of the Court below. It seems to me that the award of Rs. 940-4-0 was not the subject-matter of the appeal, and limitation begins to run from the date of the original decree, which is the only decree which awards that sum to the plaintiffs. That decree was passed on 24th July, 1889, and the present darkhast was presented on 9th September, 1892."

Against this order the plaintiffs preferred the present appeal.

Ganesh Krishna Deshmukh, for the appellants (plaintiffs).—The High Court confirmed the Subordinate Judge's decree as a whole, and the decree to be executed is the appellate decree. The period of limitation must, therefore, begin to run from the date of that decree. Our darkhast is, therefore, within time.

The respondents did not appear.

CRIMINAL REVISION.
18 B. 205.

THIS was an application for revision under s. 435 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882).

The accused was charged, under s. 500 of the Indian Penal Code, with defaming the complainant by writing to him a notice containing certain false imputations to the following effect:—"(1) You (the complainant) have been for the last several days behaving inimically towards me without any reason, and I have good grounds to think that you have caused false actions to be filed against me by others. (2) You have been, on [206] the strength of your official position, intimidating me from time to time without any reason. (3) On Monday the 31st October, 1892, at about 7 A.M., you came to my shop and in the presence of others uttered all shorts of abuses and criminally intimidated me, and since then you have been sending me messages full of criminal intimidation. You have ventured to do so purely on the strength of your official position as a jamadar."

The accused was also charged, under s. 506 of the Indian Penal Code, with committing criminal intimidation by threatening the complainant with injury to his reputation.

The accused was tried before Mr. Webb, the Third Presidency Magistrate, who convicted him on both charges and sentenced him to pay a fine of Rs. 100, or, in default, to suffer two months' rigorous imprisonment.

Thereupon the accused made the present application to the High Court under its revisional jurisdiction.

Vasudev Gopal Bhandarkar, for the accused.

There was no appearance for the complainant.

JUDGMENT.

FULTON, J.—We see no reason to interfere with the conviction for criminal intimidation, but are of opinion that the charge of defamation has not been proved. The accused was charged with defaming the complainant by writing him a notice containing certain false imputations; but the mere sending of a notice to a person, albeit containing matter of a defamatory nature, cannot be held to be equivalent to making or publishing an imputation intending to harm or knowing or having reason to believe that it will harm the reputation of the person to whom it is addressed. The Magistrate appears to have perceived the difficulty of convicting of defamation as stated in the charge, and in his finding said that the publication was proved by Sadashiv Narayan and Eshvant Supraji; but this was quite a different act of publication from that alleged, either in the complaint or the charge, and having regard to the provisions of s. 198, Criminal Procedure Code, could not, we think, form the basis of a conviction of defamation. We reverse the conviction of defamation, and direct that out of the fine the sum of Rs. 50 be [207] refunded to the accused, and that the remaining Rs. 50 be retained as the fine imposed for criminal intimidation. As the Magistrate convicted under two distinct sections, he should have imposed separate punishments under each.

As the complaint was made by the complainant as a private individual, and not in the capacity of a public servant, it ought to have been stamped.

Conviction for defamation reversed.

The provisions of s. 8 of Act VII of 1887 apply to appellate Courts as well as to Courts of first instance, and the value of the subject-matter of suits for the purposes of jurisdiction must be determined by the provisions of that section.

In a suit of the description mentioned in s. 8 of Act VII of 1887 the plaintiff valued his claim at Rs. 664 for the computation of Court-fees, and at Rs. 14,000 for purposes of jurisdiction.

Held, that the appeal from the decree of the Court of first instance lay to the District Court, and not to the High Court.

APPEAL from an order rejecting a plaint passed by Khan Bahadur M. N. Nanavati, First Class Subordinate Judge of Surat.

In this case the plaintiff prayed for the following reliefs :—

(A) An injunction restraining the defendant from applying Government promissory notes of the value of Rs. 14,000, in contravention of the terms of an agreement dated 10th January, 1890, made between the plaintiff and the defendant.

(B) An injunction restraining the defendant from leaving undone certain acts which the defendant had to perform in accordance with the terms of the said agreement, as mentioned in paragraph 10 of the plaint.

[208] (C) An order directing the defendant to make over to certain trustees four per cent. Government promissory notes of the value of Rs. 7,500.

(D) An order directing the defendant to pay Rs. 604 on account of costs which the plaintiff had incurred in certain legal proceedings.

For the computation of Court fees the plaintiff valued reliefs A, B and C at Rs. 20 each, and relief D at Rs. 604. The whole claim was assessed at the aggregate sum of Rs. 664, and a stamp of Rs. 50-4 was affixed to the plaint.

For purposes of jurisdiction the claim was valued at Rs. 14,000. The suit was filed in the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge at Surat.

The Subordinate Judge, being of opinion that the reliefs sought were undervalued, ordered that the claim should be properly valued and stamped. The plaintiff having failed to do so, the Subordinate Judge rejected the plaint.

From this order the plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Gokuldas K. Parekh, for appellant.

Govardhan M. Tripati, for respondent.

Govardhan M. Tripati.—There is a preliminary objection to this appeal. The appeal lies, not to this Court, but to the District Court. Under s. 8 of Act VII of 1887, in a case like the present the valuation for purposes of jurisdiction is the same as the valuation for purposes of Court fees. The plaintiff has valued his claim under the Court Fees Act (VII of 1870) at less than Rs. 5,000. The same valuation should, therefore, be taken for purposes of jurisdiction. The appeal, therefore, lies to the District Court.

Gokuldas K. Parekh.—The provisions of s. 8 of Act VII of 1887 apply to suits only. It would be straining the language of the section to extend its provisions to appeals. The section is, therefore, applicable to Courts of first instance and not to appellate Courts. In this case the plaint expressly states that the property in dispute is worth about Rs. 14,000. This should [209] be taken to be the valuation for purposes of jurisdiction. The appeal, therefore, lies to this Court.

The following judgment was delivered by the Court (CANDY and FULTON, JJ.):—

JUDGMENT.

PER CURIAM:—A preliminary objection has been taken that the appeal in this case lies to the District Court and not to the High Court: Mr. Gokuldas seeks to avoid the provisions of s. 8 of Act VII of 1887 by contending that it applies to Courts of first instance and not to appellate Courts. But we are unable to allow the contention. This is a suit decided by the Subordinate Judge, First Class, of which the value of the subject-matter was for the computation of Court fees less than Rs. 5,000 and s. 8 of Act VII of 1887 provides that in such a suit the value as determinable for the computation of Court fees and the value for the purposes of jurisdiction shall be the same. But it is only in suits in which the value of the subject-matter (which must be determined according to the provisions of (s. 8 of Act VII of 1887), exceeds Rs. 5,000 that the appeal lies to the High Court (s. 26 of Act XIV of 1869). In all other cases the appeal from an original decree of a Subordinate Judge lies to the District Court. We must, therefore, return the memorandum of appeal to be presented in the District Court. The plaintiffs valued the reliefs sought at Rs. 140 for purposes of Court-fees.

JUDGMENT.

CANDY, J.—As regards the immoveable property (lands, houses, sites, &c.), the subject-matter of the present appeal, the suit was brought for demarcation by metes and bounds, according to the shares received by the plaintiff co-sharers in the profits of the said property. An objection has been taken, in appeal, that the claim was simply for a declaration of the plaintiffs' right to the share claimed, and that, therefore, the lower Court was not justified in making a division of the property. The language of the prayer of the plaint is somewhat ambiguous, the words used being "taraun dyava." But the parties and the Subordinate Judge evidently considered this to be a prayer for actual division. Defendants Nos. 2 to 4 took an objection in their written statement that the claim had not been duly valued and the plaint not duly stamped; but the Subordinate Judge remarked in his judgment that "the question as to the under-valuation of the claim has not been urged by the pleader for the defendants." The reason why the Subordinate Judge did not of his own motion correct the valuation (which was Rs. 130, the supposed value on which a stamp of Rs. 10 was paid, to which was added Rs. 10 for the injunction prayed for), is to be found in Mahadeva Balwant v. [211] Laxuman Balwant (1). It appears to have been the practice in the First Class Subordinate Judge's Court at Poona to value such suits as the present one at Rs. 130. But the ruling of the Chief Justice in the above quoted case shows that "as the suit asks for partition and possession of the plaintiffs' share, the stamp must be an ad valorem one on the value of the share." The stamp on the present appeal has been levied in accordance with that ruling, and counsel for the respondent-plaintiffs admits that his clients must, if so ordered, pay the stamp which was leviable on their plaint according to the same principle. Even had the plaintiffs in the present case simply sued to establish their title to the share which they claim in the property, they would still have had to pay an ad valorem stamp fee upon the value of that share. (See the dictum of Garth, C. J., in Kirty Churn Mitter v. Aunath Nath Deb (2), which has been approved of by the Chief Justice in this Court). As they claimed partition and possession of a definite share in certain lands, houses, &c., which they could not say it was impossible to estimate at a money value, there can be no doubt that the valuation of the plaint as allowed by the Subordinate Judge was to the detriment of the revenue.

MARCH 6.
APPELLATE CIVIL.
18 B. 209.

Passing to the merits, it must be noticed, that the representative of the Sirdar Ramchandra Lakshman, who was alive when the suit was filed, and who could be sued in the Agent's Court only, has now been placed on the record. We are of opinion, therefore, that the question of non-joinder of parties need not now be considered. With reference to the property in the Ratnagiri District, it is not contended that the plaintiffs are in possession of the same. There is no equity, therefore, which compels them to include it in their present claim. They exclude it at their own risk, and we offer no opinion as to whether they can, in a subsequent suit, claim actual partition of those lands. The other points urged by appellants' pleader need no remark. The property, the subject-matter of the present appeal, is shown to be liable to actual partition. The fact that some of it was saranjam, which has recently been resumed by Government, that is, made khalsa, would not render it less so. Cash allowances cannot, of course, be demarcated. The pleader for appellants admitted [212] that he could not satisfy the Court that his clients had not divided the profits of all the properties in the plaint among the co-sharers, including the plaintiffs. We must, therefore, with reference to the above remarks regarding the Court fee, direct that if the plaintiffs do within one month pay the Court fee due on Rs. 5,406-6-10½ in place of the Court fee paid by them on Rs. 130 on their plaint, the decree of the lower Court shall stand confirmed with costs on appellants; in default of such payment the decree of the lower Court will be reversed with all costs on plaintiffs.

Decree confirmed.

Held that, in the absence of any information as to the circumstances under which the coin was lost, and as it was not improbable that the property in the coin had been abandoned by the original owner, the accused could not be convicted of criminal misappropriation under s. 403 of the Indian Penal Code.

[213] "I believe that the conviction of the accused was not justified.

"The Magistrate has apparently acted on illustration (f) to s. 403, Indian Penal Code, where it is shown that under similar circumstances the finder of a valuable ring may be guilty of an offence under that section. A not uncommon coin, however, like a gold mohur is not on a par with a 'valuable ring,' and the finder thereof being in the position of a miserable woman like the accused, who is a Mang by caste, cannot, in my opinion, be held to be guilty of any offence for parting with it for current silver, without advertising her discovery.

"It is to be noted that there is no complaint, and that the Magistrate has taken cognizance of the case on a police report."

The reference was heard by a Division Bench consisting of Candy and Fulton, JJ.

There was no appearance either for the Crown or for the accused.

ORDER.

CANDY, J.—The First Class Magistrate, Ahmednagar, on 12th December, 1892, convicted one Sita, a Mang woman, of having committed criminal misappropriation of property on 15th October, 1892, in respect of a gold mohur which she said she had found in an open plain, and sold the next day to a shroff for Rs. 22-12-0. The First Class Magistrate remarked :—

"I can, however, hardly believe her story. It appears more probable that the mohur was found by her somewhere in this city, or that it is part and parcel of some stolen property. The accused is a Mang woman, and her possession of the gold mohur can no way be presumed as honest."

The Magistrate was not justified in making these remarks. The only evidence was in support of the story that the mohur had been found on the open plain, and the only question for consideration was, whether the act of the accused in selling on the next day the coin so found amounted to criminal misappropriation of property. We are of opinion that this question must be answered in the negative. It cannot fairly be said that when accused sold the mohur she knew, or had the means of discovering the owner, or that she omitted to use reasonable means to discover [214] and give notice to the owner, and did not keep the property a reasonable time to enable the owner to claim it. It might have been different had the mohur been found on a thoroughfare, in which case the finder would naturally believe that the property had been recently lost and that the owner would be discoverable. But in this case the mohur may have been lying undiscovered on the plain for weeks. It is a fair inference that the owner had given up all hope of recovering it, and had abandoned his right of ownership. This inference is strengthened by the fact that in December the Magistrate was apparently unable to discover any trace of the owner of the article which had been found in October. No doubt for a conviction under s. 403 it is sufficient if the accused did not in good faith believe that the real owner could not be found (explanation 2, para. 3). But in this case the Mang woman might in good faith have believed that the owner of the mohur could not be found. Therefore the conviction and sentence are reversed, and the fine, if paid, should be refunded.

FULTON, J.—The accused has been convicted of dishonestly misappropriating a gold mohur which she found lying on the ground and sold immediately without making any attempt to discover the owner. No one has come forward to claim it, and no evidence has been offered to prove that any one lost such a coin about the time or place at which it was found.

CRIMINAL REFERENCE.

The offence consists in the dishonest misappropriation or conversion of moveable property, and before a conviction can be recorded it must be proved that the article forming the object of the charge was moveable property. The law relating to appropriation of things found on the road or in some other open place was explained in the case of the Queen v. Glyde (1) by Cockburn, C.J., who told the jury that where property had been cast away or abandoned, any one finding it and taking it acquired a right to it which would be good even as against the former owner, if the latter should be minded to resume it ; but that, when a thing had been accidentally lost, the property was not divested, but remained in the owner who lost it. The correctness of this statement will, I [215] believe, hardly be disputed. It has been recognized in India in the case of sacred bulls which had been abandoned by their owners, and were held not to be capable of being the subjects of dishonest misappropriation in the Queen-Empress v. Bandhu (2), the Queen-Empress v. Nihal (3) and Romesh Chunder Sannyal v. Hiru Mondal (4).

The question then arises, whether the evidence proves that at the time when the accused found the gold mohur, it remained the property of the person who had lost it ; for, if not, it follows that it could not be the subject of dishonest misappropriation, and became on being found the property of the finder. That it had once belonged to some person need not be disputed ; but, in the absence of all information as to the circumstances under which it was lost, it seems impossible to say, with any approach to certainty, that it had not been finally abandoned before it was picked up. It may have been dropped on the ground but a few hours previously, or it may have been lost years before, and by mere accident have been moved out of some place where it had been lying concealed, and cast upon the surface of the ground. The original owner may still be in quest of it, or he may long ago have left the locality and abandoned it for ever. That the latter is not an impossible, or even a very improbable, contingency may be inferred from the period which has elapsed without the appearance of any claimant. There was no undue haste about the proceedings. The gold mohur was found on the 16th October. The Magistrate considered his decision and disposed of the case on the 12th December. Whether under any circumstances it would be right to convict an accused person of dishonest misappropriation of an article, the real owner of which could not be discovered, need not be discussed ; but it seems clear that in the present case the conviction is unsafe, for the circumstances are not sufficiently elucidated to make it reasonably certain that the coin when found was the property of any one, and, unless it could correctly be described as property, neither explanation 2 nor any other part of s. 403 would apply to it. I would, therefore, reverse the conviction and direct that the fine be refunded.

[216] The case, it will be observed, does not fall within the scope of the Treasure Trove Act, inasmuch as the coin when found was not hidden in the soil or in anything affixed thereto (s. 3 of Act VI of 1878).

Conviction and sentence quashed.

MUKTA AND ANOTHER (Original Defendants), Appellants v. DADA VALAD SUPADU (Original Plaintiff), *Respondent. [13th March, 1893.]

Adverse possession—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), sch. II, art. 141—Reversioner.

Nathu, a Hindu, died in 1863, leaving two widows (Tulsa and Gama) and a daughter Mukta him surviving. In 1874 the widows divided the property left by Nathu between them, and one of them (Tulsa), in 1876, sold her share to one Ganpatrav, who again sold it to the plaintiff. Gama died in 1887, Tulsa having died previously. After the death of the two widows, Mukta, the daughter of Nathu, was heir to the property, but the plaintiff in this suit alleged a title by adverse possession.

Held, that the plaintiff had no title as against the defendant Mukta. Under art. 141 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) the possession of Tulsa's vendee and of the plaintiff was not adverse to the defendant Mukta who took as Nathu's heir, until the death of Gama the surviving widow of Nathu. Gama did not die until 1887.

THIS was a second appeal from the decision of Rao Bahadur N. N. Nanavati, First Class Subordinate Judge of Dhulia with Appellate Powers.

One Nathu Shet, who was the owner of two adjoining houses, died, leaving two widows Gama Bai and Tulsa Bai, and Mukta, a daughter by Gama Bai. The two widows divided Nathu's property on the 21st November, 1874, and each took a house. Tulsa Bai lived for some time in the house which she thus acquired, and on the 12th February, 1876, sold it to one Ganpatrav Shamrav. The house subsequently fell down, and on 7th January, [217] 1887, Ganpatrav sold the site to the plaintiff Dada valad Supadu. The plaintiff then re-built the house on the southern part of the site.

On the northern part of the site there was a door which was in the house that had fallen to Gama Bai's share. Tulsa Bai died childless, and subsequently in 1887, Gama Bai died leaving her daughter Mukta surviving her. In 1889 the plaintiff brought the present suit against Mukta and her husband for an injunction restraining them from preventing his passing across the northern portion of the site and from preventing him from shutting up the door in the defendant's house.

The defendants Mukta and her husband Ramshet denied the plaintiff's right and contended that they had been using the door and enjoying light and air through it for more than twenty years, and that the suit was, therefore, time-barred.

The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit on the ground that the plaintiff's claim to close the door was barred by limitation, the defendants having acquired a right by prescription to have it kept open, and that the plaintiff's right to pass across the land was not proved.

On appeal by the plaintiff, the Court reversed the decree, holding that the claim with regard to the door in dispute was within time; that the door belonged to the houses of both the parties, and that defendants had no right to pass through it; and that the plaintiff was entitled to the relief as prayed for in the plaint. The Court in its judgment observed:—

"Tulsa Bai died within a year or so after the date of the sale-deed passed by her to Ganpatrav. The alienation made by her in favour of Ganpatrav was never set aside, nor was any suit brought after her death by Gama, or the defendant No. 1, to set aside this alienation, and recover the property left by her. It thus appears that the plaintiff's right to his house is now unimpeachable (arts. 125 and 141 of sch. II of Act XV of 1877).

"The door is an old one. It has been in existence for the last more than forty years. The Subordinate Judge, therefore, held that the plaintiff's claim, as regards this door, was time-barred (s. 26 of Act XV of 1877). The two houses had belonged to [218] Nathu till his death. They appear from the defendant's written statement to be more than seventy-five years old. These houses descended after Nathu's death to his two widows Gama and Tulsa. The two co-widows effected a partition and became separate in 1874, i.e., fourteen-years before the date of this suit. The owner, therefore, of the two houses till 1874 was the same. While unity of ownership or of possession lasts, no question of easement can arise (1). Unity of possession at any time within the twenty years is fatal to a claim to a right of easement (2). Unity of ownership of the dominant and servient tenements prevents the acquisition of a prescriptive right to the access of light and air (Addison on Torts, 4th Ed., pp.127, 138, 139, 140 and 141, and s. 46 of the Easements Act No. V of 1882). The period prescribed, in the Limitation Act, of twenty years must, therefore, be calculated from 1874, when Tulsa and Gama became separate, and as the defendants have thus had this door for fifteen years only, the plaintiff's claim in respect thereof is within time. In the farkhat (Ex. 19) no mention is made at all of this door, nor are there words showing that any such easement was meant to be created or was transferred in favour of the defendant's house."

The defendants filed a second appeal.

Ghanasham N. Nadkarni, for the appellants (plaintiffs):—The lower Court awarded the plaintiff's claim on the ground that no steps were taken to set saide the sale by Tulsa within twelve years from its date, viz., 1876. But the defendant Mukta claims as her father's reversionary heir on her mother Gama's death. After Tulsa's death, her interest, whatever it was, passed to her co-widow Gama, and after Gama's death Mukta as her father's heir became entitled to the property. There could be no adverse possession as against Mukta so long as Gama was alive—Cursandas Govindji v. Vundravandas Purshotam (3).

Tulsa had only a life interest which she sold to Ganpatrav, and Ganpatrav sold to the plaintiff. But that interest terminated at her death. If there was any adverse possession, it only began at her death, and the lower Courts have not ascertained this date.

shutting up the gate marked "ksha" in the same map. Both the properties in the occupation of the parties belonged to Nathu Shet, who died leaving two widows Tulsa and Gama, who effected a partition of the property in November, 1874. Tulsa sold the house and land allotted to her to Ganpatrav Shamrav in February, 1876, who sold the site (the house having fallen down) to the plaintiff in January, 1877. Gama survived Tulsa and died, leaving a daughter the first defendant. The Subordinate Judge, without determining to whom the door belonged, found that in any case defendants had acquired a right by prescription to have the door kept open; and as to the land over which the plaintiff claimed a right of passage, he held that, whatever Tulsa's enjoyment might have been, it was personal to her; that he had no jurisdiction in this suit to determine as to the validity of the sale by Tulsa; that plaintiff could not go beyond the terms of his sale-deed, and as no right of passage over the land was, in his opinion, given him by the deed, dismissed the plaint. The lower appeal Court held that plaintiff had acquired an unimpeachable right by adverse possession to the property which was allowed to Tulsa; that the door was in the common wall of the two properties which fell to the shares of Gama and Tulsa, and that defendants had not acquired a prescriptive right to have light and air pass through it; and, lastly, that plaintiff and those through whose hands the property had passed were entitled, both upon the construction of the deed of partition and actual user, to a right of passage as claimed as a way of necessity to the lane to the north. It accordingly reversed the decree of the Subordinate Judge, and awarded the plaintiff's claim.

The principal ground on which the case has been argued before us on special appeal is that time would not run against the first defendant Mukta, who was the heir of Nathu, until after Gama's death; but that even if time ran from Tulsa's death, as the lower appeal Court held, that Court has never distinctly determined when Tulsa did die so as to justify the conclusion that plaintiff had [220] acquired an unimpeachable title, by adverse possession, and that it would be necessary to send back the case for a finding. As to this, it is to be remarked that the sale by Tulsa to Ganpatrav would not be binding on the surviving widow unless made under emergent circumstances. Assuming for the moment that it was not made under such circumstances, the possession by Ganpatrav and plaintiff would become adverse to Gama on Tulsa's death, but according to the ruling in Srinath Kur v. Prosunno Kumar Ghose (1), which we think is the correct view of art. 141 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) and was followed in Cursandas Govindji v. Vundravandas Purshotam (2), the Act would not begin to run against the first defendant Mukta, who takes as heir of Nathu, until after Gama's death: in other words, the possession during Gama's life-time was not adverse to the defendant. The result of the above considerations is that the plaintiff has not established an ownership in the premises occupied by him by adverse possession as found by the lower appeal Court, and cannot ask the Court for an injunction to restrain the defendants from interfering with him in closing up the door, because the defendant may have failed to prove that she had acquired a prescriptive right to the free passage of light and air through these doors.

Hitherto, we have considered the rights of the parties on the assumption that the alienation to Ganpatrav was not binding on the family, but that question has not been distinctly raised owing to the manner in which the case has been tried, and we must, therefore, send down the following issue for that purpose :—

Has the plaintiff acquired the property allotted to Tulsa on the partition between her and Gama under such circumstances as to be binding on the first defendant ?

* Second Appeal No. 664 of 1891.

† Section 83 of the Land Revenue Code (Bombay Act V of 1879) :—A person placed, as tenant, in possession of land by another, or, in that capacity, holding, taking or retaining possession of land permissively from or by sufferance of another, shall be regarded as holding the same at the rent, or for the services, agreed upon between them, or in the absence of satisfactory evidence of such agreement, at the rent payable or services renderable by the usage of the locality, or if there be no such agreement or usage, shall be presumed to hold at such rent as, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, shall be just and reasonable.

And where by reason of the antiquity of a tenancy, no satisfactory evidence of its commencement is forthcoming, and there is not any such evidence of the period of its intended duration, if any, agreed upon between the landlord and tenant, or those under whom they respectively claim title, or any usage of the locality as to duration of such tenancy, it shall, as against the immediate landlord of the tenant, be presumed to be co-extensive with the duration of the tenure of such landlord and of those who derive title under him.

And where there is no satisfactory evidence of the capacity in which a person in possession of land in respect of which he renders service or pays rent to the landlord, receives, holds or retains possession of the same, it shall be presumed that he is in possession as tenant.

Nothing contained in this section shall affect the right of the landlord (if he have the same either by virtue of agreement, usage or otherwise) to enhance the rent payable, or services renderable, by the tenant, or to evict the tenant for non-payment of the rent or non-rendition of the services, either respectively originally fixed or duly enhanced as aforesaid.

title and interest of the said Pandurang Narayan Pendharkar in the land. He now sought to eject defendants Nos. 1 and 2, who had been the tenants of Pandurang Narayan, and defendants Nos. 3 to 8, who occupied the land under Nos. 1 and 2.

Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 resisted the claim, on the ground that they were the owners of the miras rights over the land, and that defendants Nos. 3 to 8 were in possession as their mortgagees.

Defendants Nos. 3 to 8 denied the mortgage set up by Nos. 1 and 2 and pleaded that they occupied the land as owners for sixty years on payment of the assessment to the inamdar, that the plaintiff was not entitled to evict them, and that the suit was time-barred.

The Joint Subordinate Judge (Rao Saheb B. Y. Gupte) found that the defendants did not own miras rights over the land in dispute, that the plaintiff was entitled to eject them, and that the suit was not time-barred. He, therefore, allowed the claim.

On appeal by defendants Nos. 3 to 8, the Assistant Judge reversed the decree. The following is an extract from his judgment :—

" * * * I am of opinion that the plaintiff has proved his title to the land, but with what rights I cannot determine.

" As to the defendants, they have been cultivating the land for a period which the witnesses variously put at twenty or forty years and the Subordinate Judge takes as fifty. During that time they have paid the Government assessment and nothing besides. What the origin of their tenancy is, there is nothing to show, the reason being its antiquity. Following the view of s. 83, Bombay Land Revenue Code, laid down in the High Court Printed Judgments for 1889, p. 363, I presume the defendant's tenure co-extensive with that of the plaintiff. The title of defendants is, in my opinion, as good as the plaintiff's, and there is quite as much reason, perhaps more, for considering them mirasdars as for so considering the plaintiff."

The plaintiff preferred a second appeal.

[223] Jardine (with Mahadeo Chimnaji Apte), for the appellant (plaintiff) :—The Assistant Judge, it seems, accepted the finding of the Subordinate Judge that the respondents have been tenants for fifty years and yet he held that the origin of their tenancy could not be ascertained owing to its antiquity. Even in their written statement the respondents say that they have been on the land for sixty years. Therefore, their title cannot be co-extensive in duration with that of our vendor, who was both the inamdar and mirasdar. Under these circumstances the respondents cannot assert their mirasi rights. Section 83 of the Land Revenue Code is not applicable—Kalidas v. Bhaiji (1).

Macpherson (with Daji Abaji Khare), for the respondents (defendants Nos. 3 to 8) :—The Assistant Judge has clearly found that the origin of our title is lost in antiquity. This is a finding of fact, and cannot be interfered with in second appeal. There is no evidence in the case with respect to the origin of our tenancy. The Judge has not accepted the finding of the Subordinate Judge with respect to the origin. If he had done so, he would not have reversed the decree.

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—It is not clear from the language of the judgment of the lower Court whether the Assistant Judge intended to decide that the tenancy commenced between twenty-five and forty years ago, but not more than forty. If he did, s. 83 of Act V of 1879 would not apply, as ruled in Kalidas v. Bhaiji (1). If, on the contrary, he did not so intend, and by saying that there was no evidence to show the "origin of the tenancy" he meant that there was no satisfactory evidence to show the commencement of it as well as the terms of it, the section would apply. Having regard to this ambiguity in the judgment, we think it safer to reverse the decree of the Court below and send back the case for a fresh decision, having regard to the above remarks. Costs to abide the result.

(1) 16 B. 646.

HIRACHAND HARJIVANDAS AND ANOTHER (Original Applicants), Applicants v. KASTURCHAND KASIDAS (Original Opponent), *Opponent.

Practice—Procedure—Decree—Appeal—Execution—Death of judgment-debtor after appellate decree—Representatives of judgment-debtor—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 234, 248, 361 to 372, 583.

The Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) does not contemplate the representatives of the judgment-debtor being placed on the record after the appellate decree has been passed. There is no express provision for it in the sections relating to execution. Sections 361 to 372 relate to changes during suit, and speak only of plaintiffs and defendants—terms which seem to show that they were only intended to apply to proceedings up to final determination by the appellate decree and not to proceedings in execution between the judgment-creditor and judgment-debtor.

A Court of appeal having confirmed the decree of a Second Class Subordinate Judge, the decree was transferred for execution to the First Class Subordinate Judge. After the transfer the judgment-debtor died. The judgment-creditor then applied to the First Class Subordinate Judge to substitute on the record the name of the representative of the deceased. The First Class Subordinate Judge rejected the application and referred the judgment creditor to the Second Class Subordinate Judge, who also rejected the application on the ground that the decree which was being executed was the appellate decree in which his decree was merged, and, therefore, he had no jurisdiction to entertain the application.

Held, that the course open to the judgment-creditor was by way of application to execute the decree against the legal representative of the deceased as provided by s. 234 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), in which case the application to execute the decree, having regard to s. 583, would be to the Second Class Subordinate Judge, although by s. 248 the notice to the party against whom execution was applied for, would be issued by the First Class Subordinate Judge to whom the decree was transferred for execution.

who dismissed the suit and ordered each party to bear his own costs. Kasidas appealed to the District Judge of Surat, who confirmed the Subordinate Judge's decree and ordered Kasidas to pay the respondents' costs of the appeal. In [225] order to recover these costs the respondents, now judgment-creditors, applied for the execution of the decree to the Second Class Subordinate Judge, and prayed that the execution proceedings should be transferred to the First Class Subordinate Judge within whose local jurisdiction the judgment-debtor Kasidas was living. The application was granted, and the execution was transferred as prayed for. Some time after the transfer, the judgment-debtor died. The judgment-creditors, therefore, applied to the First Class Subordinate Judge to put the name of the son and heir (Kastur) of the deceased on the record. This application was rejected and the judgment-creditors were directed to apply to the Second Class Subordinate Judge and to produce from him a certificate with respect to the substitution of the name.

The judgment-creditors thereupon presented an application to the Second Class Subordinate Judge, who dismissed it on the ground that he had no jurisdiction to entertain it, because the decree that was being executed was the decree of the appellate Court in which the Subordinate Judge's decree had become merged.

The judgment-creditor then applied to the High Court under its extraordinary jurisdiction and obtained a rule nisi calling on the opponent Kastur to show cause why the order of the Second Class Subordinate Judge should not be reversed.

Motilal Mugutlal Munshi, in support of the rule.—Either the First Class Subordinate Judge had jurisdiction to entertain our application to substitute the name of the heir of the deceased judgment-debtor on the record, or the Second Class Subordinate Judge had it. We presented applications to both the Courts, and both of them held that they had no jurisdiction to entertain the application. Against those two orders we have presented two applications under the extraordinary jurisdiction of the High Court including the present application, which relates to the order made by the Second Class Subordinate Judge. Some Court must put the heir of the deceased on the record under ss. 361 to 372 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882). One of our applications should, therefore, be granted.

Govardhanram M. Tripati, for the opponent, showed cause:—

No rule nisi has yet been granted on the application against the order of the First Class Subordinate Judge. We are, therefore, [226] not now concerned with that application. The present application cannot be granted. The explanation to s. 248 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) shows that the Court empowered to act under that section is the Court which actually executes the decree, and not the Court which passed it. The Second Class Subordinate Judge had, therefore, no jurisdiction to act under s. 248, and his order is, therefore, correct. It is for the applicant to find out what course is open to him. It is difficult to see under what section the application, whether to the First Class Subordinate Judge or the Second Class Subordinate Judge, can be made, as ss. 361 to 372 of the Civil Procedure Code apply to "plaintiffs" and "defendants," and these words have been under s. 582 extended to "appellants" and "respondents," while there is no provision extending them to "judgment-creditors" and "judgment-debtors."

Motilal Mugutlal Munshi, in reply:—We have a right to proceed before the Second Class Subordinate Judge under s. 234.

SARGENT, C.J.—The Civil Procedure Code does not, we think, contemplate the representatives of the judgment-debtor being placed on the record after the appellate decree has been passed. There is no express provision for it in the sections relating to execution. The ss. 361 to 372, which relate to changes during suit, speak only of plaintiffs and defendants—terms which seem to show that they were only intended to apply to proceedings up to final determination by the appellate decree, and not to proceedings in execution between the judgment-creditor and judgment-debtor. The course for the judgment-creditor to adopt is that provided by s. 234, in which case the application to execute the decree, having regard to s. 583, would be to the Second Class Subordinate Judge, although by s. 248, the notice to the party against whom execution is applied for would be issued by the First Class Subordinate Judge, to whom the decree had been transferred for execution.

There is, therefore, under the circumstances, no reason for our interfering with the decision of the Second Class Subordinate Judge, and we must discharge the rule with costs.

Before Mr. Justice Starling.

DAWOOD DURVESH (Plaintiff) v. VULLUBHDAS PURSHOTAM (Defendant).* [22nd August, 1893.]

Hindu law—Damdupat—Rule of damdupat when applicable—Interest—Amount of interest recoverable by a Hindu—Mortgage—Hindu creditor claiming interest from a debtor not a Hindu—Redemption suit—Supreme Court Charter, cl. 29.

In a redemption suit brought by a Mahomedan against a Hindu, it was found on taking the accounts that a sum of Rs. 17,519 were due by the plaintiff (mortgagor) to the defendant (mortgagee). Of this sum Rs. 6,500 were the principal and the remainder (Rs. 11,019) was for interest. The plaintiff contended that the defendant being a Hindu was bound by the rule of damdupat, and could not claim as interest more than the amount of the principal.

Held, that the rule of damdupat did not apply; and that the plaintiff was liable to the defendant for the whole amount. The rule of damdupat only applies when the debtor is a Hindu.

[R., 21 B. 39 (40).]

ON Commissioner's report. The plaintiff in this suit was a Mahomedan and the defendant a Hindu. On the 1st December, 1865, the plaintiff mortgaged his house in Bombay to one Purshotam Bhimji (since deceased) to secure the principal sum of Rs. 6,500, with interest at 9 per cent. per annum. In 1867 the mortgagee was put into possession, and he received the rents and profits of the house until his death in 1873, when his son, the defendant, took possession.

In 1890 the plaintiff brought this suit for redemption, and on 24th February, 1891, it was referred to the Commissioner to take an account of the principal and interest due upon the mortgage and also of the rents and profits of the house received by the original mortgagee and the defendant.

The Commissioner, by his report dated 18th October, 1892, certified that there was on the 22nd August, 1892, a sum of Rs. 17,519-6-6 due by the plaintiff (mortgagor) to the defendant (mortgagee) in respect of principal and interest. This sum was ascertained as follows :—

	Rs.	a.	p.
Principal sum advanced	6,500	0	0
Interest due to 22nd August 1892	15,635	4	1
	22,135	4	1
Less rents received ...	4,615	13	7
Balance due ...	17,519	6	6

[228] The plaintiff filed exceptions to this report. He contended (inter alia) that the rule of damdupat was applicable, and that under this rule the defendant could not claim from him, as interest, a sum larger than the principal.

Vicaji, for the plaintiff, in support of the exceptions :—The defendant is a Hindu and is bound by Hindu law. Under the rule of damdupat he cannot claim from his debtor an amount of interest greater than the principal sum due to him—Narayan v. Satvaji (1); Ganpat v. Adarji (2). See Supreme Court Charter, cl. 29(3), and Letters Patent of High Court, 1865, cl. 19, which provide that the law of the defendant is to apply. The plaintiff must be presumed to have contracted with reference to this provision of law, and he is, therefore, entitled to the benefit it gives him. In using the word "defendant" the Legislature must have meant defendant, and it is difficult to believe that it was not aware that in a redemption suit it may be that the debtor (mortgagor) is suing the creditor (mortgagee). The Supreme Court Charter (1823) says that matters of contract are to be determined by "the laws and usages of the defendant." These words are quite clear and unambiguous, and the Court will be assuming legislative power if it qualifies or limits their plain and obvious meaning. The fact of a Hindu being a defendant seems to be the single point on which the decisions turn. In Nanchand v. Bapusaheb Rustambhai (4), the rule of damdupat was said not to operate "when the defendant is other than a Hindu." In Ganpat v. Adarji (2), the rule is expressly said to be applicable, because the defendant was a Hindu. There is nowhere any suggestion that, in order to make the rule applicable, the Hindu must not only be the defendant, but also the debtor. Shri Ganesh Dharnidhar Maharaj Dev v. Keshavrav Govind (5) was also cited.

Macpherson, for the defendant.—Here a Mahomedan debtor is claiming the benefit of a rule of Hindu law in order to escape [229] his liability to a Hindu creditor. The rule of damdupat does not apply to such a case. It applies only where both parties are Hindus—Dhondu v. Narayan (6). See also the judgment of Peacock, C. J., in Ramlal Mookerjee v. Haranchandra (7).

JUDGMENT.

STARLING, J.—The plaintiff in this case is a Mahomedan mortgagor who is suing his mortgagee, a Hindu, for redemption of the mortgaged premises. The suit in due course was referred to the Commissioner to ascertain how much was due by the plaintiff to the defendant. During that investigation the plaintiff asked to have the rule of damdupat applied, on the ground that the defendant is a Hindu. This the Commissioner refused to do, and reported accordingly. The plaintiff has excepted to the report, on the ground (inter alia) that the Commissioner was wrong in not applying that rule.

On the argument of the exception, Mr. Vicaji, for the plaintiff, cited cl. 29 of the Supreme Court Charter, which provides that "all matters of contract and dealing between party and party shall be determined. . . . where one of the parties shall be a Mahomedan or a Gentoo, by the laws and usages of the defendant;" and he argued that, as the rule of damdupat was a rule of Hindu law, and the defendant was a Hindu, that rule applied in this case. He was, however, obliged to admit that, if the Hindu had been suing the Mahomedan for sale or foreclosure, the rule would not apply, and it seems strange that the same account should be treated in different ways, according to whether the mortgagor or the mortgagee happens to be the plaintiff.

What, then, is the rule of damdupat? If I had been reading for the first time, without the aid of decisions, the Hindu texts cited in Dhondu v. Narayan (1), I should have formulated from them one of two propositions:—Either that no Hindu creditor receiving principal and interest at the same time from a Hindu debtor is entitled to receive an amount of interest larger than the principal; or else that a Hindu creditor is not entitled to receive from any debtor more interest than principal. The first proposition is good law. The second proposition would, I think, have [230] been accepted as good law by Couch, C. J., and Westropp, J., in Hakma Manji v. Ayab Haji (2), for there they remitted a case to the Small Cause Court for a new trial "to determine whether the rate of interest claimed does not exceed what the plaintiff is allowed to take by Hindu law." The defendant there was a Mahomedan, though a Memon, but the point was not argued on either side. This case has, however, I think, been overruled by that of Nanchand v. Bapusaheb Rustambhai (3), though it was not cited to the Court in the argument. In this case the Court held that the rule of damdupat was not applicable where the defendant was a Mahomedan.

The judgment on the point was very short, and it is, therefore, important to trace the case through its various stages. The District Judge held that the Hindu law forbad a creditor receiving more interest than principal, and that the plaintiff was not at liberty to abrogate the express provisions of the law, even when dealing with a Mahomedan. In the High Court it was argued, for the defendant, that the Hindu law puts an obligation on a Hindu creditor not to receive more interest than principal, but it was held that as "in this case the defendant is a Mahomedan, the Courts below were wrong in applying the Hindu rule of damdupat, which can only operate when the defendant is a Hindu," i.e., as I understand the whole case, when the debtor is a Hindu.

Consequently, after looking at other cases in which the rule of damdupat is discussed, I hold that the rule of damdupat only applies to cases where the debtor is a Hindu.

In the present case, the debtor is a Mahomedan, and as, in my opinion, the rule of damdupat, as interpreted by the Courts, does not apply to any case where the debtor is not a Hindu, there is no law applicable to the defendant in this case which renders it necessary to interfere with the report of the Commissioner as to the amount of interest legally claimable by the defendant.

[231] ORIGINAL CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Parsons.

BOMBAY, BARODA AND CENTRAL INDIA RAILWAY COMPANY (Plaintiffs) v. JACOB ELLAS SASSOON AND OTHERS (Defendants.)*

[12th September, 1893.]

Interpleader—Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882), ss. 470-473—Costs of plaintiffs—Claims by plaintiffs against goods in respect of which suit brought.

In May, 1893, one Sadanand Ramsarmall (defendant No. 4), a resident at Hissar in the Punjab, consigned 600 bags of rapeseed to one Khimji Kanji of Bombay and delivered them to the plaintiffs for carriage to Bombay. While the goods were in transit to Bombay, Sadanand the consignor ordered the plaintiffs to deliver them to his agent Ramgopal Fulchand, instead of to the consignee, and on the 18th May, Ramgopal requested delivery from the plaintiffs. Before the goods could be delivered, however, the firm of E. D. Sassoon & Co. (defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3) claimed them, alleging that they had been assigned to them by Khimji Kanji for valuable consideration. The plaintiffs thereupon filed this suit praying that the defendants should be required to interplead, and that they should be restrained from suing them (the plaintiffs) in respect of the said goods. The plaintiffs claimed to charge the goods with payment of freight, wharfage and demurrage and their costs of suit.

Held :—

(1) that the suit was properly instituted by the plaintiffs as an interpleader suit so as to entitle them to their costs ;

(2) that the fourth defendant was entitled to the goods, subject to the plaintiffs' charge for freight and costs ;

(3) that the plaintiffs' charge for wharfage and demurrage could not be allowed. The goods remained in the plaintiffs' possession not by reason of any neglect or default of the owner to take delivery of them, but by the act of the plaintiffs themselves, who kept and refused to deliver them for their own protection and benefit. All that they could presumably be entitled to, was a reasonable warehouse rent, which, however, they had not claimed.

INTERPLEADER suit. The plaint prayed for an injunction restraining the defendants and each of them from taking proceedings against the plaintiffs in respect of certain goods which had been delivered to them for carriage, and that the defendants should be directed to interplead together concerning their respective claims to the said goods, &c.

The first three defendants were partners in the firm of E. D. Sassoon & Co., which carried on business in Bombay. The fourth defendant was one Sadanand Ramsarmall, who resided [232] at Hissar in the Punjab and carried on business in Bombay by his munim.

* Suit No. 260 of 1893.

The plaint stated that in May, 1893, the fourth defendant (Sadanand) at Hissar, in the Punjab, consigned 600 bags of rapeseed to one Khimji Kanji at Bombay in three lots, and delivered the same to the plaintiffs for carriage to Bombay. The plaintiffs passed three railway receipts, in the usual form, to the consignor (Sadanand), dated, respectively, the 9th, 11th, and 12th May, 1893.

While the goods were in transit to Bombay the consignor (defendant No. 4, ordered the plaintiffs to deliver them to one Ramgopal Fulchand instead of to the consignee Khimji Kanji. The order was conveyed to the plaintiffs' traffic manager at Bombay by a telegraphic message dated the 15th May. On the 18th May, Ramgopal Fulchand requested delivery of the goods from the plaintiffs.

Before the goods could be delivered, the firm of E. D. Sassoon & Co. (defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3) claimed them, alleging that they had been assigned to them by Khimji Kanji for valuable consideration, and shortly afterwards the fourth defendant, the consignor (Sadanand), claimed them, alleging that Ramgopal Fulchand was his agent to receive them.

The following are the concluding paragraphs of the plaint:—

"6. The plaintiffs have given the usual directions for detaining the said rapeseed (whereon they will rely) and the same is now in the keeping of the plaintiffs, and demurrage and other charges are daily being incurred in respect thereof. The plaintiffs fear that a suit will be filed against them in respect of the said rapeseed.

"7. The plaintiff company is ignorant of the respective rights of the parties claiming the said goods.

"8. The plaintiff company has no interest in the goods so claimed as aforesaid otherwise than their due and proper charges for freight, demurrage, &c., and subject thereto is ready and willing to deliver the same to such person or persons as this Honourable Court shall direct.

"9. This suit is not brought by collusion with the defendants or any of them."

The plaint prayed (a) for an injunction restraining the defendants from suing the plaintiffs; (b) that the defendants should be required to interplead; (c) that upon delivering the [233] said goods to such person or persons as the Court should direct, subject to the plaintiffs' claim thereon for freight, demurrage and charges and the costs incurred by the plaintiffs in this suit, the plaintiffs should be discharged from all liability to the defendants, or any of them, in respect of the same; (d) that the said rapeseed should be directed to be sold by the plaintiffs, and the net proceeds thereof, less freight, demurrage, charges and costs, as afore said, be paid into Court to await the decision of this suit.

The fourth defendant (Sadanand Ramsarmall) was the only one who filed a written statement. He stated that he sold the said 600 bags of rapeseed (with other goods) to Khimji Kanji, but that Khimji having dishonoured the hundis drawn against the said goods while the said goods were in transit, he (Sadanand) had given notice to the plaintiffs not to deliver the goods to Khimji Kanji, but to deliver them to his (Sadanand's) agent, viz., Ramgopal Fulchand. He claimed the goods and denied that the firm of E. D. Sassoon & Co. had any title to them, and prayed for his costs either against the plaintiffs or the other defendants.

Before the trial came on, the goods had been sold, and the proceeds were lodged in Court subject to the decision of this suit.

The following issues were raised at the hearing :—

1. Whether the suit was properly instituted as an interpleader suit so as to entitle the plaintiffs to their costs ?

2. Whether the fourth defendant (Sadanand) was entitled to the proceeds of the sale of the 600 bags of rapeseed free of any charges on the part of the plaintiffs ?

3. Whether the fourth defendant was entitled to his costs from the plaintiffs or the other defendants, or both of them ?

4. Whether plaintiffs were entitled to recover any and what charges in respect of the said goods, and if so, whether from the first three defendants or the fourth defendant ?

Macpherson and Scott, for plaintiffs, argued that they were entitled to their costs and charges in respect of the carriage of the said goods. They referred to s. 470 of the Civil [234] Procedure Code (XIV of 1882); Martinius v. Heimuth (1); Mason v. Hamilton (2); Cotter v. Bank of England (3); Attenborough v. St. Katharine's Dock Company (4); Dadoba v. Krishna (5); Martin v. Lawrence (6). They claimed Rs. 1,672-5 for freight, and alleged a lien on the proceeds to that extent. They referred to the Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 170, and s. 55 of Act IX of 1890. They also claimed wharfage and demurrage amounting to Rs. 6,698 4.

Lang (Acting Advocate General), for defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 (E. D. Sassoon & Co.).—The cases cited for the plaintiffs do not apply. The Court is bound by the Code of Civil Procedure (XIV of 1882). Under ss. 470-473 a person filing an interpleader suit must be a mere stakeholder and must hand the property over unreservedly. See also the form 104 in sch. IV. The plaintiffs have kept the goods, and now make enormous charges against them, which amount to more than the value of the goods. The suit should be dismissed with costs.

Inverarity and Russell, for the fourth defendant.—This is not a proper interpleader suit. See paragraphs 6 and 8 of the plaint. Paragraph (a) of the plaint asks for personal relief—Mitchell v. Hayne (7); Bignold v. Audland (8). The plaintiffs have not complied with s. 472 of the Civil Procedure Code, and are, therefore, not entitled to any order. We asked for the goods and offered an indemnity. The value of the goods is Rs. 5,800. The plaintiffs' charges now amount to Rs. 7,770-9. The plaintiffs are entitled to charge for freight, but are not entitled to demurrage or wharfage, and we should be allowed to set off our costs against their charge for freight.

JUDGMENT.

PARSONS, J.—I think that, on the authorities, cited by the learned counsel for the plaintiffs, this is a properly constituted interpleader suit. In Mason v. Hamilton (2) the bill filed stated that the plaintiff had no interest in the goods except his lien for wharfage and warehouse rent, and Sir L. Shadwell, the Vice-Chancellor, said that the bill stated a plain case of interpleader. [235] The case of Mitchell v. Hayne (7) is discussed in Bignold v. Audland (8), and the result is said to be this: "Where a plaintiff represents not merely that he has a lien with respect to which two other persons have adverse rights, but that there is a further question to be litigated adversely between himself and one of them, that is not a case of interpleader." In Cotter v. Bank of England (1) it was held that the bank, who retained a lien on certain bullion in respect of freight and charges, had no interest in the subject-matter of the suit within the meaning of those words in Statute 1 and 2 William IV, c. 58. In Attenborough v. St. Katherine's Dock Co. (2) the defendants claimed no interest in the wines, the subject-matter of the suit, other than the usual dock rents and charges; Bramwell, L.J., said: "Defendants do not claim any interest in the subject-matter of the suit, for their alleged right of lien is not an interest in the wine," and it was held that the case fell within the Interpleader Act, and the defendants' costs and charges were made a first charge on the fund. The language of ss. 470 and 471 of the Code of Civil Procedure (XIV of 1882) is almost identical with that of Statute 1 and 2 William IV, c. 58, and the above rulings clearly apply. The personal relief asked for is nothing more than an injunction restraining the defendants from suing the plaintiffs, and that is contained in the form of plaint in an interpleader suit given in the form No. 104 of the 4th schedule to the Civil Procedure Code. I find the first issue in the affirmative.

Strictly speaking, in my opinion, so much of the second and fourth issues as relates to the amount of the charges has been improperly raised in this suit, in which the title only to the thing claimed has to be adjudicated. No doubt a lien can be declared for charges, but the amount of those charges, if disputed, ought, I think, to form the subject of a separate proceeding between the adjudicated owner and the person who seeks to make the goods liable. As, however, here the parties interested have gone to trial on those issues without an objection on the part of any of them, I will proceed to determine them.

The charge for freight comes to Rs. 1,072-5, and this is admitted to be correct and due. The plaintiffs, however, seek, further, to [236] charge the goods with the sum of Rs. 6,698-4 for wharfage and demurrage, and this charge is disputed. The rules of the said company allow of such a charge being made when goods are not taken delivery of by their owners within a certain time after notice of arrival; the rates charged being exceedingly high that they may act as a kind of penalty so as to ensure the speedy removal of goods. The present is not a case of that kind. The goods remained on the plaintiffs' premises, not by reason of any neglect or default of their owner to take delivery of them, but by the act of the plaintiffs themselves, who kept and refused to deliver them for their own protection and benefit. They did not even place them in the custody of the Court, as they could have done under the provisions of s. 472. All that they could possibly be entitled to, would be a reasonable warehouse rent for the time the goods remained with them, and I might have been able to have awarded them that had they claimed it, and given evidence in proof of the amount. They do not, however, do this, and, I think, the claim they have made is inadmissible and unproved.

I find on the second and fourth issues that the fourth defendant is entitled to the proceeds of the sale of the 600 bags, and that the plaintiffs are entitled to recover the freight claimed only from him.

I find on the third issue that the fourth defendant is entitled to his costs from the defendants Nos. 1 to 3, since it is their action that has caused the whole litigation.

APPLICATION in forma pauperis for probate.

One Dawubai, of the Nakva caste and a Christian by faith, died on the 10th June, 1892. By her will, dated 6th June, 1892, she appointed the petitioner sole executor.

At the time of her death, Dawubai was plaintiff in a suit (No. 407 of 1891) which she had filed in forma pauperis against certain persons to recover from them a sum of money, ornaments and two houses situate at Dharavi. In her will she directed her executor to prosecute this suit and recover this property, which she bequeathed upon certain trusts set forth in her will.

On the 23rd August the petitioner applied in forma pauperis to the High Court for probate of the said will. He stated the value of the assets to which the testatrix was entitled, but which, as above stated, were in dispute in suit No. 407 of 1891 to be under the value Rs. 9,075. He did not pay the usual stamp or probate duty, and prayed to obtain probate in forma pauperis.

JUDGMENT.

STARLING, J.—This is an application by one Haji Khan Hubib Khan, the executor appointed by the will of Dawubai, a native Christian, for leave to prosecute a petition for and to obtain probate of the said will in forma pauperis. I had on a previous occasion refused to accept such a petition, as no precedent was in existence for such a course being pursued, but in the present instance the matter was pressed upon me as being one of great hardship, as the deceased had during her life-time filed a suit to recover the property in question, and as she was a Christian that suit must now be dismissed unless the applicant could obtain probate of her will. I, therefore, allowed the petition to be interpreted and affirmed gratis, so that the matter might be set down as a pauper petition and the point at issue be fully discussed.

The first question is whether a petition for grant of probate falls under chap. XXVI of the Civil Procedure Code. It is not a suit in the ordinary acceptation of the term, though, if a caveat were entered, it would be changed into a suit; but I am of opinion that s. 647, which provides that the procedure for suits prescribed by the Civil Procedure Code "shall be followed, so far as it can be made applicable, in all proceedings in any Court of civil jurisdiction other than suits and appeals," makes the provisions of the Code applicable to all miscellaneous civil proceedings. Further, by ss. 238 and 261 of the Indian Succession Act (X of 1865) the procedure in granting probate is to be [239] regulated, except as is otherwise provided, by the Civil Procedure Code so far as the circumstances of the case will admit. Consequently, I see no reason why chap. XXVI should not be applicable to petitions for probate, if a proper case be made out, and if no other enactments than those before referred to stand in the way. Of course no proper case could be made out except where the executor was not in, and could not get, possession of the property of his testator so as to be able to pay the necessary fees; nor yet, I should think, where he himself had money wherewith he could take the necessary steps.

It was then argued by the Acting Advocate General that whatever the Court could do with regard to those fees which might be regarded strictly as fees payable to the Court, it could not make any order relieving the executor from payment of the duty which was payable to Government, and that the only thing to be done would be for the petitioner to petition Government to lend him the stamp necessary to be affixed to the probate, and he relied upon the terms of the Court Fees Act, 1870. The first remark to be made is that all the fees imposed under that Act are called "Court Fees." Among those fees are what are called institution fees, as well as fees leviable on the issue of probates. Section 410 of the Civil Procedure Code provides that when an application to sue in forma pauperis is granted, the plaintiff shall not be liable to any Court-fee (except process fees) in any proceeding connected with the suit. Under this section a pauper plaintiff is exempted from institution fees; consequently, it seems to me to be difficult to say that he cannot be also exempted (unless exemption be otherwise prohibited) from all the fees payable under the schedules to that Act. Looking at the sections of the Act applicable to the matter in hand, we find that s. 3 provides (inter alia) that, in the High Court, fees chargeable under No. 11 of the first schedule to the Act (relating to probates and letters of administration) shall be collected in manner hereinafter appearing, and s 25 provides that such fees shall be collected by stamps; therefore, as regards the High Court in its original civil jurisdiction, there is nothing to prohibit the exemption from stamp of probate to a pauper. Section 28, however, provides that no document which ought to bear a stamp shall be [240] of any validity unless and until it is properly stamped; and the question is whether, if a pauper executor got probate without its being stamped, it would be of any use to him. Turning to s. 6, there is a prohibition to certain Courts against receiving documents chargeable under the Act until they are stamped; among those documents are plaints; yet a plaint presented by a pauper can be received and filed without an institution fee stamp. Consequently, it is evident that the provisions of s. 410 of the Civil Procedure Code, so far set aside and control the provisions of the Court Fees Act, and I can see no reason why, if a probate were granted without payment of fees under s. 410, that section should not exempt it from being a "document which ought to bear a stamp," the fact of its having been so issued, of course, appearing on its face, and thus prevent the previous act of the Court in granting it without payment of stamp duty being rendered nugatory by s. 28 of the Court Fees Act. The Acting Advocate-General wanted to know how Government could recover the amount of the stamps due to them if probate was issued in forma pauperis. Section 411 provides that Court-fees in a pauper suit shall be a first charge upon the subject-matter of the suit, and that has been acted upon in Ganpat v. Collector of Kanara (1), Collector of Muradabad v. Muhammad (2) and Janki v. Collector of Allahabad (3). I have already held in Yeshwant Bhagwant v. Shankar Ramchandra (4) that in a testamentary proceeding the "subject-matter of the suit" is the property of which the executor is the legal owner under the will of the testator, and of which the probate by declaring him to be executor recognises him before the Court as legal owner. Consequently, I am of opinion that all the Court-fees due to Government for grant of a probate in forma pauperis will be a first charge upon the property covered by the probate, and in the case of immoveable property, which could not be transferred without the use of that document, such charge would undoubtedly continue in the hands of a purchaser who would have notice, from the probate itself, of the manner in which it was granted.

[241] Under these circumstances, being satisfied that the petitioner is a pauper, and that there is none of his testatrix's estate available to enable him to take out probate, I grant him leave to petition for and, if entitled thereto, to obtain probate in forma pauperis.

GOPAL PURSHOTAM (Original Plaintiff), Appellant v. BAIDIVALI (Original Defendant), *Respondent. [13th March, 1893.]

Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882), ss. 278 and 283—Decree—Execution—Attachment—Application by third party for removal of attachment—Order refusing to remove attachment—Omission by third party to bring subsequent suit to establish right to attached property—Subsequent withdrawal of attachment by attaching party—Effect of such withdrawal—Subsequent claim to property by the party who had failed to remove attachment.

The plaintiff was the assignee of a mortgage decree dated the 2nd May, 1885. In 1888 he attached the mortgaged property in execution of the decree, whereupon the defendant intervened and applied to have the attachment removed, on the ground that prior to the attachment she had purchased the land under a registered deed of sale dated the 23rd June, 1888. Her application was rejected on the 27th September, 1888. Subsequently the judgment-debtors applied and obtained the Court's permission to sell the land by private contract, and on the 1st November, 1888, the plaintiff purchased it and withdrew his application for execution on the 20th November, 1888. In 1889 the plaintiff brought this suit against the defendant to obtain the removal of certain portions of a culvert erected by her on the land. The defendant pleaded that she was the owner of the property, having purchased it on the 23rd June, 1888.

The Subordinate Judge passed a decree for the plaintiff, on the ground that though the plaintiff's sale-deed was not entitled to preference over the defendant's, still as she had taken no steps to establish her right to the property in a regular suit after her application for the removal of the plaintiff's attachment had been rejected, effect could not be given to her purchase. On appeal by the defendant the decree was reversed, and the plaintiff preferred a second appeal.

Held, confirming the appellate decree, that when the plaintiff withdrew his attachment on the 20th November, 1888, the parties were restored to the status quo ante. The object of the claim which was preferred by the defendant was, as contemplated by s. 278 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), to obtain the removal of the attachment, and when that attachment was removed by the judgment-creditor's own act, there was no longer an attachment or any [242] proceeding in execution on which the order could operate to the prejudice of the claimant, and, therefore, there was no necessity for her to bring a suit to set aside the order.

The defendant's title to the property having been acquired on the 23rd June, 1888, was superior to the plaintiff's, which was not acquired before November, 1888.

SECOND appeal from the decision of G. McCorkell, District Judge of Ahmedabad.

Two brothers named Jhalam Ratna and Maina Ratna were the owners of the land in dispute (Survey No. 61). They mortgaged it to one Lallu Gopal, who filed a suit against them on the mortgage and obtained a decree on the 2nd May, 1885. On the 4th May, 1885, this decree was assigned by Lallu Gopal to the plaintiff Gopal Purshotam, who in 1888 attached the mortgaged property in execution. The defendant Bai Divali intervened and applied for the removal of the attachment, alleging that on the 23rd June, 1888, before the property was attached, she had purchased it under a registered deed of sale. On the 27th September, 1888, defendant's application was rejected.

MARCH 13.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

18 B. 241.

Subsequently the judgment-debtors Jhalam and Maina applied to the Court for permission to sell the land by private contract, and their application being granted, the plaintiff on the 1st November, 1888, privately purchased the land and on the 20th November, 1888, withdrew his application for execution.

In 1889 the plaintiff brought the present suit against the defendant for an injunction requiring the defendant to remove certain portions of a culvert erected by her on the land in question and for damages.

The defendant pleaded (inter alia) that the suit was time-barred and that she was the owner of the property.

The Subordinate Judge allowed the claim for the removal of the culvert, holding that though the plaintiff purchased the property with full knowledge of the defendant's prior registered purchase, nevertheless the defendant was not protected by her purchase, as she had not established her right to the property by a regular suit after the rejection of her application in the attachment proceeding. The rest of the plaintiff's claim was disallowed.

[243] Both the parties appealed to the District Judge, who reversed the decree and rejected the plaintiff's claim on the following grounds :—

"It has been contended that because Bai Divali brought no suit within one year to set aside the order of the Subordinate Judge, she is now barred from setting up a claim to the land. I am of opinion that this is erroneous ; when the plaintiff withdrew his application on 20th November, 1888, he practically cancelled all the proceedings which had taken place in consequence of his application, and the parties returned to the status quo ante. If plaintiff had allowed his application to remain on the file for a year and then withdrawn it, the defendant meanwhile having done nothing, the plaintiff's plea would be good. But another point appears in favour of the defendant; the summary proceedings do not appear to extinguish the defendant's title, but only her right to possession (cf. Parashram v. Rakhma, I. L. R., 15 Bom., 299). If, then, my opinion on this point be not erroneous, it follows that the defendant's sale-deed must have priority over the plaintiff's, and the present suit must fail."

The plaintiff preferred a second appeal.

Goverdhanram M. Tripathi, for the appellant (plaintiff).

Chimanlal H. Setalvad, for the respondent (defendant).

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—We agree with the lower appeal Court that, when the plaintiff withdrew his attachment, the parties were restored to the status quo ante. The object of the claim which was preferred by the defendant was, as contemplated by s. 278, Civil Procedure Code, to obtain the removal of the attachment, and when that attachment was removed by the judgment-creditor's own act on 20th November, 1888, there was no longer an attachment or any other proceedings in execution on which the order could operate to the prejudice of the claimant and, therefore, no necessity for bringing a suit to set aside the order. This is apparently the broad view on which the Court proceeded in Ibrahimbhai v. Kabulabhai (1).

Under these circumstances, as s. 283 of the Civil Procedure Code does not operate as a bar to the present suit, and the [244] defendant's title to the property, which was acquired on 3rd June, 1888, is superior to the plaintiff's, which was not acquired before November, 1888, the plaintiff has failed to establish his right to an injunction, and his claim was, therefore, properly rejected.

A survey settlement officer decided in the year 1882 that certain lands situate at the khoti village of Tadil, in the Ratnagiri District, were dhara lands of S. and [245] another, but the entry in the survey register that they were dhara lands was not made till 1889.

In the meanwhile, F. and others, who were the khots of the village, made an application to the special survey officer to revise the decision of the settlement officer of the year 1882, and the special settlement officer having rejected this application in 1885, they brought the present suit in 1887 against S. and others for a declaration that the lands were their khoti.

The Judge dismissed the suit on the ground that the settlement officer's decision being final under ss. 20 and 21 of the Khoti Settlement Act (Bombay Act I of 1880), and it having not been set aside within one year from its date, the suit was time-barred under art. 14, sch. * Second Appeal, No. 595 of 1891.

† Sections 17, 20, 21, 22 and 37 of the Khoti Settlement Act (Bom. Act I of 1880):—

17. The other records prepared under the said section (that is, s 16) shall specify the nature and amount of rent payable to the khot by each privileged occupant according to the provisions of s. 33 of this Act, and any entry in any record duly made under this section shall be conclusive, and final evidence of the liability thereby established.

20. If it shall appear to the survey officer who frames the said register or other record that there exists any dispute as to any matter which he is bound to record, he may, either on the application of any of the disputant parties or of his own motion, investigate and determine such dispute and frame the said register or other record accordingly.

21. In any such matter the decision of the said survey officer, when not final, shall be binding upon all the parties affected thereby until reversed or modified by a final decree of a competent Court.

22. No suit shall lie against the said survey officer, or against Government, to set aside any such decision of a survey officer; but the record shall from time to time be amended by the said survey officer, or when the survey settlement is concluded, by the Collector, in accordance with any such decree as aforesaid which the parties may obtain inter se on an application accompanied by a certified copy of such decree, being duly made to the said survey officer, or to the Collector, for that purpose.

37. Existing survey settlements of the land revenue of any village to which this Act extends, made, approved and confirmed under the authority of the Governor in Council, shall be deemed to have been lawfully made, and, except as is hereinafter otherwise provided, shall continue in force for the terms for which they have been respectively guaranteed, subject to all the provisions of law which would be applicable thereto if this Act had not been passed, and anything in this Act which is inconsistent with any of the said provisions shall be deemed not to apply to such settlements.

APPEL-LATE CIVIL.

18 B. 244.

Held, reversing the decree, that the claim was not time-barred. Under ss. 20 and 21 of the Khoti Settlement Act, it is the "decision" on the rival claims of the parties which is open to reversal by the Civil Court and not the consequences of that decision, which as provided by s. 22 are left to the Collector himself to undo or modify in accordance with the decision of the Civil Court.

Held, further, that s. 21 does not contemplate any "order" being made by the survey officer between the parties, and even if framing the register be regarded as an "act" of the survey officer, s. 22 provides for its being amended by the Collector himself, in accordance with the decision of the Civil Court.

Held, further, that although the defendants might have paid only the assessment before 1878-79, their adverse possession of the lands as dhara did not begin to run against the plaintiffs until 1878-79, when such a claim was actively advanced by the defendants. The plaintiffs' cause of action arose in 1882, when the survey officer determined that the lands were dhara, and the present suit, which was brought within six years to reverse that decision, was, therefore, in time.

THIS was a second appeal from the decision of R. S. Tipnis, Acting Assistant Judge of Ratnagiri.

Suit for a declaration that the lands in dispute were plaintiffs' khoti lands.

The lands in dispute were situate in the village of Tadil, in the Dapoli Taluka in the Ratnagiri District, and were held by the ancestors of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 on khoti tenure prior to the revenue survey of 1867-68. The plaintiffs were the khots of the village. At the time of the revenue survey settlement of 1867-68 some of the lands in dispute were entered in the revenue register as the plaintiffs' khoti and the rest as dhara of defendants Nos. 1 and 2. Complaints were lodged against the settlement of 1867-68 as being in many cases erroneous, and in 1874 the Government appointed a commission to settle the disputes [246] that had arisen among the khots. On the report of this commission in 1876, Government passed a resolution directing that the survey settlement should be revised. In the year 1878-79 a revised settlement was introduced in the village of Tadil, and in this revised survey all the lands in dispute were entered as dhara of defendants Nos. 1 and 2. Thereupon the plaintiffs in 1880 complained to the survey authorities that the lands should have been entered as their khoti, and applied that the records should be altered. The Special Assistant Collector inquired into the matter, and on the 19th June, 1882, reported to the settlement officer and Collector that the lands in dispute were the dhara of the defendants Nos. 1 and 2, and the settlement officer sanctioned their being entered as such in the register on the 23rd June, 1882, but the actual correction was not made till the year 1889. In the meanwhile, a special settlement officer was appointed for the settlement work, and to him one of the plaintiffs applied for a review of the order of the 23rd June, 1882, and on the 30th June, 1885, the special settlement officer decided that he saw no reason to interfere with that order.

On the 19th September, 1887, the plaintiffs brought the present suit praying for a declaration that the lands in dispute were their khoti lands. The date of the plaintiffs' cause of action was stated to be the 30th June, 1885, viz., the date of the order of the special settlement officer.

The defendants Sajnak and Ramnak (defendants Nos. 1 and 2) contended that all the fields in dispute were their ancestral dhara lands and alleged that they had sold two of them to defendants Nos. 12 and 13.

Defendants Nos. 3, 6 and 8, who were co-sharers of the plaintiffs, admitted the claim, and stated that they were willing to be joined as co-plaintiffs.

Defendants Nos. 12 and 13, Faki Hasan and Faki Abdul Gafur, set up their purchase of two fields from defendants Nos. 1 and 2.

The Subordinate Judge made the declaration sought for by the plaintiffs with respect only to four out of the eighteen survey [247] numbers in dispute, and rejected the claim with respect to the remaining fields as time-barred.

Against the decree of the Subordinate Judge defendants Nos. 1 and 2 appealed, and the plaintiffs presented cross-objections under s. 561 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882). The Acting Assistant Judge rejected the claim in toto, on the ground that as the suit was not brought within one year after the final settlement of 1882, it was barred under art. 14, sch. II of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877). He was, however, of opinion that art. 144, sch. II of the Limitation Act was not applicable, and that the decision of 1882 was liable to be rectified by a competent Civil Court.

The plaintiffs preferred a second appeal.

Ganesh Krishna Deshmukh, for the appellants (plaintiffs).—The Judge was wrong in holding our claim barred under art. 14, sch. II of the Limitation Act. The article is not applicable to the present case, because it relates to an "act" or "order" of a Government officer, and not to a "decision" passed by him, as in the present case.

When the revised settlement was introduced in the year 1878-79, the Khoti Settlement Act had not been passed; therefore the Act cannot be held to apply to that settlement; consequently s. 21 of the Act has no application. Assuming that ss. 20 and 21 do apply to the decision of 1882, these sections contemplate judicial inquiry, but the officer who passed that decision made no such inquiry; therefore the decision can have no binding effect. The survey settlement proceedings were not finally closed till the year 1889, when the alteration with respect to the lands in dispute was made in the survey register. The proceedings under the revised survey commenced in 1878-79 and lasted till 1889. Our present suit was filed in 1887, that is, before the proceedings were finally closed. Therefore there had been no complete settlement made under the Khoti Act before the filing of the suit. Section 21 of the Khoti Act cannot apply to the present case, because the conditions precedent to the operation of the section were not satisfied.

[248] Under s. 20 of the Act the Settlement Officer had no authority to rectify the Survey register which had been prepared, prior to the passing of the Act, in the year 1878-79 under a Government resolution of the year 1876.

The Judge was wrong in rejecting our claim in toto. The Subordinate Judge had awarded our claim with respect to four fields, which included the field purchased by defendants Nos. 12 and 13. They had not appealed to the Judge against the Subordinate Judge's decree; therefore the decree could not be reversed as against them.

Gangaram B. Rele, for respondents Nos. 1 and 2 (Mahar defendants).

Vasudev G. Bhandarkar, for respondents Nos. 3 and 4 (defendants Nos. 12 and 13).—The appeal in the lower Court covered all the fields mentioned in the plaint. Therefore the Judge was right in passing a decree as to all of them.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

18 B. 244.

With respect to the point of limitation, we contend that the present suit is governed by art. 14, sch. II of the Limitation Act XV of 1877. It is true that the article does not contain the term "decision;" but the word "act" or "order" includes the term "decision." A decision of a Government officer is an act on his part. We further support the decree of the lower Court on the point of adverse possession. The Subordinate Judge distinctly found that the relationship between the parties was that of landlord and tenant, and that we ceased to pay rent since 1868,—that is, more than twelve years prior to the institution of the suit. The claim is, therefore, clearly barred by our adverse possession of those fields at least, for which no declaration was made by the Subordinate Judge in appellants' favour.

The appellants seek a mere declaration in the present suit without claiming consequential relief. Such a suit cannot be maintained—s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877).

Ganesh Krishna Deshmukh, in reply.—The Judge has found that the possession of the respondents could not be adverse to us. In connection with the contention that a suit for a mere [249] declaration will not lie, see Magantal Purushottam v. Govindlal Nagindas (1).

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—The District Court has decided against the plaintiffs' claim to have the lands in question declared to be khoti, on the ground that the Settlement Officer's decision in 1882, that they were dhara, was final under ss. 20 and 21 of the Khoti Act I of 1880 (Bombay), not having been set aside within a year from the date of the survey officer's decision as required by art. 14 of the Statute of Limitation. An objection has been taken by the appellants that the Settlement Officer had no power, under s. 20 of Act I of 1880 (Bombay), to rectify the register as previously made in 1879 after the settlement was introduced into the village of Tadil in pursuance of the resolution of Government in 1876. We think, however, that the lower appeal Court was right in holding that there had not been such a complete settlement before the passing of Act I of 1880 as must be deemed to have been confirmed by s. 37 of the Act. There is no evidence to show that the register as framed in 1878-79 was treated by the Government as a final settlement, whilst it is plain, from the applications subsequently made to the Collector by the parties themselves, that neither of them considered the question as to their rights as finally settled by the Revenue authorities.

Passing, then, to the consideration of ss. 20 and 21 of the Khoti Act I of 1880 (Bombay), s. 20 states the course to be pursued by the survey officer "in investigating and determining disputes" arising in framing the register. Section 21 further provides that the "decision" of the survey officer when not final (apparently referring to the finality mentioned in s. 17 with regard to entries made under that section) shall "be binding on all the parties affected thereby until reversed or modified by a final decree of a Civil Court." It is, therefore, the "decision" on the rival claims of the parties which is open to reversal by the Civil Court, and not the consequences of that decision, which, as provided by s 22, are left to the Collector himself to undo or modify in accordance with the decision [250] of the Civil Court. It is further to be remarked that the section does not contemplate any "order" being made by the survey officer between the parties; and even if "the framing the register" be regarded as an "act" of the survey officer, the section provides, as before mentioned, for its being amended by the Collector himself, in accordance with the decision of the Civil Court. Lastly, in the present case it is to be observed that the "act" was not done until 1889 nearly two years after the filing of the suit. For these reasons, we are of opinion that the claim is not affected by the art. 14 of the Statute of Limitation.

As to the contention that the defendant had acquired a title by adverse possession to hold the lands as dhara, we agree with the lower Court that although the defendant may, as a fact, have paid only the assessment before 1878-79, adverse possession would not begin to run against the plaintiff until 1878-79 when such a claim was actively advanced by the defendant, and no title by adverse possession was, therefore, acquired by the defendant when the present suit was instituted in 1887. A cause of action, however, arose in 1882 when the survey officer determined that the lands were dhara, and the present suit, which is brought within six years to reverse that decision, is, therefore, in our opinion, in time. We must, therefore, reverse the decree of the Court below and send back the case for a decision on the merits. Costs to abide the result.

Decree reversed and case sent back.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Sir Charles Sargent, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Telang.

RAMBHAT (Original Plaintiff), Appellant v. BABABHAT AND OTHERS (Original Defendants), *Respondents. [22nd March, 1893.]

Landlord and tenant—Non-payment of rent by tenant to landlord—Acquiescence of landlord—Effect of acquiescence—Subsequent suit by landlord for possession—Practice—Finding of fact not accepted in second appeal—Inam land—Sub-alienee—Wrongful surrender by the village inamdar to Government—Khalsat.

The plaintiff, a sub-alienee from an inamdar of certain inam, leased it to D, prior to the year 1858. In 1860 the land was wrongfully surrendered by the inamdars [251] of the village to Government as lapsed old service inam and was made khalsat. In 1863, the plaintiff protested against this being done, and the Collector referred him to a civil suit against the inamdars. From the year 1863 the plaintiff received no rent from D., or after D's death from his heirs, who paid the assessment to Government. In 1889, the plaintiff brought the present suit against the representatives of D, and the village inamdars to recover possession. The District Judge dismissed the suit, on the ground that the plaintiff must be held to have acquiesced in the loss of the land, and by his conduct since 1863 must be taken to have designedly abandoned all his interest in the land, and that his suit was barred.

Held, that the plaintiff did not acquiesce in the surrender by the inamdar in 1860, to Government, as he distinctly protested against it in 1863, and that as to his conduct since 1863 nothing had taken place to deprive him of such legal rights as he possessed against the tenant D, in 1863, if they were not barred by the Statute of Limitation; and as to limitation, held that as the District Judge had decided the point under the influence of the view taken by him as to the plaintiff's conduct, the case should be remanded for a fresh finding on that point.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

18 B. 250.

Held, further, that the mere circumstance that D., after the land was treated as khalsat, paid assessment to Government, and had not paid rent to plaintiff, could not affect the relationship of landlord and tenant which admittedly existed between them in 1863.

THIS was a second appeal from the decision of Dr. A. D. Pollen, District Judge of Belgaum.

Suit to recover certain land situate in the village of Kalol which was held in inam by defendant No. 6 and his kinsmen.

The plaintiff alleged that the land in question was originally given in inam by the Maharaja of Kolhapur to one Baburao Katre, and that Baburao had granted it as sub-inam to his (plaintiff's) father early in the present century. The plaintiff stated that in 1858 he had mortgaged it to Dadambhat, the father of defendants Nos. 1 and 3 and grandfather of defendant No. 2, who had previously been his tenant, but that the mortgage-debt was now satisfied out of the profits of the land.

Defendants Nos. 1 to 4 denied the plaintiff's statement. They denied that he was the owner of the land, and they denied the tenancy and mortgage alleged by him. They alleged that defendant No. 6 was the village khatedar of the land as well as one of the inamdars of the village, and that they held the land as his tenants. They further pleaded that the land was made khalsa in 1863 by [252] the British Government, and that Dadambhat had subsequently got a permanent lease from defendant No. 6 under two kowls dated September and December, 1864. They further pleaded that the suit was barred by limitation, alleging that there had been a dispute in 1863 about the lands between the inamdar and the plaintiff, and that in that year the plaintiff was referred to a Civil Court by the Collector.

Defendant No. 5 admitted the claim.

Defendant No. 6 answered that land was never held as sub-inam by the plaintiff's family and was never in their possession; that he was the owner, and that he had made it over to Baburao Katre for a time as a remuneration for services rendered by him; that the tenancy and mortgage alleged by the plaintiff were false, and that the claim was time-barred.

The Subordinate Judge (Rao Saheb R. G. Bhadbhade) held that the claim was not time-barred; that the plaintiff was the owner of the land; that the mortgage to, and the tenancy of Dadambhat alleged by, the plaintiff were proved, and that nothing was due by the plaintiff to defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 under the mortgage. He, therefore, awarded possession to the plaintiff.

On appeal by the defendants the District Judge found that the land had been given in inam by the Kolhapur State to Katre from whom the plaintiff acquired it as sub-alienee; that the plaintiff had leased it to Dadambhat in or about the year 1859; that in the year 1860 there was a dispute between the inamdars and Government with respect to lands usurped by the inamdars, and that the land in question was wrongly surrendered by them to Government as lapsed old service inam and was made khalsat; that the plaintiff in the year 1863 protested against the action of the inamdars and Government, and was referred by the Collector to a civil suit against the inamdars; that he made no attempt to recover his inam rights or his occupancy of the land, which was burdened with a heavy assessment; that from the year 1863 the plaintiff had ceased to receive rent from Dadambhat, whose family had continued to hold the land as occupancy tenants on payment of assessment under Government and not under plaintiff. The District Judge held that "under these [253] circumstances he (plaintiff) must be held to have acquiesced in the loss of the land and to have relinquished his rights" and found the last issue—which was, "is his (plaintiff's) claim to recover the land now in time?"—in the negative, for the reasons stated as follows in his judgment :—

"At the same time I do not think that the plaintiff is entitled to succeed. I think that by his conduct from and after 1863 he abandoned all his interest in, and connection with, the land as completely and effectually as if he had relinquished it by a formal document. In 1861, or thereabout, the village inamdars transferred the land to Government, and it was changed from inam into ordinary rayatawar land against his will. The khata was entered in the village inamdar's name. An assessment was imposed on it payable to Government in excess of the amount which he formerly received as rent. It is true that his former tenants remained in possession of the land; but they did so by virtue of their paying the assessment to Government and not by virtue of their continuing to be his tenants. He made no attempt to recover his inam rights, or to recover the occupancy burdened as it was then by a heavy assessment. He received no rent and no acknowledgment of his title from the occupancy tenants. All this can have no other meaning than that he designedly relinquished the land after his unsuccessful petition to the Collector in 1863. He did not sue within twelve years and thus he lost his rights. Dadambhat's family became the real survey occupants, though defendant No. 6 became the nominal khatedar. Such is the view which I feel constrained to take of the real facts."

The Judge, therefore, reversed the Subordinate Judge's decree and rejected the plaintiff's claim.

The plaintiff preferred a second appeal.

Vasudeo Gopal Bhandarkar (with N. G. Chandavarkar), for the appellant (plaintiff).—The Judge found that the representatives of Dadambhat—respondents Nos. 1 to 3—were the occupancy tenants under Government since 1863, and not under the plaintiff. But this was not their allegation. What they said was that they were the tenants of defendant No. 6, who is the inamdar of the [254] village. The Judge, therefore, made a case for the defendants which they themselves never set up.

[SARGENT, C.J.—But the Judge finds that the plaintiff's claim was barred, because he relinquished his right as landlord and ceased to recover rent from 1863.]

The point of relinquishment was never urged before the Court, nor was any issue framed on it. The question to be considered is, whether mere silence for twenty-six years amounts, in law, to a relinquishment, and we submit that it does not. Further, what was surrendered to Government was the inam and not the occupancy right. The surrender by the inamdar of his inam right cannot operate to the plaintiff's prejudice —Gangabai v. Kalapa (1). Defendants Nos. 1 to 3 instead of paying rent to us paid assessment to Government the amount of which is greater than that of the rent. The mere levy of full assessment by Government, or the mutation of names in the revenue records, cannot alter the relation between us and the respondents.

Macpherson (with Manekshah J. Taleyarkhan), for respondents Nos. 1 to 3 (defendants Nos. 1 to 3).—The plaintiff's case was that the Government called upon the inamdars to give up the lands usurped by them, and that the inamdars surrendered to Government certain lands including the one in dispute. Defendant No. 6 is the registered occupant of the land, and we attorned to him in the year 1863. The fact that we have been in possession for more than twelve years as the tenants of either the Government or the registered occupant with the appellant's knowledge, is a sufficient answer to his claim.

Mahadeo Chimnaji Apte, for defendant No. 6 (the inamdar).—The lands were registered in our name in 1863 when our right as holder was recognised by Government. The plaintiff had knowledge of the recognition of our right by Government, and yet he took no steps to get his title established within the statutory period. Defendants Nos. 1 to 3 are permanent tenants under us. We repudiated the plaintiff's ownership in 1863, and since then our possession was adverse to him.

[255] Vasudeo Gopal Bhandarkar in reply.—The utmost that can be said against the plaintiff is that he remained quiescent and did nothing to establish his right from the year 1863 until the institution of the present suit. But by merely doing nothing, one does not surrender anything.

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C.J.—The District Judge has found that the land in question had been originally obtained by Katre in inam from the Kolhapur State, and that plaintiff had acquired it as a sub-alienee from Katre and leased it to Dadambhat in 1859; that in 1860 the land was wrongly surrendered by the inamdars of the village to the Government as lapsed old service inam and made khalsat; that in 1863 the plaintiff protested against this being done; an order was made by the Collector referring him to a civil suit against the village inamdars; that the plaintiff ceased from 1863 to receive his rent from Dadambhat, whose family has ever since paid the assessment, which was more than the rent to Government. The District Judge has held that under these circumstances the plaintiff must be held to have "acquiesced in the loss of the land and relinquished his rights;" that by his conduct from and after 1863 he must be taken to have designedly abandoned all his interest in it "as effectually as if he had relinquished it by a formal document."

We are unable to agree in this view of the case, which, indeed, would appear to have been adopted by the District Judge with reluctance. There are no circumstances in the case which point to acquiescence by the plaintiff in the surrender by defendant No. 6 in 1860, to the Government, as he distinctly protested against it in 1863, and as to his conduct since 1863 nothing has taken place to deprive him of such legal rights as he possessed against Dadambhat in 1863, if they are not barred by the statute.

As the Judge of the lower appeal Court has clearly decided the third issue, which raises this question, under the influence of the view taken by him of the plaintiff's conduct, we must send back the case for a fresh finding on that issue, and we think it right to observe, for the guidance of the Court, that the mere circumstance of Dadambhat and his family having, after the land was treated as khalsat, paid the assessment to Government, [256] and not having paid any rent to the plaintiff, cannot affect the relationship of landlord and tenant which admittedly existed between them in 1863.

The finding to be transmitted to this Court within two months. The parties to be allowed to give fresh evidence.

Case sent back.

Landlord and tenant—Possession—Adverse possession—Lease—Expiry of lease—Continued possession after expiration of lease—Permissive possession—Tenant's heirs continuing in possession after the expiry of tenancy—Limitation.

In 1840 the land in dispute was leased to R. for life. R. died in or about 1871, and after R.'s death, his heirs (the defendants) continued in possession without obtaining a fresh lease or paying any rent to the landlord. In 1888 the landlord sued to eject the defendants. The defence was that the suit was barred by limitation.

Held, that the suit was not barred. After R.'s death the defendants, though not in possession as tenants, were not trespassers. Their possession was permissive, and not adverse until they expressly set up a title of ownership in the property.

SECOND appeal from the decision of J. FitzMaurice, Acting District Judge of Ratnagiri, in appeal No. 298 of 1889.

The plaintiff sued to eject the defendants from the land in dispute.

It appeared that in 1840 one Jankibai, who was then in management of the plaintiff's ancestral property, leased the land to Ramchandra, the adoptive father of defendant No. 1, for life at a yearly rent of Rs. 5. Ramchandra held the property till his death, which occurred in 1871 or thereabouts. On Ramchandra's death, his widow Ramabai and her adopted son defendant No. 1 continued in possession. But they did not obtain a fresh lease, nor pay any rent after Ramchandra's death.

In 1888 the present action of ejectment was brought.

[257] The defendant No. 1 pleaded (inter alia) that since Ramchandra's death his possession had been adverse to the plaintiff, and that the suit was, therefore, time-barred. The other defendants did not contest the suit.

The Subordinate Judge was of opinion that defendant's father having come in as a tenant, the tenancy must be presumed to have continued even after his death, and that the mere non-payment of rent did not destroy the tenancy. He, therefore, held that the suit was not barred by limitation, and decreed the plaintiff's claim.

On appeal, the District Judge held that the possession of defendant No. 1 must, on the authority of Tatia v. Sadashiv (1) and Rango Lall v. Abdool Guffoor (2), be deemed to have been that of a tenant and not adverse to plaintiff, and that as there was no reliable evidence as to the character of defendant No. 1's tenancy, it must be presumed that it was a tenancy from year to year. He, therefore, awarded possession of the land in suit.

Defendant No. 1 preferred a second appeal to the High Court.

Ganesh Krishna Deshmukh, for appellant (defendant).—The suit is barred. The lease granted to Ramchandra expired on his death. His heirs remained in possession, but never attorned to the plaintiff, nor paid any rent to him. Under these circumstances art. 139 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) applies. According to that article, the plaintiff ought to have sued within twelve years from the determination of the lease, that is, within twelve years after Ramchandra's death. Ramchandra died more than twenty years before suit. The cases relied on by the lower Court do not apply. They are cases of tenants holding over after the determination of the tenancy. The present is not such a case. Moreover, if the lower Court's finding be correct, that the defendant is a yearly tenant, then he is entitled to a legal notice to quit. No notice has been given, and the suit must fail.

Manekshah Jehangirshah, for respondent.—The point as to the necessity of a notice to quit was not raised in either of the [258] Courts below, and cannot be raised for the first time here. The defendant's case from the commencement was that he was the owner, and not merely a tenant, of the land in dispute. That is a clear repudiation of the landlord's title. The defendant is not, therefore, entitled to a notice to quit. Defendant's father was our tenant. After his death his family continued in possession on the same terms as before, namely as tenants. Their possession was, therefore, not adverse. Mere non-payment of rent does not make the tenants' possession adverse—Tatia v. Sadashiv (1).

JUDGMENT.

TELANG, J.—The original tenant in this case was Ramchandra, and, according to the finding of the District Judge, his tenancy expired with his death "some nineteen or twenty years ago." This finding has not been impeached in argument before us. The District Judge also appears to hold that the defendants were living in the demised premises with the deceased Ramchandra during his lifetime and have continued to live in those premises after Ramchandra's death. And the question is, what is the character of the defendant's possession after the expiry of Ramchandra's tenancy? The District Judge holds that he was not in adverse possession, and relies on the case of Rungo Lall v. Abdool Guffoor (2). That case is not, however, conclusive on the question which arises here. It was there held, no doubt, that the relation of landlord and tenant once created between certain parties continues as between them and their "representatives in title until it is proved to have ceased," and that the defendant was bound to show that it has ceased by some affirmative proof. But here such proof is given, and the District Judge himself has found that the tenancy ceased on Ramchandra's death. The case of Tatia v. Sadashiv (1), which the Judge also relies on, is distinguishable, as it was merely the ordinary case of a tenant holding over after the expiry of his tenancy. That always has been treated as not a case of adverse possession, but it has no bearing on the nature of the possession of one who never was a tenant at all.

(1) 7 B. 40.

(2) 4 C. 314.

Although, however, the authorities relied on by the District Judge do not really support the proposition laid down by him, we [259] think that proposition to be correct. In Hellier v. Sillcox(1) the tenant for life was in possession of certain premises, and the defendant lived with her in those premises until the death of the tenant for life, and continued to do so after her death without coming to any arrangement with the reversionary heir, the plaintiff. The plaintiff having subsequently brought an action for use and occupation, it was argued that the action should have been in ejectment and not for use and occupation. Lord Campbell, however, with the concurrence of the rest of the Court of Queen's Bench, said, after time taken to consider, that the action for use and occupation would lie, "as the defendant occupied the cottage by the plaintiff's permission. The plaintiff was the reversioner, and the defendant, who had married the daughter of the tenant for life, lived in the cottage with her and remained in possession of it after her death. Therefore he was not a trespasser, and he set up no adverse title to the premises." We think we should follow that decision and hold that in this case the District Judge's finding is correct in so far as it decides that after the death of Ramchandra the possession of defendant was not adverse, but permissive only until she expressly set up a title of ownership in the property.

It has, however, been argued for the defendant, that the plaintiff is not entitled to succeed in this case, on the ground of want of legal notice to quit. No doubt it has been held that this point may be taken in second appeal though not raised before—Dodhu v. Madhavrao (2). But in this case there is no tenancy, and no question of notice to quit, therefore, arises. Besides, there has been here a distinct repudiation of the plaintiff's title by the defendant (see Ex. 13), and under such circumstances the latter is not entitled to any notice to quit even if the relation between him and the plaintiff was taken to be that of landlord and tenant. We must, therefore, confirm the decree of the District Court with costs.

Decree confirmed.

The plaintiff obtained a decree against one Ishvar, and in execution attached the property in dispute. The defendants intervened, and obtained an order for the removal of the attachment on the 11th August, 1888. On the 13th August, 1889, the plaintiff instituted this suit for a declaration that the property belonged to his judgment-debtor (Ishvar) and as such was liable to attachment and sale. The defendants pleaded that they had been in possession of the property for more than twelve years, prior to the institution of the suit, and that the suit was, therefore, barred. The Judge rejected the plaintiff's claim.

Held, reversing the decree, that the suit being brought under s. 283 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) it was a suit to set aside the order of 11th August, 1888, directing the removal of the attachment, and should be determined by ascertaining the rights of the parties at the date of that order. As the defendants had not at that date acquired a title to the property by adverse possession for twelve years, the plaintiff was entitled to a decree.

A suit brought under s. 283 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) is a suit to set aside an order within the meaning of art. 11 of sch. II of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877).

SECOND appeal from the decision of M. P. Khareghat, Assistant Judge, Full Power, at Broach.

Suit for a declaration that certain property was liable to be attached and sold in execution of a decree.

The plaintiff obtained a decree against one Ishvar Jeykrishna, and in execution attached the property in question. On the 11th August, 1888, on the application of the defendants the attachment was ordered to be set aside.

On the 13th August, 1889, the plaintiff filed this suit praying for a declaration that the property in question belonged to his [261] judgment-debtor Ishvar, and as such was liable to attachment and sale in execution of his decree.

The defendants pleaded that the property had been in their possession for more than twelve years before suit, and that the plaintiff's claim was, therefore, barred.

The Subordinate Judge held that the suit was not barred, and made the declaration sought for.

On appeal by the defendants the Assistant Judge reversed the decree. He held that the defendants had been in possession since June, 1877, and that as this suit was not filed until August, 1889, the plaintiff's claim was barred.

The plaintiff filed a second appeal.

Gokuldas Kahandas Parekh, for the appellant (plaintiff) :—Unless the defendants had acquired a title by adverse possession for twelve years at the time the plaintiff attached the property, his claim in this suit is not barred. The object of this suit is to show that he was then entitled to attach the property ; therefore, the date of the attachment is the date at which the defendants' title is important. If the plaintiff proves that the defendants had then no title, he must succeed. If the gets a decree, his attachment is restored. For the purpose of limitation the possession of the defendants cannot be adverse to the plaintiff subsequently to the application for attachment. The present suit must be determined by taking into consideration the rights of the parties at the time of the attachment. According to the finding of the lower Court, the defendants had not, as against the plaintiff, acquired title by adverse possession at that time. Our suit is, therefore, not barred by limitation.

Manekshah J. Taleyarkhan, for the respondents (defendants):—As found by the Judge, our adverse possession began in or about the month of June 1877. The present suit was filed in August, 1889. We have, therefore, acquired a complete title by twelve years' adverse possession.

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C.J.—In this case the plaintiff seeks to have it declared that the property in dispute which he had attached belonged to his judgment-debtor Ishvar Jeykrishna, and was [262] liable to the attachment. The attachment had been removed by order of the Court on defendants' application on 11th August, 1888, and the present suit was filed on 13th August, 1889.

The Court below held that the property belonged to Ishvar, but that the suit was time-barred, as it found that defendants' father came into possession during the rainy season of 1877, and that plaintiff had not shown that Ishvar had been in possession later than June, 1877, and, therefore, not within twelve years before the date of this suit.

Mr. Gokuldas has contended before us that the object of the present suit, which was brought under s. 283 of the Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882), is to determine the rights of the parties at the time of the attachment and not when the suit was instituted, and that the real question was whether the defendants had been in possession within twelve years preceding the date of the order of 11th August, 1888.

The object and effect of a suit to establish the right as contemplated by the corresponding s. 246 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1859 has undergone considerable discussion by the several High Courts. The result of the decisions is to show that the suit has uniformly been regarded by the High Courts of this Presidency and of Madras and Allahabad as a suit to "set aside" the order made with respect to the claim to attached property, and on this ground cl. 15 of the Limitation Act IX of 1871 was held to apply in the case of orders made under the Civil Procedure Code of 1859—Settiappan v. Sarat Singh (1), Krishnaji Vithal v. Bhaskar Rangnath (2) and Badri Prasad v. Muhammad Yusuf (3). The soundness of those decisions was indeed disputed in Luchmi Narain Singh v. Assrup Koer (4) and Bessessur Bhugut v. Murli Sahu (5), but apparently only on the ground that cl. 15 of Act IX of 1871 and art. 11 of the Limitation Act XV of 1877 did not apply to orders made under art. 246 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1859. However, in Gend Lall Tewari v. Denonath Ram Tewari (6) it was expressly held by Sir R. Garth, C. J, [263] and Beverley, J., that a suit to establish his right under s. 246 was not necessarily a suit to set aside an order which must be brought within a year from the date of the order; and indeed Sir R. Garth, C. J., expressed an opinion that it would not be so even under the corresponding ss. 278 to 282 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882. Notwithstanding this opinion of the late learned Chief Justice of Bengal we see no sufficient reason for doubting the soundness of the above rulings of the other High Courts which have been regarded as settled law for so many years, and must, therefore, as their necessary consequence, hold that Mr. Gokuldas was right in his contention that as the suit is one to set aside the order of August, 1888, it must be determined by the rights of the parties at that time. As the defendants had not, according to the finding of the Court below, at the date of the order, acquired a title by adverse possession for twelve years, we must reverse the decree of the Court below and declare that the property in question was the property of Ishvar Jeykrishna and was liable to the plaintiff's attachment in execution of the plaintiff's decree. Plaintiff to have his costs throughout.

Attorney and client—Professional communication—Privilege—Extent of the privilege—Solicitor bound to give the name of the client on whose behalf the privilege is claimed, but not the nature of his employment—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 126(1)—Evidence,

The law relating to professional communications between a solicitor and a client is the same in India as in England.

[264] It is not every communication made by a client to an attorney that is privileged from disclosure. The privilege extends only to communications made to him confidentially, and with a view to obtaining professional advice.

Where a solicitor claims privilege under s. 126 of the Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872), he is bound to disclose the name of his client, on whose behalf he claims the privilege. The mere fact that the client's name had been communicated to him in the course and for the purpose of his employment as solicitor by another client, affords no excuse, unless it was communicated to him confidentially, on the express understanding that it was not to be disclosed.

But a solicitor is not at liberty, without his client's express consent, to disclose the nature of his professional employment. Section 126 of the Indian Evidence Act protects from publicity not merely the details of the business, but also its general purport, unless it be known aliunde that such business falls within proviso I or II to the section.

At an interview between a solicitor and a client, the solicitor took down a certain statement made by a person named A. B. who was in his client's company, and whose name was communicated to him in the course and for the purpose of his professional employment. A. B. was afterwards tried for defamation. At the trial, the solicitor was called as a witness for the prosecution, and was asked (a) the name of his client, (b) the name of the person who accompanied the client and made a statement to him, and (c) the matter in which his client employed him. The solicitor declined to answer all the three questions on the ground of privilege.

Held, that (a) the solicitor was bound to disclose the name of the client.

One Mohansing Dhansing was tried on a charge of defamation in the Court of the Chief Presidency Magistrate.

[265] It was alleged by the prosecution that on the 18th June, 1891, the accused, in company with two other persons, went to the office of Messrs. Craigie, Lynch and Owen, solicitors of the High Court, and that the accused had there made a statement to Mr. Craigie (partner in the above firm) which had been taken down in writing, and which the prosecution were desirous of having produced and put in evidence. Mr. Craigie was, accordingly, called as a witness, but claiming professional privilege he declined to say whether the accused had visited him on that day in question, alleging that he had learned the name of his visitor in the course of and for the purpose of his professional employment.

Mr. Craigie's evidence was as follows :—

"I am a solicitor and attorney of the High Court, Bombay. On the 18th day of June, 1891, the last witness Mr. Kapadia came to me at my office. Cursetji Devitre came with him and another person. I decline to answer the question, who the other person was, on the ground of privilege.

Q.—Who was the third person, who came?

A.—I believe, it was the third person who communicated the name.

Q.—What was the name?

A.—I decline to answer the question.

Q.—Who was your client?

A.—The only knowledge which I have of the name of my client is derived from a communication made to me in the course of, and for the purpose of my employment as an attorney."

On a subsequent day Mr. Craigie was re-called and re-sworn and examined by the Court.

Q.—Who was your client?

A.—I beg respectfully to decline to answer that question.

Q.—In what matter was he your client?

A.—I beg respectfully to decline to answer the question, as it is impossible for me to do so without disclosing a communication made to me in the course and for the purpose of my professional employment.

[266] Q.—Did one Mohansing Dhansing make a statement to you?

A.—I am totally unable to say whether a man of the name of Mohansing Dhansing made a statement to me; my only knowledge of the name of the person who made a statement to me is derived from a communication made to me in the course and for the purpose of my professional employment.

Q.—Did any person make a statement to you on the 18th of June, 1891, between 1 and 2 o'clock in the day?

A.—A person made a statement to me on the 18th of June, 1891. Whether it was at the time stated in the question, I can't say.

Q.—Who were present at that occasion?

A.—Mr. Kapadia, Mr. Devitre and the person who made the statement.

Q.—Who brought the person who made that statement to your office?

A.—I don't know who brought that person to the office; they all three came in together, so far as I recollect.

Q.—Was the statement taken down in writing?

A.—Yes.

Q.—By whom?

A.—By me.

* * * * * *

The Magistrate overruled Mr. Craigie's objections, but as he still refused to answer the questions on the ground of privilege, the Magistrate made the following reference to the High Court:—

"Mr. Adair Craigie, a solicitor of the High Court, on the 1st and 15th of March instant, was called as a witness on behalf of the complainant and duly sworn. A question arose as to his privilege as a solicitor under s. 126 of the Evidence Act to answer certain questions. I stated what I considered the law as to the right to put certain questions. I said s. 126 of that Act forbids the disclosure of (1) any communication made to a solicitor in the course and for the purpose of his employment; (2) the contents or condition of any document with which the solicitor has become acquainted in the course and for the purpose of such employment; that it was the Court and not the solicitor (witness) who had to decide whether the disclosure by the latter of any matter was or was not within the veto of the section, and in order to enable the Court to come to a decision the examination of the solicitor (witness) was permissible and necessary; that those questions I thought should be directed to the following points. Did the communication or the acquaintance [268] with the contents or condition of the document, as the case might be, come to the solicitor's knowledge in the course and for the purpose (it must be both in the course and for the purpose) of his professional employment? I referred to the cases of the Queen v. Cox and Railton (1); Bursill v. Tanner (2); Crawcour v. Salter (3).

3 "I then put, amongst others, the following questions to Mr. Craigie:—Who was your client? In what matter was he your client? Did the person making the statement to you give his name as Mohansing Dhansing? By whom were you paid for your professional services in taking down that statement?

4. "Mr. Craigie declined to answer those questions, on the ground that the answers would involve a disclosure of communications made to him in the course and for the purpose of his professional employment. I decided that he was not entitled to claim the privilege, under s. 126, of refusing to answer those questions, and that he was bound to give the name of his client, to what matter the employment had reference, and the name of any party making the statement to him.

5. "The question, referred to the High Court for opinion, is whether Mr. Craigie was bound or not to give the name of his client; the matter of the employment and the name of the person making any statement to him; and whether, having refused to answer such questions, he was in any way sheltered, on the ground of privilege under s. 126 of the Evidence Act, from answering relevant and admissible questions put to him in the course of his examination as a witness."

The reference was argued before Candy and Fulton, JJ.

Craigie:—The first question referred to this Court is whether I was bound to give the name of my client, on whose behalf I claimed the privilege. I submit, I was not bound to disclose my client's name. Crawcour v. Salter (1) and Queen v. Cox and Railton (2) are not in point. In Bursill v. Tanner (3) it is no doubt laid down that a solicitor, who claims privilege, is bound to state the name of his client, on whose behalf he claims the privilege. And that has been the rule ever since the case of Parkhurst [269] v. Lowten (4). But it is a rule of practice under the English law, and not under the Indian law. It does not follow that, because the rule has been observed for some time, it is a just or a proper rule. Many rules of practice have been followed for a much longer period, and yet have been at last set aside as unjust. The mere fact that the rule relating to a solicitor's privilege has been followed in England for over seventy-five years, is immaterial. The English rule is not binding on this Court, unless it is based on reasonable grounds. It is clear that great injustice may sometimes be done to a client if a solicitor is compelled to disclose his client's name. Suppose a woman was ill-treated by her husband and she went to a solicitor to consult him as to what her remedies were. If the solicitor was afterwards called upon to disclose her name, and relate the interview, the consequences to the wife might be serious. It may be no doubt that to conceal a client's name may cause difficulty and inconvenience. On the other hand, however, the interest of one man should not be sacrificed simply for the purpose of advancing the interest of another. A solicitor is an officer of the Court, and is entitled to credit. If he states that an interview with him related strictly to professional business, it should be treated as strictly confidential, and the solicitor should not be compelled to disclose any part of the interview. Suppose a client A comes to me and consults me as his legal adviser. Suppose he is accompanied by another man B. In the course of my interview with A, B's name is disclosed and disclosed simply for A's business. After A's business is over, B comes to consult me on business relating to his own affairs. I submit that under such circumstances, B's name would be privileged, because it was communicated to me in connection with A's business. If I were afterwards called as a witness, and examined with reference to my interview with B, I would be justified in saying that B's name was known to me during the course and for the purpose of my professional employment on behalf of A, and that, therefore, B's name would not be disclosed. Of course, if a further question were put to me on whose behalf I claimed the privilege, I would be bound to give A's name. The facts in the present case are analogous to those [270] in the hypothetical case I have just put to the Court. I was asked to give the name of the person who had made the statement to me, and I refused to disclose his name. I was then asked the name of my client. I refused to give my client's name, on the ground that the name was communicated to me in the course and for the purpose of my professional employment by another client. If I had been asked that client's name, I would have been bound to disclose it. But that question was not put to me. The first and third questions stand on the same footing. As regards the second question, I submit that if a solicitor were to state the nature of the business on which his client consulted him, the most valuable part of the privilege would be lost. Section 126 of the Evidence Act prevents a solicitor from disclosing the matter of his employment.

Jardine, contra :—When a solicitor is in the witness-box, he is in the same position as an ordinary witness, and he must, therefore, answer every relevant question put to him, unless he can make out a clear case that he is prevented from answering such a question. A solicitor has no privilege at all. He can only claim it on behalf of his client. He is, therefore, bound to give the name of the client on whose behalf he claims the privilege. Until the client's name is disclosed, how can you say that the client does or does not object to the solicitor's disclosing certain facts ? To establish the privilege, the solicitor must mention the name of his client, and the purpose of his employment.

[FULTON, J.—Is there any authority to show that he must state the purpose of his employment also ?]

Jardine.—I do not think there is any ; but the words of s. 126 of the Evidence Act are to the effect that the solicitor must state the purpose of his employment in order to establish privilege. It should not be left to the solicitor to determine whether he should answer certain questions or not. The authorities cited by the Magistrate in his reference show that the disclosure of the client's name is not a matter of professional communication, and that, unless the name of the client is disclosed, no privilege can be claimed.

JUDGMENT.

[271] CANDY, J.—The reference by the Chief Presidency Magistrate is thus put by him : " Whether Mr. Craigie was bound or not to give the name of his client, the matter of the employment, and the name of any person making any statement to him ; and whether having refused to answer such questions he was in any way sheltered on the ground of privilege under s. 126 of the Evidence Act, from answering any relevant and admissible questions put to him in the course of his examination as a witness."

Mr. Craigie appeared in person before us to support his objections to answer the questions put to him by the Magistrate, and he contended that the opinions of Judges in England, however eminent, on the question of privilege were not binding on this Court, and had no application to the law in India regarding the question. Mr. Craigie, however, did not show in what respect the law in India on this point differed from the law in England.

The law in India is contained in s. 126 of the Evidence Act, and with one exception appears to be the same as the law in England, which has been established by many decisions through a long course of years. The one exception relates to the substitution of "illegal purpose" for "criminal purpose" in the first portion of the proviso to s. 126; and, as Mr. Field says in his Law of Evidence in British India, this "carries the principle enunciated in the proviso somewhat further than what can be said to be the established law in England, but is in conformity with the expressed opinion of several able Judges." It is unnecessary to consider this point further, for the Magistrate in making the reference has not alluded to the proviso to s. 126. He has then apparently asked this Court to give an opinion on the question referred solely as regards Mr. Craigie's contention that he is prevented by the body of s. 126 from answering the question put to him.

That the law in India on this point is practically the same as in England, and that in interpreting s. 126 of the Evidence Act this Court may rightly refer to English cases, is shown by the judgments of Westropp, C.J., and Sargent, J., in the case of Memon Haji Harun v. Moulvi Abdul Karim (1) in which [272] Chief Justice Sir M. Westropp said: "Communications to be protected by that section (126 of the Evidence Act) must, we think, be confidential." The words contained in it are indeed "any communication, &c.," but the word "disclose" shows, and common sense seems to demand, that the privileged communication must be confidential or private. Sargent, J., said: "The use of the word 'disclose' in s. 126 of the Evidence Act shows that the communications to be privileged must be of a confidential nature between a solicitor and his client." Both Judges in the course of their judgments quoted English cases.

This was exactly the principle followed in England in Ex parte Campbell; in re Cathcart (2). In that case the solicitor (writer to the signet) refused to disclose the place of residence of his client, because he said it came to his knowledge in his professional capacity and in consequence of the professional employment in which he was engaged on his behalf, and in no other way. Justice James, L.J., said: "That is not sufficient, according to my view of the law, to protect the solicitor from answering. What a solicitor is privileged from disclosing is that which is communicated to him 'sub sigillo confessionis'—that is to say, some fact which the client communicates to the solicitor for the purpose of obtaining the solicitor's professional advice and assistance: the principle being that such communications ought to be privileged, because otherwise a man would be deterred from fully disclosing his case, so as to obtain proper professional aid in a matter in which he is likely to be thrown into litigation. But a solicitor's knowledge of his client's residence, even though he knows it simply in consequence of the professional business in which he has been acting for him, is not on that ground alone a matter of confidence, so as to be in the nature of a privileged or confidential communication. The solicitor may know it because the client may say, "I have got a lease to execute—you must send it to me there and I will execute it," or because he may have received letters, dated from such a place, telling him where he may see [273] him for the purpose of making a communication. The client's place of residence in such case is a mere collateral fact, which the solicitor knows without anything like professional confidence and, therefore, the mere statement "The place of residence of my client came to my knowledge in my professional capacity, and only in consequence of my employment as his solicitor," is not to my mind nearly enough to warrant the solicitor in refusing to answer the question as to where his client is residing. If, indeed, the gentleman's residence had been concealed; if he was in hiding for some reason or other, and the solicitor had said: "I only know my client's residence because he has communicated it to me confidentially, as his solicitor, for the purpose of being advised by me, and he has not communicated it to the rest of the world," then the client's residence would have been a matter of professional confidence; but the mere statement by the solicitor that he knows the residence only in consequence of his professional employment, is not sufficient."

So here Mr. Craigie refused to state the name of his client on a certain occasion on the 18th June, 1891, because it came to his knowledge in his professional capacity, and in the course and for the purpose of his professional employment and in no other way. That is not sufficient. Mr. Craigie does not say, nor is it asserted that he could say, "I only know my client's name because he communicated it to me confidentially as his solicitor, for the purpose of being advised by me, and he has not communicated it to the rest of the world." Therefore his ground of objection fails.

The same principle was followed in 1885 in the case of Bursill v. Tanner (1), in which judgment having been signed in an action against a married woman, an enquiry was directed to be held as to whether she was possessed of a separate estate. A solicitor being called as a witness by the judgment-creditor under a subpœna to give evidence on such enquiry and produce documents, stated that there was a settlement executed upon the defendant's marriage, and that he knew who the trustees of the settlement were, and that his firm acted as their solicitors, [274] but he refused to state the names and addresses of the trustees, or to produce the settlement or give any information as to its contents on the ground of his privilege as a solicitor. Lord Esher, Master of the Rolls, said: "I agree with the opinion expressed by Lord Justice James in Ex parte Campbell; in re Cathcart (2), that the fact who the clients were, was not the subject of a professional confidence. The client does not consult the solicitor with a view to obtaining his professional advice as to whether he shall be his solicitor or not." Lord Justice Cotton said: "It is not everything that solicitors learn in the course of their dealings with clients that is privileged from disclosures. This matter was much discussed in the case of Lyell v. Kennedy (3). The privilege extends only to confidential communications. In my opinion, the names of the trustees did not constitute such a communication. The mere fact who the trustees are, cannot be said to be a matter communicated to the solicitor confidentially for the purpose of obtaining his professional advice, or, at any rate, it is highly improbable that it should be so. There is also another ground for compelling the disclosure of their names. The solicitor claims this privilege as that of his clients. He must, then, state the names of the persons for whom he claims the privilege. On both these grounds I think he was bound to answer the question and to give the names and addresses of the trustees."

On both these grounds, then, Mr. Craigie is bound to give the name of his client. We understood Mr. Craigie in the course of his argument before this Court to assert that he refused to state to the Magistrate the name of the persen who was his client when Mr. Kapadia and Mr. Devitre and another person came to him to his office on the 18th June, 1891, because the name of that person had been communicated to him in the course and for the purposes of his employment as attorney by another client on a previous occasion, and that he would be willing, should the ruling in the case of Bursill v. Tanner(1) be held to apply in India, to state the name of the person who was his client on the previous occasion. The principles indicated above would still apply. Supposing Mr. Craigie gives, as he is willing to do, the name B as the person [275] who consulted him professionally on the previous occasion, and that in the course and for the purpose of his employment as B's attorney A's name was communicated to him, then the simple question would be, Did that constitute a confidential communication? Ordinarily it would not be so, it would be a mere collateral fact which Mr. Craigie would know without anything like professional confidence. But if B said: "This gentleman's name A has been concealed, and he and I wish it to remain concealed, I communicate it to you confidentially for the purpose of your advising me, but it must not be communicated to the rest of the world," then no doubt Mr. Craigie would not be allowed without B's express consent to disclose A's name in connection with his employment as B's attorney. But that is not the case here. Mr. Craigie is being examined in regard to his employment by A as A's attorney. Before he can refuse to give the name of his client he must be able to say: "That client communicated his name to me confidentially for the purposes of being advised by me, and he has not communicated it to the rest of the world; or he must be able to say, "A for the purposes of being advised by me told me, that his name, which had been confidentially communicated to me by or on behalf of B in the course and for the purpose of my employment as B's attorney, must still be treated as confidential communication for the purpose of my employment as his (A's) attorney, not having been communicated to the rest of the world, and, therefore, it was not a mere collateral fact which I knew without anything like professional confidence." I do not understand that Mr. Craigie asserts that such was the case, and it is highly improbable that it should be. His contention is that every communication made by a client to an attorney must be privileged, and that contention is unsound. The hypothetical instances suggested by Mr. Craigie afford no support to his contention. The fact that a client falsely charged with assault may prove an alibi by calling his attorney, is no argument for holding that an attorney cannot without his client's express consent state his client's name. The attorney comes to know that his client is at one place and not another at a certain time by the circumstance of his being the client's attorney, but "of which fact any other man, if there would [276] have been equally conversant" (per Lord Brougham in the case of Greenough v. Gaskell (2).)

The second portion of the question referred by the Magistrate is whether or not Mr. Craigie was bound to give the matter of his employment. As I understand the Magistrate's reference, the answer to that portion of the question should be, I think, in the negative. The Magistrate apparently thinks that if a solicitor claims privilege for a client, the Court is entitled to demand the nature of the solicitor's employment, and the solicitor is bound in every case, without asking his client, to disclose the nature of the employment whatever it may have been. That such is not the law may be seen by a reference to the case of the Queen v. Cox and Railton(1). There the solicitor was asked the purpose for which his clients had consulted him. The answer to that would have disclosed the confidential communication which had passed between solicitor and clients. It was not then contended that in any case the solicitor was bound to state the nature of his employment by his clents ; but it was contended that in that particular case the rule of law did not protect the communications from disclosure, because they had been made in furtherance of a criminal purpose; in other words, if the case had occurred in India, the proviso to s. 126, Indian Evidence Act, would have been relied on as compelling the disclosure, and the fact that the solicitor may have been an innocent instrument, would make no difference. It was strongly urged in argument in the Queen v. Cox and Railton (1) that, speaking practically, the admission of any such exception to the privilege of legal advisers in that it is not to extend to communications made in furtherance of any criminal or fraudulent purpose, would generally diminish the value of that privilege. The privilege must, it was argued, be violated in order to ascertain whether it exists. The secret must be told in order to see whether it ought to be kept. The answer to that given by the full Court of ten Judges was that in each particular case the Court must determine upon the facts actually given in evidence or proposed to be given in evidence whenever it seemed probable that the client consulted the solicitor for a criminal or fraudulent purpose. In that particular [277] case the facts proved made it probable that the visit to the solicitor really was intended for a criminal purpose, and, therefore, it was held that the Court had been right in questioning the solicitor as to the nature of his employment.

It has been necessary to refer to the above case of the Queen v. Cox and Railton (1) at some length, as it shows clearly the circumstances under which a solicitor would be bound to answer the question as to the nature of his employment. But it appears in the present case that the Magistrate, though quoting Queen v. Cox and Railton, did not hold that the facts brought out in evidence before him made the proviso to s. 126 applicable. On the contrary, in his referring letter he did not once quote that provision, but confined himself to the body of the section. Looking at the case, then, apart from the proviso to s. 126, it is obvious that, when the solicitor had given the name of his client it would not be necessary to ask the solicitor the nature of his employment. If the employment was in its nature public and not private, there would be no necessity to ask the solicitor to disclose it. For instance, if a man asked his solicitor to defend him as he had been committed to the Criminal Sessions on a charge of forgery, or to file a plaint for him in the Civil Court, those facts would not partake of the nature of confidential communication. They would be public and known to all. On the other hand, in the majority of cases to disclose the nature of his employment would be for the solicitor to tell the very essence of the confidential communication made to him. And that is forbidden, unless it comes within the proviso of s. 126 of the Evidence Act.

The third portion of the question as put to us seems rather vague. It is difficult to say whether Mr. Craigie is bound to give the name of the

APRIL 4.
CRIMINAL REFERENCE.

persons making any statement to him. If this portion of the question refers to the third person who (Mr. Craigie says) accompanied Messrs. Kapadia and Devitre at the interview in his office on the 18th June, 1891, and who Mr. Craigie says made a statement to him, then the same principle as indicated above must be applied. Mr. Craigie would identify this third person if he could; he is willing to say that the man [278] came to his office and that he (Mr. Craigie) acting as attorney for his client took down in writing the man's statement, but he is unwilling to state the name given to him as the man's name, because he says it came to his knowledge in the course and for the purpose of his professional employment. The answer to that, apart from relevance or any other point, is that, unless Mr. Craigie can depose that he was told the name in confidence with a view to its not being disclosed, he must state the name so far as privilege is concerned. If there was no secrecy about the man's name, there was no privilege. As Baron Parke said in Dwyer v. Collins (1), "the privilege does not extend to matters of craft which the attorney knows by any other means than confidential communications with his client, though if he had not been employed as attorney, he probably would not have known them."

I am not sure whether I correctly understand the fourth and last part of the question referred by the Magistrate. If Mr. Craigie's refusal to answer any question is not justified, then he is bound to answer it. A person relying upon the privilege is undoubtedly bound to bring himself clearly and distinctly within it, as per Lord Cottenham in Desborough v. Rawlins. His refusal, whether justified or not, would not entitle him to claim the shelter of s. 126 of the Evidence Act in refusing to answer any other relevant or admissible question, if that shelter did not exist. The application of s. 126 must depend upon the facts of the case and the form of the question.

FULTON, J.—On the first question put by the Magistrate, I think our answer must be that, as Mr. Craigie claims privilege on behalf of his client, he must answer the question "who was your client?" by naming him. The cases of Parkhurst v. Lowton (2) and Bursill v. Tanner (3) show that when a solicitor claims the privilege, he must state the name of the client, on whose behalf he claims it. There appears to be no doubt that such is the law in England, and equally little that the law in India is the same. The case of Parkhurst v. Lowton (2) and the more recent case of Ex parte Campbell; in re Cathcart (4) were within the cognizance of the Legislature, and the fact that it was intended to [279] make the law on this point the same in India as in England appears from the identity of language used in s. 126 of the Indian Evidence Act with that employed by Mr. Pitt Taylor in dealing with the subject. The passage from Taylor on Evidence to which I refer will be found in s. 832 (ed. 1864) and is as follows:—"The rule is now well settled that when a barrister, solicitor, or attorney is professionally employed by a client, all communications which pass between them in the course and for the purpose of the employment are so far privileged that the legal adviser, whether he be called as a witness, or be made a defendant in equity on a bill of discovery being filed against him, cannot be permitted to disclose them." The similarity between the words in italics and the corresponding words in s. 126 is apparent.

Mr. Craigie indeed contended that we were not bound by English authorities: but holding, as I do, that it was the intention of the Legislature to adopt the English practice, I think we must look to the English decisions, of which Bursill v. Tanner is the most recent, to ascertain what that practice is. In the course of argument it was suggested that the question "who was Mr. Craigie's client?" was really irrelevant to the issue before the Magistrate, and that, therefore, Mr. Craigie was not bound to answer it: but I do not take this view. The question (though probably otherwise irrelevant) became relevant on Mr. Craigie's refusal to answer other questions to enable the Magistrate to decide whether those questions ought to be answered or not, for after such an objection has been raised it becomes, I think, obligatory on the Magistrate to ascertain whether the claim to privilege that has been advanced is valid, and for this purpose to ascertain the name of the client. If Mr. Craigie on behalf of his client withdraws the objection, he need not of course disclose his name unless it is otherwise relevant. Mr. Craigie in this Court explained that his objection to give the name of the client in the business transacted at the interview of the 18th June, 1891, whom for convenience we may call A, was because it was disclosed to him in a communication made to him in the course and for the purpose of professional employment by another client who may be called B; that he did not know A's name aliunde; and that, therefore, he could not [280] disclose it without breach of confidence towards B. In my opinion, this objection cannot be sustained. The name borne by A, and under which he employed Mr. Craigie as a solicitor, is a fact now within Mr. Craigie's knowledge and cannot be called a communication. Doubtless (as he says) he learnt it in the course of B's business, but he is not asked how he learnt it, or by whom the knowledge was communicated to him, or anything connected with B's business. All he is asked is what his client's name is, and the answer to this is not in any way affected by the manner in which he got to know that name. My answer, then, to the first question would be that Mr. Craigie must disclose the name of the client on whose behalf he has claimed privilege.

Turning to the second question, I am of opinion that Mr. Craigie is not at liberty, without his client's express consent, to disclose the matter of the employment. From one case (Beckwith v. Benner (1),) it seems at first sight that an attorney may be compelled to divulge the character in which his client employed him, but in an American case (Chirac v. Reinicker(2)) the opposite view has been upheld. An examination of Beckwith v. Benner leads me to doubt whether the decision of Gurney, B., can be relied on as an authority for holding that a solicitor may disclose the matter of his employment, inasmuch as the order seems to have been based on the fact that the answer might be inferred as a necessary consequence on certain circumstances peculiar to that particular case; and it appears to me it would be impossible so to hold without infringing the privilege and frustrating the object of s. 126. The judgment of Mr. Justice Story in Chirac v. Reinicker will be found in point as showing that, though the fact of professional employment must be disclosed, the nature of the business cannot be revealed. It may be argued that, unless we are told the matter of the employment, we cannot judge whether the communication was made in the course and for the purpose of such employment, but, as was urged in argument in the case of the Queen v. Cox and Railton (3), we cannot require the privilege to be violated in order to see whether it exists. It was [281] suggested that a mere statement of the matter of the employment without going into details would not be a violation of professional confidence, but in some cases a vague statement of the matter would do more harm to the client than a complete disclosure of the details. A merchant going to consult his solicitor about a mortgage might find his credit affected by a general statement, that his business was to effect a mortgage on his property, whereas the bad impression might be entirely removed if the details of some family settlement, for which the mortgage was required, were made known; but it would be rather unreasonable that he should be required to explain his private family affairs, because his solicitor had been compelled to state generally the matter in which he was employed. Such, however, does not seem to be the law contained in s. 126, which, I think, protects from publicity not merely the details of the business, but also its general purport, unless it be shown aliunde that such business, or the communications made in respect of it, fall within proviso (1) or (2).

So far there seems no special difficulty in answering the questions that have been referred to us, but when we come to the third question, the case is different. We are asked, in the 5th paragraph of the Magistrate's letter, whether Mr. Craigie is bound or not to give the name of the person making any statement to him. The question thus put is not very precise, but to ascertain exactly what is intended we must look to the deposition. The undermentioned questions were put and answered as follows:— "Q.—Did one Mohansing Dhansing make a statement to you? A.—I am totally unable to say whether a man of the name of Mohansing Dhansing made a statement to me. My only knowledge of the name of the person who made a statement to me is derived from a communication made to me in the course and for the purpose of my professional employment. Q.—Did any person make a statement to you on the 18th June, 1891, between 1 and 2 P.M.? A.—A person made a statement to me on the 18th June, 1891. Whether it was at the hour stated in the question I cannot say. Q.—Did the person making the statement give his name as Mohansing Dhansing? A.—I respectfully decline to answer the question for the same reason. Q.—[282] On whose behalf did you take down the statement? A.—On behalf of my client." The question, then, which Mr. Craigie declined to answer was "Did the person making the statement give his name as Mohansing Dhansing?" and I understand that we are now asked to determine whether he was bound to answer it or not.

The accused in Court was Mohansing Dhansing, and the point at issue was whether he had made a certain statement. Whether on such an issue, the question whether the man who made the statement had given the name of Mohansing Dhansing was relevant to show that the accused was that man it is not necessary to determine, as the matter has not been referred to us, and no argument was addressed to us on the subject. But assuming that it was relevant, I should say that s. 126 of the Evidence Act would not debar Mr. Craigie from answering it, unless he were prepared to swear that the name was told to him by the client, or by some one on behalf of the client, as a secret in confidence. As pointed out in Memon Haji Harun Mahomed v. Moulvi Abdul Karim, &c. (1), although the words used in s. 126 are "any communication," the use of the word "disclose" shows, and common sense, as remarked by

CRIMINAL REFERENCE.

Westropp, C.J., seems to demand that the privileged communication must be confidential or private. Now, the fact that a particular person bears a particular name is not a confidential matter, except in very peculiar circumstances. It is a fact which is known to all that person's acquaintances, and is not usually a secret. If it could be argued that the fact that a particular person had made a statement was privileged, his name doubtless would be equally privileged; but the language of s. 126 does not apply to such a fact which cannot be called a communication, and no authority has been shown us to support the opinion that such a fact is privileged. Consequently, unless the name were made the subject of special confidence, and it were stipulated by or on behalf of the client that it was not to be disclosed, there seems nothing in s. 126, as interpreted in the Bombay case above noted, to protect the name from disclosure. Under these circumstances, I think our answer to the [283] third question should be that, unless Mr. Craigie swears that the name was told him confidentially as a secret by or on behalf of his client, he must state what name was told him, provided such statement is otherwise relevant.

The fourth question hardly arises now that the first question has been answered; but if for any reason the name of the client is not disclosed, no privilege can be claimed under s. 126, and all relevant and admissible questions put to Mr. Craigie in the course of his examination as a witness must be answered.

TRIBHOVANDAS JEKISANDAS (Original Plaintiff), Appellant v. KRISHNARAM KUBERRAM AND OTHERS (Original Defendants), *Respondents. [6th April, 1893.]

Bhag—Bhagdari Act (Bombay) V of 1862, s. 3—Mortgage—Alienation of a portion of bhag—Deed— Property comprised in deed — Construction — General words— Particulars of property stated in deed—Leading description—Falsa demonstratio —Vendor and purchaser.

A mortgage-deed of certain bhagdari lands stated that "all the properties appertaining to the entire bhag" were thereby mortgaged to the plaintiff. The bhag comprised (inter alia) four gabhans (building-sites). But the clause which set forth the particulars of the property mortgaged thereby, specified only two gabhans, one only of which belonged to the bhag and the other did not. The deed then proceeded:—"According to these particulars, lands, houses and gabhans, barnyards, wells, tanks, padars and pasture lands also, together with whatsoever may appertain to the bhag—all the properties appertaining to the whole bhag have been mortgaged and delivered into your possession . . . . . There is no other property appertaining to the said bhag of which mention is not made here."

Held, that the particulars were "the leading description," and the supplementary description of them as constituting the entire bhag should be regarded as "falsa demonstratio."

Held, also, that the mortgage, so far as it included property belonging to the bhag, was void under the 3rd section of the Bhagdari Act (Bombay) Act V of 1862 (1), but was valid as to property not comprised in the bhag.

[284] SECOND appeal from the decision of G. Jacob, Assistant Judge, F. P., of Surat, at Broach.

Suit to recover money due on a mortgage.

The plaintiff sued to recover Rs. 1,699 alleged to be due on a mortgage. He alleged that by a mortgage-deed dated the 1st May, 1880, defendants Nos. 1 and 2 mortgaged to him their entire bhag, together with other land situate at the village of Vadadla, a bhagdari village in the Broach Taluka. The mortgage-deed contained the following clauses :—

"On account hereof (i.e.) as aivej (security) we have mortgaged to you all the undermentioned properties in our possession and enjoyment appertaining to the whole bhag namely, the Sarkari bhag land situate within the sim of mauje Vadadla * * which stands in the khata of ourselves and our deceased brother Keshav Makan, and the houses and gabhans (building-sites) appertaining to the said bhag, and we have delivered the same into your possession. Particulars are as follows :—

The defendants resisted the claim on the ground (inter alia) that the plaintiff's mortgage-deed was invalid under the Bhagdari Act (Bombay

Any alienation, assignment, mortgage, charge or incumbrance, contrary to the provisions of this section, shall be null and void ; and it shall be lawful for the Collector or other chief revenue-officer of the district, whenever he shall, upon due inquiry, find that any person or persons is or are in possession of any portion of any bhag or share of any homestead, building-site (gabhan) or premises appurtenant or appendant to such bhag or share in any bhagdari or narwadari village other than a recognized sub-division of such bhag or share in violation of any of the provisions of this section, summarily to remove him or them from such possession, and to restore the possession to the person, or persons whom the Collector shall deem to be entitled thereto ;

Act) V of 1862, as it related only to a portion of the bhag and not to the whole of it.

The Subordinate Judge allowed the plaintiff's claim, holding that though three out of the four gabhans (building-sites) belonging to the bhag were not expressly mentioned in the detailed description given in the mortgage-deed, still as the deed purported to mortgage the entire bhag, and not only a portion of it, any omission in the particulars was a falsa demonstratio, and that the deed was, therefore, not opposed to the provisions of the Bhagdari Act.

On appeal by defendant No. 3, who alleged himself to be bona fide purchaser of the property from defendants Nos. 1 and 2, the Judge reversed the decree and rejected the claim on the following grounds:—

"I am of opinion that upon the second issue, (viz., whether the plaintiff's mortgage was void under the Bhagdari Act, Bombay Act V of 1862) the plaintiff's deed must fail. The Subordinate Judge has found, and his finding is not disputed, that three gabhans of the bhag are not included in the detailed description in the mortgage-deed; but holding that the intention of the parties was that the whole bhag should pass, he considered that this was only matter of falsa demonstratio, and not an omission which could affect the validity of the mortgage. The respondents' pleader relies principally on the expression in the mortgage-deed coming at the close of the description of the property and [286] including whatever may be appended to this bhag, the whole bhag. The first part of this expression, in the connection in which it occurs, must, I think, be taken as applying to appended rights and interests such as those of trees, water, &c.; and, having regard to the fulness of the detail given, I cannot think that the description of the lands and gabhans was intended to be other than complete. The bhag, as mortgaged, was that consisting of the property described in the deed, and that is found not to be the whole bhag, and the fact that in the mortgage-deed it is called the whole bhag is immaterial. If a mere recital of this sort were admitted as sufficient to prove the intention of the parties to alienate a whole bhag, the provisions of Act V of 1862 (Bombay) would soon become a dead letter. * *

"If the deed had merely purported to mortgage the whole bhag without any description of the property in detail, the plaintiff might have been secure; but, taking the deed as it is, I cannot hold the omission to be merely matter of falsa demonstratio."

The plaintiff preferred a second appeal and respondent No. 2 (defendant No. 3) Bapubhai Shivlal, who claimed to be a purchaser of one of the gabhans (building-sites) in dispute, filed cross-objections under s. 561 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882).

Inverarity with Vasudeo G. Bhandarkar, for the appellant (plaintiff):—The main question in this case turns upon the construction of the mortgage-deed. The Judge held the deed to be invalid under the Bhagdari Act, because a part (viz., three gabhans) of the bhag has not been included in the details of the property given in the deed. But we contend that though the two gabhans have not been specifically mentioned, still as the deed states that the entire bhag is mortgaged, the two gabhans must be regarded as included, and their omission in the details is merely falsa demonstratio. We rely on Travers v. Blundell (1) and West v. Lawday (2). The intention of the parties was that the deed should comprise the entire bhag. Otherwise the plaintiff would not have entered into the transaction at all.

[287] But even if it be held that the whole bhag is not mortgaged under the deed, and that the transaction is, therefore, invalid as to the bhag, that will not affect the mortgage of the property which is not a part of the bhag. Survey No. 157 and one of the gabhans in dispute do not belong to the bhag. The transaction with respect to these at least must stand. Further, we contend that we should be given a money decree in this suit, because our personal remedy would now be barred if we were to bring a separate suit for it. The limitation to a suit for the recovery of money under a registered bond is six years.

P. M. Mehta (with Gokuldas K. Parekh), for the respondents (defendants Nos. 3, 4 and 5):—The Judge finds that the transaction is not a mortgage of the whole bhag, but only of a portion of it, and that it thus practically effects the dismemberment of the bhag and thus violates the Act. The omission of the gabhans (building-sites) in the description of the property was intentional, and not caused by mistake, as shown by the other documents and the circumstances of the case. The Judge was right in holding that the general words in the deed must be read with the particulars of the property given therein. The details must control the general words—Griffiths v. Parsons (1). The Bhagdari Act prohibits partial alienation of a bhag.

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—The important question in this case is, whether the plaintiff's mortgage of 1st May, 1880, was, as found by the lower appellate Court, void under s. 3 of the Bombay Act V of 1862, which forbids the alienation of any portion of any bhag other than a recognised division of such bhag or of any homestead, building-site (gabhan) apart or separately from such bhag or recognised sub-division. It was found by the Subordinate Judge, and his finding was not disputed before the lower Court of appeal, that there were four gabhans appertaining to the bhag, of which only one is expressly referred to in the particulars of the property mortgaged.

But it has been contended that upon the proper construction of the mortgage-deed, it was a mortgage of the entire bhag, and that the particular description of the gabhans was what is termed [288] "falsa demonstratio." In the case of West v. Lawday (2) Lord Westbury explains the maxim "falsa demonstratio non nocet," relied on by the appellant, in the following terms :—"Where some subject-matter is devised as a whole under a denomination which is applicable to the entire land, and then that description is followed by words which are added on the principle of enumeration, but which do not exhaust all the particulars, then the entirety, which hasbeen expressly and definitely given, shall not be prejudiced by an imperfect and inaccurate enumeration of the particulars." In the case of Travers v. Blundell (3) the testator was exercising a power given him by his father's will over an estate called the Rigby Estate which his father had purchased, and Sir G. Jessell after saying that the real question in cases of this description was "which is the leading description" held that the words in the will "that part of Rigby's Estate purchased by my father" was the leading description, although the enumeration of the closes, of which the will said the estate consisted, made no mention of two of the closes.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

In the present case, the mortgagors say they have mortgaged to the plaintiff "all the undermentioned properties in their possession and enjoyment appertaining to the entire bhag standing on Government records in their khata, and the houses and gabhans appertaining to this share. Particulars are as follows." These particulars enumerate the lands and houses, and conclude by mentioning 2 gabhans of which one only is a gabhan appertaining to the bhag, and the other being a gabhan which has been found to belong no longer to the bhag. The deed then proceeds as follows:—"According to these particulars, lands, houses and gabhans, barnyards, wells, tanks, padars and pasture lands also, together with whatsoever may appertain to the said bhag,—all the properties appertaining to the whole bhag have been mortgaged and delivered into your possession," and the deed concludes with the statement "There is no other property appertaining to the said bhag of which mention is not made here."

The document, therefore, down to the end of the particulars is, in terms, a mortgage of certain properties therein expressly [289] enumerated, supplemented by the description that they appertain to the entire bhag. The passage which follows—"According to these particulars all the properties belonging to the bhag have been mortgaged to you"—does not enlarge or alter what had already been said; it is only a repetition of it in another form. The particulars are, therefore, in the words of the Master of the Rolls, "the leading description," and the supplementary description of them as constituting the entire bhag together with the houses or gabhans appertaining to it, which is admittedly incorrect, must be regarded as "falsa demonstratio." The statement by the mortgagor, at the close of the document, that the particulars of property constituted the entire bhag, only emphasises what is implied by the general description, and cannot affect the clear conclusion to be drawn from the language of the operative part itself of the instrument, or prevent the operation of the Act in invalidating the instrument if, as a fact, all the gabhans were not included. The Assistant Judge was, therefore, in our opinion, right in holding that the plaintiff's mortgage, so far as it included property belonging to the bhag, was void under the Bhagdari Act.

It has, however, been found by both the Courts that Survey No. 157 is not included in the bhag, and, therefore, as to that piece of land and the second gabhan mentioned in the particulars, which, it is admitted, does not belong to the bhag, the mortgage can have effect given to it. The plaintiff is also entitled to a money decree against the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 for the sum of Rs. 1,699 as found due by the Subordinate Judge, and against which no appeal was brought by those defendants.

We must, therefore, vary the decree by directing that defendants Nos. 1 and 2 do pay the plaintiff the sum of Rs. 1,699, and that in default of so paying, the Survey No. 157 and the second gabhan mentioned in the particulars of property in the mortgage be sold, and the proceeds applied in payment of the mortgage-debt. The appellant to pay the costs of this appeal to the defendants other than defendants Nos. 1 and 2.

Jurisdiction—Letters Patent, 1865, cl. 12—Dwell—Carry on business—Personally work for gain.

The word "dwell" must be construed with reference to the particular object of the enactment in which it occurs.

Residence in Bombay merely for a temporary purpose is not to "dwell" there so as to give jurisdiction to the High Court under cl. 12 of the Letters Patent, 1865.

Held, that the mere fact that the defendant had purchased the house which he occupied during a temporary visit to Bombay afforded no inference of an intention to dwell there.

A defendant who was the Acharya or high priest of the Vaishnava community and the Maharaj Tikait of Shri Nathji at Nathdwara had a pethi, or place of business, in Bombay, where devotees paid in any presents they intended to offer him.

Held, that this did not amount to "carrying on business" so as to give the High Court jurisdiction under cl. 12 of the Letters Patent, 1865.

The defendant when in Bombay was invited by his devotees and pupils to their houses, where he was treated as an incarnation of the deity with certain forms and ceremonies, and received presents, and gave his blessing.

Held, that this did not amount to "personally working for gain" within the meaning of cl. 12 of the Letters Patent, 1865.

APPEAL from a decree of Farran, J., dismissing the suit on the ground that the Court had no jurisdiction to entertain it (see I. L. R., 14 Bom., 541).

Up to the year 1876 the plaintiff was the Acharya or high priest of the Vaishnava community, and the Maharaj Tikait of Shri Nathji at Nathdwara in the territory of the Maharana of Udepur in Rajputana. In that year he was deposed from his office and expelled from the territory by the Udepur authorities, and his son the defendant was installed in his place. At the time of his deportation the plaintiff had at Nathdwara a large amount of treasure in his treasury, which he alleged to be his private property, and which he had entrusted to his son (the defendant). Being himself prevented from returning to Udepur [291] he had called upon the defendant to remit this property to him, but the defendant had not done so. He accordingly filed this suit in the High Court of Bombay to recover the property in question.

The defendant contended that the Court had no jurisdiction over him. He stated that he resided at Nathdwara and only occasionally visited Bombay. He contended that he did not dwell or carry on business or personally work for gain within the Court's jurisdiction as required by cl. 12 of the Letters Patent, 1865, which is as follows :—

"And we do further ordain that the said High Court of Judicature at Bombay in the exercise of its ordinary original civil jurisdiction shall be empowered to receive, try, and determine suits of every description, if in the case of suits for land or other immoveable property such land or property shall be situated, or in all other cases if the cause of action shall have arisen either wholly, or, in case the leave of the Court shall have been first obtained in part, within the local limits of the ordinary original jurisdiction of the said High Court, or if the defendant at the time of the commencement of the suit shall dwell or carry on business or personally work for gain within such limits, except that the said High Court shall not have such original jurisdiction in cases falling within the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court at Bombay, in which the debt or damage or value of the property sued for does not exceed 100 rupees."

The defendant was in Bombay on a visit from the 2nd April, 1889, until the 11th August, 1889, and while there he lived in a house which he had purchased in May, 1888. This house, however, he sold before leaving Bombay in August, 1889. It was on the 3rd May, 1889, while the defendant was in Bombay on the occasion of this visit that the plaintiff filed this suit.

It further appeared that the defendant had in Bombay a pedhi, or place of business, in which a munim, mehtas or other servants were employed. Into this pedhi offerings to the shrine of Shri Nathji were paid by the devotees and also offerings to the defendant personally. From thence they were transmitted by hundi to Nathdwara.

[292] It was also proved that while in Bombay the defendant was in the habit of visiting the houses of his devotees and pupils, on which occasions certain ceremonies were performed and presents were made to the defendant, who received them and gave his blessing to the persons offering them.

The material facts are fully set out in the judgment of Farran, J. (see I. L. R., 14 Bom., 541), who held that the defendant did not dwell or carry on business or personally work for gain within the jurisdiction, and, therefore, dismissed the suit.

The plaintiff appealed.

Inverarity, Jardine and Sethna, for the appellant (plaintiff).

Lang and Scott, for the respondent (defendant).

The following authorities were cited:—Emritloll v. Kidd (1); Kavasji v. Wallace (2); Subbaraya v. The Government (3); Bramwell v. Lacy (4); Mitchell v. Hender (5); Anonymous (6); Muthaya Chetti v. Allan (7); Chinnammal v. Tulukannatummal (8); Kessowji v. Khimji Jairam (9).

JUDGMENT.

TELANG, J.—The only question in this case relates to the jurisdiction of this Court to try it, and it has been sought to place the jurisdiction on the grounds that the defendant dwells, carries on business, and also personally works for gain within the local limits of the civil jurisdiction.

As regards the first point, the English and Indian cases mentioned in the judgment of Farran, J., show that the word "dwell" must be construed with reference to the particular object of the enactment in which it occurs. And construing cl. 12 of the Letters Patent, 1865, in that way, we are of opinion that the cases of Emritloll v. Kidd(1) and Kavasji v. Wallace (2) were rightly decided. It was not, we think, the intention of the Letters Patent to give jurisdiction in cases of temporary residence only. Now in this case the defendant came to Bombay only in the course of a progress he was making, in the course of which he [293] intended to visit the various establishments he keeps up in various parts of the country. He actually stayed here from 2nd April to 11th August, 1889. It seems probable that he stayed longer than he had originally intended. But in any case, his stay here was only for a temporary purpose, such as, we think, does not satisfy the requirements of cl. 12 of the Letters Patent.

It was, however, argued that the defendant had purchased a house in Bombay in the year preceding the year of his visit, and that that circumstance would afford a foundation for the jurisdiction of the Court, on the ground of residence. No doubt, according to the case of Bailey v. Bryant (1), a man may have more than one residence, but, in order to afford foundation for jurisdiction, the residences must be of a permanent character, and be visited from time to time. Here there is no evidence whatever of any intention on the part of the defendant himself to visit Bombay from time to time. The house, after being purchased, was in fact occupied by the defendant's servants, and, from the mere fact of purchase, no inference of an intention to personally dwell in the house from time to time can be drawn. On the other hand, the fact of the house having been sold some time after the purchase, affords some ground for an opposite inference. On the whole, therefore, we are of opinion that the argument for jurisdiction on the ground of residence fails.

The next point to be dealt with, turns on the meaning of the phrase "carry on business." The defendant admittedly has a gedhi, or place of business, in Bombay, where devotees pay in whatever presents they wish to offer to him. We think, however, that it would be a straining of language to call that carrying on business. These presents are mere voluntary offerings, which the pupils and devotees of the defendant make to him for their own spiritual benefit. They are received on behalf of the defendant by his servants, and transmitted to him in due course. We do not think that this can be properly held to be equivalent to carrying on business within the jurisdiction.

Lastly, comes the question whether the defendant personally works for gain within the jurisdiction. The evidence shows [294] that when the defendant is in Bombay, his devotees and pupils invite him to their houses, and, treating him as an incarnation of the deity, go through certain forms and ceremonies, which are held to be appropriate to the occasion, and make presents to the defendant. The defendant receives the presents, and gives his blessing to the devotees. It requires, we think, a straining of language in this case also to hold that this is "personally working for gain." There is no work in the matter at all.

Upon the whole we are of opinion that the several grounds on which the jurisdiction is sought to be vested in this case have all failed, and that the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

[On appeal from the High Court at Bombay.]

GOSWAMI SHRI 108 SHRI GIRDHARIJI MAHARAJ, (Appellant) Plaintiff v. SHRI GOVARDHANLALJI GIRDHARIJI, (Respondent) *Defendant. [14th November, 1893.]

Jurisdiction—Carrying on business—"Dwell"—Letters Patent, 1865, cl. 12.

The expression "carry on business" in cl. 12 of the Letters Patent, 1865, is intended to relate to business in which a man may contract debts, and ought to be liable to be sued by persons having business transactions with him.

The defendant, who was an Acharya of the Vaishnav community and was head of their institution at Nathdwara in Udepur, where he usually resided, was, when this suit was brought, in Bombay for a time. He had in the latter place a treasurer and other servants employed in an establishment for the collection and entry of gifts made by devotees; and there, also, donations, made in like establishments elsewhere, were received for transmission to Nathdwara. The defendant, also, while in Bombay accepted offerings on ceremonial visits made, or received, by him personally; but no bargain for the amount was made beforehand.

Held, that in the above transactions there was no "carrying on business" within cl. 12 of the Letters Patent, 1865.

[295] APPEAL from a decree (24th July, 1891) of the High Court (see supra p. 290) affirming a decree (20th June, 1890) made by that Court in its ordinary original jurisdiction (1).

The suit (3rd May, 1889) out of which this appeal arose, was for discovery, by the defendant, of articles and sums of money, in addition to those specified in a schedule to the plaint, and claimed by the plaintiff as owner; and in default, for Rs. 31,45,171, with a further sum for interest.

The question now raised was whether the Court below had rightly construed cl. 12 of the Letters Patent of 1865, in deciding that the defendant was not subject to the local jurisdiction. There was no dispute as to the facts, on this appeal.

The plaintiff (now appellant) was, until the year 1876, Tikait Maharaj (religious head) of the Vaishnav shrine of Shri Nathji at Nathdwara in Udepur in Rajputana. In that year he was deprived of the office, and expelled from the Rana's territory. His son, the present defendant, was installed in his place. In February, 1889, the defendant, who resided at Nathdwara, left that place, and visited temples and shrines in Gujarat, Kathiawar and elsewhere. He came to Bombay on the 2nd April, 1889, intending to make a short stay there. On the 3rd May following, this suit was commenced against him by his father. The defendant remained in Bombay till the 11th August, 1889, detained by domestic occurrences.

The plaintiff alleged that, at the time of his compulsory departure from Udepur, he had private treasure at Nathdwara amounting to the sum claimed in this suit. This property he had, as he alleged, then and there entrusted to the care of his son, the defendant, with instructions to forward it to him. These instructions had not been carried out.

In his defence, the son denied that any such private treasure had been entrusted to him; denied that he had written letters acknowledging this trust; and denied being subject to the local jurisdiction.

On the last issue only, the suit was heard by Farran, J., in the original jurisdiction (1). The Judge dismissed the suit, holding [296] that jurisdiction over the defendant had not been made out with reference to cl. 12 of the Letters Patent of 1865, which is as follows :—

"And we do further ordain that the said High Court of Judicature at Bombay in the exercise of its ordinary original civil jurisdiction shall be empowered to receive, try, and determine suits of every description, if in the case of suits for land or other immoveable property such land or property shall be situated, or in all other cases if the cause of action shall have arisen either wholly, or in case the leave of the Court shall have been first obtained, in part within the local limits of the ordinary original jurisdiction of the said High Court, or if the defendant at the time of the commencement of the suit shall dwell or carry on business or personally work for gain within such limits, except that the said High Court shall not have such original jurisdiction in cases falling within the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court at Bombay, in which the debt or damage or value of the property sued for does not exceed one hundred rupees."

At the hearing of the evidence given as to the kind of business said to have been carried on by the defendant in Bombay was, generally, to the following effect :—That the defendant had in Bombay an establishment, called by the witnesses a pedhi, in which a chaudhari or treasurer, a munim, and mehtas, and servants, were regularly employed. Offerings made to Shri Nathji by devotees were paid into this pedhi, and other offerings to shrines at Nathdwara, of which the defendant claimed to be the head, and offerings to the defendant, personally, in that character. There were similar establishments in other places over the Presidency, and the offerings collected in them were transmitted to the Bombay pedhi, and dealt with there. The moneys from that pedhi were sent to Nathdwara, sometimes by hundis drawn in that place on the Bombay pedhi, by which the hundis were honoured and paid ; and were sent, sometimes, by the purchase of articles for the defendant's use, which were despatched to Nathdwara. The balances, not immediately wanted, were deposited with soukars, who allowed interest on the sums from time to time in their hands. The sums coming into the pedhi at Bombay, from these sources, for transmission to Nathdwara were considerable ; and might be roughly estimated at Rs. 2 lakhs per annum.

The Judge did not consider that any of the above transactions brought the defendant within cl. 12, on the ground of his carrying on business in Bombay. The judgment, which also dealt [297] with other grounds, on which it had been alleged for the plaintiff that the defendant came within the clause, is reported at length at p. 543 of I. L. R., 14 Bom.

On appeal, the appellate High Court (Sargent, C. J., and Telang, J.) affirmed the decision of the first Court (see supra, p. 292).

The plaintiff appealed to the Privy Council.

Mr. J. D. Mayne and Mr. J. H. A. Branson, for the appellant :—According to the evidence, the defendant, being both the spiritual head and general manager of the affairs of the institution at Nathdwara, made collections in Bombay in the manner in which a business may be said to be carried on. In his capacity as spiritual guide he possessed, according to the belief of his followers, attributes enabling him to promote their well-being. In this regard, he received gifts from devotees, and made collections through an agency, with a set of clerks and servants in Bombay.

Reference was made to the pedhi. If these transactions were not in the nature of a contract between the defendant and the worshippers, still that would not necessarily negative the carrying a business within the meaning of cl. 12. The proceedings, so far as they went, were a business for certain purposes; and there were the arranging, entering, and transmission of gifts. In connection with the argument, reference was made to Rolls v. Miller(1) and Smith v. Anderson(2).

Sir J. Rigby, Q. C. (Solicitor General), Mr. R. B. Finlay, Q. C., and Mr. H. Sutton, for the respondent, were not called upon.

JUDGMENT.

Their Lordships' judgment was then delivered by LORD MORRIS.—The suit, out of which this appeal arises, was brought by the appellant against the respondent in the High Court of Judicature at Bombay in the exercise of its ordinary original civil jurisdiction, and the question for determination in the High Court and here is, whether the High Court had jurisdiction to hear and determine the suit. Both Courts below have determined that there was no jurisdiction.

The 12th section of the Letters Patent of 1865, establishing the High Court, is as follows, so far as it is material to the [298] matter now in dispute:—"And we do further ordain that the said High Court * * * shall be empowered to receive, try, and determine suits of every description * * * if the defendant at the time of the commencement of the suit shall dwell, or carry on business, or personally work for gain within such limits."

The greater portion of the arguments in the Courts below was addressed to the contention that the defendant "dwelt" in Bombay, within the meaning of the section, and that, therefore, he was liable to the High Court's jurisdiction. That point was abandoned by the plaintiff on the argument before this Board, his counsel confining himself to the contention that the defendant "carried on business" within the meaning of the section.

The phrase "carry on business," as has been often said, is a very elastic one, and is almost incapable of definition. The tribunal must in each case look to the particular circumstances. It appears to their Lordships that the Letters Patent intended it to relate to business in which a man might contract debts, and ought to be liable to be sued by persons who had business transactions with him.

There is nothing of this kind here. The defendant is the high priest of the shrine of Shri Nathji, at Nathdwara, in the territories of the Rana of Udepur. At the time of this suit he was on a temporary visit to Bombay, for the purpose of meeting his devotees. He has in Bombay an establishment called a pedhi in which a treasurer and servants are regularly employed. Into this pedhi, offerings made by devotees to the shrine of Shri Nathji, and to other shrines at Nathdwara, of which the defendant claims to be the owner, are paid. The defendant has similar establishments in other places in the Bombay Presidency, and the offerings collected there are transmitted to the pedhi in Bombay. Something like two lakhs of rupees pass into this pedhi in the course of each year. While the defendant was in Bombay he received his followers, and when invited to do so he visited their houses. On the occasions of such visits he invariably received an offering in money, but no bargain for the amount was made before hand. Such offerings were strictly personal, and were not paid into the pedhi.

(1) 27 Ch. D. 71.
(2) 15 Ch. D. 247.

[299] Their Lordships are unable to hold that either the payment of the offerings in the pedhi, or the receipt of them by the defendant personally, constitutes "carrying on business" within the meaning of the Letters Patent. Devotion to the shrine was the reason for the offerings in each case.

Their Lordships will, therefore, humbly advise Her Majesty that the judgment of the appellate Court should be affirmed, and this appeal dismissed. The appellant will pay the costs of this appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

Before Mr. Justice Farran.

CURSETJI JEHANGIR KHAMBATTA AND ANOTHER (Plaintiffs) v. W. CROWDER AND ANOTHER (Defendants).*

[11th, 15th, 16th and 18th January, 1894.]

Arbitration—Award—Setting aside award—Arbitrator receiving evidence from one side in absence of other side—Misconduct—Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882), s. 521—Contract—Contract to sell from 2,500 to 3,500 tons of coal—Breach of contract—Non-delivery of coal—Damages—Number of tons on which damages to be calculated.

An arbitrator ought not to hear or receive evidence from one side in the absence of the other side, without (if he does) giving the other side affected by such evidence the opportunity of meeting and answering it. This proposition is, however, subject to the qualification that the parties may agree that a reference may be conducted in any particular way, and such an agreement may be either express or implied from their conduct during the arbitration, and they may also expressly or by their conduct waive their objection to an irregular course of conduct on the part of the arbitrator.

Where an arbitrator received certain papers and documents from the defendants in a suit referred to his arbitration, together with a letter from the defendants containing certain comments on the documents sent to him and made his award without giving the plaintiffs an opportunity of seeing the said papers and documents, and of meeting the inferences deducible from them.

Held, that there was such a breach of duty on the part of the arbitrator as entitled the plaintiffs to have the award set aside.

On the 18th May, 1893, the defendants sold to the plaintiffs "the entire cargo of coal per steam-ship ———May shipment, via canal, amounting to 2,500 to 3,500 tons or thereabouts." The defendants intended a certain steamship called the "Ethelaida,"[300] which carried a cargo of 3,395 tons of coal to satisfy this contract. This ship, however, did not load in May, and consequently her cargo did not fulfil the conditions of the contract. From the day of making the contract the plaintiffs had been urging the defendants to declare the name of the vessel in which the coal contracted for was to be shipped. On the 14th June the defendants by letter informed the plaintiff that the "vessel chartered for their May shipment" had not loaded in May, and they offered to cancel the contract. On the same day, however, and about an hour after the plaintiffs had received this letter, and before they had replied to it, the defendants sent them another letter as follows:—"We have now been informed that the boat, our coals have been loaded in, is the 'Ethelaida,' and we now beg to declare it." Correspondence subsequently passed between the parties. On the 15th June the plaintiffs wrote to the defendants as follows:—"Please inform us finally what you intend. In case the 'Ethelaida' is declared as bringing coals sold to us under contract of 18th May, please let us know the date of her sailing, landing and the particular date of her arrival in Bombay, and also how much coal she has on board." On the following day the defendants replied: "The 'Ethelaida' is the boat chartered for the cargo we sold you.....We do not positively know whether she commenced to load in May or June. She was expected to load about 3,300 tons." On the 20th June the defendants wrote definitely stating that the "'Ethelaida' did not load in May." The plaintiffs refused her cargo, and sent in a statement of their alleged loss calculated upon 3,300 tons, the amount stated to be the cargo of the "Ethelaida" in the defendant's letter of the 14th June.

Held, that the damages must be calculated upon a cargo of 2,500 tons only. The "Ethelaida" was never incorporated into the contract. The defendants declared her against the contract; but, after they had informed the plaintiffs that she had not loaded in May, the plaintiffs refused her cargo. The contract which the defendants failed to fulfil was a contract to deliver 2,500—3,500 tons and not a contract to deliver the "Ethelaida" cargo, which they were always ready and willing to deliver. The option rested with the defendants whether they would deliver 2,500 or 3,500 tons, or any intermediate quantity, and upon no principle could the Court exercise that option for them and declare that they were liable to deliver more than a cargo of 2,500 tons.

SUIT to recover Rs. 5,803-14-0 as damages for breach of contract and for a declaration that a certain award was not binding.

On the 18th May, 1893, the defendants by a contract of that date sold to the plaintiffs "the entire cargo of coal per steam-ship——— May shipment via canal amounting to 2,500 to 3,500 tons or thereabouts. The coal to be of the description known as Davison's West Hartley, and to be delivered into purchaser's boat alongside at Rs 15-4-0 per ton. Delivery to be taken at a rate not less than 500 tons per diem." The other terms of the contract are not material to this report.

Between the date of the contract and the 14th June the plaintiffs wrote several letters to the defendants to declare the [301] name of the vessel in which the coal was to be shipped, but the defendants replied that they were as yet unable to supply the information. On the 14th June, the defendants wrote to the plaintiffs stating that the vessel chartered for their May shipment did not take in her cargo during May, and they offered either to cancel their contract with the plaintiffs or to supply them with other coal. On the same day, and about an hour after the plaintiffs had received this letter, and before they had replied to it, the defendants sent them another letter as follows:—

"14*th June*, 1893.

"Dear Sirs,—We have now been informed that the boat, our coals have been loaded in, is the 'Ethelaida' and we now beg to declare it.

"Yours faithfully,
"(Signed) W. CROWDER & Co."

On the next day, the plaintiffs wrote to the defendants acknowledging the receipt of both the above letters. They declined the offer of other coal, and referring to the latter, declaring the "Ethelaida," they said:—

"Please inform us finally what you intend. In case the 'Ethelaida' is declared as bringing coals sold to us under contract of 18th May, please let us know the date of her sailing, loading, and the probable date of the arrival in Bombay, and also how much coal she has on board."

On the 16th June the defendants replied by the following letter :—

"16*th June*, 1893.

"Dear Sirs,—In reply to yours of yesterday's, we beg to say that the 'Ethelaida' is the boat chartered for the cargo of Davisons we sold you. We have had no advice, so far, of her sailing, and up to the present we do not positively know whether she commenced to load in May or June, but expect to get a cable shortly. She was expected, according to 6/P, to load about 3,300 tons.

"Yours faithfully,
"(Signed) W. CROWDER & CO."

On the 28th June the defendants wrote a letter to the plaintiffs, of which the following is the material part :—

"For reasons that we have already explained to you both by letter and verbally at our interview yesterday, the 'Ethelaida' did not load in May. You promised us yesterday that you would write us a letter declining to accept the 'Ethelaida's' cargo, and which you might have done a fortnight ago on 14th June. We wish you to clearly understand that whatever claim you may ultimately prefer against us, we [302] have a right at once to know whether you intend to accept this cargo or not ; otherwise we shall hold you responsible for any losses that may take place on a resale in a falling market.

" We have asked you and we now again ask for a statement of what you consider to be your losses, and would like to have this in writing as soon as possible without prejudice to our case."

To this letter the plaintiffs replied as follows :—

" Bombay, 28*th June*, 1893.

"Messrs. W. CROWDER & CO.,
" Bombay.

" Dear Sirs,—We think you made a mistake when you wrote that we might have declined the 'Ethelaida's' cargo a fortnight ago, seeing that it was only by your letter dated the 22nd instant that you informed us of the date of sailing. We had many times asked you for the date before.

" On the 23rd we wrote to you and said we should be glad to hear from you in reply, because we intended to ask our solicitors to reply to your letter of the 22nd. This must have been understood by you to mean that we did not intend to accept the 'Ethelaida's' cargo, and that we should instruct our solicitors to write a letter claiming damages for your breach of contract. If you had replied at once, you would have received this letter. As you now request us to send in our claim, we do so by enclosing our bill No. 976 for Rs. 5,803-14-0.

"Yours faithfully,
"(Signed) C. J. KHAMBATTA & CO."

The defendants objected to the amount of the plaintiffs' claim, and on the 5th July both the parties agreed to refer their dispute to the sole arbitration of Mr. F.L. McAfee, who on the same day undertook to arbitrate between them.

Both the plaintiffs and the defendants subsequently sent to the arbitrator written statements of their respective cases. The plaintiffs also sent him certain other papers connected with his case.

ORIGINAL CIVIL.

18 B. 299.

On the 18th July, 1893, the defendants wrote to the arbitrator as follows:—

"18*th July*, 1893.

"Dear Mr. McAfee.—Please do give your decision re May shipment, Davison's, without further delay, as it will decide us in what we have to do with the cargo—land or resale. The ship 'Ethelaida' is expected in at any moment now, and we will be awkwardly placed if the matter is not settled before she arrives.

"Yours truly,
"(Signed) W. CROWDER."

[303] On the same day the arbitrator addressed the following letter to both parties:—

"Bombay, 18*th July*, 1893.

"Messrs. C.J. KHAMBATTA & Co.
and
"Messrs. W. CROWDER & Co.

"Gentlemen,—To enable each of your good selves to discuss opposing points brought out in your respective statements, I would feel obliged by your arranging to call at my office from 3 to 5 this afternoon. I would suggest your bringing with you, in original, such letters as have been interchanged between you on the matter now in question.

"I am, &c., &c.,
"(Signed) F.L. MCAFEE."

On the same day (viz., the 18th July) the arbitrator sent the following note to the plaintiffs:—

"Dear Sirs,—Messrs. W.Crowder & Co. say three o'clock this afternoon will suit them. Please say by bearer whether this hour will answer you. If it will not, appoint your time, please.

"I am, &c.,
"(Signed) F. L. MCAFEE."

In reply, the plaintiffs sent him the following memorandum:—

"All my papers are at Mr. Hemming's, and unless I get them, my presence will be useless. I am ready to be at your place at the appointed time, and will let you know as soon as they are received.

"I am just writing to Mr. Hemming.

"Yours faithfully,
"(Signed) C. J. KHAMBATTA."

At the trial the plaintiff stated in his evidence that immediately on receipt of the above letter from the arbitrator he sent to his solicitor (Mr. Hemming) for the documents which he desired to have at the meeting. He, however, only obtained some of them, as Mr. Hemming was not then in his office. With these, however, he attended the arbitration meeting. No other person was present before the arbitrator except the plaintiff and the defendant. The plaintiff stated in his evidence that the whole time of the meeting, which lasted about two hours, was occupied by the defendant Crowder in addressing the arbitrator, and that, except by way of occasional interruption and correction, he (the plaintiff) said nothing, and in spite of his remonstrances was not given any opportunity of stating his case. He further [304] stated that he was so dissatisfied with the way in which the meeting was conducted, and the refusal to allow him to speak, that he went immediately, at the close of the meeting, to his solicitor Mr. Hemming, complained that he could not get a hearing, and arranged that Mr. Hemming should represent him at the next meeting. Mr. Hemming gave evidence and corroborated the plaintiff on this point. The plaintiff swore that he had no idea that there was not to be another meeting.

On the other hand, the arbitrator and the defendant deposed that the plaintiff was fully heard, and that the points in dispute were taken up at the meeting and discussed seriatim, and that the business of the arbitration was then concluded. The arbitrator, however, in his evidence stated that no formal announcement to that effect was made.

On the following morning, viz., the 19th July, the arbitrator sent the following note to the plaintiff and defendant:—

"Messrs. W. CROWDER & CO.,
and
Messrs. C. J. KHAMBATTA & CO.

"Gentlemen,—Will you do me the favour to let me have any contracts for sale or purchase of Davison's West Hartley coal that you may have entered into for May shipment between the 20th May and the 15th June.

"As also prices of same species of coal ruling in Bombay between the 1st and 7th July.

"I am, &c., &c.,
"(Signed) F. L. MCAFEE"

The plaintiff's reply was as follows:—

"Bombay, 19*th July* 1893.

"Dear Sir,—Referring to your enquiry in your memo, of to-day's date, we beg to state that as there was no coal to be got at the time, no rate was fixed.

"All that was going on, was the demand for May shipment by S. S. 'Indrapoora', which was offered at Rs. 17 (seventeen), but no sellers.

"The 'Indrapoora' completed her discharge on 30th June.

"Yours faithfully,
"(Signed) C. J. KHAMBA'TTA & CO."

The defendant's reply was the following:—

"Bombay, 19*th July*, 1893.

"Dear Sir,—In reply to yours of date, we beg to say that we have not sold any May shipment of Davison's between the dates mentioned by you since the 28th [305] June. We have tried to get an offer for the 'Ethelaida' cargo, and the best that we have had so far is Rs. 14.

"We send you copies of Times of India, Gazette and Messrs. Brooks & Co.' s Coal Circular for the 30th June, 7th and 14th July, from which you will see that the price quoted for ready Davison's is about Rs. 14, and this being so, Messrs. C. J. Khambatta are Rs. 1¼ to the good not having to take delivery of the cargo.

"Yours faithfully,
"(Signed) W. CROWDER & CO."

On the afternoon of that day (the 19th July) the arbitrator published his award, finding that the plaintiffs had sustained no loss by the defendants' failure to fulfil the contract of the 18th May, 1893, and that no compensation was due to the plaintiffs.

The plaintiff alleged that he was wholly taken by surprise in receiving the award; that he was altogether unaware that the enquiry before the arbitrator was concluded; and that he had fully expected that another meeting would be held, at which he could place his case before the arbitrator.

Immediately on receiving the award he wrote the following letter to the arbitrator:—

"19*th July*, 1893.

"To F. A. MCAFEE, ESQ.

"Dear Sir,—I am surprised to receive your letter with what you call your award. As you know quite well, I have not yet had the opportunity of putting my case before you, and no evidence whatever has been given. I shall take steps in the matter, and will, if I can, upset such conduct. It was distinctly understood last evening that there was to be another meeting, and I object to be imposed upon in this manner. It is ridiculous for you to state that the ruling rate was between 14 and 14½, and it shows that you know nothing about it. I have overwhelming evidence to show that the rate was much higher. I do not trouble to state anything further, but will ask you to return what papers you have of mine at once, and please to keep a list of them, as I shall show that you have not yet given me opportunity of putting all my papers before you, and I regret that you ever had anything to do with it."

"Yours faithfully,

"(Signed) C. J. KHAMBATTA."

Further correspondence took place between the plaintiffs and the arbitrator which is not material to this report, and on the 24th August, 1893, the plaintiffs filed this suit, praying for a declaration that proceedings with regard to the arbitration and award were invalid and not binding, and for Rs. 5,803-14-0 as damages for the defendants' breach of contract.

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, J.—On the 18th May, 1893, the defendants contracted to sell an entire cargo of Davison's West Hartley coal, May shipment, of 2,500—3,500 tons, to the plaintiff at Rs. 15-4-0 per ton. This contract the defendants were unable, or failed, to carry out; and the plaintiff now sues for damages for its breach. On the 5th July, the parties, being unable to arrive at a settlement, referred the matter to the sole arbitration of Mr. F. L. McAfee, and agreed to abide by his decision; and on the same day, Mr. McAfee undertook the arbitration. On the 19th July, the arbitrator published his award, and found that the plaintiff had sustained no loss by the defendants' failure to perform the contract, and that, therefore, no compensation was due to him.

Three questions arise upon the pleadings, and are embodied in the issues: (1) Whether the award is binding upon the plaintiff? [307] (2) Whether the plaintiff suffered damages by reason of the defendants' breach of contract? (3) What is the amount of such damage, if any? The plaintiff impeaches the award on various grounds. His charges of collusion and moral misconduct against the arbitrator were, for the most part, tacitly abandoned by his counsel; and as I consider that they were without foundation, I shall make no further allusion to them. Counsel, in reply, rested his case mainly upon the grounds (1) that the plaintiff had not a proper opportunity afforded to him of stating his own and meeting his opponents' case, and was taken by surprise by the award being made with too great precipitation, and (2) that the arbitrator had before him, and took into consideration, (a) papers and documents furnished to him by the defendants which the plaintiff had no opportunity of seeing, or discussing, or meeting by argument or counter-proof, and (b) evidence afforded by his own book which he did not inform the parties that he intended to use.

The following facts are not greatly in dispute. I shall indicate those upon which the parties are at variance. After the 5th July, the plaintiffs and the defendants sent in written statements of their respective cases to the arbitrator and some papers, but no meeting was held until after the 17th July, the arbitrator being anxious to arrange about his fees. These the defendants guaranteed to him by their letter of that date, asking him at the same time for a prompt decision. The defendants were evidently under the impression that the arbitrator might give his decision without holding a meeting. Their written statement, dated July 6th, ends with the following passage after offering to explain any points which might not be clear to the arbitrator:—"We would also suggest that, after you have gone into the case and before you finally decide, both sides be given the opportunity of meeting with you to discuss away any points that you may desire cleared. Perhaps Saturday afternoon, the 8th, may be convenient to you." The plaintiff does not appear to have read, or made himself acquainted with, the contents of the defendants' written statement. He expected the matter to be orally discussed, but whether in the presence of both parties, is not so clear. His case, with certain extracts referred to in it in the [308] form of rough notes, was received by the arbitrator before the 12th July. On the 18th July the defendant Crowder wrote a private and very urgent letter to the arbitrator to give his decision without delay, as the defendants' hands, he wrote, with reference to the "Ethelaida's" cargo, were tied until they knew it. On this the arbitrators wrote, appointing a meeting from 3 to 5 that afternoon, to enable each of the parties to discuss the opposing points brought out in their respective statements. The plaintiff wrote that his papers were with his solicitor, and that he was writing for them, and would let the arbitrator know as soon as he received them. His solicitor sent him some papers, and he and the defendant Crowder attended the meeting, which lasted about two hours. Unfortunately, the arbitrator took a wretchedly meagre and most unsatisfactory note. It conveys no idea, to the mind, of what really took place. From the oral evidence, however, of the witnesses and what subsequently occurred, I think that it may safely be concluded that the salient points of the case underwent discussion, such as the meaning of the contract, whether the defendants had any valid excuse for their non-performance of it, and the date at which the coals ought to have been delivered; and that a more or less definite conclusion was arrived at as to these points, the parties being at one as to or not strongly contesting them; but as to what should be deemed to be the proper price of coal at the date of the performance, though that also was discussed, the parties took up very different positions, and, I think, the arbitrator had not and did not consider that he had materials before him to enable him to determine it. When the meeting broke up, nothing was said, I think, as to another meeting being held, nor, on the other hand, was it stated that the proceedings had terminated, and that the matter was ripe for an award; nor do I think that anything took place which would lead either of the parties necessarily to that conclusion. The defendant Crowder says that, at the end of the meeting, he wanted to raise the question of a sort of counter-claim which he contended for, and that the plaintiff objected, saying "I object to any more papers or documents going in; the case is finished;" but he is not borne out by the arbitrator as to this latter part of the plaintiff's statement. [309] The plaintiff did object to the defendant's entering upon his counter-claim, but the statement that he considered the case finished, is quite irreconcileable with his conduct immediately afterwards. What was to happen after the meeting was left, I find, quite vague and undetermined. That the defendant Crowder considered the proceedings terminated, is probable. Having made the suggestion as to the arbitrator's proper course which I have already read from his written statement, and knowing how urgently he had pressed the arbitrator for a special decision, it probably did not occur to him that a second meeting could be contemplated. The plaintiff's broad views on the subject of time and his ignorance of the defendant's letter urging the arbitrator to haste, would naturally lead him to a different conclusion. At the close of the meeting he saw his solicitor and discussed with him the desirability of his attending the next meeting.

The plaintiff complains that at this meeting he was not accorded a proper hearing and had no opportunity of explaining his case fully to the arbitrator, and says he remonstrated at the time in strong language, and, in support of this, he called his solicitor to give evidence as to the complaints he made to him after the meeting. The arbitrator and the defendant both deny that he made these remonstrances, and say that he had ample opportunity allowed to him for speaking. The plaintiff, I think, has over-coloured this part of his case, and has attributed to some possible petulant observations a weight which they did not convey to the mind of the hearers. His complaint to his solicitor cannot have been more than such as was suggested by the feeling that his arguments had not impressed the arbitrator as strongly as he desired. If his present account is accurate, it is impossible to believe that he would not have written, or caused a letter of remonstrance to be written, to the arbitrator, or withdrawn from the arbitration. I am of opinion that nothing occurred at the meeting which would justify the Court in setting aside the award.

The next day (19th July) the arbitrator, at about 2 P.M., sent a duplicate letter to the plaintiff and to the defendants, running thus :—"Messrs. W. Crowder and Co. and C. J. Khambatta and Co. Gentlemen,—Will you do me the favour to let me have any contracts for sale or purchase of Davison's West [310] Hartley coal that you may have entered into for May shipment between the 20th May and 15th June, as also prices for same species of coal ruling in Bombay between 1st and 7th July." The plaintiff replied on the same day that, as there was no coal to be got at the time, no rate was fixed. All that was going on was the demand for May shipment by S. S. "Indrapoora," which was offered at Rs. 17, but no sellers. The "Indrapoora," he added, completed her discharge on 30th June. The defendants replied as follows :—"Dear Sir,—In reply to yours of date, we beg to say that we have not sold any May shipment of Davison's between the dates mentioned by you. Since the 20th June, we have tried to get an offer for the 'Ethelaida' cargo, and the best that we have had so far is Rs. 14. We send you copies of Times of India, Gazette, and Messrs. Brooks and Co.'s coal circular for the 30th June, 7th and 14th July, from which you will see that the price quoted for ready Davison's is about Rs. 14; and this being so, Messrs. C. J. Khambatta are Re. 1-4 to the good, not having to take delivery of the cargo." No further communication took place between the arbitrator and the plaintiff, and the plaintiff was unaware that the defendants had sent the above papers to the arbitrator. The arbitrator stated at the hearing that he had before him, as evidence, his own book and the result of his private enquiry as to rates; but that he did not inform the parties of this. The arbitrator after receipt of the defendants' letter and documents, and the plaintiff's letter, at once made his award and published it by sending it the same day to the parties at about 5 P.M. He awarded nothing to the plaintiff. The plaintiff immediately wrote a strongly-worded letter to the arbitrator, protesting against his conduct and the award, and stating that he had no further evidence to adduce, and asking him for a return of his papers. The arbitrator replied by simply sending the plaintiff his application for arbitration, and undertaking to return the plaintiff's papers on receipt of the amount. The plaintiff next day (21st July) sent a solicitor's letter to the arbitrator setting out his grievances in great detail. On the 28th August, the present suit was filed.

Such being the facts as I find them, the question arises whether the award is, at law, binding on the plaintiff? It follows, from [311] what I have said, that the plaintiff did not know that the defendant had sent to the arbitrator the particular accounts I have referred to, and that he did not see them or offer any comment upon them, and that no opportunity was afforded him of doing so, except that arising from his receiving the duplicate letters asking the defendant, as well as himself, to send contracts and rates to the arbitrator. Now it is a well-established principle of law that an arbitrator ought not to hear or receive evidence from one side in the absence of the other side, without, if he does, giving the side affected by such evidence the opportunity of meeting and answering it. In Russell on Awards (7th ed., p. 191), the proposition is put thus :—"Neither side can be allowed to use any means of influencing his (the arbitrator's) mind, which are not known to, and capable of being met and resisted by, the other. As much as possible the arbitrator should decline to receive private communications from either litigant respecting the subject-matter of the reference. It is a prudent course to make a rule of handing over to the opponent all written statements sent to him by a party, and to take care that no kind of communication concerning the points under discussion be made to him without giving information of it to the other side." And, again, (p. 194): "This course of conduct, of examining one party, or the witnesses of one party, or receiving evidence from one party in the absence of the other, is often adopted by mercantile arbitrators. But the Courts in the above instance and in many others, have strongly repudiated the idea that a different course is allowable in this respect in the case of mercantile referees; and although the lawful usage of merchants may be imported into the contract of reference, they have said that the practice of receiving evidence which the party affected has no opportunity of meeting, is not a lawful one." "In every case in which matters are litigated, you must attend to the representations made on both sides, and you must not, in the administration of justice in whatever form, whether in the regularly constituted Courts or in arbitrations, whether before lawyers or merchants, permit one side to use means of influencing the conduct and the decisions of the Judge, which means are not known to the other side." Per Lord Langdale, M. R. in Harvey v. Shelton (1).

[312] In laying down the above proposition, it must be understood that it is subject to this qualification that the parties may agree that a reference may be conducted in any particular way, and such an agreement may be either express or implied from their conduct during the arbitration; and they may also, expressly or by their conduct, waive their objection to an irregular course of conduct on the part of the arbitrator. In the present case, there is no evidence of any agreement, expressed or implied, that the arbitration was not to be conducted on the ordinary lines; and applying the above principles to what, in fact, occurred, I think that the receipt, by the arbitrator, of the papers and documents sent to him by the defendants, with the comments contained in the defendant's letter of the 19th July, without giving the plaintiff the opportunity of seeing them or meeting the inferences deducible from them, would amount to such a breach of duty on the part of the arbitrator as would entitle the plaintiff to have the award set aside. The difficulty in the case arises from the circumstance that the plaintiff must have known, from the arbitrator's joint letter, that the defendants were asked to send the arbitrator particulars of the ruling rates of coal, and that the defendants would adopt means to furnish the arbitrator with information on that subject, and yet did not remonstrate against this course, or ask to see the defendants' proofs, but contented himself by replying that there was no rate fixed by reason of the absence of sales. It may be said that this is an acquiescence, on the plaintiff's part, in the course adopted by the arbitrator. I do not think that this is so. If I am correct in my view of the facts, the plaintiff expected another meeting, and the arbitrator calling for fresh evidence was eminently calculated to impress him in that expectation. So expecting, he would understand that he would have the opportunity to see and answer the defendants' rates and proofs. There was, in this view, nothing in the arbitrator's conduct in asking for fresh evidence which called for remonstrance. When the arbitrator made his award without any meeting and without giving him an opportunity of seeing the defendants' proofs of rates, he was, in my judgment, completely taken by surprise, which he expressed in very strong and uncourteous language, which a man is apt to use when he considers that he has been [313] unfairly dealt with. Under these circumstances, the award cannot, I am of opinion, be held binding on the plaintiff. I need not, therefore, consider the further objections made to it that the arbitrator ruled upon evidence in the shape of his own contract, but which neither party knew that he proposed to use. In my own mind, I am not satisfied that he did use it as evidence. It was not among the documents which were shown to and initialled by the plaintiff's solicitor, but as I have held against the award on another ground. It is unnecessary to pursue the question further. His reference to the book further confirms me in my view, that the arbitrator was, on the 18th July, without materials to guide him in fixing the price of coal, and must then have himself contemplated further evidence being necessary. I find the first issue in favour of the plaintiff.

I now turn to the question of damages. The defendants had intended the "Ethelaida," which carried a cargo of 3,395 tons of Davison's West Hartley coal, to satisfy the plaintiff's contract. She did not load in May, and so her cargo did not fulfil the conditions of the contract. She left Port Said on the 21st June, and arrived in Bombay on the 22nd July. On the 14th June, it was known to the defendants that she had not loaded in May, and they informed the plaintiff of this, and offered to cancel the contract. They, however, later on the same day declared her against the contract. Time letters then passed, in which the parties fenced with each other, each knowing that though the "Ethelaida" had been declared against the contract, her cargo did not fulfil its requirements. It was not, however, till the 28th June that the defendant repeated the statement made in his earlier letter of the 14th June, and the plaintiff refused her cargo; and at the defendant's request sent in a statement of his alleged losses amounting to Rs. 5,800-14-0. On that day, or two or three days later, a May shipment of Davison's West Hartley coal might naturally be expected to arrive in Bombay. It is not important to fix the date with precision, even if it were possible to do so. There is no evidence of any alteration in the market price of Davison's West Hartley coal between the 28th June and the first few days of July. The defendants cannot, I think, object to the [314] 28th June being taken, as they asked for the plaintiff's bill of damages on that day. A question arises as to the number of tons upon which the damages should be calculated. The plaintiff has suggested 3,300 tons according to the charter-party of "Ethelaida," but the "Ethelaida" was never, so to say, incorporated into the contract. The defendants declared her against the contract, but after they had informed the plaintiff that she had not loaded in May, the plaintiff refused her cargo. The contract which the defendants have broken is a contract to deliver a cargo of 2,500—3,500 tons, and not a contract to deliver the "Ethelaida's" cargo, which they were always ready and willing to deliver. The option rested with the defendants whether they would deliver 2,500 or 3,500 tons or any intermediate quantity, and upon no principle can the Court exercise that option for them and declare that they were liable to deliver more than a cargo of 2,500 tons.

Taking all the circumstances into consideration, (including the price of June shipment of Davison's coal and coal of other classes), I have, as a juror, come to the conclusion that the plaintiff could have sold a cargo of Davison's coal arriving at the end of June at Rs. 15-12 per ton. I justify that finding, in point of law, by the consideration that this coal was selling at Rs. 17 per ton during the week ending 23rd June, and that the defendants have not established a greater fall than one rupee per ton the following week. I have taken off four annas per ton, feeling that there would probably have been a difficulty in selling the whole cargo at Rs. 16. This is almost the exact loss which the plaintiff sustained by not being able to satisfy his contracts for the 2,250 tons with the coal purchased from the defendants. I find the second issue for the plaintiff : and on the third, that the plaintiff be entitled to recover Rs. 1,250 from the defendants. I pass a decree for the amount, but make no order as to costs.

MANCHARAM PRANJIVAN (Original Applicant), Appellant v. BAI MAHALI AND ANOTHER (Original Opponents), *Respondents.
[11th April, 1893.]

Succession Certificate Act (VII of 1889), s. 4 (a)—Preamble—Representative of a deceased person—Person claiming to be entitled to the effects of the deceased—Purchaser at sale in execution of a decree against a deceased person.

A certain debt due to P. (deceased) was sold in execution of a decree against him and was purchased by M. In order to enable him to recover the said debt, M applied to the District Judge for a certificate under the Succession Certificate Act (VII of 1889). The Judge rejected the application on the ground that the applicant was not a representative of the deceased.

Held, reversing the decree, that the applicant having purchased at the auction sale the debt as part of the deceased's effects, which was sold as such by the Court, was entitled to a certificate under s. 4 (a) of the Succession Certificate Act (VII of 1889).

FIRST appeal from the decision of J. B. Alcock, District Judge of Surat.

A firm named Motiram Kevalbhai was indebted to the extent of Rs. 1,075 to one Punjia Jagjivan, deceased, against whom a money decree was obtained by one Nathu Kasan in the Court of the Small Causes at Surat. In execution of the said decree the debt due by the firm of Motiram to the deceased Punjia was sold by public auction and purchased by Mancharam Pranjivan, who presented an application to the District Judge for a succession certificate, under Act VII of 1889, in order to recover the debt due to the deceased. The District Judge rejected the application, holding that the applicant was not a representative of the deceased.

The applicant appealed.

Govardhanram M. Tripathi, for the appellant.—It is not necessary that the applicant for a certificate under the Succession Certificate Act (VII of 1889) should be the actual heir of the deceased. Section 4 (a) of the Act expressly contemplates applicants like the present, and in such cases the preamble of the Act cannot be allowed to cut down the express enactment. In Kirparam v. Nagindas (1), the point has been virtually decided.

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C.J.—The District Judge dismissed the appellant's application for a certificate under s. 4 (a) of Act VII of 1889 on the ground that he was not a representative of the deceased Jagjivan, meaning, we presume, not his heir. The preamble to the Act speaks of representatives of the deceased. But s. 4 (a) expressly provides for the production of a certificate by a person suing the debtor of the deceased "who claims to be entitled to the effects of the deceased or to any part thereof." Here the appellant claims the debt as part of the deceased's effects which was sold as such by the Court and purchased by him at auction sale. In Kirparam v. Nagindas (1) it was apparently assumed, and we think correctly, that such a purchaser would require a certificate before the Court could pass a decree on the debt.

We must, therefore, reverse the decision of the lower Court and send back the case to be disposed of according to law without intending to express any opinion as to the merits. Costs to abide the result.

Decree reversed.

Husband and wife—Suit for restitution of conjugal rights—Cause of action—Jurisdiction.

The plaintiff sued his wife for restitution of conjugal rights in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Borsad, within whose local jurisdiction the plaintiff resided. Ths defendant contended (inter alia) that the Subordinate Judge of Borsad had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit, on the ground that she was living outside his jurisdiction. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit for want of jurisdiction. On appeal by the plaintiff, the decree was confirmed. On second appeal,

The cause of action, in a suit by a husband for restitution of conjugal rights, consists in the wife's absenting herself from her husband's house without his consent, and it must, therefore, be deemed to arise at his house.

The plaintiff sued his wife Bai Suraj and others for restitution of conjugal rights. The suit was filed in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Borsad, within whose local jurisdiction the plaintiff resided.

(1) P. J. for 1893, p. 55.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

18 B. 316.

The plaint alleged that Bai Suraj was plaintiff's wife, and lived and cohabited with him till about a year and a half prior to the institution of the suit, when she went to reside at her father's house, and declined to return to the plaintiff. The other defendants, who were the parents and other relatives of Bai Suraj, were joined, as she was acting under their advice.

The defendants alleged that the plaintiff ill-treated his wife, and contended (inter alia) that the Subordinate Judge of Borsad had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit, because they (the defendants) resided at Kasore, a village in the Gaikwar's territory.

The Subordinate Judge decided all the issues, on the merits of the case, in the plaintiff's favour, but rejected the suit, on the ground of want of jurisdiction, for the following reasons:—

"It is now to be seen whether the Court has jurisdiction to entertain this claim against these defendants, who reside at a place outside the jurisdiction of the Court. Under s. 17 of the Civil Procedure Code a suit may be instituted in a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction (a) the cause of action arises, or (b) all the defendants at the time of the commencement of the suit actually or voluntarily reside or carry on business or personally work for gain, or (c) any of the defendants at the time of the commencement of the suit actually or voluntarily resides * * * *; provided that either the leave of the Court is given or the defendants who do not reside * * * * as aforesaid, acquiesce in such institution. It seems that neither the cause of action has arisen, nor the defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 actually or voluntarily reside within the jurisdiction of this Court. According to the plaintiff's own allegations and also [318] according to the allegations of his witnesses Nos. 26 and 30, the defendant No. 1 went by the permission of her husband (the plaintiff) to her parents' house with her brother. The plaintiff admits that he had sent the witness No. 32 to call her, but that she did not come. Thus the cause of action arose at Kasore and not at Borsad. The cause of action accrued where the demand was made, and that demand was met with refusal. * * "I find that the Court has no jurisdiction, and the suit must be dismissed."

On appeal by the plaintiff the Joint Judge concurred with the Subordinate Judge in his view as to jurisdiction, and confirmed the decree.

The plaintiff preferred a second appeal.

Govardhanram M. Tripathi, for the appellant.—It is the duty of married persons to live together—Weldon v. Weldon (1); Dadaji v. Rukmabai (2). The cause of action, therefore, in cases like this, arises at the place from which the wife improperly absents herself, that is, at the husband's house; see also Binda v. Kaunsilia (3).

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—It is unnecessary to consider where the defendant was residing at the time the suit was instituted. The cause of action, in a suit by a husband for restitution of conjugal rights, arises from the duty of the wife to reside with her husband, unless he has been guilty of some matrimonial offence, which justifies her, in the eye of the law, in living apart from him. See the remarks of Sir J. Hannen in Weldon v. Weldon (1). As the cause of action consists in absenting herself from her husband's house without his consent, it must be deemed to arise at his house. In this view of the cause of action, it arose, in the present case, at Borsad, and the Subordinate Judge had, therefore, jurisdiction. We must, therefore, reverse the decree, and send back the case to the lower Court of Appeal for disposal on the merits.

Decree reversed and case sent back.

[319] APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Sir Charles Sargent, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Bayley.

DE SOUZA DEVINO (Original Plaintiff), Appellant v. THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL (Original Defendant), *Respondent. [20th April, 1893.]

Service inam land—Suit for a declaration of title to trees thereon and for damages—Jurisdiction of Civil Courts—Section 4†, Clause (a) of the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act (Bombay Act X of 1876)—Hereditary Offices Act (Bombay Act III of 1874)—Hereditary office—Hereditary officer—Officiator.

Section 4, cl. (a) of the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act (Bombay Act X of 1876) is not intended to apply only to the property appropriated to the payment of the officiating member of a vatandar family, the expression used being "hereditary officer" and not the person performing the duties of the "hereditary office" to which by the Hereditary Office Act (Bombay Act III of 1874) the distinct denomination of "Officiator" is given.

The plaintiff complained that he was prevented from cutting the trees growing on land situate in the village of Tungarli, belonging to certain persons who had sold the trees to him. He claimed damages and an injunction restraining the Collector from interfering with him. The defendant pleaded that the trees did not belong to the plaintiff's vendors, being on service inam land. The lower Court dismissed the plaintiff's claim, holding that the land, on which the trees were growing, was service inam land, and that the plaintiff's vendors had no title to them. On appeal, the High Court, on the evidence, upheld the lower Court's decision that the land was inam service land, but held that it did not necessarily [320] follow that the trees upon it were the property of Government and not of the vatandars. The latter might be the owners of the trees subject to a condition. The case was, therefore, remanded to the District Court for a finding on an issue as to whether the holders of service inam lands had a title to the trees on the lands, and if so, whether they had the right to cut down trees without the permission of the Collector. On this finding the District Judge found in the affirmative. The case then came again before the High Court, when a preliminary objection was taken that under s. 4 of Act X of 1876 the Court had no jurisdiction.

APPEL-LATE CIVIL.

18 B. 319.

Held, that it having been decided that the land in question was service inam land, the Court under s. 4. cl. (a) of Bombay Act X of 1876, ceased to have jurisdiction over the plaintiff's claim against Government in respect of the trees growing thereon, as such claims related to property appertaining to the office of a village officer.

FIRST appeal from the decision of T. Hart-Davies. Acting Assistant Judge of Poona.

Certain forest land (Survey No. 45) situate at the village of Tungarli, in the Poona District, belonged to one Sakharam bin Kondaji and his brothers, who were the vatandar patels of the village. In June, 1889, the plaintiff bought the trees standing in this land, and was proceeding to cut them down, when he was stopped by an order of the Forest Department dated 20th September, 1889. The Collector of Poona seized the wood that was cut and sold it, crediting the proceeds to Government. The plaintiff thereupon instituted this suit in the District Court of Poona, praying for damages and for an injunction restraining the Collector from preventing him cutting down the trees.

The defendant pleaded that the land was service vatan land, that the vatandars had no right to the trees growing upon it, and that the plaintiff was, therefore, not entitled to damages. The lower Court dismissed the plaintiff's claim, holding that the land was service inam land, and that the possession of land of that description did not, in the absence of an express stipulation in the sanad, include proprietary right in the trees growing upon it.

The plaintiff appealed.

Jardine (with Shivram V. Bhandarkar), for the appellant.

Rao Saheb Vasudev Jagannath Kirtikar, Government Pleader, for the respondent.

[321] 22*nd April*, 1892. SARGENT, C.J.—The plaintiff complains that he was prevented by order of the Collector of Poona from cutting the trees on certain land in the village of Tungarli belonging to Sakharam bin Kondaji and others, who had sold the trees to him, and from removing so much timber as he had already cut before the issue of the Collector's order. He sues for damages and for an injunction restraining the Collector from prohibiting him to cut the trees.

The defendant replies that the trees in question are not the property of the plaintiff's vendors, as they are on service inam land, the vendors being the holders of the patelki vatan of Tungarli, and that the amount of damages claimed is excessive.

The Assistant Judge has found that the plaintiff's vendors held the land, on which the trees were growing, as service inam, and that they had no title to the trees; and he has, therefore, rejected the claim.

The plaintiff's vendors are admittedly the patels of Tungarli; and the questions for consideration in this appeal are, first, whether they held the land in question as ordinary survey occupants, in which case their right to the trees would be undoubted, or whether the land forms part of their service inam land; and, secondly, if it forms a part of a service inam, whether the patels were owners of the trees sold to the plaintiffs and had the right to sell them without the Collector's permission,

The land is described in the documentary evidence, consisting of extracts from revenue records, as "No. 103" and as measuring 15 acres. This description does not correspond with that in the plaint; but it was not contended before us that the records produced in the case do not relate to the land in question. In those records, the land is entered as inam land, in respect of which a quit-rent of Rs. 2, equal in amount to the assessment, was leviable. The land is varkas land, on which no assessment was imposed till 1859-60. The patels had, apparently, used the land for the purpose of obtaining loppings of trees therefrom to burn as rab on the rice fields in their vatan land. Occasionally, they cultivated parts of this forest land ; and when they did so, they paid a one-third share of the crop to the Government and retained [322] the remainder themselves. The share paid to the Government was credited in the Government accounts as judi or quit-rent, and the two-thirds retained by the patels were held to form part of the emoluments of the vatan. (See Exs. Nos. 11 and 13 in appeal.) In 1859 60, an assessment seems for the first time to have been placed on the land. On the 10th July, 1860, the Superintendent of Revenue Survey made an order, which, we were informed, was applicable to this land and other similar lands, in which he intimated to the Collector that an assessment had been imposed on them, and that one-third of the assessment should be levied and two-thirds given credit for, whether the lands were actually cultivated or not. He added : "If those people do not agree to this proposal, you should, without paying any heed to their claims, take steps to levy the whole of the assessment settled on the aforesaid numbers." The Collector ordered the Mamlatdar to act upon this order. It would appear that, when this order was made, the varkas land of the patels of Tungarli was regarded by the Revenue authorities as appurtenant to their vatan ; and it was subsequently entered in the revenue books as forming a part of the vatan. The mere circumstance that a full assessment was levied on it would not, apparently, of itself alter the nature of the tenure. Whatever sum was paid by the patels in respect of this land, was credited as judi, and the land seems always to have been treated as service inam. In a petition, Ex. 43, which Kondaji Patel made in 1863, for permission to cut 20 cart-loads of fuel on the land, he described it as inam land standing in his name as 'Patel Pasodi.' In a similar petition, No. 44, made in 1865, he describes the land as bearing an assessment of Rs. 2 and continued in his vahivat as inam granted to him as inam Patel Pasodi. Against these admissions by the father of one of the plaintiff's vendors, and the evidence supplied by the Collector's books, there is no evidence to show that the patels held the land as survey occupants and not as part of their service inam lands. We must, therefore uphold the Assistant Judge's decision that the land is inam service land.

By a Resolution No. 9578 of the 19th December, 1889, (Ex. No. 79) the Government sanctioned the proposals of the [323] Commissioners of Divisions for conferring rights to forests on the holders of certain service inams. This Resolution, however, if applicable to the patelki vatan in Tungarli, had not been issued when the trees in dispute were sold and cut down. But it cannot be safely inferred from the issue of this Resolution in 1889 that the vatandars, to whom it was applicable, had, previously, no rights to trees on their vatan lands. They are not the holders of a succession of life estates. The whole family of vatandars owns the vatan ; and the holders of land are presumably the owners of the trees on the land. It may be argued that, as the vatan was granted as remuneration for service, the holders at any time are bound to keep the estate unimpaired as a source of remuneration to the officiating vatandars and to pass it on unimpaired to each successive generation of vatandars. But it does not follow that trees which may not be recklessly felled by the vatandars are the property of Government and not of the vatandars. They may be the owners of the trees subject to a condition. In the present case, no evidence has been pointed out to us as to the precise rights of vatandars in respect of trees on their service lands anterior to the issue of the Government Resolution of the 19th December, 1889. We think that enquiry should have been particularly directed to this point. As the evidence on the record is far too meagre to enable us to arrive at a satisfactory decision regarding it, we refer the following issue to the District Court for trial :—

Whether, before the issue of Government Resolution No. 9578 of the 19th December, 1889, the holders of service inam lands had a title to the trees on their lands ; and, if so, whether they had the right to cut down trees without the permission of the Collector ?

Both parties to be at liberty to adduce evidence on this point. The Court to certify its finding within three months.

On the above issue the District Judge (W. H. Crowe) found in the affirmative, but in his remarks he observed that the issue as framed was general, and did not confine itself to the land in dispute ; he, therefore, found in the affirmative with respect to the land in dispute as well as with respect to all service inam lands.

[324] Against the finding of the Judge the respondent (defendant) presented objections, which are not material for the purpose of this report.

Rao Saheb Vasudev Jagannath Kirtikar, Government Pleader, for the respondent (defendant).—We raise a preliminary objection with respect to jurisdiction. On the former occasion the Court found that the land in dispute was service inam land. Under the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act (Bombay Act X of 1876), s. 3, the term "land" includes trees standing thereon ; therefore the appellant's claim to the trees means claim to the land which is service inam. But the Civil Courts have no jurisdiction to entertain a claim with respect to such lands, and, that being so, the appellant's claim to the trees cannot be entertained—s. 4 of the Act.

[SARGENT, C.J.—Why was not this point taken on the last occasion ?]

There were no instructions on the last occasion to urge the point. The objection is fatal to the appellant's claim.

Macpherson (with Shivram V. Bhandarkar), for the appellant (plaintiff).—The question to be considered is whether the claim relates to land at all. In order to oust the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts under the Revenue Jurisdiction Act the land must be declared to be service inam by the Government under s. 4. There is nothing, in the present case, to show that the Government has made any such declaration. What the Government did, was that the revenue of the land was credited as judi, and nothing more. But the crediting of the revenue as judi is quite a different thing from a declaration. It was impliedly argued that, as the Government credited the revenue as judi the act of the Government should be considered to be a declaration. But that cannot be done. The declaration by the Government must be strictly proved, and no amount of book-keeping will alter the character of the land.

[SARGENT, C.J.—Though there is no formal declaration by the Government, still the Government having all along treated the land as service inam, the conduct of the Government may amount to a declaration.]

[325] We submit that under s. 4 of the Act there must be an actual declaration by the Government, and without such declaration anything done by the Government cannot operate to our prejudice. A vatan cannot be brought into existence by a village kulkarni, who is merely a village accountant, or by entries made in the revenue records. The present vatan is a new one, and s. 22 of the Vatandars Act (Bombay III of 1876) applies to it. Under that section the Government is authorized to create a vatan, and when the Government has exercised that authority, then under the Revenue Jurisdiction Act (X of 1876) the Government should by itself or by an officer duly authorized declare that a vatan has been so created. The Government may create a vatan; but, unless it is declared to be a vatan, it does not become a vatan as such.

We further contend that s. 4 of the Revenue Jurisdiction Act has no application to the present case, because it relates to the property of a hereditary officer, that is, the property which the officiating vatandar is to enjoy on account of the service rendered by him.

On the point of jurisdiction we contend that there are no materials before the Court to allow the plea; we, therefore, submit that the appeal should be decided on the merits.

(The case was then argued on the merits.)

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C.J.—In this case the Court, having found that the land in question was service inam land, sent down an issue for determination as to whether, before the issue of Government Resolution No. 9578 of 19th December, 1889, the holders of service inam lands had a title to the trees on their lands, and, if so, whether they had the right to cut down trees without the permission of the Collector. The District Judge has found this issue in the affirmative on two grounds, the first of which is applicable to the particular lands as being, in his opinion, "unalienated" land within the contemplation of s. 40 of the Revenue Code, V of 1879, and the second applies to all service inam lands.

A preliminary objection, however, has now been taken by Rao Saheb Vasudev Jagannath Kirtikar, for the defendant, that the [326] Civil Courts have no jurisdiction to try the question which is the subject of the issue sent down, as being a "matter" within the contemplation of s. 4, cl. (a) of Act X of 1876. It was said that this Court having decided that the land was service inam land, and not survey occupancy land as the plaintiff contended, it ceased to have jurisdiction over the plaintiff's claim against Government in respect of the trees, as such a claim would be "relating to property appertaining to the office of a village officer." We think that this is the necessary result of the above section. The plaintiff's claim, having regard to our finding and to the definition of 'land' as contained in the Act, undoubtedly "relates to property appertaining to the office of a hereditary officer." But it was said indeed that cl. (a) was only intended to apply to property appropriated to the payment of the officiating member of the family. The expression used, however, is "hereditary officer" and not the persons performing the duties of the "hereditary office" to which by the Hereditary office Act, III of 1874, the distinct denomination is given of "officiator," and by which we should expect him to have been referred to in s. 4, cl. (a) of the Act of 1876, had the intention been, as appellant contends it was, to confine the term "property" to his remuneration.

We feel, therefore, constrained to hold that the Court by deciding the land was service inam land ceased to have jurisdiction over the plaintiff's claim, and we must, therefore, reject the claim on that account with costs.

Before Mr. Justice Candy and Mr. Justice Fulton.

KESHAVLAL GIRDHARLAL (Original Plaintiff), Appellant v. BAI PARVATI (Original Defendant), *Respondent.

[20th April, 1893.]

Husband and wife—Restitution of conjugal rights—Decree—Decree not executed—Subsequent voluntary co-habitation followed again by desertion—Satisfaction of decree—Second suit for restitution of conjugal rights—Res judicata—Cause of action—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 13 and 244.

Plaintiff obtained a decree against his wife for restitution of conjugal rights in 1885 which was never executed. In 1887, however, she returned to his house, and stayed with him for two months. She afterwards deserted him again. Thereupon the plaintiff filed a second suit for restitution of conjugal rights.

Held, that the suit was not barred either under s. 13 or 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882). A second withdrawal from cohabitation constitutes a fresh cause of action.

THIS was a second appeal from the decision of T. Hart-Davies, Joint Judge of Ahmedabad, in appeal No. 75 of 1891 of the district file.

In 1885 the plaintiff obtained a decree against his wife for restitution of conjugal rights. He made several attempts to execute the decree, but failed. In June, 1887, however, his wife returned and lived with him for about two months. She applied to the Court to enter satisfaction of the decree in accordance with s. 258 of the Code of Civil Procedure (XIV of 1882). But this application was rejected on the ground that it was not made within twenty days.

Subsequently she again deserted the plaintiff, and in 1890 he filed this suit for restitution of conjugal rights.

This suit was dismissed by the Subordinate Judge on the ground that the matter was res judicata.

This decision was confirmed, on appeal, by the Joint Judge, who held that the plaintiff's only relief was by way of execution of the decree already obtained, but that that remedy was barred.

The plaintiff thereupon preferred a second appeal to the High Court.

[328] Ganpat Sadashiv Rao, for appellant.—The present suit is not barred under s. 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It is not based on the same cause of action as the former suit. The decree in the former suit was satisfied when the wife returned and stayed with her husband for some time. Her subsequent desertion gave a fresh cause of action. A wife's desertion of her husband constitutes a continuing wrong giving rise to constantly recurring causes of action, on demand and refusal. See Bai Sari v. Sankla Hirachand (1). The present suit is not, therefore, barred.

Rao Saheb Vasudev Jagannath Kirtikar, for respondent.—The plaintiff, having already obtained a decree for restitution of conjugal rights, his only remedy was to execute that decree, and not to bring a fresh suit for asserting the same rights. If a fresh suit, like the present, were permitted, there would be no end to litigation ; it would be in the power of the husband to detain his wife in jail for an indefinite period. Such a result could not have been contemplated by the Legislature. Section 260 of the Code of Civil Procedure (XIV of 1882) clearly shows that, if the wife has once undergone imprisonment for six months for disobeying a decree for restitution of conjugal rights, the matter is at an end. She cannot be imprisoned again in execution of the decree. See Ardesar Jahangir v. Avabai (1). If further proceedings in execution are barred, a fortiori a fresh suit in respect of the same matter is equally barred, whether we take into consideration s. 13 or s. 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

JUDGMENT.

CANDY, J.—The facts in this case are simple. Plaintiff obtained in 1885 a decree for restitution of conjugal rights. He made some attempts to execute the decree, which apparently failed owing to his being unable to serve notice on defendant. Then defendant applied to the Magistrate for an order of maintenance against her husband. The Magistrate told her that she must go and live with her husband. She did so twice. It is clear that in 1887 she lived with him for two months. And she applied to the Subordinate Judge to enter up satisfaction of her husband's decree, but the Subordinate Judge replied that he could not do so under s. 258, as she had not applied within twenty days. [329] Then, in 1890, the present suit was filed by the husband, the Subordinate Judge at the same time deciding a suit filed by the wife for maintenance, holding that the husband had not turned the wife out of his house, and that she was not entitled to separate maintenance. The Subordinate Judge and the Joint Judge, in appeal, held that the husband's claim for restitution of conjugal rights must also be rejected. The Joint Judge was of opinion that as the wife's living with her husband in 1887 was not in execution of the decree, the husband's only relief was by way of executing his former decree, and that was now barred. I am unable to adopt that view, according to which, if the wife, after decree, went to live with her husband for three years and a day, though not in execution of the decree, and she then left her husband, he would be for ever barred from obtaining a fresh restitution of conjugal rights. Whether a husband, who has obtained a decree for restitution of conjugal rights, which can, in no sense, be said to have been satisfied, can at any time file a fresh suit for restitution, is not the question before us. Nor, indeed, is the question put by the Joint Judge, whether the husband having executed his decree by imprisoning the wife for six months can bring a fresh suit after a fresh demand and refusal. Here the wife returned to her husband and bona fide lived with him for two months. Then she left him. She may have a good defence of her conduct. Circumstances may have arisen entitling her to leave him. These, if existing, should be pleaded in a fresh suit if brought, rather than on an application for execution of the former decree. Therefore, I think that the lower Courts were wrong in holding that the present action is barred by the former suit of 1885. I would reverse the decision of the District Court, and remand the case for re-hearing. Costs to abide the result.

FULTON, J.—The Joint Judge having found that subsequently to the first decree for restitution of conjugal rights the defendant did return and live with her husband for a short time, I am unable to see on what principle it can be held that the present claim is barred by the previous suit. As pointed out in Dadaji Bhikaji v. Rukmabai (2), "the gist of the action for restitution [330] of conjugal rights is, that married persons are bound to live together, and that one or other has withdrawn himself or herself without lawful cause," and it does not seem possible to argue that a second withdrawal of a wife from cohabitation does not constitute a cause of action just as much as a first withdrawal. Consequently, it follows that, unless it can be shown that a second suit for restitution of conjugal rights is barred by some section of the Civil Procedure Code, such suit will lie. Now, if the Subordinate Judge's view were correct, that the decree in a suit for restitution of conjugal rights directed the defendant to live permanently with the plaintiff, there would be a great deal of force in the argument that either s. 13 or s. 244 would be a bar to a second suit; but I am unable to agree with him as to the real nature of the decree. No form is prescribed by the schedule to the Code, but the reported cases referred to in Woodman's Digest, columns 5100 and 5101, show that the proper form is simply that the wife do return and live with her husband. The learned Subordinate Judge has argued that such a decree is not limited as to time, and that, therefore, any subsequent desertion by the wife is a disobedience of the decree, and not a fresh cause of action. But it appears to me that the Court cannot direct a wife to live with her husband for the rest of her life, as many things may occur entitling her to leave him. Gross cruelty would justify her departure, and it would be very anomalous if the decree should direct permanent cohabitation without regard to the possibility of occurrences which might render it dangerous. All, then, that the decree appears to order, is that the wife do return to her husband's house in order to live with him, and when she has once done so with the bona fide intention of cohabitation, it seems that the decree is satisfied and incapable of further execution. In the case of Motiram Harkisan v. Bai Mancha (1), an application for execution was made by a husband on the desertion of his wife after her return to him for three days under a decree for restitution of conjugal rights, but the application was rejected on other grounds, and the question whether the wife's return for three days satisfied the decree, was not considered. The answer to such a question, however, would [331] appear to depend on the intention of the wife returning to her husband's house. If she did so with the bona fide intention of living with him, her return would, I think, constitute a complete satisfaction of the decree; but if she had not such intention, and meant to run away again after a merely nominal compliance, the Court would probably hold that the decree was not satisfied. The intention could only be determined by reference to the circumstances of her return and subsequent withdrawal.

In the present case, it appears that the wife applied to the Court, under s. 258, to enter satisfaction of the decree, but that her application was refused, as the time for making it had expired. It may well be doubted whether s. 258 has any application to a decree for restitution of conjugal rights; but the fact that she made such application, shows that she intended to live with her husband when she returned to his house, and that the decree has, in fact, been satisfied.

Under these circumstances, I think that the subsequent withdrawal of the wife gave a fresh cause of action; but I abstain from deciding whether, whilst a decree for restitution remains unsatisfied, a husband can file a second suit based on the continued absence of his reluctant wife, and thereby, as feared by the Subordinate Judge, succeed in detaining her permanently in jail, or whether such second suit to obtain a result already directed by the first decree will not be barred by s. 244, Civil Procedure Code.

I concur in reversing the decree of the Courts below, and remanding the case to the Court of the District Judge for disposal on the other issues arising between the parties, and in directing that the costs of this appeal do abide the result.

TRIKAM MADHAV SHET (Original Plaintiff), Appellant v. HIRJI HARJIVAN SHET (Original Defendant), *Respondent. [12th June, 1893.]

Registration—Mortgage—Priority—Unregistered mortgage with possession and without notice not entitled to priority as against a mortgage earlier in date, but subsequently registered—Bombay Regulation IX of 1827—Act XIX of 1843—Possession—Hindu law.

The plaintiff sued to enforce a mortgage dated 8th June, 1863, which was registered on 15th September, 1864, but was unaccompanied with possession. The defendant relied on a mortgage of the same property dated 9th May, 1864. This mortgage was unregistered, but was accompanied with possession.

Held, that, apart from any special peculiarities of Hindu law, the plaintiff's mortgage of the 8th June, 1863, which was registered on the 15th September, 1864, was entitled to priority over the unregistered mortgage of the 9th May, 1864, although the latter was without notice of the earlier mortgage and was accompanied with possession,

Held, also, that plaintiff's mortgage was not invalid under Hindu law owing to its not being accompanied with possession.

[R., 27 B. 452 (472).]

SECOND appeal from the decision of C. E. G. Crawford, District Judge of Thana, in Appeal No. 225 of 1890.

The plaintiff sued to enforce his mortgage lien by sale of a portion of the property mortgaged.

He claimed under three following mortgage-deeds executed by the defendant Bhagu and his father Chimnia, each being a renewal of the one preceding it, viz.—

(1). 11th January, 1860, not registered or accompanied with possession.

(2). 8th June, 1863 registered on the 15th September, 1864, but not accompanied with possession.

(3). 4th August, 1867, registered, but not accompanied with possession.

The present suit was filed in 1889. Defendants Nos. 1 to 4 did not contest the claim.

Defendant No. 5 pleaded that he was in possession, and he relied upon a mortgage executed by Bhagu and Chimnia to one Mahadaji Ravji, dated 9th May, 1864, which was not registered [333] but which was accompanied with possession. He contended that he was entitled to the benefit of this mortgage, he having, in 1878, advanced money to Bhagu and Chimnia to pay it off, and having then obtained a fresh mortgage to himself, which was duly registered and under which he had ever since been in possession.

The Subordinate Judge passed a decree for the plaintiff, holding that though the defendant was entitled to the benefit of Mahadaji's mortgage, Mahadaji had notice of the plaintiff's prior mortgages, and that plaintiff, therefore, had a preferential right over the defendant, who stood in Mahadaji's place.

On appeal, the District Judge reversed the lower Court's decree, holding that there had been no sufficient notice to Mahadaji of the plaintiff's prior mortgage.

The plaintiff filed a second appeal to the High Court.

The question argued was whether the plaintiff's mortgage of 8th June, 1863, was preferable to Mahadaji's later mortgage of 9th May, 1864, which, though unregistered, was accompanied with possession; the plaintiffs' mortgage not having been registered until the 15th September 1864.

Vasudev Gopal Bhandarkar, for appellant.

Mahadeo Chimnaji Apte, for respondent.

The following authorities were referred to in argument:—Hari Ramchandra v. Mahadaji Vishnu (1); Balaram Nemchand v. Appa (2); Lallubhai v. Bai Amrit (3).

JUDGMENT.

CANDY, J.—The mortgage of 8th June, 1863, which the plaintiff seeks to enforce, was registered on the 15th September, 1864, but was unaccompanied with possession.

The mortgage to Mahadaji relied on by the fifth defendant was dated the 9th May, 1864, and was accompanied with possession, but was unregistered.

The portions of the Registration Law in force when these transactions took place, which govern this case, are contained in s. 6 of Reg. IX of 1827 and s. 2 of Act XIX of 1843, and are as follows:—

[334] Section 6 of Reg. IX of 1827:—"Every deed or other writing transferring or mortgaging immoveable property situated within the zilla if registered in the register of title-deeds shall, without regard to the date of execution, if proved to be valid, be preferred to and satisfied before any deed of the nature of those * specified in s. 3, cl. 1, either subsequently registered or not registered at all; but this preference shall extend only to the immoveable property thereby transferred or mortgaged."

Section 2 of Act XIX of 1843:—"And it is hereby enacted that from the first day of May last past every deed of sale, or gift of lands, houses or other real property, a memorial of which has been or shall be duly registered according to law, shall, provided its authenticity be established to the satisfaction of the Court, invalidate any other deed of sale or gift for the same property which may not have been registered, and whether such second or other deed shall have been executed prior or subsequent to the registered deed; and that from the said day every deed of mortgage on land, houses, and other real property, as well as certificates of the discharge of such incumbrances, a memorial of which has been or shall be duly registered according to law, and provided its authenticity be established to the satisfaction of the Court, shall be satisfied in preference to any other mortgage on the same property which may not have been registered, and whether such second or other mortgage shall have been executed prior or subsequent to the registered mortgage, any knowledge or notice of any such unregistered deed or certificate alleged to be had by any party to such registered deed or certificate notwithstanding."

The District Judge has found, on the evidence, that it is not proved that when Mahadaji obtained his mortgage of the 9th May, 1864, he had any notice of the prior mortgage of 8th June, 1863, and no grounds have been shown to us for questioning the correctness of this finding.

[335] On these facts it seems clear that, apart from any special pecularities of Hindu law, the mortgage of 8th June, 1863, registered on 15th September, 1864, must prevail over the unregistered mortgage of 9th May 1864. The language of s. 2 of Act XIX of 1843 is so clear as to admit of no dispute on this point. But it was urged that, as the parties were Hindus, the mortgage of the 9th May, 1864, must get preference, as it was accompanied with possession. The case of Balaram Nemchand v. Appa (1) and of Lallubhai v. Bai Amrit (2) were relied on to support this theory. But in the former of these cases the unregistered deed of sale accompanied with possession was anterior in date to the registered mortgage; and in the latter both documents were registered and the latter was preferred to the earlier, on the ground that it was accompanied with delivery of possession, which under Hindu law was held essential to complete the title of the vendee. On the other hand, there is the decision of Couch, C. J., and Warden, J., in the case of Sunder v. Gopal (3) (which does not seem to have been alluded to in Lallubhai v. Bai Amrit), of which the facts are fully explained on p. 182 of I.L.R., 6 Bom., in the judgment in Lakshmandass Sarupchand v. Dasrat. The remarks made in that judgment on this case are as follows:—

"Sundar v. Gopal (3) decided by the High Court (Couch, C. J., and Warden, J.) in 1867 was a case from the Konkan. It was a struggle between a registered mortgagee without possession against a subsequent purchaser with possession. The dates show that it must have turned wholly upon the force of Reg. IX of 1827, s. 6, and not upon any theory as to registration being notice. The mortgage was dated 22nd March, 1851. The deed of purchase was dated 12th March, 1855. The mortgage was registered on the 19th October, 1859, and the deed of purchase (as an examination of the records shows was registered on the 24th December, 1860. The registration of the mortgage, being subsequent to the execution of the deed of purchase, could neither have afforded notice, nor the means of obtaining notice, of the mortgage to the purchaser before he made his purchase and [336] obtained possession of the mortgaged premises; but the registration of the mortgage being anterior to the registration of the deed of purchase, gave, by virtue of Reg. IX of 1827, s. 6, to the mortgagee priority over the purchaser notwithstanding his possession. The parties were Hindus."

The facts of this case are, it will be noticed, very similar to those of the present case. In both the earlier cases, the mortgage unaccompanied with possession was not registered till after the delivery of possession to the subsequent alienee. The only difference is that in Sundar v. Gopal the later conveyance was a deed of sale, while here it was mortgage.

This distinction, however, does not seem to affect the decision. In the earlier case the judgment was based on Reg. IX of 1827. In the present instance, as both documents were of the same class and notice of the earlier was not proved, we may rely both on the Regulation and on Act XIX of 1843, by either of which the registered mortgage is to be preferred to the unregistered document. It is true that in Lallubhai v. Bai Amrit (1) the Court laid stress on the necessity of a transfer of possession as the complement of a contract of sale in order to effect an absolute change of ownership; but this judgment is qualified by the decision of the Privy Council in Kali Das Mullick v. Kanhya Lal Pundit (2), which has been followed by this Court in Ugarchand v. Madappa (3), Lullubhai v. Keso (4), Shankar v. Visaji (5), and Ramchandra v. Mhasu (6). Moreover, in Lallubhai v. Bai Amrit it was pointed out that the transfer of possession might be replaced by registration.

We are, therefore, unable to hold that the registered mortgage, on which the plaintiff relies, was invalid by Hindu law owing to its not being accompanied with possession; and as it was anterior in date to Mahadaji's mortgage (though subsequently registered), it is impossible to apply the reasoning followed in Balaram Nemchand v. Appa (7), in which it was held that a vendor having by an unregistered deed sold an estate, and having completed the [337] transaction by delivery of possession, retained no interest therein on which a subsequently executed and registered deed of sale could operate. This judgment was explained in Sambhubhai v. Shivlaldas (8) as follows:—"What we decided in that case was that the priority given by Reg. IX of 1827 and Act XIX of 1843 to registered over unregistered instruments did not operate to defeat the title of a person who had obtained possession under an unregistered conveyance previously to the execution of a registered conveyance to another person."

Under these circumstances, then, we think that we must follow the decision in Sunder v. Gopal (9), which is strictly in accordance with the provisions of the registration law in force when the transactions took place, and has never been overruled. We, accordingly, reverse the decision of the District Judge and restore that of the Subordinate Judge, with costs on the respondent (defendant No. 5) in this Court and the lower appellate Court.

Indian Succession Act (X of 1865), ss. 190, 266—Executor de son tort—Suit by one executor de son tort against another—Letters of administration—Administration suit.

D, a Parsi, died intestate in 1877, leaving him surviving a widow, three daughters and two sons A and F. On D's death his sons without taking out administration assumed the management of the estate, and each received sums of money on account of it. The widow and daughters of the deceased obtained letters of administration, but limited to the extent of their interest in the estate. In 1888 A brought a suit against his brother F and the other members of the family to recover out of the estate a certain sum of money advanced by him to D.

[338] Held, that the estate being unrepresented, the suit could not be maintained (s. 190 of Act X of 1865). The letters of administration issued to the widow and daughters of the deceased being limited only to the extent of their shares in the estate, were not letters of administration such as are meant by s. 190 of the Indian Succession Act (X of 1865).

Held, also, that the only course open to the plaintiff was to take proceedings for the appointment of an administrator of the estate who would either administer it by the payments of the debts and the distribution of the surplus (if any) amongst the heirs after taking an account of all property already received out of it by the creditors or heirs or who could be compelled to do so by an administration suit.

APPEAL from the decision of L. G. Fernandez, First Class Subordinate Judge of Poona, in Suit No. 88 of 1888.

One Dorabji Pestonji Ghaswala died intestate on the 23rd August, 1877, leaving him surviving two sons, Adarji and Framji, a widow, and three daughters. He left considerable moveable and immoveable property at Poona.

On his death his estate was managed by his sons Adarji and Framji. Both of them collected the rents and outstandings of the estate and both dealt with the creditors of the deceased by executing and renewing khatas in their favour. They even mortgaged a portion of the estate to pay off the debts of the deceased. But they did not take out letters of administration to the estate of their deceased father.

The widow and the daughters of the deceased obtained letters of administration, but limited to their shares or interests in the deceased's estate.

In 1888 Adarji filed a suit against his brother Framji and all other members of the family to recover a sum of Rs. 61,948-8-0 alleged to be due to him on account of moneys lent and advanced to his deceased father from time to time during his life-time. He sought to recover the amount by sale of the deceased's property.

Defendant No. 1, Framji, denied the alleged loans to the deceased, and contended that the suit was not maintainable in its present form.

Defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4 admitted the plaintiff's claim.

JUNE 12.
APPELLATE CIVIL.
18 B. 337.

The Subordinate Judge passed a decree in plaintiff's favour, directing that the amount claimed should be recovered by sale of the deceased Dorabji's property.

[339] Defendant No. 1 appealed to the High Court.

Macpherson (with him Shivram Vithal Bhandarkar), for appellant (defendant):—Dorabji died intestate. Neither the plaintiff nor any other member of his family has taken out letters of administration in respect of the deceased's estate. That being the case, the suit must fail under s. 190 of the Indian Succession Act (X of 1865). The letters of administration granted to the deceased's widow and daughters are only limited to their right of suing for their shares. There is no provision in the Act for granting letters of administration otherwise than of the whole estate—In re Bai Ferozbai (1); In the goods of Ram Chand Seal (2). As a creditor, the plaintiff might and ought to have obtained letters of administration. His proper remedy was an administration suit. He cannot be allowed now to convert the present suit into an administration suit.

P. M. Metha (with him Ghanasham Nilkant Nadkarni), for respondent (plaintiff):—The defendant No. 1 has been managing the estate of his deceased father ever since his death. In the absence of letters of administration he made himself an executor de son tort. As such, he is answerable to a creditor like the plaintiff to the extent of the assets that may have come into his hands. We can, therefore, proceed against him under s. 266 of the Act X of 1865. As to the necessity of obtaining letters of administration under s. 190 of the Act, this point does not appear either in the pleadings or the issues raised in the lower Court. It must be, therefore, taken to have been waived. It would not be right to reject the claim on this technical ground.

JUDGMENT.

CANDY, J.—The plaintiff, who is the son of the late Dorabji Pestonji Ghaswala, has sued his brother defendant No. 1 and other members of his family to recover Rs. 61,948 said to be due to him from the estate of his father. The first Class Subordinate Judge passed a decree for the amount claimed with subsequent interest recoverable by the sale of certain properties described in the plaint and, in case of deficiency, from the other estate of Dorabji Pestonji.

[340] Against this decree the first defendant has appealed. At the commencement of the hearing, his counsel, Mr. Macpherson, raised the objection that the suit was wholly barred by s. 190 of the Indian Succession Act. The point was taken in the lower Court, but was disposed of by the Subordinate Judge with the following remark:—

"It was urged that s. 190 of the Indian Succession Act bars this suit. But it has been admitted that letters of administration of Dorabji's estate have already been issued to some of the defendants."

To this mode of dealing with the question Mr. Macpherson objected, stating that the only letters of administration issued were granted to the widow and daughters of the deceased, limited to the extent of their interests in the estate. He contended, on the authority of In Re Bai Ferozbai (1) and In the goods of Ram Chand Seal (2), that such limited administration could not be granted and was wholly invalid; but, without deciding whether the letters in question have any validity in regard to the shares of the ladies who obtained them, it seems clear that they are not letters of administration such as are meant by s. 190. They purport to deal only with such shares in the estate as the ladies may be entitled to, and thereby expressly exclude the portions of the estate required for the payment of the deceased's debts.

(1) P. J. (1884) p. 172.

(2) 5 C. 2.

Mr. Mehta, however, contended that the suit would lie under s. 266 of the Succession Act (X of 1865), in as much as Framji by intermeddling with the deceased's estate was an executor of his own wrong. Now there can be no doubt that a creditor may sue an executor de son tort for the recovery of his claim; and assuming that the plaintiff was a creditor as he alleged in his plaint, and that Framji had intermeddled with his father's estate and had assumed the management of it, we held that we could not, at that stage, without going into the evidence, dismiss the claim, which prima facie was sustainable against defendant No. 1 to the extent of the assests which might have come into his hands. [341] But on examining the evidence it became abundantly clear that the plaintiff was, just as much as his brother, an executor de son tort. and Mr. Macpherson thereon renewed his claim for the dismissal of the suit on the ground that without taking out administration one executor of his own wrong could not sue another or enforce his claims against the estate. This contention must, we think, prevail. The plaintiff's own evidence shows that after the death of their father on 23rd August, 1877, both brothers assumed the joint management of his estate. Sometimes the one recovered the rents due for bungalows belonging to the estate and sometimes the other. The plaintiff collected all the rent due by Mr. Moore after Dorabji's decease. Some of it was credited in the family account books and some not. The plaintiff cashed one cheque for Rs. 6,000 and gave another for Rs. 7,000 to Framji. He received and retained a sum of Rs. 4,000, as he had paid some of the deceased's creditors out of his own funds. He joined with Framji in executing and renewing khatas in favour of other creditors of the deceased, and in mortgaging to one Natu some of the deceased's property. The family account books remained under the control of both brothers, as is clear from the fact that in February, 1888, the plaintiff had them examined by his own pleaders, while, in the following month, Framji removed some of them, at least temporarily (we are not now considering the question whether he abstracted two of them altogether), and subsequently returned them to the karkun Bapuji. Under these circumstances, until an account is taken in an administration suit of all the sums that have come into the hands of the plaintiff on the one side and Framji on the other, it is impossible to say to what extent the plaintiff remains a creditor of the estate. The Subordinate Judge has dealt with the subject in discussing the 5th issue; but we are unable to agree with him in thinking that this suit having been brought by the plaintiff as one of the creditors of Dorabji's estates, other accounts between him and Dorabji's estate as one of the heirs of Dorabji cannot be imported into it, or that an administration suit would not be a more appropriate remedy. Until we know what amount the plaintiff has hitherto received out of Dorabji's estate it is impossible to say to what [342] extent that estate remains indebted to him. Under these circumstances we consider—(1) That the only course open to the plaintiff was to take proceedings to obtain the appointment of an administrator of the estate who either would administer it by the payments of the debts and the distribution of the surplus (if any) amongst the heirs after taking an account of all property already received out of it by the creditors or heirs, or who could be compelled to do so by an administration suit; and (2) that this suit must be dismissed with costs throughout.

This finding renders it unnecessary to go into the other questions argued on the appeal, and we, therefore, think it needless to express an opinion as to the validity of the alleged equitable mortgage or the effect of the alleged payment of interest by Framji. As, however, serious aspersions were thrown on Framji's character in reference to the disappearance of the books, and the whole of the evidence on this point was fully discussed, we think it right to say that that evidence, though it gives rise to some suspicion, does not appear to us to prove conclusively that the missing books were stolen or abstracted by him.

* Second Appeal No. 1000 of 1891.

(1) Section 35, Specific Relief Act (I of 1877):—

Any person interested in a contract in writing may sue to have it rescinded, and such rescission may be adjudged by the Court in any of the following cases, namely:—

(a) where the contract is voidable or terminable by the plaintiff;

(b) where the contract is unlawful for causes not apparent on its face, and the defendant is more to blame than the plaintiff;

(c) where a decree for specific performance of a contract of sale, or of a contract to take a lease, has been made, and the purchaser or lessee makes default in payment of the purchase-money or other sums which the Court has ordered him to pay.

When the purchaser or lessee is in possession of the subject-matter, and the Court finds that such possession is wrongful, the Court may also order him to pay to the vendor or lessor the rents and profits, if any, received by him as such possessor.

In the same case, the Court may, by order in the suit in which the decree has been made and not complied with, rescind the contract, either so far as regards the party in default, or altogether, as the justice of the case may require.

(Govind) had obtained against Balaji Keshav ; that, after the attachment had been levied, he and the defendant had agreed that they would together pay off the debt due to Govind, plaintiff paying Rs. 200 of it and the defendant the remainder ; that Govind should apply to the Court to sell the mortgaged land in separate lots, and that the plaintiff and the defendant would not bid against each other at the sale, but that each would purchase the portion of the land which had been mortgaged to him ; that, of the Rs. 200 promised by the plaintiff, Rs. 100 should be paid by him immediately and the other Rs. 100 after the sales had taken place.

At the time of the agreement, however, the plaintiff had no money with him. It was arranged, therefore, that the defendant should at once pay this Rs. 100 to Govind, and the plaintiff executed a bond to the defendant for that amount.

[344] The plaintiff alleged that at the auction sale, which afterwards took place, the defendant, in breach of the above agreement, purchased some of the land which had been mortgaged to the plaintiff, and thus failed to fulfil the condition under which the bond had been passed. The plaintiff, therefore, brought this suit to have the bond for Rs. 100 cancelled.

The defendant denied that any agreement of the nature alleged by the plaintiff had been made, and alleged that when the lands of Balaji Keshav were attached by Govind Nagesh, the plaintiff applied to have the attachment raised, and had promised to pay Govind Nagesh Rs. 100 if he would not oppose the application ; that as the plaintiff had at the time no ready cash with him, he got the defendant to pay the money for him, and for this payment had executed the bond to the defendant. He further contended that the agreement alleged by the plaintiff was illegal.

The Subordinate Judge (Rao Saheb M. G. Phatak) found that the plaintiff's allegations were proved, and that the consideration and object of the agreement were unlawful under s. 23 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872), and that the bond was, therefore, void and should be cancelled (1). He passed a decree for the plaintiff. In his judgment he said :—

"The agreement alleged and proved by the plaintiff is without any consideration, or at least the consideration or object of the agreement was unlawful. The parties had agreed to purchase the lands mortgaged to them alone, and were not to interfere [345] with the bids of each other. This was certainly injurious to the interest of the judgment-debtor, as the parties by their agreement had consented to allow each other to purchase the property at the lowest possible bids amongst themselves. The consideration or object of the agreement becomes unlawful under s. 23 of the Contract Act, as it implies injury to the property of the third person. Any bond executed in pursuance of such an agreement inherits the defect of the original agreement, and must on that account be held to be void."

(1) Section 23 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872) :—

The consideration or object of an agreement is lawful unless—it is forbidden by law ; or is of such a nature that, if permitted, it would defeat the provisions of any law ; or is fraudulent ; or involves or implies injury to the person or property of another ; or the Court regards it as immoral, or opposed to public policy.

In each of these cases, the consideration or object of an agreement is said to be unlawful. Every agreement of which the object or consideration is unlawful is void.

Section 24.—If any part of a single consideration for one or more objects, or any one or any part of any one of several considerations for a single object, is unlawful, the agreement is void.

JUNE 15.
APPELLATE CIVIL.
18 B. 342.

On appeal by the defendant the Court confirmed the decree on the following grounds :--

"Under s. 24 of the Contract Act, where any one of the objects, or any part of the consideration, is illegal, the contract is void. Under the circumstances disclosed by the evidence, an illegal object has entered into the transaction, of which the bond sued on is a part, and the bond is, therefore, void on account of its not being executed for a purely legal consideration * *. The parties are in pari delicto."

The defendant preferred a second appeal.

Ganesh Krishna Deshmukh, for the appellant (defendant).—The lower Courts have made out a case for the respondent which he himself did not make. He wanted to have the bond rescinded on the ground that we had failed to perform our part of the agreement, while the lower Courts have set it aside as illegal. The plaintiff never alleged that the bond was illegal. We submit that such an agreement is not illegal—Doorga Singh v. Sheo Pershad Singh (1). Even assuming that the agreement is illegal, still the plaintiff cannot sue to set it aside under s. 35, cl. (b), of the Specific Relief Act. The contract is unlawful for causes not apparent on its face, and the plaintiff and the defendant have been held equally to blame.

Mahadeo Chimnaji Apte, for the respondent (plaintiff).—The objection as to the making out of a new case and the point in connection with the Specific Relief Act have been urged for [346] the first time in second appeal. They ought to have been urged by the defendant in the lower appeal Court. In his written statement the defendant contended that the agreement was illegal; therefore, he cannot now turn round and say that it was legal. Clause (a), s. 35, of the Specific Relief Act is applicable, and not cl. (b). The appellant failed to comply with the conditions of the agreement, and, therefore, it became voidable or terminable at our option.

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—Both the Courts below have dealt with this case as one of an unlawful contract which the plaintiff was on that ground entitled to rescind. But there is nothing necessarily unlawful in two or more persons agreeing not to bid against one another at an auction-sale:—see Doorga Singh v. Sheo Pershad Singh (1). Nor, assuming the contract in this case to have been unlawful, has the other condition been satisfied, under which alone it could be rescinded under s. 35 (b) of the Specific Relief Act, namely, that the plaintiff should have been shown to have been less to blame in the transaction than the defendant. On the contrary, the Judge of the Court of appeal says that plaintiff and defendant were in pari delicto.

Mr. Apte, however, has argued that his case, as stated in the plaint, really falls under s. 35 (a) and not s. 35 (b) of the Specific Relief Act. He argues that the conditions, which under the terms of the agreement were to be performed by the defendant, have not been performed by him; and the agreement being thus "voidable or terminable" at plaintiff's option, he is entitled to claim rescission on that ground. This point has really not been gone into by the Courts below; and though there are expressions here and there in their judgments touching upon it, we cannot accept them

APPLICATION under the extraordinary jurisdiction (s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code, Act XIV of 1882) against the decision of Rao Bahadur Mahadeo Govind Ranade, Special Judge under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879).

The plaintiff sued the defendants, Sultan, Sakkar and their surety Sakharam to recover seventy-seven rupees alleged to have been due under an oral agreement.

Defendants Sultan and Sakkar denied their liability. Defendant Sakharam admitted the claim.

The Subordinate Judge found the claim proved, and passed a decree for the plaintiff and against all the defendants.

Sultan and Sakkar being dissatisfied presented an application for revision to the Special Judge under the provisions of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879). The Special Judge examined the evidence, and varied the decree by rejecting the claim against Sultan and Sakkar.

The plaintiff applied to the High Court under its extraordinary jurisdiction, and contended that the Special Judge had no jurisdiction, in his revisional powers, to interfere with the findings of fact of the Court of first instance.

One Ramji Chikne, who was the owner of the land in dispute, mortgaged it to Baji in July, 1870. In October, 1876, Bapu, a tenant of the land, obtained an injunction against Ramji restraining him from interfering with his (Bapu's) possession, in a possessory suit which was filed in the Mamlatdar's Court in May, 1876. In July, 1877, Baji obtained a decree on his mortgage, and in execution he got possession of the property from Ramji (the mortgagor) in June, 1879. The plaintiff, who was the assignee of both Baji and Ramji (mortgagee and mortgagor), sued Bapu in ejectment in September, 1888. Both the lower Courts allowed the claim. On second appeal by Bapu, the plaintiff (inter alia) contended that [349] having taken an assignment of the mortgage from the mortgagee, he was not bound by the proceedings in the Mamlatdar's Court in 1876 against the mortgagor. But

Held, that when the plaintiff, having previously taken an assignment of Baji's mortgage, purchased the equity of redemption from Ramji, the mortgage was extinguished, there being no circumstance from which an intention could be presumed to keep it alive. The plaintiff could not stand in a better position than Ramji, and was bound by the proceedings in the Mamlatdar's Court, notwithstanding that he had taken an assignment of Baji's mortgage. In those proceedings the defendant had claimed a right of permanent possession as against the Chikne family, and the effect of the Mamlatdar's order was to continue him in possession until ejected by the decree of a Civil Court. It was, therefore, incumbent upon Ramji to bring a suit within three years from the Mamlatdar's order, as provided by art. 46, sch. II of the Limitation Act (IX of 1871), and that not having been done, the plaintiff, who derived his title from Ramji, could not recover possession from the defendant.

Held, further, that ever since the proceedings in the Mamlatdar's Court commencing with the defendant's suit in May, 1876, the possession of the defendant, whatever may have been its nature originally, was distinctly adverse to Ramji and also to plaintiff, who as assignee might have taken possession at any time under the mortgage, and the present suit not having been brought until September, 1888 was barred by the Limitation Act (XV of 1877).

THIS was a second appeal from the decision of the First Class Subordinate Judge of Satara with Appellate Powers.

Suit to recover possession of land.

The land in dispute originally belonged to a family named Chikne. On the 4th July, 1870, Ramji Chikne mortgaged it to Baji Moreshvar Patankar. In May, 1876, Bapu bin Mahadaji, the present defendant, brought a possessory suit in the Mamlatdar's Court for an injunction restraining Ramji Chikne from interfering with his enjoyment and possession. The Mamlatdar found that though the land belonged to the defendants in that suit, still its possession was with the plaintiff, and he granted the injunction prayed for on the 9th October, 1876.

[350] He made the following observations in his judgment:—

"Moreover, the plaintiff has stated in his application (plaint) that the aforesaid land is under his mirasi vahivat; and the receipt, which is given in evidence, is recorded as Ex. 7. It bears the signatures of Bahirji bin Janoji Chikne, and in the beginning the plaintiff's name is entered as 'To Bapu Mahadaji Patne.' In that receipt, items have been entered four times, from which it is clear that the land is not plaintiff's mirasi land, but that it belongs to Chikne, and is with the plaintiff for cultivation. The plaintiff, therefore, on being questioned regarding the same, states as follows:—'The land has not been held by me from the inamdar. There is no khata (account) in my name in the Government books. The defendant's father having let (the land) to my father (for) cultivation, the vahivat (management) is with me and I have been paying the assessment to them. I have stated in the application (plaint) that the vahivat (management) has been mine for over twelve years.' He makes a statement to this effect in his answer Ex. 6.

"Now the object of the defendants is to get the lands (into their possession), they having considered the same to be their own; but as the plaintiff thinking himself to have become the owner of the land according to law by reason of his being a tenant for many days would not give it up, they (the defendants) have caused obstruction and tried to recover possession of the land by getting their vahivat declared in a possessory suit. The case is simply this. However, it is indeed true that the original owners (of the land) must really be the defendants, and it is proved also by the admission of the plaintiff. It is clear from the receipt Ex. 7. (i. e.) from the receipt given to the plaintiff by Bahirji, the father of Krishna (Kusaji) Bahirji, the defendant No. 2, that the land belongs to the defendants as owners; but I did (do) not think it proper, on a consideration merely of their ownership, to say that the vahivat belonged to them. From the inquiry held, and from personal inspection of the land, and from the fact of labour, &c., having been bestowed thereon, the plaintiff's evidence seems to be true. (I) therefore (order that) the plaintiff should carry on the vahivat of the land and the trees mentioned in the [351] plaint, and that the defendants should not cause obstruction to the same. The land belongs to defendants as owners, and they should get their suit in respect of their ownership decided by a Civil Court."

On the 13th July, 1877, Baji Moreshvar obtained a decree on his mortgage empowering him to recover the mortgage-debt, or, on the failure of the mortgagor to pay the debt, to take possession of the property. In execution of this decree, Baji Moreshvar took possession of the land from Ramji Chikne on the 17th June, 1879.

In the year 1883, Mahadaji Vasudeo Karandikar, the present plaintiff, alleging himself to be the assignee of Baji Moreshvar's right as mortgagee and also of the equity of redemption of Ramji Chikne (the mortgagor), brought a suit to eject the present defendant on a specific act of trespass said to have been committed in the year 1882. The Court of first instance dismissed the suit on the ground (inter alia) that although the land once belonged to the Chiknes, they had lost their right by their omission to sue for possession within three years from the date of the Mamlatdar's above-mentioned order, and that the sale to the plaintiff of their equity of redemption having been made after their right was extinguished, had conferred no right on the plaintiff. On appeal the decree was confirmed.

In second appeal, the High Court doubted whether "the omission of Chikne to sue would have the precise effect which the lower Court has attributed to it; for when the defendant brought his suit in the Mamlatdar's Court, he sued merely as a tenant whose possession had been disturbed within the period of his tenancy, and it was as a tenant entitled to present possession that he obtained an injunction against Chikne." The High Court, however, did not decide the question, but confirmed the decree of the lower Court, and left it open to the plaintiff, if so advised, to seek his remedy against the defendant as his tenant. (See Printed Judgments for 1888, p. 6)

The plaintiff accordingly in September, 1888, as assignee of the rights of the mortgagee Baji Moreshvar and of the equity of redemption of Ramji Chikne, brought the present suit against the [352] defendant to recover possession of the land and mesne profits, alleging that the defendant was merely a yearly tenant.

The defendant answered that the land did not belong to and was never in the possession and enjoyment of the Chiknes through whom the plaintiff claimed; that he (the defendant) did not hold it as yearly tenant from anybody; that it belonged to him and had been in his possession and enjoyment from the time of his ancestors; that on the 9th October, 1876, he had obtained against the Chiknes a decree in a possessory suit in respect of the land in dispute; that the alleged mortgage in favour of Baji Moreshvar was fictitious, and the decree obtained thereon was fraudulent; that the claim was time-barred, and that the suit was also barred by the decree in the suit of 1883, which the plaintiff had brought against him for possession of the land.

The Subordinate Judge found that the suit was not time-barred, nor was it barred either by the order of the Mamlatdar in the possessory suit of 1876, in which the defendant merely complained as a tenant whose possession had been disturbed, or by the decision in the suit of 1883, and that the defendant having denied the Chiknes' title became liable to be ousted by the plaintiff, who derived his title through the Chiknes. He, therefore, allowed the claim.

On appeal by the defendant, the Court confirmed the decree, holding that the Chiknes' lease to the defendant was proved. The Court remarked: "Once a tenant always a tenant, and unless and until the relationship of tenancy is got rid of, defendant's possession cannot become adverse as against the landlords or their vendees, how long so ever his tenancy may continue and the tenancy dues have remained unpaid. Exhibit 23 contains a most distinct admission, on the defendant's part, that he accepted the lands in suit as the Chiknes' tenant and paid the rents to them as their tenant. His denial of tenure having for the first time occurred during the progress of original suit No. 37 of 1883, falls within the statutory period."

The defendant preferred a second appeal.

Manekshah J. Taleyarkhan, for the appellant (defendant):—We contend that the suit is time-barred on two grounds. First, the [353] Mamlatdar's decree in our favour was passed in the year 1876. The respondent's assignor, Ramji Chikne, who was one of the defendants in that suit, took no steps within the statutory period, that is, within three years, to cancel that decree, and the right to do so is now barred. In order that an aggrieved party should get relief, he must bring a suit within three years from the date of the Mamlatdar's decree; and if that be not done, the Mamlatdar's order concludes him and his assignee also. Secondly, we say that if we paid rent to the Chiknes at all, it must have been prior to 1876. There is nothing to show that we paid them rent afterwards. Non-payment of rent for more than twelve years, coupled with the fact that we have been asserting our right since the Mamlatdar's decision in 1876, supports our plea of adverse possession.

Mahadeo Chimnaji Apte, for the respondent (plaintiff):—The appellant was examined as a witness in the possessory suit, and he distinctly admitted that he was a tenant, and claimed to hold the land as mirasdar because he was in possession for a long time on payment of rent. The tenancy being thus admitted, his possession cannot be adverse either to the Chiknes or to the plaintiff as their assignee unless and until some overt act on his part denying our title is proved. We seek to recover possession in our twofold capacity: first, as the assignee of the mortgagee Baji Moreshvar, and, secondly, as the assignee of the mortgagor Ramji Chikne. Even supposing that our claim as the assignee of the mortgagor is barred under the Mamlatdar's Act (Bombay Act V of 1864), still our claim as the assignee of the mortgagee cannot be affected by the Mamlatdar's decree, which was subsequent to the mortgage. The decree was passed against the mortgagor, and, therefore, it cannot bind the mortgagee.

[SARGENT, C. J.—You are the assignee of both the mortgagor and mortgagee; therefore your right as mortgagee has become merged in that of the mortgagor, unless you show that there was an intention to keep the mortgage alive. See Lomba Gomaji v. Vishvanath Amrit (1).]

[354] We submit that there is nothing in the present case to show that there was no intention to keep alive the mortgage. The purchase of the equity of redemption by the mortgagee does not operate to extinguish the mortgage—Vinayak Balvant v. Dhundiraj (2). The doctrine of merger is a doctrine of English law, and is not applicable to India.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

18 B. 348.

The present Mamlatdar's Act (Bombay Act III of 1876) is not applicable to this case. The case is governed by Bombay Act V of 1864, which did not lay down any period of limitation. The Limitation Act then in force was Act IX of 1871, and the language of art. 46, sch. II, of that Act was different from that of art. 47 of the present Act (XV of 1877).

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—It has been contended by Mr. Apte that the plaintiff having taken an assignment of Baji's mortgage was not bound by the proceedings in the Mamlatdar's Court, the effect of which is the important question in this case. It appears, however, that the plaintiff subsequently purchased the equity of redemption of the Chikne family, and there being no circumstance from which an intention can be presumed to keep the mortgage alive, it must be regarded as extinguished—Lomba Gomaji v. Vishvanath Amrit (1).

The plaintiff cannot, therefore, in our opinion, stand in a better position than the Chikne family, and it, therefore, becomes necessary to consider what was the effect of the proceedings in the Mamlatdar's Court The Mamlatdar's judgment shows that the defendant, whilst admitting that the land in question had been let by the plaintiff's father to his father, claimed by long possession, whatever the exact nature of his title may be, to have acquired at any rate a right of permanent possession of which the Chikne family could not deprive him ; and the effect of the Mamlatdar's order was to maintain the defendant in possession (directing the Chikne family not to obstruct his possession) within the meaning of s. 15 of the Mamlatdar's Act V of 1864, and so to continue him in possession until ejected by a decree of the Civil Court. Such, we think, was the effect of that section having regard to the several sections of the Act, although [355] it is made clearer by the language of s. 18 of the Act of 1876. It was, therefore, incumbent on the Chikne family, who claimed to treat him as a tenant-at-will, to bring a civil suit within three years as provided by cl. 46 of the Limitation Act of 1871, and that not having been done, the plaintiff, who derives his title as owner from that family, cannot now recover possession from the defendant, whatever may be the precise nature of defendant's title to the possession.

But we think that the defendant must also succeed under the Act of Limitations. Ever since the proceedings in the Mamlatdar's Court commencing with the defendant's suit in May, 1876, the possession of the defendant, whatever may have been its nature originally, is shown, from what has been above stated, to have been distinctly adverse to the present claim as against the Chikne family, and also as against the mortgagee who might have taken possession at any time under the mortgage. As the present suit to obtain possession was not instituted till September, 1888, it is barred by the Statute.

On both these grounds, therefore, we think that the decree of the Court below must be reversed, and the plaintiff's claim be dismissed, with costs throughout on the plaintiff.

Decree reversed—Claim dismissed.

Before Sir Charles Sargent, Kt., Chief Justice, Mr. Justice Bayley and Mr. Justice Candy.

KESHAV PANDURANG (Original Defendant), Appellant v. VINAYAK HARI (Original Plaintiff), *Respondent. [22nd June, 1893.]

Registration—Registration Act (III of 1877), s. 50—Priority—Purchaser under an unregistered deed—Lease of the land by purchaser to the vendor—Decree for rent obtained by the purchaser against the vendor—Effect of such decree on purchaser's title in competition with the title of subsequent purchaser under a registered deed.

On the 7th August, 1876, the defendant purchased the property in dispute under an unregistered sale-deed. On the same day he leased it to his vendor. In 1878 he obtained a decree for rent against his vendor. On the 23rd May, 1881, the plaintiff [356] purchased the same property from the same vendor under a registered deed of sale. In 1888 the plaintiff sued the defendant to establish his right to the property and to recover possession.

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree, his registered deed taking priority to the prior unregistered deed of the defendant.

Section 50 (1) of the Registration Act (III of 1877) did not give the defendant priority in virtue of the decree which he obtained in the rent suit, for in that suit the defendant's ownership was not in dispute, and the decree merely adjudicated as to the relationship between the defendant and his vendors created subsequently to the sale. The defendant's title as owner was not merged in the decree, but still rested exclusively on his deed of sale.

SECOND appeal from the decision of M. P. Khareghat, Assistant Judge of Thana.

The property in dispute originally belonged to Ladkoba Balaji, Narayan Pandurang and Nathu Pandurang as members of an undivided Hindu family. It was sold by Ladkoba Balaji and Narayan Pandurang on the 7th August, 1876, under an unregistered deed of sale to defendant Keshav Pandurang, who, on the same day, leased it to them as his tenants. In 1878, he sued them for rent and got a decree. He again sued them for rent and possession in 1885, got a decree, and obtained possession on the 26th January, 1887.

In the meanwhile, Narayan Pandurang and Nathu Pandurang sold the property to the plaintiff Vinayak Hari Sinkar with [357] possession

* Appeal No. 20 of 1892 under s. 15 of the amended Letters Patent of the High Court.

(1) Section 50 of the Registration Act (III of 1877):—Every document of the kinds mentioned in cls. (a), (b), (c) and (d) of s. 17, and cls. (a) and (b) of s. 18, shall, if duly registered, take effect as regards the property comprised therein, against every unregistered document relating to the same property and not being a decree or order, whether such unregistered document be of the same nature as the registered document or not.

Nothing in the former part of this section applies to leases exempted under the proviso in s. 17, or to the documents mentioned in cls. (e), (f), (ff), (g), (h), (i), (j), (k), (l), (m), (n), and (o) of the same section.

Explanation.—In cases where Act No. XVI of 1864 or Act No. XX of 1866 was in force in the place and at the time in and at which such unregistered document was executed, "unregistered" means not registered according to such Act; and where the document is executed after the first day of July, 1871, not registered under Act No. VIII of 1871, or this Act.

under a registered deed of sale dated the 23rd May,1881. The plaintiff now sued the defendant to establish his right to the land and for possession.

The Subordinate Judge allowed the plaintiff's claim on the following grounds:—

"The chief question for decision is, then, which of the parties is entitled to the field Hirashet * * * .

"The question must be answered in favour of the plaintiff. For his deed of sale (Ex. 37) has been registered under the provisions of Act III of 1877. He is, therefore, entitled to priority over the defendant, whose deed of sale (Ex. 9) is an unregistered document under s. 50 of Act III of 1877. But it was contended for the defendant that the possession of the vendors as tenants of the defendant operated as constructive notice of the defendant's title to the plaintiff. But this contention cannot be allowed. For the plaintiff has no reason to suppose that the possession of his vendors was otherwise than as owners It is not shown that the plaintiff had any knowledge of the defendant's decree (Ex. 10) obtained by him against his vendors for rent in 1878. Under these circumstances the plaintiff is entitled to priority. (I.L.R. 12 Bom. p. 569)."

On appeal by the defendant the decree was confirmed.

The defendant filed a second appeal.

Mahadeo Chimnaji Apte, for the appellant (defendant).

Manekshah J. Taleyarkhan, for the respondent (plaintiff).

August 1*st*, 1892. JARDINE, J.—The only point argued relates to the construction to be placed on the words "not being a decree or order" in the first part of s. 50 of the Registration Acts of 1871 and 1877. The question is, whether the Court below was right in giving priority to the plaintiff's registered deed of sale, dated the 23rd May, 1881, over the defendant's unregistered deed of sale, dated the 7th August, 1876.

It appears that in 1878 the defendant obtained a decree against his vendors for rent and another in 1887 against them for rent and possession. To these suits the plaintiff was not a party: and it is not part of the defendant's case that his deed of sale was merged in the decrees, nor that the plaintiff had any [358] sort of notice, or knew that the property was in the possession of any person other than the vendor. At the defendant's appeal here it was contended on his behalf that the effect of the excepting words quoted above from s. 50 was to affect the plaintiff with notice, and that the defendant's deed was entitled to priority. No authority was cited for this contention.

The case of Kolluri Nagabhashanum v. Ammanna (1) is not on the same footing. In that case the unregistered document became merged in, and superseded by, a decree, as is pointed out in Madar Saheb v. Subbarayalu (2), in which case also the learned Judges point out that the effect of the contention of the present appellant that his unregistered document is to have priority, because of decrees to which the plaintiff was not a party, would have this result, that it would be only necessary to put such a document in suit to be able successfully to defeat the Registration Act. The intention of the Act is to prevent fraud by giving notoriety to the document, and it may be admitted that some notoriety is given by the passing of a decree, but I think not enough to prevent fraud. In Baijnath v. Lachman Das (3) the effect of the words "not being a decree or order" is confined to the case of the unregistered document being merged in a decree. The case of The Himalaya Bank v. The Simla Bank (4) seems to have been decided on a point different from that now before us. The registry of an assignment of a deed which required registration was held in England to be no notice to the subsequent purchaser—Honeycomb v. Waldron (1). An assignment of a decree was held to require registration —Gopal v. Trimbak (2).

There is nothing unreasonable in the limited construction which two High Courts have placed on the excepting words. I concur in that interpretation, and would confirm the decree with costs.

We have, however, the misfortune to differ in opinion; and as the case is of general importance, we think we should affirm the decree with costs, leaving the appellant, if so advised, to appeal when the question will come before a Court of three Judges.

[359] TELANG, J.—The plaintiff sued to be declared owner, and to be put in possession of the land, the subject-matter of the suit, claiming under a deed of sale executed in his favour in 1881 by Narayan and Nathu Pandurang. The defendant claims under a prior deed executed by Narayan Pandurang and one Ladkoji, who was alleged to be an uncle of Narayan and Nathu Pandurang. The Assistant Judge held that the plaintiff's deed was proved; that Ladkoji was not, as alleged, the uncle of Narayan and Nathu; and that under s. 50 of the Registration Act the plaintiff's deed, though later in date than the defendant's, was entitled to priority. This point of priority was the only one argued before us.

The defendant's deed is admittedly one the registration of which is not compulsory, and it has been alleged, and not denied, that some years before 1881, when the plaintiff's purchase took place, the defendant had let the land to Narayan Pandurang and obtained a decree against him for the rent due. And the question is, whether an unregistered deed of sale coupled with a decree for rent against the vendor, must, under s. 50 of the Registration Act, be postponed to a later deed of sale by the same vendor which is registered.

Now, it has not been denied that, if the decree had been one containing an express declaration of title as well as an award of rent, the subsequent purchaser with a registered conveyance, even though without notice of the prior title, would have been bound by such decree. It is argued, however, that a decree which does not contain such a declaration, has not the same legal operation. I cannot concur in this view. Section 50 contains an enactment, which admittedly invalidates a transaction perfectly valid at the time it is entered into, as against a subsequent transaction to which the party claiming a benefit under the first is in no way party or privy. To the extent that the intention of the Legislature to do this is clear from the language employed by it, we are, of course, bound to give effect to that intention, without reference to what might be called its apparent hardship—see Body v Halse, Hunt v. Halse and Fenning v. Halse (3). But [360] we are not, I think, bound to go further. We ought not, in the case of such an enactment, to give effect to anything but clear language directing such an invalidation ex post facto, and we ought not, I think, by construction, to limit the words of exception or restriction in such an enactment which the Legislature has itself thought fit to employ. In spite of the large words of the enacting part, this Court has consistently limited them to the cases where the subsequent purchaser has no notice of the prior unregistered conveyance. In doing so, it has followed that series of authorities in England which is referred to by

(1) 2 Strange 1064. (2) 1 B. 267. (3) L. R. 1 Q. B. (1892) 203.

Lord Chancellor (Lord Cairns) in Agra Bank v. Barry (1). In the present case we have to deal not with the enacting part, but with the exception grafted upon it by the Legislature itself. And as the words except "a decree or order" generally from the operation of the enacting part, we ought, I think, to interpret them largely, and to hold that all decrees and orders whatsoever come within the purview of the exception.

If this view is correct, its application to the present case is obvious. Long before the purchase made by the plaintiff, the defendant had obtained not merely a conveyance from the plaintiff's vendor, but also a decree against that vendor for rent of these very premises under a contract of tenancy averred and proved. The effect of that decree I take to be this, that the plaintiff's vendor at the date of that decree incontestably became the defendant's tenant, and could not claim to be owner of the property. It is not pretended, in the present case, that anything occurred between the date of that decree and the sale to the plaintiff to alter the character of his legal relation to the property. The plaintiff, then, could only take such a title as his vendor had, and the decree being not invalid as against his conveyance, he must be deemed to have taken merely his vendor's title as tenant of the property, whatever such title may be. I see nothing in s. 50 of the Registration Act to prevent our giving this effect to the decree as against one who claims under the defendant in the suit in which the decree was passed.

The cases, which have been referred to, do not appear to me to militate against this view. In Kolluri Nagabhashanum v. [361] Ammanna (2), indeed, the Court said that "the decree was binding on the judgment-debtor, and on all persons who might thereafter acquire title from him." That remark is sufficient to govern this case. Kolluri Nagabhashanum v. Ammanna is referred to and distinguished in a subsequent case in Madras —Madar Saheb v. Subbarayalu (3), where the decree was held not to affect the title of the subsequent purchaser. But the sequence of events there rendered that conclusion almost inevitable. There was first the unregistered conveyance, and then the registered conveyance which took effect as against the former under s. 50. And after this second conveyance came the decree made upon the basis of the first conveyance. There being nothing in the Registration Act to justify the fiction of relation being resorted to, the decree as a document subsequent in date to the second conveyance could obviously not have any effect against the title created by such second conveyance. And the Court so decided. The gist of the decision is not, I venture to think, contained in the phrase that the prior document was "merged in, and superseded by, a decree," but in the phrase which the Court distinctly emphasizes, viz., "prior to the execution of the registered conveyance." It is that priority on which the decision rests. The case of Baijnath v. Lachman Das (4) was also cited to us. But I do not understand that case, any more than the Madras case, as limiting the meaning of the words "a decree or order." The Allahabad Court, indeed, goes somewhat further in favour of the decree-holder than the Madras case, whether rightly or wrongly it is not now necessary to consider. The Judges there apparently hold that a decree obtained even after the registered conveyance is good as against the registered conveyance, if only it is obtained before a suit is instituted on the strength of the registered conveyance. But, however that may be, I confess I see nothing in this case or in the Madras cases to warrant the argument for the respondent from which, on other grounds, I have already expressed my dissent, that the words "decree or order" in s. 50 of the Registration Act must be limited to a "decree or order" in which the unregistered instrument is "merged."

(1) L. R. 7 E. & I. Ap. 135.

(3) 6 M. 88.
(4) 7 A. 888.

[362] It is true that the result of this view is that the subsequent purchaser will be, in effect, bound by a transaction of which he has no notice. He cannot find the conveyance in the registry, and he would not necessarily have any notice of the suit. But this argument applies equally whether the decree is one which supersedes the unregistered conveyance or not. And it cannot, therefore, be allowed any weight against the construction above put forward. And, apart from any special equities, I do not see why the above suggested result should be looked upon as any thing in the nature of a reductio ad absurdum. It is entirely in harmony with the established rules qui prior est tempore potior est jure and caveat emptor. The later purchaser who is defrauded must trust to his remedy against his own vendor.

On these grounds, I am of opinion that, on the only ground which has been argued before us, the plaintiff's case fails. And I would reverse the decrees of the Courts below and dismiss the plaintiff's suit with all costs.

The Judges thus differing in opinion, the decree was confirmed under s. 575 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882).

The defendant appealed under cl. 15 of the amended Letters Patent of the High Court, 1865.

The appeal came on for argument before a Full Bench consisting of Sargent, C. J., and Bayley and Candy, JJ.

Ganesh Krishna Deshmukh, for the appellant (defendant).—The defendant has got a decree for rent, and, therefore, under s. 50 of the Registration Act, the plaintiff's deed does not take priority. The defendant's decree for rent is a decree relating to the same property to which the respondent's registered sale-deed relates, as the rent sued for was admittedly in respect of the same property. Therefore, the condition required by s. 50 is fulfilled. There is no other condition required by the section.

Even supposing that what is required is the merger of the title in the decree, we submit that as the decree for rent must have expressly or impliedly put the question of our title under the unregistered sale in issue in the rent suit, and thus our [363] title under the deed is merged in this decree, as the very relation of landlord and tenant between the defendant and his vendor depended on our previous purchase in 1876. Thus, in any view of the case, our purchase as of 1876 must prevail against the plaintiff's subsequent purchase in 1881 by reason of our decree for rent in the year 1878.

Manekshah J. Taleyarkhan (with Vasudev Gopal Bhandarkar), for the respondent (plaintiff).

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Full Bench was delivered by

SARGENT, C. J.—The question for determination is whether the the lower appeal Court was right in giving priority to the plaintiff's registered deed of sale of 23rd May, 1881, over the defendant's unregistered deed of sale of 7th August, 1876, having regard to the decree for rent, subsequently obtained by him in 1878 against their common vendor. The exception in cl. 50 of the Registration Act operates, doubtless, to give the above decree its full legal effect in competing with the plaintiff's deed of sale, and the important question, therefore, is, what is the legal effect it has for such purpose.

Assuming that the defendant's ownership was not in dispute in the suit in which that decree was passed, as would appear to have been the case from there being no declaration of his title as owner, the decree merely adjudicated as to the relationship of landlord and tenant between defendant and his vendor created subsequently to the sale. The defendant's title as owner was not merged in the decree, but still rested exclusively on his deed of sale, although his vendor might not, whilst he was his tenant, be able to dispute it. In this respect the case differs from Kolluri Nagabhashanum v. Ammanna (1) as explained in Madar Saheb v. Subbarayalu (2) where the registered document became superseded by a decree under which the plaintiff derived his title as the purchaser at the auction sale, and the competition was, therefore, between the decree and a registered document, which came within the exception. We think, therefore, that the decree of Mr. Justice Jardine should be confirmed with costs.

Decree confirmed.

QUEEN-EMPRESS v. SADANAND NARAYAN AND OTHERS.

[3rd February, 1894.]

Practice—Procedure—Several persons tried jointly—Right of reply where one of several accused calls witnesses and the others do not—Criminal Procedure Code (X of 1882), ss. 289, 292.

Where one of several accused persons tried jointly calls witnesses at the trial, but the other accused call no witnesses, they must all follow in their defence, and the prosecution has the right of reply on the whole case.

SADANAND Narayan, Harichand Bhikoba, Bajirao Tatia Raoji and Sayad Husain were charged, under ss. 109, 467 and 471 of the Penal Code (XLV of 1860), as follows:—No. 1 with the offence of using as genuine a forged document; No. 2 with forgery, and all of the Nos. 1, 2 3 and 4 with abetment of forgery. The case came for trial at the Criminal Sessions of the High Court, and the prisoners pleaded not guilty, and claimed to be tried.

Anderson appeared for the prosecution.

Accused No. 1 was not defended by counsel.

Lowndes appeared for accused No. 2.

Jardine for accused Nos. 3 and 4.

At the conclusion of the case for the prosecution, accused No. 1 in answer to a question put by the Court said he desired to call witnesses. Accused Nos. 2, 3 and 4 in answer to the Court stated that they did not intend to call witnesses.

Accused No. 1 then called and examined his witnesses.

Counsel for the other accused (Nos. 2, 3 and 4), being then called upon to address the Court, objected, and contended that inasmuch as they had not called witnesses, counsel for the prosecution should sum up the case as against accused Nos. 2, 3 and 4 and that they should then have the right of reply on behalf of their clients. They contended that the fact that one of the accused had called witnesses in his defence did not affect the right of the other accused, who had called no witnesses. They cited ss. 289 and 292 of the Criminal Procedure Code (X of 1882).

JUDGMENT.

[365] PARSONS, J.—It appears to me that the prosecutor has the right to sum up only when all the accused persons say that they do not mean to adduce evidence. That is my construction of the words at the beginning of the second clause of s. 289, which deals with the case in which an accused person says he does not mean to adduce evidence. The case of the accused saying he does mean to adduce evidence is dealt with in the third clause of the same section. There the words are "if the accused or any one of several accused says that he means to adduce evidence;" but by that clause no right of summing up is given to the accused. The two cases are combined in cl. 4 of the same section, which must be construed as dealing with them separately, thus:—(1) The case of the accused or any one of several accused saying that he means to adduce evidence, and (2) the case of the accused, or all the accused, or more than one saying that they do not mean to adduce evidence, and in this latter case the prosecutor having summed up his case. The language of s. 292 is also, I think, explicit on this point. "If the accused or any of the accused has stated that he means to adduce evidence, the prosecutor shall be entitled to reply." "Reply" here must mean reply generally on the whole case. It cannot be that he is to sum up as to such of the accused as do not call evidence, and reply only on the evidence that may have been adduced by the others.

Here one of the accused said he meant to adduce evidence; I called on the accused generally to enter on their defence under the last clause of s. 289. I think they must now follow one another in their defence under s. 290, and the prosecutor will be entitled under s. 292 to reply generally on the whole case.

PARSI MATRIMONIAL COURT.

18 B. 366.

SUIT by a husband for divorce under s. 30 of the Parsi Marriage and Divorce Act, XV of 1865.

The plaint having been accepted, the plaintiff's attorney presented a petition for the appointment of a guardian ad litem for the defendant, who was over the age of 18 years but under the age of 21.

Notice was issued to the defendant and her mother to show cause against the application.

Sorabji Bezonji appeared for defendant to show cause :—He referred to s. 3 of Act XV of 1865 ; Indian Majority Act IX of 1875, s. 3, and the Guardians and Wards Act VIII of 1890, s. 4. He stated that, if the defendant was held to be a minor, her mother was willing to act as guardian, and cited Asirun Bibi v. Sharip Mondul(1).

F. P. Pavri, for plaintiff :—Section 3 of Act XV of 1865 indicates that the Legislature regarded a Parsi as a minor up to the age of 21 in matters relating to suits for divorces. The Indian Majority Act IX of 1875 does not affect the question : see s. 2, cl. (a). There being no express provision on the point, it must be settled by reference to English law.

Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

CANDY, J.—As all proceedings in this Court are regulated by the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure (No. 1 of the Rules [367] of this Court and s. 40 of the Act XV of 1865) the question is whether under s. 443 of the Code of Civil Procedure (XIV of 1882) the Court is satisfied of the fact of the defendant's minority. If the Court is so satisfied, then the Court shall appoint a proper person to be guardian for the suit for defendant. The defendant is admittedly above 18 and under 21 years of age. It is also admitted that she does not come within the terms of the first clause of s. 3 of the Indian Majority Act (IX of 1875), therefore, under the second clause of the said section she must be deemed to have attained the age of majority when she completed the age of 18, provided she is not subject to the provisions of s. 2 of the said Act, which declares that nothing therein contained shall affect the capacity of any person to act in the matter of marriage or divorce.

Here defendant is a defendant in an action for divorce brought by her husband. Her capacity to act must, therefore, be determined. I am satisfied that for such purpose defendant must be deemed to be a minor. Apart from the fact that the law applicable to Parsis in India within the jurisdiction of the High Court on the original side is that which is applied to British-born subjects (per Couch, C.J., in Mancharsha v. Kamrunisa(2)), we have the fact that the Parsi Marriage and Divorce Act (XV of 1865) evidently treats every Parsi under the age of 21 as a minor. Thus in s. 3, in treating of the requisites to the validity of Parsi marriages, it is provided that, in the case of any Parsi who shall not have completed the age of 21 years, the consent of his or her father or guardian shall have been previously given to such marriage ; and by s. 6 the father or guardian must sign the certificate according to the form as shown by the schedule to the Act, the heading to the last column of the said form running thus :—"Signature of father or guardian when husband or wife is an infant." I am satisfied, therefore, that the defendant is an infant, and I must appoint a proper person to be her guardian for the suit.

Her mother is willing to act as such ; but a married woman, though she can act as the next friend of an infant plaintiff, cannot be appointed guardian ad litem for an infant defendant [368] (s. 457 of the Civil Procedure Code). I must, therefore, call upon defendant's father, who is said to be a station master near Baroda, to act as guardian ad litem for his infant daughter.

IN chambers. Summons by defendant for inspection.

The plaintiff sued the defendant for Rs. 2,111, the amount alleged to be due from him for goods sold, &c.

In his plaint he stated, in the usual form, that he would rely on the documents specified in the list annexed thereto.

The defendant applied to the plaintiff for inspection of the documents mentioned in the said list. The plaintiff having declined to give inspection until the defendant filed his written statement, the defendant took out a summons calling on the plaintiff to show cause why he should not give the required inspection.

Chitnis, for the defendant, in support of the summons cited Quilter v. Heatley (1).

Inverarity, for the plaintiff showed cause.—We ought not to be required to give the defendant inspection until his written statement is filed. At present he denies our claim altogether. If he sees the letters we specify in our list he will probably alter his defence. The case of Quilter v. Heatley (1) does not apply. In that case the documents, of which inspection was sought by the defendant, were referred to in the pleadings, and made part of the [369] statement of claim. That is the ground of the decision of Jessel, M.R.

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, J.—I think inspection must be given. Under the Code the plaintiff is required to mention the documents on which he will rely at the hearing. He has done so, and has mentioned the documents in question. There is, therefore, no difficulty as to the plaintiff knowing

APPLICATION under the extraordinary jurisdiction (s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code, Act XIV of 1882) against the appellate decree of J. L. Johnston, District Judge of Dharwar.

The plaintiff sued to recover from the defendants Rs. 276-4-0 alleged to be due on two hundis.

The defendants Chenbasapa and Basaya resisted the plaintiff's claim on the ground that the first hundi was satisfied by the substitution of another payable at sight, and that no money was received for the second.

[370] The Subordinate Judge rejected the claim, holding that the hundis not being stamped according to the provisions of art. 11, sch. I of the Indian Stamp Act (I of 1879), were inadmissible in evidence, and that no secondary evidence in support of the claim which was based on the hundis, could be taken under s. 65 of the Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872).

On appeal by the plaintiff urging, among other grounds, that he should have been permitted to adduce evidence of payment to the defendants otherwise than by the hundis, the District Judge reversed the decree and allowed the claim on the following grounds :—

"The defendant appears to admit his liability under the first hundi. He alleges also that Rs. 150 are due to him from the plaintiff on account of ganja, for which plaintiff was surety and for which defendant drew the hundi for Rs. 88. The burden of proving these allegations rests on defendant. He has not discharged it. He is, therefore, still liable for the amount of the hundis admitted by him, and of which he has not proved payment. By his admission the defendant has supplied the plaintiff's want of independent evidence of consideration for his hundis. The lender of money can recover the original consideration—Golap Chand v. Thakurani (1). There was sufficient admission of the hundis by the defendant in his written statement. Damodar v. Atmaram(2) seems unopposed to this view, as the defendant admits that the money was lent to him."

* Application No. 162 of 1892 under Extraordinary Jurisdiction.

(1) 23 Ch. D. 42.

The defendants applied to the High Court under its extraordinary jurisdiction, and obtained a rule nisi calling on the plaintiff to show cause why the decree should not be set aside on the ground that the Judge erred in law in holding that the plaintiff's claim could be allowed, although the hundis on which the suit was brought were inadmissible in evidence for want of impressed stamps.

Vishnu K. Bhatavdekar, appeared for the plaintiff to show cause:—Assuming the hundis to be inadmissible, consideration can be proved aliunde—Golap Chand v. Thakurani (1). Here the hundis were not drawn on money deposited, but were given in [371] payment of the price of goods sold. We could, therefore, fall back upon our original cause of action—Sheikh Akbar v. Sheikh Khan (3); Hira Lal v. Datadin (4); Krishnasami v. Rangasami (5). Further, we were saved from the necessity of proving consideration, because the defendants pleaded payment. The burden of proof was upon them, and the Judge says that they have not discharged it. The case of Damodar v. Atmaram (2) is distinguishable on the ground of the decision in Sheikh Akbar v. Sheikh Khan (3).

Ghanasham N. Nadkarni, appeared for the defendants in support of the rule. He relied upon Damodar v. Atmaram (2).

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—The opponent in this application sues the applicants on two hundis, which, it is not disputed, were inadmissible in evidence for want of impressed stamps. The lower appeal Court, however, awarded the plaintiff's claim on the ground that the applicants' admissions in their written statement rendered it unnecessary to put the hundis in evidence.

In Ankur Chunder Roy v. Madhub Chunder Ghose (6), Sir R. Couch seems to have thought that the language of the Indian Stamp Act of 1869, which prohibits a hundi not properly stamped not only from being received in evidence but from being acted on in any manner, precluded the application of the English cases under the Stamp Acts. He did not, however, decide the point, considering that the defendants' admissions of the contents of the hundi were not such as to dispense with its production in evidence. In Damodar v. Atmaram (2), the same question arose and was disposed of apparently by Mr. Justice Birdwood in the same manner as in Ankur Chunder Roy v. Madhub Chunder Ghose. Mr. Justice Jardine's remarks, however, on that case would seem to show that he thought that the defendants' admissions were precluded by the language of the Stamp Act.

It being necessary in this case to decide on the effect of the Stamp Act, it appears to us that the hundi is "acted upon" where a decree is passed on it, whether proved or admitted, and that owing to the language of the Stamp Act the Court cannot [372] give effect to it in either case. The lower appeal Court was, therefore, wrong in deciding in favour of plaintiff's claim on the ground of defendants' admissions. But it appears, from the grounds of the plaintiff's appeal to the lower Court, that he complained that the first Court had not permitted him to adduce evidence of payment to defendant otherwise than by the hundis. It will be necessary for the lower appeal Court to deal with this objection, and in doing so it will be advisable for it to consider the judgments in Damodar v. Atmaram (1) Golap Chand v. Thakurani (2) and Sheikh Akbar v. Sheikh Khan (3).

We must, therefore, in the exercise of our extraordinary jurisdiction reverse the decree of the Court below and send back the case to be disposed of afresh having regard to the above remarks. Costs to abide the result.

BABAJI (Original Defendant), Appellant v. KRISHNA AND ANOTHER (Original Plaintiffs), *Respondents. [28th June, 1893.]

Fraud—Sham transaction—Fraudulent conveyance—Suit for possession by purchaser of land—Defence that the sale to plaintiff was a sham transaction to defraud creditors.

The plaintiff sued for possession of certain land, which he alleged he had purchased from the defendant under a registered sale deed dated 10th November, 1876. The defendant pleaded that the deed was a sham deed and without consideration, and had been executed by him merely to save the land from his creditors.

Held, that the plea was good, and that it was open to the defendant to defend his possession by showing that the real transaction between himself and the plaintiff was to defraud, whether a third party or his creditors generally.

THIS was a second appeal from the decision of T. Walker, Assistant Judge of Satara.

The plaintiff Krishna bin Apa Surve and his assignee Hari Narayan Jog sued the defendant Babaji bin Sadu Kirdak to [373] recover possession of certain land, alleging that it had been sold by the defendant to plaintiff Krishna under a registered sale-deed dated the 10th November, 1876, and had been delivered into his possession, but that subsequently the defendant dispossessed him.

The defendant denied that the plaintiff was ever put in possession, and alleged that the sale-deed sued upon was a sham deed and without consideration, and was executed by him (the defendant) merely to screen the property from attachment and sale by his creditors.

The Subordinate Judge found that the transaction between the parties was a mortgage and not a sale, and was intended, the consideration being inadequate, for the protection of the property against the defendant's creditors. He, therefore, passed the following order :—

"The plaintiffs may recover from the defendant the possession of the property as described in the plaint, not as purchasers but merely as mortgagees of the land. The defendant shall bear the costs of himself and the plaintiffs."

On appeal by the plaintiffs the Assistant Judge found that the sale was a genuine transaction. He, therefore, reversed the decree and allowed the plaintiffs' claim to recover possession of the land as purchasers, observing :—

"Neither party alleges that the sale-deed (Ex. 13) the execution of which is not disputed, was a mortgage. The decree of the lower Court accordingly cannot stand, as it was not open to the Subordinate Judge to find that the deed was a mortgage. It remains to decide whether there was genuine sale or not. Defendant's statement, that Ex. 13 was passed to save the property from being taken by his creditors, amounts to this, that he committed an act punishable under s. 206 of the Indian Penal Code ; and he can hardly expect a Court of Justice to support him in such a cause. * * *"

The defendant preferred a second appeal.

Inverarity (with Manekshah J. Taleyarkhan), for the appellant (the defendant).—The Judge was wrong in refusing to consider [374] our case at all—Ram Surun Singh v. Mussamut Pran Peary (1) ; Sreemutty Debia Chowdhrain v. Bimola Soonduree Debia (2) ; Mahadaji Gopal v. Vithal Ballal (3) ; Dharma Sakharam v. Nago (4) ; Chenvirappa v. Puttappa (5). The last three rulings are distinguishable. We contend, on the strength of the above authorities, that we are entitled to show that the transaction in dispute was a sham sale to the plaintiff. The property is worth a great deal, and yet it purports to have been sold for one hundred rupeess only.

P. M. Mehta (with Balaji Abaji Bhagavat), for the respondents (plaintiffs).—The reason why the Judge did not enter into the merits of the transaction was that immediately after the sale to the plaintiff No. 1 he was put into possession and held possession for nearly twelve years. The finding as to whether a transaction is a sham or not, is a finding of fact. Both the lower Courts have concurred in saying that it is not a sham. They have differed merely with respect to its nature. Mere inadequacy of consideration would not render a transaction fictitious. Both the Courts have found that possession was given to us bona fide, and that we paid the assessment.

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C.J.—The judgments of the Privy Council in Ram Surun Singh v. Mussamut Pran Peary (1) and of the Calcutta High Court in Sreemutty Debia Chowdhrain v. Bimola Soonduree Debia (2) as delivered by Sir R. Couch show that it is open to the defendant to defend his possession by showing that the real transaction between himself and the plaintiff was to defraud, whether a third party or the defendant's creditors generally. upon the special circumstances which in those cases were deemed to estop the defendant from pleading such a defence.

The general question is much discussed in Chenvirappa v. Puttappa (1), but we do not find that any authority of a Court of equity is referred to in that case, which questions the right of the [375] defendant to plead such a defence whatever doubt there may be as to the plaintiff's right to avoid his own deed by setting up his own fraudulent act. As the lower Court of appeal has refused to consider this defence by the defendant, and has disposed of the suit solely on the ground whether there was a valid sale independently of the question of fraudulent intention, we must send down the following issue for determination :—

Was the deed in question a colourable transaction intended to defraud the defendant's creditors?

The finding to be transmitted to this Court within two months. When the finding is returned, it will be open to plaintiffs, if the finding be in the affirmative, to contend that the defendant not having appealed against the finding of the Subordinate Judge cannot claim to keep the property unburdened by the mortgage-debt as found by the Subordinate Judge.

Act VIII of 1890, s. 39 (1)—Guardian and ward—Minor—Removal of guardian—"Instrument"—Construction.

The word "instrument" in s. 39 of the Guardian and Wards Act (VIII of 1890) means instruments ejusdem generis with a will, and a decree of a Civil Court is not an instrument within the contemplation of the section.

THIS was a reference made by Gilmour McCorkell, District Judge of Ahmedabad, under s. 617 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882).

(2) Section 39 of the Guardians and Wards Act, VIII of 1890 :—The Court may, on the application of any person interested, or of its own motion, remove a guardian appointed or declared by the Court, or a guardian appointed by will or other instrument, for any of the following causes, namely :—(a) for abuse of his trust ; (b) for continued failure to perform the duties of his trust ; (c) for incapacity to perform the duties of his trust ; (d) for ill-treatment, or neglect to take proper care of his ward ; (e) for contumacious disregard of any provision of this Act or of any order [376] of the Court; (f) for conviction of an offence implying, in the opinion of the Court, a defect of character which unfits him to be the guardian of his ward ; (g) for having an interest adverse to the faithful performance of his duties ; (h) for ceasing to reside within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court ; (i) in the case of a guardian of the property, for bankruptcy or insolvency ; (j) by reason of the guardianship of the guardian ceasing or being liable to cease under the law to which the minor is subject :

Provided that a guardian appointed by will or other instrument, whether he has been declared under this Act or not, shall not be removed (a) for the cause mentioned in cl. (g) unless the adverse interest accrued after the death of the person who appointed him, or it is shown that that person made and maintained the appointment in ignorance of the existence of the adverse interest, or (b) for the cause mentioned in cl. (h), unless such guardian has taken up such a residence as, in the opinion of the Court, renders it impracticable for him to discharge the functions of guardian.

Chotalal died, leaving him surviving his two widows, named Bai Shangar alias Ghebeli and Bai Moti, but no issue. Chanchal married one Chimanlal, to whom she bore a son Mafatlal, who apparently was born at the time of his uncle Chotalal's death. On the death of Chotalal, disputes arose between his mother Bai Harkor and his two widows. Ultimately the disputes were referred to arbitrators, who made an award declaring the minor Mafatlal to be the heir to the estate of his deceased uncle Chotalal. A decree was passed in the Subordinate Judge's Court embodying the result of the arbitration, and in that decree Chotalal's widows Bai Shangar and Bai Moti were declared to be the guardians of the minor Mafatlal. Thereupon, Chotalal's mother Bai Harkor presented an application to the District Judge for the removal of Bai Shangar and Bai Moti from the guardianship, and a question having arisen as to whether s. 39 of the Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), which authorizes the District Court to remove a guardian appointed or declared by the Court or a guardian appointed by a will or other instrument, was applicable to the case of a guardian appointed under a decree, and the Judge not being satisfied that the word instrument in s. 39 of the Act could be held to include "a decree," he made the reference in the following terms:—

"As there is considerable doubt in my mind on the matter, and as no appeal appears to lie against my order refusing to remove [377] the guardians, I beg to submit the following question * *. Does the word "instrument" in s. 39 of Act VIII of 1890 include the decree of a Subordinate Judge sitting as a Civil Court of original jurisdiction ?"

The opinion of the Judge was in the negative.

There was no appearance for the parties.

OPINION.

SARGENT, C.J.—We think that the anguage of the section requires that the word "instrument" should be confined to instruments ejusdem generis with a will, and that the decree, by which the first appointment of the guardians in this case must be regarded as having been made, is, therefore, not an instrument within the contemplation of the section.

Order accordingly.

THIS was a reference to a Full Bench.

The facts of this case, so far as they are material for the purposes of this report, are as follow :—

One Fakirapa was murdered on the 21st December, 1892.

During the course of the police investigation of the case the accused was examined by the chief constable under the provisions [378] of s. 161 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (X of 1882). On this occasion he stated that he had gone to the field where Fakirapa was lying, and questioned him as to who had assailed him, and that he named Kyundgu Mudkir, Yella Hubali, Yella Ahetti, Kon Bassaya, Tarrihal Bassaya and some other persons.

Tarrihal Bassaya was, thereupon, charged with murder. At the preliminary inquiry held by Mr. Bonus, a First Class Magistrate of Dharwar, the accused was examined as a witness. On that occasion he stated that he was told by the deceased Fakirapa that he had been beaten by Kadpatta Kalla and Kon Bassaya and that the deceased did not mention the names of Kyundgu Mudkir, Yella Hubali, Yella Ahetti and Tarrihal Bassaya.

Accused was, thereupon, prosecuted for intentionally giving false evidence in a judicial proceeding under s. 193 of the Indian Penal Code (XLV of 1860).

The First Class Magistrate convicted him of this offence, and sentenced him to one month's rigorous imprisonment.

The District Magistrate, in revising the proceedings of the case, was of opinion that the sentence passed on the accused was wholly inadequate, considering the serious nature of the offence. He was also of opinion that as the accused had made contradictory statements, one to the police and the other to the Magistrate, he ought to have been charged in respect of both and convicted in the alternative. He had been convicted of giving false evidence, although no evidence was taken or recorded to show that his statement to the police was false. On these grounds the District Magistrate referred the case to the High Court under s. 438 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882), recommending that the conviction and sentence should be quashed and a retrial ordered.

The case was heard by a Division Bench (Candy and Fulton, JJ.), who made the following reference to a Full Bench :—

"We agree with the District Magistrate that the evidence does not prove that the accused gave false evidence before the police, but that it establishes, prima facie, either that he gave false evidence in a stage of a judicial proceeding before Mr. Bonus, or [379] that he gave false evidence (punishable under the latter part of s. 193, Indian Penal Code) before the chief constable when holding an inquiry under Chap. XIV of the Criminal Procedure Code.

"Before, however, remanding the case for retrial we have to decide whether on the above facts a charge or charges can be framed which may lead to a conviction. If we accept the judgment in Imperatrix v. Annya (1), apparently this question must be answered in the negative; but as the remarks in this judgment are in the nature of obiter dicta, and appear inconsistent with the decision in Imperatrix v. Kabhai Ujam (1) and with the tendency of the decision in Imperatrix v. Kalidas Samal (2), we are unable to accept it as a conclusive authority.

"Under the circumstances we think it desirable to refer to a Full Bench the question, whether an accused person can be convicted, in the alternative, of intentionally giving false evidence in a stage of a judicial proceeding before a Magistrate, or of intentionally giving false evidence before a police officer making an investigation under chap. XIV of the Code of Criminal Procedure (see Reg. v. Mahammad (3) ; Queen-Empress v. Ramji (4) ; Queen-Empress v. Ismal (5) ; Queen-Empress v. Bharma (6) ; Imperatrix v. Kabhai Ujam (1), Imperatrix v. Kalidas Samal (2) ; Imperatrix v. Annya (7) and if so, in what form the charge or charges should be framed, when the only available evidence is the fact that two contradictory statements have been made.

"Apparently in Queen-Empress v. Ramji (4) the possibility of charging in the manner adopted in the later case of Kabhai Ujam (1) was not considered."

This reference was heard by a Full Bench (Sargent, C. J., and Telang, Candy and Fulton, JJ.).

There was no appearance for the Crown or for the accused.

JUDGMENT.

PER CURIAM.—He cannot be charged and, therefore, still less convicted on an alternative charge, having regard to the ruling [380] in Imperatrix v. Kabhai Ujam (1) which, we think, should not be re-opened.

As to the propriety of framing separate charges where there is no other evidence before the Magistrate, but the contradictory statements made by the accused, the decision in Imperatrix v. Kabhai Ujam (1) and the opinion in Imperatrix v. Annya (7) are, we think, necessarily conflicting. After a careful consideration of the question we are of opinion that we ought to adopt the reasoning of the Court in the latter case, and must, therefore, hold that separate charges under the above circumstances cannot be framed.

The question, therefore, must be answered in the negative.

18 B. 380 (F.B.).

In construing s. 487 of Act X of 1882, effect must be given to the words "as such Judge or Magistrate," and these words must be read in connection with all the three classes of offences previously referred to.

Queen-Empress v. Sarat Chandra Rakhit (1) followed.

[R., U.B.R. (1897—1901) 61 (a); D., Rat. Unr. Cr. Cas. 904.]

THIS was a reference to a Full Bench.

The accused was charged with the offence of not obeying a legal order to attend before the Mamlatdar of Vagra in accordance with a summons issued by the Mamlatdar under s. 189 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code (Act V of 1879).

[381] The Mamlatdar acting in his capacity as a Magistrate of the Second Class tried the accused on the above charge, convicted him under s. 174 of the Indian Penal Code, and sentenced him to the fine of Rs. 20.

Thereupon, the District Magistrate referred the case to the High Court under s. 438 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882).

The District Magistrate was of opinion that the summons, which was disobeyed, having been issued by the trying Magistrate in his capacity as Mamlatdar, he was disqualified, under s. 487 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, from trying the accused for contempt of his own authority.

The District Magistrate was also of opinion that the prosecution was bad for want of the sanction or complaint required by s. 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

On both these grounds the District Magistrate recommended that the conviction and sentence should be quashed and a retrial ordered.

This case came on for hearing before a Division Bench (Candy and Fulton, JJ.), who referred the following question to a Full Bench :—

"Whether a Second Class Magistrate is debarred by s. 487 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882) from trying a person under s. 174 of the Indian Penal Code for disobeying a summons issued by him in his capacity as Mamlatdar?"

The reference was heard by a Full Bench, consisting of Sargent, C.J., Telang, Candy and Fulton, JJ.

There was no appearance, either for the Crown or for the accused.

JUDGMENT.

PER CURIAM.—Following the decision of the Calcutta High Court in the case of the Queeen-Empress v. Sarat Chandri Rakhit(1), we think that in determining the construction of s. 487 of the Criminal Procedure Code, effect must be given to the words "as such Judge or Magistrate," and that as [382] those words must be read in connection with all the three classes of offences previously referred to, they preclude us from holding that a Magistrate is debarred by law from trying an accused person under s. 174 of the Indian Penal Code for disobedience of a summons issued by him in his capacity of Mamlatdar. This is, in our opinion, the correct construction of the section, although we are aware that it leads to a distinction between offences committed before him in his capacity as a Civil Judge and those committed before him as a Magistrate, for which there seems to be no sufficient reason.

VISHNU (Original Plaintiff), Appellant v. RANGO GANESH PURANDARE (Original Defendant), *Respondent. [4th July, 1893.]

Easement—Right of way—Right of drainage—Mortgage—Mortgage of part of a house—Easement over the other part granted to the mortgagee by the mortgage-deed—Subsequent sale of parts of the house to different owners—Sale of mortgaged part subject to the mortgage—Mortgage paid off by purchaser—Purchaser's right to easement—License—Grant of right of way in a mortgage of part of property of mortgagor—Reservation by mortgagor of similar right in respect of other property not mortgaged by him—Vendor and purchaser—Sale of land subject to a mortgage giving a right of way—Mortgage paid off by purchaser—Mortgagee not a party to conveyance—Receipt for mortgage money endorsed on conveyance.

V, the owner of a house, mortgaged the east portion of it to M, in 1878. The mortgage-deed gave to the mortgagee the use of a certain privy situated in another part of the house and the right of way to it through a certain bol or passage. V, subsequently sold the whole house to C., and C., in 1880, mortgaged the western part of it to R., who got a decree, and in execution the part mortgaged to him (i.e., the west) was sold in 1885, and the defendant became the purchaser. In 1887 C. sold the east part to the plaintiff, who paid off the mortgage to M., and obtained M.'s endorsement of payment on his deed of conveyance. The plaintiff subsequently sued to restrain the defendant from interfering with his use of the passage and of the privy. The defendant alleged that both were comprised in the property purchased by him at the Court sale in 1885, and that the right given by the mortgage of 1878 was merely a license to the mortgagee and not an easement.

Held, that the use of the passage and of the privy was a privilege granted by the very instrument which created the mortgage, and should be regarded as a privilege [383] ancillary to the use of the part of the house mortgaged to M. in 1879. The defendant's purchase in 1885 was subject to the easement acquired by M. (the mortgagee), and the plaintiff had purchased the mortgagee's interest in the house, which included her right by way of easement. The plaintiff was, therefore, entitled to the use of the privy and the passage.

In the mortgage-deed of 1880, by which the west part of the house was mortgaged by C. to R., the following clause was contained :—"You are to have the use of the drain for passing water as it has continued from old times."

Held, that these words should be understood as intended to reserve to C. (the mortgagor), in respect of the part of the house not included in the mortgage, a right to use the drain similar to the right given to the mortgagee. The right so reserved by C. was afterwards sold by C. to the plaintiff along with the east part of the house in 1887, and the plaintiff was, therefore, entitled to the use of the drain.

The plaintiff purchased a part of the house which the vendor had previously mortgaged to M. The mortgage deed gave to the mortgagee the use of a certain privy and the right of going to it through a passage situated at the rear of the mortgaged part of the house. M. was not a party to the conveyance to the plaintiff, but at the time of the purchase the plaintiff paid off M.'s mortgage, and M. signed a receipt for the mortgage money endorsed on the conveyance.

Held, that the plaintiff must be taken to have purchased the mortgagee's interest in the house including the right by way of easement over the passage.

SECOND appeal from the decision of L. G. Fernandez, First Class Subordinate Judge of Poona, with appellate powers.

The plaintiff was the owner of a house adjoining the defendant's house and situated to the east of it.

These houses were originally one house, facing eastwards. It belonged to one Vithu bin Sayaji, who on the 4th December, 1878, mortgaged the front (i. e., east) portion of it to one Mathura. The mortgage-deed gave to the mortgagee the use of a certain privy, with the right of going to it through a certain bol or passage at the rear of the mortgaged part of the house. The clause in the deed was as follows:—

"And there is to the west of my (mortgagor's) rear sopa (veranda), a passage (bol) as far as the privy. This has been left joint for your user and enjoyment, because you have the vahivat (management) of the northern privy in the rear."

In the following year (viz., 12th June, 1879) Vithu sold the whole house to one Chimnaji, and Chimnaji on the 5th June, 1880, mortgaged with possession the rear i.e., the western part of the [384] house to one Ravji Lakshman, the mortgage-deed in this case providing that the mortgagee was "to have the use of the drain for passing water as it has continued from old times." This drain passed under the above-named bol or passage.

In 1882, Ravji sued Chimnaji on the mortgage and got a decree, in execution of which the west or rear part of the house mortgaged in 1880 was sold in 1885, and the defendant purchased it and took possession.

On the 14th July, 1887, Chimnaji sold to the plaintiff the front or east part of the house, which had been mortgaged in 1878 to Mathura. The plaintiff redeemed the mortgage, and Mathura made an endorsement on the deed of conveyance to the effect that the mortgage was paid off.

On the 16th December, 1887, the plaintiff filed this suit, praying for an injunction restraining the defendant from obstructing his (plaintiff's) right of using the passage and the privy and the drain under the passage. The plaintiff alleged that the passage, the privy and the drain under the passage belonged to him.

The defendant contended that he had purchased the passage (bol), the privy and the drain when he purchased the house at the Court sale in 1885.

The Subordinate Judge found that the privy belonged to the plaintiff; that the passage (bol) with the drain underneath belonged to the defendant, but that the plaintiff had a right to use the passage (bol) and to discharge the water from his premises through the drain. He, therefore, partially allowed the plaintiff's claim.

The defendant appealed and the plaintiff presented cross objections under s. 561 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882). The appellate Court reversed the decree and dismissed the suit, holding that the plaintiff had not proved his right to the passage (bol) leading to the privy, that the privy did not belong to the plaintiff, and that he had no right to discharge his water through the drain.

The plaintiff preferred a second appeal.

[385] Shivram v. Bhandarkar, for the appellant (plaintiff).—When the plaintiff purchased the front portion of the house it was under mortgage to Mathura, to whom it had been mortgaged in 1878. After his purchase the plaintiff paid off the mortgage, and the mortgagee (Mathura) endorsed the payment on the plaintiff's deed of conveyance. The plaintiff, therefore, is entitled to Mathura's rights under the mortgage-deed. That deed gave Mathura the use of the privy and of the passage to it. The defendant's purchase was subsequent to Mathura's mortgage, and was, therefore, subject to any rights which Mathura had acquired under her mortgage. The right of passage over the bol is an easement of necessity for the use of the privy—Watts v. Kelson (1); Morris v. Edgington (2); Purushottam Sakharam v. Dargoji Tukaram (3). As to the drain, the defendant only takes the right given to Ravji by Chimnaji under the mortgage of 1880. By that mortgage Chimnaji merely gave the use of the drain to Ravji, while also reserving a right of user to himself. This reserved right now belongs to the plaintiff, who purchased from Chimnaji.

Mahadev Chimnaji Apte, for the respondent (defendant).—The plaintiff can only lay claim to that portion of the house which he purchased from Chimnaji and nothing more. He cannot lay claim to the privy and the right of passage over the bol simply on the ground that the mortgagee Mathura was entitled to them. In order that an easement should be apparent and continuous, the person claiming a right to the easement should have a right to compel his opponent to submit to the easement. There is no reservation made in the plaintiff's sale-deed with respect to use of the privy and the bol. If the owner of a property conveys a portion of it to another, the vendee cannot by implication get any right of easement over the other portion of the property—Suffield v. Brown (1). An apparent and continuous easement may pass to the grantee, only under certain circumstances—Wheeldon v. Burrows (2); Russell v. Watts (3). In both these cases Suffield v. Brown (1) was followed.

[386] Next we contend that the appellant plaintiff cannot claim those rights which Mathura had under her mortgage, because there was no assignment of the mortgage to him. The use of the privy and the bol was not an easement, but a mere license conferred on Mathura by the mortgage. Under the mortgage-deed the mortgagor allowed Mathura to use the privy and for this purpose the bol was kept in the joint use of the mortgagor and Mathura. This was merely a personal privilege—Prosonna Coomar Singha v. Ram Coomar Ghose (4) ; Wood v. Leadbitter (5).

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—Both the Courts below have found that the bol in question belonged to the defendant, but the lower Court of appeal, differing from the Subordinate Judge, has held that plaintiff has failed in establishing a right to the use of the northern privy and a passage along the bol for that purpose, and also to have the water from his house allowed to pass by the drain running down the bol.

It has been contended for the plaintiff that, as regards the use of the privy, it was granted by the mortgage of 1878 to Mathura, which was paid off by plaintiff on the occasion of his purchase in 1887,—that it, therefore, passed to the plaintiff by his purchase, and the defendant holds the bol subject to that easement. For the defendant it was contended that it was only a license and not an easement which was conferred by the mortgage to Mathura, and Prosonna Coomar Singha v. Ram Coomar Ghose (4) was referred to. Here, however, the privilege was granted by the very instrument which created the mortgage, and must be regarded by the very terms of the provision as a privilege ancillary to the use of the house—to use the language of Martin, B., in Hill v. Tupper (6). It is plain, therefore, that the defendant acquired the bol subject to the easement which the mortgagee Mathura had over it.

It was contended, however, that it did not pass to the plaintiff, because there is no express assignment of Mathura's mortgage. It is true that Mathura was not made a party to the conveyance to the plaintiff as would be done in England; but she signed a [387] receipt for the mortgage money endorsed on the conveyance, and the plaintiff must, therefore, be taken to have purchased the mortgagee's interest in the house, which would include the right by way of easement over the defendant's bol. We think, therefore, that the plaintiff has established his right to the use of the northern privy and a way to it along the bol.

As to the rights of draining the water of his house by the drain running down the bol, we think that the words of the mortgage by Chimnaji to Ravji Lakshman, through whom defendant derives his title,—"you are to have the use of the drain for passing water as it has continued from old times"—must be understood as intended to reserve to Chimnaji the right in respect of the house still retained by him of using the drain whilst conferring an equal right on Ravji Lakshman of using it for the enjoyment of the mortgaged house.

We must, therefore, vary the decree of the Court below by granting plaintiff an injunction to restrain defendant from interfering with or obstructing the right of way of himself and other inmates of the house through the bol to the northern privy and the use of the same and also his right to have the water from his house conveyed by the drain in the bol. The plaintiff to have his costs of this appeal. Parties to pay their own costs in the lower Court of appeal.

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), art. 134, sch. II—Mortgage—Sub-mortgage—Redemption.

In 1864 Ramji mortgaged the property in dispute with possession to Raghu. Raghu and his widow after his death sub-mortgaged various portions of it to Savlaram (defendant No. 3) in 1864, 1866 and 1870. After the death of the mortgagor, Ramji, his grandsons (plaintiffs Nos. 1, 2 and 3) sold their equity of redemption to plaintiffs Nos. 4 and 5 and in 1891 the five plaintiffs sued defendants Nos. 1 and [388] 2, the heirs of Raghu (original mortgagee) and the sub-mortgagee (defendant No. 3) for redemption and possession. The defendants contended that the suit was barred by the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), sch. II, art. 134.

Held, that art. 134 did not apply, as the language of the sub-mortgage-deed showed that the transaction was merely a mortgage of the mortgage-interest of Raghu and not of the entire property in the land.

Daivakhan Daudkhan v. Bhiku Sazba (1) and Yesu Ramji v. Balkrishna (2), referred to.

APPEAL from an order of remand passed by Rao Bahadur Chunilal M., First Class Subordinate Judge of Poona, with appellate powers.

The plaintiffs in 1891 sued to redeem and recover possession of certain lands from the defendants. The lands originally belonged to Ramji, the grandfather of plaintiffs Nos. 1, 2 and 3. In 1864 he mortgaged them with possession to Raghu. In 1864, 1866 and 1870 Raghu and after his death his widow sub-mortgaged them to Savlaram (defendant No. 3). After Ramji's death his heirs (plaintiffs Nos. 1, 2 and 3) sold the equity of redemption to plaintiffs Nos. 4 and 5. The five plaintiffs now sued the mortgagees and sub-mortgagees for redemption.

The defendants pleaded limitation, and relied on art. 134 of sch. II of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) (1).

The Subordinate Judge found that art. 134, sch. II of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), was applicable to the case, and on the authority of Yesu Ramji v. Balkrishna (2) dismissed the suit as time-barred.

On appeal by the plaintiffs the Judge reversed the decree and remanded the case for a fresh decision.

He found it proved that the original mortgagee Raghu and his widow after his death had sub-mortgaged the property to defendant No. 3, and he held that art. 134 of sch. II of the Limitation Act did not apply in a case in which "a person [389] purchases from another with full knowledge that his vendor or mortgagor, as the case may be, is himself a mortgagee."

Defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 7 appealed.

Ghanasham N. Nadkarni, appeared for the appellants (original defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 7). He relied upon Baivakhan Daudkhan v. Bhiku Sazba (3) and Yesu Ramji v. Balkrishna (2).

Daji Abaji Khare, appeared for the respondents (original plaintiffs).

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C.J.—In this case the lower appeal Court has held that art. 134, Limitation Act (XV of 1877), did not apply, on the ground that the defendant had notice that his mortgagor Visaji was only a mortgagee of the land in question. Whether notice, as such, as showing want of good faith would be sufficient to deprive the appellants of the benefit of the above article of the Act of Limitation cannot perhaps be regarded as having been distinctly decided by any Division Bench of this Court having regard to the language of the Court in Baivakhan Daudkhan v. Bhiku Sazba (3) and Yesu Ramji v. Balkrishna (2). But here it is sufficient to say that art. 134 does not apply, as the language of the mortgage-deed, under which the defendants claim in this case, shows that it was only a mortgage of the mortgage-interest of Raghuji Visaji, and not of the entire property in the land. We must, therefore, confirm the decree of the Court below with costs.

Decree confirmed.

(1) Article 134 of sch. II to the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) gives as the period of limitation twelve years from "the date of the purchase" for a suit to recover possession of immoveable property conveyed or bequeathed in trust or mortgaged, and afterwards purchased from the trustee or mortgagee, for a valuable consideration.

Hindu law—Partition—Partition of joint property situate in British India without taking into account other joint property situate outside British India.

A Court can grant partition of property belonging to a joint Hindu family situated in British India without taking into account other property belonging to the family situated outside British India.

[R., 23 B. 597 (600).]

[390] THIS was an appeal from the decision of Rao Babadur Jayasatya Bodharao Tirmalrao, First Class Subordinate Judge of Satara, in suit No. 14 of 1885.

Plaintiff sued for a partition of certain family property. The relationship of the parties is shown by the following pedigree:—

The defendants pleaded (inter alia) that the plaintiff was in possession of certain ancestral property at Gwalior consisting of houses, &c., which should be brought into hotchpot, and that until this was done, the suit would not lie.

The Subordinate Judge declined to raise any issue as to the property in plaintiff's possession at Gwalior holding that he had no jurisdiction over property situate oustide British India, and that it was not necessary to include such property in the present suit. He passed a decree, declaring that the plaintiff was entitled to a third share in certain of the properties mentioned in the plaint and to a half-share in the remainder.

Against this decree the plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Jardine (with him Mahadev Chimnaje Apte), for respondents (defendants).—This suit cannot be maintained, unless the plaintiff brings into hotchpot the property which he holds at Gwalior. In a partition-suit the plaintiff must bring into hotchpot the whole of the joint property. Even assuming that the Court has jurisdiction to order a partial partition, a Court of Equity will not grant relief until the plaintiff submits to partition the whole estate—Hari Narayan v. Ganpatrav Daji (1); Ram Lochun Pattuck v. Rughoobur Dyal (2); Ruttun Monee Dutt v. Brojo Mohun Dutt (3); Mayne's Hindu law, s. 452.

[391] Lang (Acting Advocate General) (with him Vasudev R. Joglekar), for the appellant.—The lower Court had no jurisdiction to deal with any property situate outside British India. It could not order that property to be divided. It is, therefore, not necessary to include it in the present suit. The defendant cannot complain of any injustice or hardship if the property in suit is divided without taking into account the Gwalior property. It is open to him to demand partition of that property in the Courts at Gwalior.

JUDGMENT.

TELANG, J.—Of the points argued before us, one relates to the adoption of Jayanarain by the widow of Badri. On the evidence I have come to the conclusion that that adoption is proved. It is unnecessary to go in detail into the evidence, as it has been set out by the Subordinate Judge.

The other important point relates to the argument urged on behalf of the defendants before us, to the effect that this suit is not maintainable, as the plaintiff has not brought into hotchpot certain property situated in the Gwalior territories which the defendants alleged to be family property. Now, there can be no doubt that this objection, if in itself sustainable, does not prevent the suit being maintained. It can only lead to a partition being made by the Court on the basis of the property in question being included therein. But the question here arises, whether the Court can make such a partition in the present case. Here the property alleged to be family property lies outside the jurisdiction of this Court and indeed outside British India. It is plain that the Court has no jurisdiction and no machinery for partitioning that property. Such jurisdiction and machinery are wanting in exactly the same way whether the suit is one like Dada Naik's case, whether the plaintiff, in the first instance, claimed partition of property outside the jurisdiction, or whether it is like the present case where the defendant asks that property should be brought into hotchpot for purposes of division although it lies outside the jurisdiction. It must, therefore, be futile to call on the plaintiff to bring that property into hotchpot for purposes of partition.

It may be said, no doubt, that the result of this will be that the plaintiff will have his full share of the property in British India [392] and will at the same time retain the entire property in Gwalior. But the remedy for this is in the hands of the defendants themselves. They must obtain their share of the Gwalior property by resorting to proper proceedings in the tribunals which have local jurisdiction over that property. Again, it may be said that this result is inconsistent with the general rule that partition takes place only once. But I am not aware that that rule has been enforced in such a case as the present, where partition cannot, by any means, be effected in one jurisdiction. In Hari Narayan v. Ganpatrav Daji (1) the point was left open, and in other cases the property was not outside British India, and, therefore, under the Civil Procedure Code, it has always been possible by resorting to the appropriate procedure to give a single Court jurisdiction over the whole of the family property.

But it is said that although the Court cannot make partition of property in a foreign jurisdiction it may nevertheless take such property into its calculation and award to the plaintiff in possession so much only of the property in British India as will equalize the shares of the plaintiff and defendant. In the first place, this is doing indirectly that which the law says may not be done directly. Secondly, it excludes a plaintiff who has property in a Native State, for no fault of his own, from what ordinarily would be his proper share in properties in British territory. And thirdly, in the event of the property in British territories being less than that in the Native State, it will exclude him from all share or benefit out of the former property. It appears to me that these results are much more inequitable than the results of refusing to entertain jurisdiction in any way, direct or indirect, in relation to the property in Native States. In fact, the very principle which underlies the rule that "once is partition of inheritance made," viz., that thus alone can all the mutual rights of the parties be equitably adjusted, also requires that the Court should not attempt to deal with property outside its jurisdiction, because such a complete adjustment is outside its powers.

On the whole, therefore, I have come to the conclusion that the Subordinate Judge was right in refusing to deal with the property [393] in the Gwalior jurisdiction, and that his decree cannot be disturbed on that ground.

FULTON, J. (after referring to the question of adoption, continued :—) The next question to consider is whether the Subordinate Judge was right in refusing to take into account the Gwalior property. It is admittedly in the hands of the plaintiff, who says it is not family property. For the defendants it is contended that, without deciding whether it is family property or not and without taking it into account if it is joint, it is impossible to make an equitable partition of the property in British India.

It was, I think, not disputed that, before granting partition of joint property in the hands of a defendant, account must be taken of any such property in the possession of the plaintiff in British India. Ballal Krishna v. Govinda (1) and Parbatsing v. Motibhai (2) may be referred to in support of this proposition, which seems obvious. A plaintiff is entitled to his share in the whole family property, but he is not entitled to a share in any specified portion of the property apart from the rest. See Nanabhai v. Nathabhai (3). If he has family property in his possession, he cannot insist on a decree which will leave him in possession of more than his share of the whole. When, however, we come to apply this principle to property held by a plaintiff in a Native State, a doubt arises. If it be admitted that such property is joint, it would at first sight seem inequitable to grant partition of the property in British India without taking it into account, for the effect of such a decree would be at once to place the plaintiff in possession of an admittedly larger share of the family estate than he was entitled to, but the point does not appear to have been ever expressly decided in any reported case. In Ramchandra Dada Naik v. Dada Mahadev Naik (4) the Supreme Court held that it had no jurisdiction to enforce partition of immoveable property in the territories of an independent Chief, but in the subsequent case between the members of the same family—Lakshman Dada Naik v. Ramchandra Dada Naik (5)—a house in Shahapur in the Sangli State was taken into consideration [394] in a decree for partition. No objection, however, appears to have been taken, and possibly the fact that it was not situated in British territory was not brought to the notice of the Court. In Hari Narayan v. Ganpatrav Daji (6) Mr. Justice Kemball inclined to the view that property in a Native

State should be considered when granting partition, but the question was not decided. A good deal may be said on both sides, but the arguments used by my learned colleague seem to me conclusive, and I, therefore, concur in the decision at which he has arrived.

As regards the details of the moveable property liable to partition, no sufficient reasons were shown for interfering with the judgment of the Subordinate Judge.

We must, therefore, confirm the decree of the Subordinate Judge, and direct that the costs of this appeal be paid by appellant, excepting the costs of the cross-objections, which must be borne by the respondent.

Decree confirmed.

RANCHORDAS NATHUBHAI AND OTHERS (Original Plaintiffs), Applicants v. BHAGUBHAI PARMANANDAS AND OTHERS (Original Defendants), *Opponents. [11th July, 1893.]

Succession Certificate Act (VII of 1889)—Landlord and tenant—Suit for rent.

A certain firm mortgaged with possession its immoveable property to two other firms trading jointly, who let out the property to the mortgagor firm. Afterwards some of the partners of the mortgagee firms having died, the surviving partners and the sons of the deceased brought a suit against the mortgagor firm to recover rent which accrued due after the deaths of the deceased partners. The Judge held that the plaintiffs could not proceed with the suit without a certificate under the Succession Certificate Act (VII of 1889).

Held, reversing the order, that as the rent sued upon became due after the deaths of the deceased partners, it formed no part of their estates at the time of their respective deaths, and no certificate was, therefore, necessary under the Succession Certificate Act (VII of 1889).

[395] APPLICATION under the High Court's extraordinary jurisdiction (s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code, Act XIV of 1882) against the decision of Rao Bahadur M. N. Nanavati, First Class Subordinate Judge of Surat.

Suit to recover arrears of rent.

In 1885 the defendants' firm through its manager mortgaged certain premises to two firms which traded together in partnership. Of these two firms, Chunilal Dwarkadas and Fatechand Hirachand were the proprietors. On the day of the mortgage the mortgagee firms leased the mortgaged property to the mortgagor firm, agreeing to take rent by two instalments per year. Fatechand died on the 5th January, 1888, and Chunilal on the 1st January, 1889. In the year 1892 the plaintiffs, who were then the partners of the mortgagee firm, and the sons of the deceased Chunilal and Fatechand brought a suit against the proprietors of the mortgagor firm to recover rent which was due from April, 1889.

The Subordinate Judge held that the plaintiffs could not proceed with the suit without a certificate under the Succession Certificate Act (VII of 1889), on the ground that the partnership of the plaintiffs was a partnership by contract and not a family partnership, and directed them to produce the certificate within a particular time.

The plaintiffs applied under the extraordinary jurisdiction, and obtained a rule nisi calling on the defendants to show cause why the order of the Subordinate Judge should not be set aside on the ground that he was wrong in holding that a certificate under the Succession Certificate Act was necessary for the maintenance of the suit.

Kalabhai Lallubhai appeared for the plaintiffs in support of the rule.—On the deaths of Chunilal and Fatechand their interest in the mortgaged property survived to their sons, and, therefore, no succession certificate was necessary. Further, our claim is in respect of rent, which accrued due after the deaths of Chunilal and Fatechand. We do not seek to recover rent which became due during their lifetime, and if we had done so, a succession certificate would have been necessary.

[396] There was no appearance for the opponents (defendants) to show cause.

ORDER.

SARGENT, C.J.—As the rent sued upon became due after the deaths of Chunilal and Fatechand it formed no part of their estates at the time of their respective deaths, and, therefore, no certificate was necessary under the Act of 1889. We must, therefore, make the rule absolute and reverse the decree of the Court below and send back the case for trial.

Order reversed and case sent back.

SHRIDHAR BALLAL KELKAR (Original Plaintiff), Appellant v. CHINTAMAN SADASHIV MEHENDALE AND ANOTHER (Original Defendants), *Respondents. [12th July, 1893.]

Registration—Registration Act (III of 1877), s. 17, cl. (h)—Sale—Construction—Document creating a right to obtain another document.

By an unregistered writing, dated 17th April, 1889, A. agreed to sell to B. certain landed property on his (B's.) paying off the mortgage-debt due upon it and a further sum of Rs. 1,500. The agreement also stated that B. had on that day paid A. the Rs. 1,500 and might pay off the mortgage-debt at any time he liked, and that A. would execute a valid deed of sale. In a suit brought by A. upon the agreement the lower Court held that the agreement was an agreement of the equity of redemption and required registration, and that being unregistered, the plaintiff's claim based on it could not be maintained. On second appeal, Held, following Chunilal Panalal v. Bomanji (1) that the agreement did not require registration.

SECOND appeal from the decision of A. D. Pollen, District Judge of Poona.

The plaintiff sued for a declaration that a deed of sale, dated the 28th January, 1890, of two houses in Poona executed by defendant No. 1 to defendant No. 2 was fraudulent and invalid. He alleged that defendant No. 2 had previously agreed to sell the property to him by an unregistered agreement, dated the 17th April, 1889, under which he had paid the defendant No. 1 a sum of Rs. 1,500. The property was mortgaged, and by the agreement the plaintiff was to pay off the mortgage.

* Second Appeal, No. 43 of 1892.

(1) 7 B. 310.

[397] The following is the material part of the agreement passed by defendant No. 1 to the plaintiff, on which the latter relied :—

"At present I have mortgaged the said properties to Rajashri Shankarrao Krishna Limaye, minor, by his guardian and administrator (of the property)—as owner—Krishnaji Vishnu Limaye, under a mortgage-deed for Rs. 5,000. I have agreed to sell the above-mentioned properties to you on your paying the whole amount, (that is to say), on your paying directly to the mortgagee, in respect of his mortgage right to the said properties, the amount that may be found due to him after deducting the payments, &c., made to him, and paying me this day a further sum of Rs. 1,500, namely, fifteen hundred. You have accordingly paid me this day fifteen hundred rupees. Now you should pay off directly the amount due to the mortgagee on (making account), without waiting for me. You may pay off the same at any time from this day you like. I will execute a proper and valid deed of sale in respect of the above-mentioned properties, together with their appurtenances and rights after taking upon me the responsibility of removing obstructions and obstacles caused, if any, to the above properties, and will get the same registered. You should take into your possession the above-mentioned properties which are in the possession of the mortgagee after paying him the amount due to him."

Defendant No. 1 alleged that a second agreement had been executed on the same day, which provided that, if he (defendant No. 1) repaid the plaintiff the sum of Rs. 1,500 within a year, the first agreement for sale should be null and void. He contended that the plaintiff might claim the Rs. 1,500 and interest, but not the property itself, which he admitted he had subsequently sold to defendant No. 2 under a duly registered sale deed.

The following is the material part of the second agreement relied on by the defendant. It purported to be passed by the plaintiff to the defendant No. 1 :—

"I entered into an agreement for the purchase from you of your house No. 489 * * * and paid you Rs. 1,500, fifteen hundred, out of the price of the same which was due to you ; and I have this day taken from you an agreement in writing for having a purchase deed of the said properties executed (to me). But it has been stipulated between you and me that should you within six months from this day repay (pay ?) to me the interest on the Rs. 1,500 paid to you this day which at the rate of rupees one and a half per cent. per month comes to Rs. 135, (one hundred and thirty-five), and (repay) the remaining rupees fifteen hundred within the further period of six months which at the said rate of interest comes to rupees one hundred and thirty-five, then only the agreement which I have this day taken from you in writing for having a purchase-deed executed by you to me will be null and void. If any of the instalments be not paid within the fixed periods as mentioned above, this agreement will be null and void immediately on the failure of payment of the instalment. This agreement is duly given in writing."

[398] Defendant No. 2 pleaded that he had purchased the property bona fide from defendant No. 1, and that he had no notice of the previous transaction with the plaintiff.

JULY 12.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

8 B. 396.

The Subordinate Judge found that the later sale by defendant No. 1 to defendant No. 2 was colourable and collusive, and passed a decree declaring that it was void as against the plaintiff.

On appeal by the defendants the Judge reversed the decree and rejected the plaintiff's claim on the ground that the agreement of sale relied on by him needed registration, but was not registered :—

"Now this agreement (relied on by the plaintiff) by its terms really assigns to the plaintiff the equity of redemption to be exercised at any moment for the consideration of Rs. 1,500 actually received. It is thus more than a mere contract to execute a conveyance: it evidences a complete transaction in itself. * * * * * *

Now it seems to me that the above agreement really operated as a transfer of an interest in immoveable property exceeding Rs. 100 in value, and that it needed registration, and that it does not fall under the exception (b) to s. 17 of the Registration Act.

"The counter agreement executed by plaintiff to defendant No. 1 on the same day, namely, 17th April, 1889, provides that if defendant No. 1 repaid Rs. 1,500 with interest within one year, the previous agreement should thereupon be considered as cancelled. Defendant No. 1 contends that the two agreements taken together were only intended to be an assurance that the loan of Rs. 1,500 would be repaid. The Subordinate Judge also regards the two agreements read together as amounting to a mortgage; but even then the agreement would require to be registered. It seems to me that the two agreements when read together constitute a conditional assignment of the equity of redemption to become void on the occurrence of a specified contingency, and as such they require registration, and should not be admitted in evidence being unregistered; and that plaintiff's claim founded on such agreements cannot be maintained."

The plaintiff filed a second appeal.

[399] Mahadeo B. Chavbal, for the appellant (plaintiff).—The agreement we rely on, is not a conveyance of the equity of redemption. It is merely an agreement and nothing more. It contemplates the execution of another document, and, therefore, its registration is not necessary. It is the conveyance which requires registration—Jusab Haji Jafar v. Haji Gul Muhammad (1); Burjorji v. Muncherji (2); Chunilal Panalal v. Bomanji Mancherji (3). We are entitled to specific performance of our contract—Kadar v. Ismail (4); Adakkalam v. Theethan (5).

Nagindas T. Marphatia, for respondent 1 (defendant 1).—We contend that the agreement requires registration because it effected a complete sale of the equity of redemption—Ahmedbhoy Hubibhoy v. Vulleebhoy Cassumbhoy (6). Although the agreement in question contemplates the execution of a formal document, still the intention of the parties is to be gathered from the agreement itself, and the intention being to convey an interest in immoveable property, the agreement requires registration—Purmanandas Jiwandas v. Dharsey Virji (7).

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C.J.—We think the document passed by defendant No. 1 to the plaintiff was not, as the lower Court of appeal has held, merely,

(1) 12 B.H.C.R. 175. (2) 5 B. 143. (3) 7 B. 310. (4) 9 M. 119.
(5) 12 M. 505. (6) 8 B. 323. (7) 10 B. 101.

an assignment of the equity of redemption, but was an agreement for the sale to the plaintiff of the entire interest in the properties therein mentioned for Rs. 1,500 and the sum due on the mortgage to Limaye, with a further agreement by the defendant to execute a formal deed of conveyance as soon as the above sums were paid. The defendant No. 1 says: " I have agreed to sell the above-mentioned properties to you on your paying the whole amount (that is to say), on your paying directly to the mortgagee in respect of his mortgage right the amount that may be found due to him and paying me the further sum of Rs. 1,500." There is no sale in terms of the equity of redemption as such, but an agreement to sell complete ownership in the property after the mortgage has been paid off, and the mere fact that the Rs. 1,500 is recited as having been paid, cannot affect the plain meaning of the language of the instrument.

[400] Such being the nature of the document according to its terms, the question is, whether it required registration, having regard to sub-cl. (h) of S. 17 of the Registration Act. This was decided, and in our opinion rightly decided, in the negative with respect to a similar document by Birdwood, J., in Chunilal Panalal v. Bomanji Mancherji (1). We must, therefore, hold that the agreements referred to in the judgment of the Court below do not require registration, and must reverse the decree of the Court below and send back the case for a fresh decision. Costs to abide the result.

Decree reversed and case sent back.

Bombay District Municipal Act (VI of 1873), s. 84—Non-payment of taxes—Liability to penalty—Offence—Penal Code (XLV of 1860), s. 40—Penalty—Imprisonment in default of payment of penalty.

There is no distinction between the word " penalty " as used in the Bombay District Municipal Act (VI of 1873) and the word "fine" as used in s. 64 of the Indian Penal Code (XLV of 1860). Imprisonment can, therefore, be awarded in default of any penalty inflicted under s. 84 of the Municipal Act.

THIS was a reference by J. Davidson, Esquire, District Magistrate of Kanara, under s. 438 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882).

One Lakmia was prosecuted by the Municipality of Haliyal for not having paid wheel tax alleged to be due.

The Third Class Magistrate, acting under s. 84 of the Bombay District Municipal Act (VI of 1873) as amended by s. 49, cl. (1) of Bombay Act II of 1884, ordered Lakmia to pay the arrears of the tax, together with a penalty of annas 4 or in default to undergo three days' simple imprisonment.

The District Magistrate, on examining the record of this case, entertained considerable doubts as to the legality of the order of imprisonment in default of payment of the arrears and penalty. He, therefore, referred the case to the High Court. His reasons were as follow:—

[401] "I do not think that it was intended by the Legislature to render a municipal defaulter liable to imprisonment in a criminal jail. I think that a distinction exists between an offender sentenced to a fine and a municipal defaulter, though also legally an offender, ordered to pay, in addition to his dues, a penalty, and that the order of imprisonment on default is ultra vires."

ADVOCATE-GENERAL OF BOMBAY (Plaintiff) v. MOULVI ABDUL KADIR JITAKER AND OTHERS (Defendants).* [12th, 13th, 15th and 20th February and 6th, 8th, 9th, 10th, 12th and 20th March, 1894.]

Mahomedan law—Mosque—Charity—Suit against directors or Mushavirs of a mosque—Liability of directors—Board of directors not properly constituted under the rules of the mosque Liability of directors for acts done by Board not properly constituted—Appointment of officers—Management of property—Liability of provisional committee assuming authority to act—Trustees—Limitation—Kazi—Act II of 1864 and Bombay Act IV of 1864—Nazir of mosque, liability of—Parties to suit against trustees of mosque—Practice.

A certain Mahomedan mosque in Bombay, known as the Juma Masjid, was possessed of considerable property. The administration of the mosque and its property was [402] carried on under rules which had been drawn and approved in the year 1834 at a special general meeting of the jamat convened for the purpose in the course of a suit which had been filed in the Supreme Court against the then mushavirs of the mosque. That suit was referred to the Master to make certain enquiries, and in his report these rules were set out in full. His report was confirmed by the Court. The rules provided that the mosque and its property should be managed by the Kazi of Bombay and ten mushavirs, and that a nazir should be appointed by them, and be subject to their control. The rules also prescribed the various duties of the kazi, mushavirs and nazir, and declared that the power of filling up vacancies should be exercised by the kazi and mushavirs collectively or by the kazi and an absolute majority of the mushavirs.

In 1834 and for many years subsequently there was, as there had always been, a "Kazi of Bombay" appointed under a sanad from Government. He held the appointment for life, and the office was not hereditary. In 1866 the then Kazi of Bombay died, but in consequence of the provisions of Act II of 1864 and Bombay Act IV of 1864 the Government made no new appointment, and the office lapsed. One Mahomed Husain Murgay, however, assumed the office and was generally accepted by the community as Kazi of Bombay. He died in 1878, and upon his death, rival claimants sought the office of Kazi of Bombay.

The mushavirs were then advised that they could not select one of the rival kazis to fill the office of Kazi of Bombay under the rules, and they, therefore, continued to manage the mosque without a kazi in violation of the rules of 1834. Two of the mushavirs (now relators) were of opinion that one of the rival applicants for the position should be appointed kazi, and as their wishes were not acceded to, they ceased to attend the board, and as far as possible, while retaining their offices, they thwarted the action of the other mushavirs. Subsequently in 1878 other vacancies occurred in the board. In 1888 the number of mushavirs was reduced to six, and two of them (the relators) as above stated took no part in the administration, so that the management was left in the hands of the first four defendants. In 1891 four new mushavirs (defendants Nos. 6 to 9) were elected, and in that year the Advocate-General at the relation of the two dissatisfied mushavirs filed this suit against the mushavirs. The former nazir of the masjid was also made a defendant (No. 5). He had held the office of nazir from 1879 to 1891 when he resigned. The plaint set forth the irregularities which had taken place in the management in 1878, and prayed for the removal of the defendants (other than defendant No. 5) from the position of directors or mushavirs and for an account against all the defendants, and for a scheme, &c. The following were the principal charges made against the defendants in the plaint and at the hearing: –

* Suit No. 656 of 1891.

(1) The neglect to take steps to supply the place of the kazi and the failure to keep up the proper number of the mushavirs.

Held, as to this, that subsequently to 1878 the mushavirs had no authority under the rules of 1834 to fill up vacancies as they occurred or to carry on the government of the masjid. Since that year the mushavirs were a provisional committee of management kept up from time to time by co-optation tacitly permitted by the jamat to manage the affairs of the masjid until the original constitution could be restored or legally changed, that original constitution being for the time in abeyance.

[403] 2. The improper appointment, in 1879, of one Mahomed Cassum Curtay (defendant No. 5) as nazir.

Held, that the mushavirs incurred no liability and deserved no censure for so doing.

3 The neglect to call for an annual account of the income and expenditure of the mosque under Rule 6.

Held, that this charge was not proved.

4 The neglect to purchase properties with the surplus income of the mosque as required by Rule 4.

Upon this point it was contended that the defendants should be charged with interest on the uninvested funds, so as to make up for the loss of rents which would have been recovered if properties had been purchased. In answer to this claim it was argued (Ist) that, under the circumstances, the mushavirs had no power to expend the funds of the mosque in purchasing property, and (2) that the claim was barred by limitation.

Held, that the claim fell within art. 120 of the schedule to the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), and was barred except as to six years prior to the filing of the suit, but even as to this period the Court refused to order accounts to be taken against the defendants. There had been no dishonesty or improper dealing with the funds of the mosque. The highest at which the case could be put was that there had been error of judgment. In this the community had acquiesced. Moreover, the position of the parties had changed. Some of the mushavirs were dead, others had resigned and were not defendants to the suit, and it would be difficult to enforce contribution against them. The Court was further of opinion that, in any case, it was very doubtful whether a provisional committee like the mushavirs would have been justified in assuming the power of purchasing property. Had the property fallen in value, the purchase might perhaps have been repudiated.

5. Their neglect in not detecting sums appropriated by the bill-collectors of the mosque and getting in the same.

Held, that as a provisional committee who had assumed the management of the masjid, the defendants were bound to protect its interests. Of the money which they actually received, or which was paid into their account, they were actual trustees, but in addition to this they were officers of the masjid charged with the specific duty of superintending the nazir and his accounts, and if the masjid had suffered loss by their neglect of duty, they were answerable for it. They neglected to examine the books, a cursory audit of which would have detected the defalcations of the bill-collectors. The Court, therefore, directed an account against them of the rents actually received, or which, but for their wilful default or neglect they might have received from the bill-collectors.

6. Their neglect in allowing arrears of rent to accumulate and to be lost to the masjid.

Held, that it was not the duty of the mushavirs to look into the account of each individual tenant. Under the rules the nazir, and not the mushavirs, was entrusted with the collection of rents, and it was his duty to see that the rents were not allowed to fall unduly into arrear. It was not shown that, except at an exceptional time when [404] the nazir was ill, the rents were so much in arrear as to call for the active interference of the mushavirs, or that the masjid had suffered undue loss under this head. The Court, therefore, refused relief on this charge.

7. The non-payment into the Bank of sums in the hands of the nazir when they exceeded Rs. 500.

Held, that the spirit of the rules had been complied with, and no loss had been shown.

Defendant No. 5, as above stated, had acted as nazir of the masjid from 1879 to July, 1891, when he resigned. Under the rules (see Rules 2 and 7) he was appointed by the directors and was under their orders and was removable at their pleasure. It was contended at the hearing that he was not a proper party to the suit, being merely the agent or servant of the directors and not a trustee.

Held, that he was properly made a defendant. Both under Mahomedan law and under the rules the nazir was a public officer in charge of the mosque, and as such liable to account to the community.

SUIT to remove the defendants from the position of directors of the Mahomedan mosque in Bombay known as the Juma Masjid and of the charitable property connected therewith, and for an account against them; for a scheme and the appointment of new officials; for the administration of the mosque, &c.

OPINION.

PER CURIAM.—As non-payment of municipal taxes entails liability to a penalty, it appears to be an offence as defined by s. 40 of the Indian Penal Code. We are unable to draw a distinction between the word "penalty" in the Bombay District Municipal Act and the word "fine" in s. 64 of the Indian Penal Code. The word "penalty" is used in many places in the Municipal Act as equivalent to a fine or pecuniary punishment for an offence (vide ss. 64 and 74). In Reg. v. Gulalchand (1), it was held that imprisonment could be awarded in default of fines imposed under this Act.

The order of the Third Class Magistrate is, therefore, correct.

The suit was filed in December, 1891, by the Advocate-General at the relation of five persons, two of whom, viz., Mahomed Husain Churgay and Haji Sheriff, were then and had been for many years directors of the masjid.

The plaint stated that in the year 1834 A.D. certain rules for the management of the Juma Masjid and of the charitable properties connected with it had been framed and adopted, and had received the sanction of the then Supreme Court of Bombay. These rules were the result of certain litigation which had been instituted in the Supreme Court. The rules referred to were as follows :—

"Whereas at a general meeting of the Kazi Chougla and the members of the Jamat or Mahomedan community of Bombay held at the Juma Masjid on the twenty-eighth day of October, 1834, two certain decrees of His Majesty's Supreme Court of Judicature at Bombay have been read, bearing date respectively the 8th day of March, 1833, and the 8th day of September, 1834, which said decrees were made in a certain suit on the Equity Side of the said Court wherein Kazi Kutbudin Saheb bin Shaik Abdula Mahimker, the Kazi of Bombay, Haji Ebrahim Jitaker, Mahomed Ally Rogay, Mahomed Ebrahim Muckba, Shumsudin Kisay, and

(1) B.H.C. Cr. Rul. dated 21st June, 1875.

Mahomed Syed Palloba were the complainants and Nur Mahomed bin Ebrahim Patell was the defendant.

[406] "And whereas in and by the first of the said decrees it was declared that the said complainant Kutbudin Saheb bin Shaik Abdula Mahimker, the Kazi of Bombay, Haji Ebrahim Jitaker, the Chougla of the Mahomedans residing in Bombay, Mahomed Ally Rogay, Mahomed Ebrahim Muckba, Shumsudin Kisay, and Mahomed Syed Palloba, the principal members of the jamat of the Mahomedans of Bombay on behalf of themselves and the rest of the Mahomedans of Bombay, were entitled to an account from the said defendant Nur Mahomed bin Ebrahim Patell as executor of his said father Ebrahim Ismail Patell, of all sums of moneys received by him either for donations, bequests, or otherwise for or on account of the Juma Masjid in the pleadings mentioned, and for the rents and profits of the ground in the pleadings also mentioned and of the chawls and buildings thereon erected from the time of the death of Nathu Patell in the pleadings mentioned until the tenth day of May, 1814, and also of all sums received by the said defendant in his own right since the said tenth day of May, 1814, on the same account; and whereas by the other decree it was decreed that the said defendant should be forthwith removed from his situation as manager or superintendent of the said Juma Masjid and chawls, now thereupon the following rules and regulations for the future management of the affairs and concerns of the said Juma Masjid and the chawls above mentioned, having been taken into consideration by the said meeting, the same are hereby and in and by the said meeting unanimously confirmed and agreed to.

Rule 1*st*.

"The late superintendent having been removed by the last mentioned decree of the Supreme Court from his said situation as manager of the Juma Masjid and the chawls belonging thereto, the said Juma Masjid and chawls shall henceforth (subject to any order or decree of the Supreme Court to the contrary in the suit pending therein in which the above-mentioned decrees were made) be placed under the Government and control of the Kazi of Bombay for the time being, and ten directors to be appointed in the manner hereinafter mentioned.

Rule 2nd.

"Subject as aforesaid, a superintendent of the said masjid and chawls shall be appointed in the manner hereinafter proposed, such superintendent to be at all times subject to the control of the kazi and directors, and in all respects to obey their orders; the duties of such superintendent to consist in the collection of the rents of the aforesaid chawls and of any other property dedicated to the mosque, and that such superintendent shall thereout defray all expenses incurred on account of the masjid and the ceremonies performed therein or of its appropriated property in necessary repairs or otherwise.

Rule 3rd.

"The superintendent shall not expend any sum exceeding rupees one hundred in amount in the repairs of the masjid or chawls, or any sum exceeding rupees fifty beyond the ordinary monthly expenses of the mosque or chawls without an order in writing signed by the kazi, and the directors or by the kazi and a majority of the directors for that purpose first had and obtained to sanction such payment, and such superintendent shall not at any time retain in his hands funds belonging to [406] the said masjid exceeding in amount the sum of rupees five hundred, and all surplus funds arising from the rents of the chawls or otherwise belonging to the said masjid exceeding the aforesaid amount shall from time to time be paid by the superintendent as the same shall be received by him into the hands of the kazi, who shall forthwith deposit the same in the Bombay Treasury in the names of himself and the two senior directors for the time being.

Rule 4th.

"As often as the funds standing to the credit of the kazi and the two senior directors shall amount to the sum of rupees five thousand or upwards, then and so often the kazi and the directors or the kazi and a majority of them shall therewith purchase other property to be added to the then appropriated property belonging to the said masjid, and the deed of sale thereof shall be made out to and in the name of the kazi and ten directors for the time being and their successors and assigns in trust for the kazi and jamat of Bombay for and on behalf and for the sustentation and repairs and other expenses of the said Juma Masjid, and of its appropriated property.

Rule 5th.

"The superintendent shall on the 1st day of Rujab, on the 1st day of Shawal, on the 1st day of Mohurrum, and on the 1st day of Rubussani in each year make a report in writing to the kazi and directors exhibiting what sums of money he has received on account of the rents of the chawls or otherwise and of his application thereof, and in such report such superintendent shall state the condition of the masjid and chawls and other property belonging to the said masjid, and what, if any, repairs are in his opinion required, and generally any matters connected with his duties as superintendent, and the said kazi and directors shall within fifteen days after the receipt of such report meet for the purpose of taking such report into consideration.

Rule 6th.

"The superintendent shall keep proper books of account, wherein he shall duly enter all sums received by him as rents of the chawls or otherwise on account of the masjid, and in like manner he shall enter all sums expended by him on account of the said mosque or chawls or other property; he shall make up, sign, and render to the kazi and directors annual accounts in duplicate of his receipts and disbursements, and such accounts shall not be allowed and considered as correct until they shall have been audited and signed by the kazi and the directors, or by the kazi and the directors, or by the kazi and a majority of the directors, and when so audited and signed one copy thereof shall be deposited and kept in the office of the kazi and another copy shall be lodged in the Juma Masjid.

Rule 7th.

"The superintendent shall hold his office at the will of the kazi and directors, and shall be removeable by them or by the kazi and the majority of the directors by notice signified in writing; such superintendent on being appointed by the Supreme Court and all future superintendents upon being appointed shall execute and deliver to the kazi and the directors for the time being a bond in a penalty [407] of ten thousand rupees, conditioned to be void upon the due observance and performance by such superintendent of the rules thus made, or which shall hereafter be made by the kazi and the directors, or by any general meeting of the kazi, chouglas, and jamat convened for the purpose, and nothing in these rules contained shall prevent any superintendent from resigning his situation as such, but in every such case he shall give to the kazi and directors two calendar months' previous notice of his intended resignation.

Rule 8th.

"Inasmuch as the Master in Equity of the said Supreme Court is directed by the aforesaid decree to inquire and state to the Court who should be a fit person for the future superintendent, the complainants in the said suit are requested to propose that Haji Mahomed Sueed Saheb Rogay be appointed under and subject to the preceding rules as a fit and proper person to be appointed future superintendent.

Rule 9th.

"The persons following, that is to say:—Mahomed Ally Saheb Rogay, Mahomed Ebrahim Saheb Muckba, Haji Ebrahim Saheb Jitaker, Fucki Mahomed Mirasaheb Arai, Shumsudin Saheb Kisay, Shabudin Saheb Ghuttay, Mahomed Sueed Saheb Palloba, Mahomed Yusuf Saheb Murgay, Mahomed Shumsudin Saheb Palloker and Zeyawudin Saheb Narker are hereby appointed directors of the said Juma Masjid and chawls, and upon the death or resignation of any of the above-named directors the vacancy occasioned by such death or resignation shall be supplied by the election of another director or directors in the place of the director or directors dying or retiring, such election to be made by the kazi and the remaining or continuing directors, or by the kazi and the majority of the remaining or continuing directors.

Rule 10th.

"Every future director, superintendent, and every other officer connected with the said masjid, with the exception of the kazi, shall be elected by the kazi and directors, or by the kazi and the majority of the directors for the time being, who are hereby authorized to fix the scale of remuneration of the several officers, with the exception of the kazi, the directors, and superintendent, whose respective offices as connected with the said masjid shall be and are hereby declared to be honorary.

Rule 11th.

"The kazi and directors shall be empowered to frame and make from time to time rules and regulations for the management of the Juma Masjid and chawls and the general concerns thereof, provided such rules and regulations are not contrary to the Mahomedan law.

Rule 12th.

"The several powers and authorities conferred upon the kazi and the directors by the preceding rules shall be exercised by them collectively or by the kazi and a majority of the directors."

[408] The plaint stated that by the above rules the Juma Masjid and the properties appertaining to it were to be managed by the kazi of Bombay and ten directors, &c.; that by the said rules a superintendent should be appointed by the kazi and directors, &c. It also referred to various other provisions made by the above rules for the administration of the funds of the mosque. It then set forth that at the beginning of the year 1878 the governing body of the mosque consisted of ten directors presided over by Kazi Mahomed Husain Murgay. The first two relators in the present suit (Mahomed Husain Churgay and Mahomed Husain Londay) were then directors, as also were the first three defendants, viz., Moulvi Abdul Kadir Jitaker, Shaik Ahmad Saheb Muckba and Shaik Mahomed Curtay. In January, 1878, however, the kazi died, and from that time there had been no kazi as president, as contemplated by the rules. The community was divided as to the person to be appointed kazi, and the result was that no appointment was made.

Subsequently to the death of the kazi, but in the same year, one of the then directors (Gulam Mohidin Delvi) died, and the fourth defendant (Munshi Shaik Ahmed Delvi) took his place. The plaint stated that the validity of the new appointment was doubtful having regard to the rules, as there was then no kazi and no quorum of directors.

In 1888 another director (Munshi Mahomed Unday) died and no successor to him was appointed. Three others of the directors, who held office in 1878 subsequently resigned, and their places were not filled up. The result was that instead of having a governing body consisting of a kazi and ten directors as provided by the rules, there were only six directors, and the validity of the appointment of one of these six was doubtful. Of these six directors, two were relators and the others were the first four defendants. Munshi Shaik Ahmed Delvi, whose appointment was doubtful, was the fourth defendant.

In 1891 the first four defendants appointed four additional directors (defendants Nos. 6, 7, 8, 9) in spite of the remonstrance of the other two directors (the first two relators). The defendants also appointed the first defendant to be president.

[409] The fifth defendant to this suit had been nazir or superintendent of the mosque from 1879 until July, 1891, when he resigned. The plaint (at the relation of the said relators) complained that, having regard to the rules, there had been no validly appointed superintendent; that the fifth defendant, who was not a fit person for the office, had got himself appointed and had acted as superintendent; that the directors (defendants) had exercised no proper supervision over him, and the plaint charged that the properties and funds of the mosque had been greatly mismanaged and that the rules with regard thereto had been disregarded.

The plaint further complained that the provisions of rules 3 and 4 had been disregarded by the defendants to the great detriment of the masjid. With regard to rule 4, it alleged that for many years no property had been purchased for the masjid, and that the funds had been allowed to lie idle in the Bank, bringing in no income: that these funds at the date of suit amounted to two lakhs of rupees, and that, if the same had been duly invested as directed, the charity would have been much benefited.

The plaint also complained that rules 5 and 6 had been disregarded, and further alleged that all the moneys received from tenants of the charity were not credited to the masjid.

The plaint prayed for a declaration that the defendants were not entitled to carry on the management of the Juma Masjid and its property, or that if entitled, the defendants might be removed from their position as directors; that an account should be taken of moneys received by the defendants, and that defendants should make good such sums as but for their wilful default they might have received, &c.; that a kazi, directors and superintendent be appointed to manage the charity and a scheme settled, &c., &c.

The first four defendants filed a written statement, stating that they had always been desirous of having the Kazi of Bombay as their president, but that there was not and had not been for years any such officer in existence; that each section of the Mahomedans recognised as kazi any person they pleased; they denied the [410] charges of mismanagement, neglect and misconduct, and alleged they had performed their duties to the best of their ability under the circumstances in which they were placed. They prayed that the rules should be amended and the affairs of the mosque put on a proper footing under the direction of the Court.

At the hearing, issues were raised as to the validity of the various appointments since the death of the kazi in 1878; as to the liability of the directors in respect of the alleged violation of the rules in administering the affairs of the mosque, &c. As above mentioned, two of the relators were directors of the mosque. At the hearing, Mahomed Husain Churgay, the survivor of them (the other was then dead), was made a defendant.

Lang (Advocate General) and Jardine, for the plaintiff.

Badrudin Tyebji, Inverarity and Vicaji, for defendants Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4.

Kirkpatrick and Slater, for defendant No. 5.

Scott and Lowndes, for defendants Nos, 6, 7 and 8.

At the close of the examination of the first witness Mahomed Husain Churgay, the relator, counsel for the fifth defendant (the nazir or superintendent) raised an issue whether the fifth defendant was a proper party to the suit.

Kirkpatrick:—The superintendent or nazir is not a proper party, and the suit ought at once to be dismissed as against him. Under the rules, and from the evidence just given, it appears that he was merely the servant of the directors and was accountable to them only—Attorney General v. Earl of Chesterfield (1); Tudor on Charities, (3rd ed.), pp. 327, 310; Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 192; Lewin on Trusts, (9th ed.), pp. 201, 723. He ceased to be nazir before suit brought. Moreover, he cannot be charged with fraud or default, as the plaint contains no specific instances —Ganga Narain Gupta v. Tilukram (2); Krishnaji v. Wamnaji (3); Lewin on Trusts (9th Ed.), p. 1034.

Badrudin Tyabji, for first four defendants:—We object to the fifth defendant being dismissed from this suit. He is a [411] proper party. The nazir or superintendent of a masjid is the mutawali and is the real trustee and the person responsible for the administration of the property —Tagore Law Lectures, 1884, p. 264. The rules of this mosque recognise the general principles of Mahomedan law. Other defendants who are directors are the mushavirs or merely supervisors, and represent the general community.

Jardine, for plaintiff on the same side.

FARRAN, J.—I cannot dismiss the fifth defendant from the suit. He was the nazir of the mosque, or, as he is called in the rules, the superintendent. I think that both under the Mahomedan law and under the rules, the nazir of this mosque was a public officer in charge of the mosque and of its property, and as such liable to account to the community in this Court.

The hearing of the suit then proceeded.

Jardine (with Lang, Advocate General).—The directors were bound by the rules The kazi died in 1878 and there has been no attempt to fill his place. The board of management has never since been legally constituted. Only three of the present directors have been legally appointed. The others have been appointed by an imperfectly constituted board, and their appointment is invalid and illegal. But they are all equally liable for their acts—Rackham v. Siddal(1); Pearce v. Pearce(2). Their acts since 1878 have caused heavy loss to the masjid, and the relators were right in causing this suit to be instituted. Even without a kazi the directors might have properly collected and invested the funds of the mosque. They should have superintended the nazir. There has been much rent lost through negligence and fraud. He referred to In re Cape Breton Co.(3); Seton, s. 3, ch. 41, p. 982 (5th Ed.), Lewin on Trusts, (9th Ed.) p. 1017-1035; In re Symons (4); Sculthorpe v. Tipper (5); Devaynes v. Robinson (6).

Badrudin Tyabji with Inverarity and Vicaji, for defendants Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4.—The plaint states that the directors have violated the rules by acting without a kazi. But the kazi mentioned in [412] the rules of 1834 was the Kazi of Bombay. There was then an official who bore this title, which was conferred by Government. But Government ceased to appoint: see Act II of 1864; Bombay Act IV of 1864: Muhammad Yussub v. Sayad Ahmed (7). See also Regulation XXVI of 1827, which related to the mofussil. The directors had no power to appoint a kazi and are not responsible for acting as best they could without one. In 1888 the number of directors was reduced to six. When their numbers were further reduced, they could do nothing, as there was not a majority, the full number under the rules being ten. Reference was made to Attorney General v. Corporation of Exeter(8); Wyatt v. Wallis(9): Tagore Law Lectures, 1884, p. 248; Saroda Pershad v. Brojo Nath (10); Kathiawar Trading Company v. Virchand(11).

Kirkpatrick and Slater, for defendant No. 5.—The fifth defendant acted as nazir or superintendent from 1879 to July, 1891, without remuneration. He was entirely subordinate to the directors who might have dismissed him at any time. He continued the system of management which existed previously, and for which he was not responsible. The bill-collectors under him were not appointed by him or removeable by him. They were his fellow servants. Not receiving any remuneration, he was obliged to earn his living, and in doing so was frequently absent from Bombay with the knowledge and sanction of his masters the directors. The director (Churgay), who as relator has caused this suit to be instituted, has wholly neglected his duties as director for twelve years. He refused to attend meetings or sign papers. He instigated the tenants not to pay the rents. He is more responsible for any loss than the other directors—Lewin on Trusts (9th Ed.), 217, 777, 994; Attorney General v. Stamford (12). This suit is a vindictive suit and unnecessary. It has not been sanctioned by the community. All the defendants desire a new scheme. The nazir is willing to account. He is only responsible for money come to his hands.—Williams on Executors, p. 1674. No account for wilful default

JUDGMENT.

20*th March*, 1894. FARRAN, J.—A short resume of the facts which preceded the filing of this suit is necessary to explain the present state of the governing body of the Juma Masjid and to enable me to make the conclusions at which I have arrived readily intelligible. The jurisdiction of the Court to intervene in its affairs at the instance of the Advocate General arises from the fact that the masjid and the properties belonging to it constitute a public charity.

On the 8th September, 1834, the late Supreme Court in a suit brought by certain members of the Mahomedan community against the then mushavirs of the Juma Masjid, referred it to the Master to enquire who were fit and proper persons, or a fit and proper person, to be appointed the future managers or manager, superintendents or superintendent, mutawalis or mutawali of the Juma Masjid, and to inquire whether such person or persons so to be appointed should be required to give any and what security to account for the moneys which they or he might receive. I take this recital from the plaint in suit No. 28 of 1871, as I cannot find the decree itself or the report of the Master amongst the proceedings.

The Master reported on the 31st November, 1834, that a special general meeting of the jamat had been convened for the purpose of framing rules for the future management of the affiairs and concerns of the Juma Masjid, and that several rules were submitted for the consideration of the meeting and were unanimously approved and signed. These rules in English, or a translation of them, the Master set out in full in his report. The report of the Master was confirmed by the Court. I have not been able to ascertain, from the materials before me, whether the rules signed at the meeting were in Persian or English. In the [414] circumstances under which they were adopted, it appears to me that they derive their efficacy and force from the will of the community, and not from the decree of the Court; and that, therefore, the original rules passed at the meeting and signed, and not the copy or translation of them, which the Master set out in his report, are the rules which determine the constitution of the governing body of the masjid. It is not, however, very important, as the difference between them is merely a difference of phraseology.

In one instance, however, this difference of phraseology has a bearing upon a most important question in the suit. A print of the rules in Persian, Urdu and English has been put in evidence by the Advocate-General. It affords some internal evidence that the original rules were in Persian. The rules provide that the Juma Masjid and its chawls shall be placed under the Government and control of the Kazi of Bombay for the time being and ten mushavirs (I advisedly use the Persian expression), and that a nazir of the masjid and chawls should be appointed subject to the control of the kazi and mushavirs. The rules then specify the various duties assigned to the kazi, mushavirs and nazir respectively. At present it will be sufficient to note that the nazir had the general executive control of the masjid subject to the directions of the mushavirs, and that the several powers and authorities conferred upon the kazi and the mushavirs, including the power of filling up vacancies, were to be exercised by them collectively or by the kazi and an absolute majority of the mushavirs.

At the time when the rules were framed there was, and had always been, a "Kazi of Bombay" holding office under a sanad from Government, a public local functionary who held the appointment for life and whose office was not hereditary. One Kutubudin Saheb Mahimker was then the Kazi of Bombay. He died in 1837 and Mahomed Yusuf Murgay was, on his death, appointed to the office. The latter died in 1866. In consequence of the passing of Act II of 1864 and Bombay Act IV of 1864 no appointment to the office of kazi was made upon his death by Government. The office lapsed.

The case of Muhammad Yussub v. Sayad Ahmed (1) establishes [415] that the appointment of kazi is by Mahomedan law vested in the chief officer of State and has never rested with the Mahomedan community at large. Kazi Mahomed Husain Murgay, however, assumed the office, and was generally accepted by the community as Kazi of Bombay. No difficulty occurred in his lifetime. He died in 1878. Upon his death, rival claimants to the office of kazi of Bombay sprang up. A minority of the Konkani Mussulmans, who appear to lead public Mahomedan opinion in Bombay, recognized his son Shaik Mahomed Murgay as kazi. A large majority were in favour of Kazi Abdul Latif Londay, and now recognize his son Mahomed Salay Londay as their kazi.

It is admitted on both sides that the Kazi of Bombay contemplated by the rules of 1834 was the official kazi appointed by sanad, and that consequently since 1866, or, at all events, since 1878, there has been no Kazi of Bombay within the meaning of the rules. My own view is in accord with that admission. This difficulty was felt in 1871, and in that year the Advocate General taking advantage of a suit, which he felt himself obliged to file against the then kazi and certain of the mushavirs to recover funds of the masjid in their hands and for the removal of the latter, urged upon the Court the necessity of amending the rules, and the Court by its decree declared that the system of management of the Juma Masjid was unsatisfactory and ought to be amended, and ordered that certain revised rules, which it approved, should be laid before the community for their consideration and adoption. The main object of the revised rules was to obviate the difficulty which had arisen from the lapse of the office of Kazi of Bombay. The revised rules were twice laid before the community for their adoption. They were explained and pressed upon the meeting by Mahomed Ally Rogay and others, but an anonymous handbill had been circulated misrepresenting their tenor. Certain persons opposed them, including the present relator Mahomed Husain Churgay, and they were rejected, and on the 28th February, 1876, the Court ordered the decree in the suit to be drawn up, stating that the revised rules mentioned in the decree had not been adopted. The Court was evidently of opinion either that it had no inherent power [416] itself to revise the rules, or that it could not do so on a plaint which did not specifically ask for such relief. The Advocate-General took no further steps, and left the Juma Masjid to be managed under a constitution which had become unworkable.

When Kazi Mahomed Hussein Murgay died in 1878, the mushavirs of the masjid were Mahomed Ali Rogay, the defendants Moulvi Abdul Kadir Jitaker, Shaik Mahomed Curtay and Shaik Ahmed Muckba; relators Mahomed Hussein Churgay and Mahomed Hussein Londay, and some others (Gulam M. Delvi, Kutubudin Tomgekar, Mahomed I. Unday, Shaik H. Rogay), who have since died or resigned. Mahomed Ali Rogay, to whose ancestors' expenditure and exertions the present prosperity of the Juma Masjid may be traced, was the leading spirit amongst the majority of the mushavirs. On the death of Kazi Mahomed H. Murgay the difficulty which had been felt throughout the proceedings in suit No. 28 of 1871 at once arose. There was then certainly no Kazi of Bombay within the meaning of the rules. The constitution of the board thus became defective, and the powers and authorities which the mushavirs derived from having been elected under the rules of 1834, which could only be exercised in conjunction with the Kazi of Bombay, ceased to be exerciseable. They had no longer any powers under the rules.

A meeting of the mushavirs was called on the 28th January, 1878, when it was resolved to take counsels' opinion—those of Mr. Mayhew and Mr. B. Tyebji. Mr. Mayhew was of opinion that the mushavirs could not select one of the rival kazis to fill the office of Kazi of Bombay under the rules, in which opinion he was, in my judgment, right, but that they could act without him under the rules, in which opinion he was, for the reasons which I have above assigned, in my judgment, wrong. Mr. B. Tyebji's opinion has not been put in evidence, being, it is said, lost. He appears to have advised that the constitution of the board became defective by the death of the Kazi of Bombay. These opinions were considered at a meeting held on the 1st March, 1878, when it was resolved that the opinion of Mr. Mayhew should be acted on, and that the mushavirs as before should only manage the affairs of the masjid as long as no kazi was [417] appointed, and that Mahomed Ali Rogay should be president. The relators M. H. Churgay and M. H. Londay did not, though summoned, attend that meeting. Their view was that the mushavirs should call upon Kazi Abdul Latif Londay to co-operate with them on the board. Consequently they would not attend, and they have ever since kept aloof from the board, and, as far as they could, thwarted their action. They did not, however, resign office, and have now put the Advocate-General in motion to put forward a new scheme for the government of the mosque, being at last convinced that the old scheme cannot be worked in the way which they have until lately advocated.

The rival kazis and their respective adherents from time to time put forward claims for a kazi to sit on the board of the Juma Masjid, but the majority of the mushavirs have never felt themselves in a position to allow either of them to occupy that position. In this course they were, as I have said, in my judgment, justified.

In 1879, Gulam M. Delvi died, and the majority of the mushavirs then appointed the defendant S. A. Delvi to fill his place.

In the same year, Kutubudin Tomgekar resigned and Mahomed Sayad Ranki was in like manner appointed to act. The latter and Mahomed Ismael Unday died before or in 1888. The majority of the mushavirs made efforts to fill the vacancies, but without success.

Mahomed Ali Rogay and Shaik Husain Rogay resigned in 1888, thus leaving the defendants Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 4 and the relators Nos. 1 and 2 the only remaining mushavirs. Though the defendants Nos. 1—4 made some attempts to fill the vacancies, they could not do so, and the mushavirs continued to be only six in number until the election of defendants Nos. 6, 7, 8 and 9, in 1891. The ninth defendant, however, did not agree to act. The board is at present thus constituted, except that the relator M. H. Londay has died since this suit.

From what I have already said it will be seen that I consider that the majority of the mushavirs have had since 1878 no authority, under the rules of 1834, to fill up vacancies as they occurred [418] or to carry on the government of the masjid. What, then, has been the legal position of the mushavirs generally since that time? They appear to me to have been a provisional committee of management kept up from time to time by co-operation, tacitly permitted by the jamat, to manage the affairs of the masjid until the original constitution could be restored or legally changed, that original constitution being for the time in abevance. After the unsuccessful effort which was made from 1871 to 1876 to amend the constitution it was not, I think, incumbent on them to take further legal proceedings, which they could only have done at the risk of costs. It is not, therefore, I think, by their default that their provisional management has lasted unduly long. The election of the defendants Nos. 6, 7, 8 and 9 in 1891 shows, I think, that they have been acting with the tacit consent of the community, as many of its influential members took part in that election. It does not, I think, alter their position, that the relators Churgay and Londay individually objected to their proceedings, as they did not suggest any legal means for the mushavirs to adopt.

These persons, assuming then the position of mushavirs of the masjid, were, I think, bound to carry on the administration of its affairs according to its established rules so far as they could do so, and are liable for neglect or misconduct in their office to the same extent as if they had been validly appointed. I am unable to find any direct authority for that proposition, but it appears to me that it must be so. Mr. Jardine has referred me to Lewin on Trusts, chap. 30, s. 3, p. 1035; but that passage and the cases there referred to are not, I think, quite analogous to the present case. That of an executor de son tort is the nearest analogy which occurs to me.

Various charges are made in the plaint against the mushavirs since they began to act in 1878. The plaint itself is so vague and general in its terms that it is difficult to specify exactly what the Advocate-General complains of. I shall indicate the points which were mainly relied upon in counsel's reply:—

(1) The neglect to take steps to supply the place of the kazi, thereby depriving the charity of the assistance of the mushavir [419] relators and the failure to keep up the proper number of the mushavirs.

(2) The improper appointment of the defendant Mahomed Cassum Curtay as nazir of the masjid.

(3) The neglect to call for an annual account of the income and expenditure of the mosque and to audit the same as required by rule 6.

(4) The neglect to purchase immoveable properties with the surplus income of the mosque as required by rule 4.

(5) The neglect in not detecting sums appropriated by the bill-collectors, and getting in the same.

(6) The neglect in allowing arrears of rent to accumulate and to be lost to the masjid.

(7) The non-payment into the Bank of sums in the hands of the nazir when they exceeded Rs. 500.

MARCH 20.
ORIGINAL CIVIL.
18 B. 401.

As to the first charge, I have already stated my opinion. There were several courses, which I could indicate, open to the mushavirs when the kazi died in 1878. They adopted the course which their senior counsel advised. I cannot say that they were wrong in this, though possibly some other course might have been more politic. It was the action of the present relators and their adherents with regard to the suit of 1871 which caused the principal difficulty.

(2) I do not think the mushavirs incurred any liability or laid themselves open to censure in appointing the defendant Mahomed Cassum Curtay to act as nazir in 1879. In considering this question it is important to bear in mind what the duties of the nazir then were. Whatever may have been the case in 1834, it was manifestly impossible, when the properties of the masjid had increased and were producing an income of about Rs. 3,000 per month, for the nazir personally to collect the rents or carry out the monthly repairs and keep the accounts. The kazi and the mushavirs had, therefore, established a nazir's office and employed in it two methas to keep the accounts, a munshi to do the Persian and Urdu writing, and two bill-collectors to collect the rents and see after the repairs. The quarterly and annual statements [420] of accounts were also prepared in this office. All these duties the rules 2, 5 and 6 impose upon the nazir. He would now perform them with the assistance of the office establishment. His duty, therefore, really was to superintend and check this office. This was carried out thus. Bill forms were kept for the collection of the rent. These (when filled up in the office) the nazir used to sign about the beginning of the month and send to the bill-collectors, taking their signatures for them. The amount received each day the collectors would bring to office and get the methas to credit them in the cash book to the different tenants. The nazir in the evening would see from the cash book what amount had been collected each day and would receive that amount and lock it up, initialling the cash book. So far the duties would be merely routine duties. To make the system and check complete, he should at the close of each month ascertain from the inspection of the bills and the bill book what bills had been paid and what remained unrecovered, and see that the cash received during the month corresponded with the amount of the bills recovered. He would also have to receive the reports of the bill-collectors as to the repairs required and give his sanction to them, or, when they exceeded Rs. 100, obtain the sanction of the mushavirs for them. A short time spent in the office each day and a few hours' labour each month would enable him to keep the whole system in exact working order. Intelligence rather than the expenditure of much time was what would be required for the nazir. Prima facie, a responsible clerk in a solicitor's office would be an excellent man for the post. Nazir Curtay was a clerk in the office of Messrs. Tyebji and Sayani. He was a man of good family and had interested himself in the affairs of the masjid. The mushavirs offered the post to the defendant Jitaker, but he declined it. They then selected Curtay to act. No one ever objected to the appointment, and I see no reason why the mushavirs should not have appointed him. It has transpired during the proceedings that he was in need of money, if not in debt, soon after his appointment, but there is nothing to show that the mushavirs knew of it. Until 1888 at all events he appears to have carried out the duties of his nazir-ship with seeming regularity.

[421] (3) The defendant Curtay says that quarterly statements of accounts as required by rule 5 were always made out and laid before the mushavirs, and I see no reason to doubt his statement. The accounts are forthcoming. He also says that the annual accounts were prepared down to 1888 and that notice was sent to the mushavirs when they were ready. I think this was probably done. Down to 1884 he says that the directors examined and passed them regularly, but that from 1884 to 1888 they did not do so, as there was no quorum or majority of mushavirs to act during the absence of Mahomed Ali Rogay in Europe. In 1888 the accounts down to that year were adjusted by the mushavirs and passed. They were also printed and circulated. No error has been pointed out in them. Mr. Jardine suggests that the defalcations of the bill-collectors, presently to be referred to, began before 1888, but he has not shown it. Even if some small defalcations did take place prior to 1888, and have not been detected, I could not upon the evidence hold the mushavirs responsible for them. The rules do not provide for a paid audit, and an audit by ten gentlemen like the mushavirs, none of whom are accountants, with the best intentions must necessarily be to a certain extent formal. Until an official auditor is appointed by Government to examine charity accounts, I do not see how there can ever be a really effective audit. I, therefore, consider that in respect of the accounts down to 1888 the rules have been substantially complied with. Since 1888 the annual accounts have not been audited or passed by the mushavirs. How far they are liable for not having done so, I shall consider when I deal with the appropriations of the bill collectors.

(4) This is the most important question in the case, so far as the mushavirs are concerned. No purchases have been made by the mushavirs since 1878. The balance in the Bank, when after the death of the kazi the account was transferred to the name of Mahomed Ali Rogay and Kutubudin Tomgekar, was Rs. 30,204-15-8. The balance at the end of 1888 was Rs. 1,83,592-11-10. These sums include the moneys belonging to some subordinate charities, the accounts of which were kept in the Juma Masjid books; and deductions have to be made for them on that account. They are sufficiently near the mark to [422] enable me to consider the question of principle. In 1888 they stood in the names of Mahomed Ali Rogay and the defendant Moulvi Abdul Kadir Jitaker in the books of the Bank of Bombay. The rule regarding the power or duty of the kazi and the mushavirs to purchase property is the fourth. In the English form it runs thus.—"As often as the funds standing to the credit of the kazi and the two senior directors shall amount to the sum of Rs. 5,000 or upwards, then and so often the kazi and the directors or the kazi and a majority of them shall therewith purchase other property, to be added to the then appropriated property belonging to the said masjid, and the deed of sale thereof shall be made out to and in the name of the kazi and ten directors for the time being and their successors and assigns in trust for the kazi and jamat of Bombay for and on behalf and for the sustentation and repairs and other expenses of the said Juma Masjid and of its appropriated property." In the Persian and Urdu forms the expression "shall purchase" is rendered by a word which rather means "may purchase" than "shall purchase," which confers an authority rather than indicates a command, and the addition of the "or upwards" in the English form rather points in the same direction. The plaintiff has not shown whether the vernacular or English form of the rule is authoritative. In either form, however, I apprehend that the rule imposed on the kazi and the mushavirs the duty of purchasing property with the surplus funds, but the vernacular form gave them a wider discretion as to the time when they shall purchase than did the English form. The rule certainly seems to have been throughout understood in that sense, for we find in the time of the kazi that the fund was allowed to reach the sum of over Rs. 30,000. I myself feel much doubt whether the power or duty of purchasing property for the masjid was one which the provisional committee like the mushavirs would have been justified in assuming. Had they purchased property with the masjid funds, and had property fallen in value, it appears to me that the Advocate-General, in the absence of special circumstances, acquiescence or the like, could have called upon them to restore the masjid funds and repudiated the purchase as made without authority. This power of purchasing property is a peculiar power requiring judgment to render the purchase a suitable addition to [423] the other appropriated property of the masjid, and is not like lending money on mortgage or investing it in stock. It is not a mere question of routine like most of the other duties of the mushavirs. A doubt, as to their powers, must have, I think, been the principal reason why the mushavirs did not purchase property. They made inquiries as to suitable purchases and employed brokers with the same object, but always stopped short of actual purchase. The property of Sonabai adjoining the mosque they seemed to be particularly anxious to acquire. This absence of power on the part of the mushavirs to make purchases, I think, must have been generally felt ; for I do not find in the case any evidence even of a suggestion made by any one (except the relator Churgay) to Mahomed Ali Rogay and his colleagues that they should lay out the masjid funds. This, however, is not the case that the defendants Nos. 1—4 put forward. They have not themselves been examined, but the evidence afforded by the record of the masjid and that of the brokers which they have adduced, points rather to their defence being that the money was retained for the purpose of enlarging and improving the masjid and that it was not possible to find suitable investments at reasonable prices, than to their having entertained a well-founded doubt as to their power of purchase. Mr. Tyabji, however, did put forward this want of power in the mushavirs as an absolute defence.

The accounts which the mushavirs published prior to 1888 and those which they published in 1888 for the last preceding seven years show clearly that there were large uninvested funds of the masjid, and that no purchases had up to that date been made. These accounts were distributed amongst the leaders of the community, and no objection was taken to them. The Advocate-General, however, now seeks to re-open them by making the mushavirs, the defendants Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 4, liable for not purchasing property. He suggests that they should be charged interest on the uninvested funds, such as would have been received in the shape of rents had properties been from time to time purchased under the provisions of rule 4.

The first question which arises on that contention is whether the claim is within time. I think that it is clear that s. 10 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) has no application to this [424] case. This claim is not one to follow property which has become vested in the mushavirs for a specific purpose. They never had in their hands the interest with which it is sought to make them liable, nor did they use or misuse the principal moneys. It is really a claim against them as officers of the masjid for neglecting the duty to purchase landed estate. I cannot hold that they are agents so as to bring the case within art. 90, which applies to suits by principals against agents for neglect. The claim must, therefore,fall within art. 120 of the Limitation Act XV of 1877, and must be enforced within six years from the cause of action arising. The plea of limitation, therefore, only protects the defendants Nos. 1 to 4 in respect of neglect to invest arising before the 10th December, 1885. Ought I, however, to allow the Advocate-General to open the accounts adjusted and published in 1888 for the purpose of enforcing the liability of the defendants Nos. 1—4, which, to say the least, is extremely doubtful? I think not. The case is not, of course, so strong in point of time as that of the Kathiawar Trading Company v. Virchand(1), but the equities in the present case are far stronger. Dishonesty or improper dealing with the funds in this case there has been none. The highest at which the case can be put is that there has been an error of judgment. In this the community has acquiesced. The two Rogays are not defendants, and it would be difficult now for defendants, Nos. 1—4 to enforce any contribution against them. Other mushavirs are dead. The position of parties is changed. Moreover, my own opinion is that the mushavirs have never had since 1878 power or authority to invest these funds, though I prefer to trust my decision on the other grounds. Since 1888 the position is different. The number of acting mushavirs was then reduced to four. They tried to fill the vacancies, but without success. They had not even a working majority of six mushavirs, and the funds stood in the joint names of Mahomed Ali Rogay and the defendant Jitaker and could not be operated on by reason of the insanity of the former. It was then quite impossible for defendants Nos. 1—4 to make any purchase, even if the community would have permitted them to do so. I cannot hold them liable for not purchasing land during this period. The new directors were, as to the old funds, [425] under similar difficulties. As to the new, there was not time allowed for them to act. The filing of the suit and the nature of the relief sought therein precluded them from moving in this matter after its inception. I must, therefore, decline to make any reference to the Commissioner under this head of charge.

ORIGINAL CIVIL.

5. After the retirement of the Rogays in 1888 the affairs of the masjid appear to have been neglected. The nazir, to the knowledge of the defendants Nos. 1—4, had to leave Bombay on business, and after that, until he retired in July, 1891, only superintended the nazir's office from time to time in the most spasmodic manner. The annual accounts were not checked by the defendants Nos. 1—4 or audited. It does not appear that they were even made out. No meetings of mushavirs were called. Nothing was done. The reason of this apathy apparently was that the four remaining mushavirs did not consider that they could act for want of a quorum or majority of six. The unfortunate opinion which had been obtained in 1878, misled them. As a provisional committee who had assumed the management of the masjid they were bound to protect its interests. Of the money which they actually received, or which was paid into their account, they were, I think, actual trustees, as the kazi and two senior mushavirs had been, when the funds were received by the kazi and lodged in their names: but in addition to this they were officers of the masjid, charged with the specific duty of superintending the nazir and his accounts; and, if the masjid has suffered loss by their neglect of duty, I think they are answerable for it. It is practically admitted that the bill-collectors have collected since 1888 rents from tenants of the masjid which have not been credited in the books, and it is proved that a cursory audit even, at the end of each year, would have detected these defalcations. If the mushavirs had examined and audited the accounts and failed to discover these defalcations. I do not say that they would have been liable; but that they have not done. They have neglected to examine them altogether. I think that a case is made out here for directing an account of the rents actually recovered which they have received since the date of the last account published, or which but for their wilful default or neglect they might have received.

[426] 6. The sixth head is not a very important one. The nazir and not the mushavirs is, under the rules, entrusted with the collection of the rents, and it is his duty to see that the rents are not allowed to fall unduly into arrear. It is not shown that, except at an exceptional time when the nazir was ill, the rents were so unduly in arrear as to call for the active interference of the mushavirs, or that the masjid has suffered undue loss under this head. The new mushavirs have put things to right on this score. As to the rents due by the servants of the masjid and the friends of the nazir, which have not been recovered, I do not think I should direct any special inquiry as to them It was not the duty of the mushavirs to look into the account of each individual tenant and to stop his rent from his pay if he were a servant of the masjid. I consider that I have gone as far as it is possible to go in the direction I have already given.

7. As to the payment into the Bank of the moneys when they amounted to Rs. 500, I think that the spirit of the rules has been complied with, and no loss to the masjid has been suggested from its not having been observed to the letter.

I have lastly to consider the case of the nazir defendant. Although I am not altogether satisfied with his explanation of Exs. 1—4 with reference to his borrowing from the bill-collectors, and some other charges made against him; yet I think that on the whole, notwithstanding his embarrassed circumstances, it has not been proved that he has not kept his hands fairly clean. I do not think the statements of the bill-collectors made behind his back ought to have been entered upon my notes. Servants detected in defalcations are always ready to make their immediate superior a participator in the default. Their statements, though not evidence against him, the defendant No. 5, has met with an unqualified denial, which as the bill-collectors have not been called, I see no reason for not accepting. He ought, however, to have resigned his office in 1888, if not before. He is of course in a higher degree than defendants Nos. 1—4 answerable for his neglect in allowing the defalcations of the bill-collectors, and in not rendering his accounts since the adjusted accounts in 1888, and he must be charged with wilful default in the same respect and with not [427] having recovered his own rent. If pressed to do so, I might be induced to add the rents of the servants of the masjid whose rents have been lost, but it seems hardly worth while to have the last-mentioned special direction.

I have nothing but praise to assign to the conduct of the defendants Nos. 6, 7 and 8. The want of discrimination in the drafting of the plaint is much to be regretted.

Declare that the defendants, the mushavirs, are not authorized under the rules of 1834 to carry on the management of the masjid, and that they have not been validly appointed under these rules. Direct that they continue to carry on the management of the affairs of the masjid until the scheme hereafter provided for shall come into operation. Direct that a revised scheme for the future management of the affairs of the Juma Masjid and its appropriated properties be prepared by the Advocate-General and approved by the sitting Judge in Chambers and, when so approved, be laid before the jamat of the Juma Masjid for their approval and adoption. Direct that the defendants do bring in an account of the rents, profits and income of the Juma Masjid received by them respectively since the last adjusted and published accounts, and in taking such account let the defendants Nos. 1—4 account for the rents actually recovered and received by them, or which but for their wilful default or neglect they might have received, and let defendant No. 5 be similarly charged, and also with rent due by himself (if any) which he ought to have recovered, and pay such sum (if any) as upon the taking of such accounts may be found due from them respectively.

The Advocate-General and the defendants other than defendant No. 5 to have their costs taxed as between attorney and client out of the funds, including costs of rule. Two counsel allowed to defendants Nos. 1—4. Costs of defendant No. 5 reserved. Further directions and further costs reserved. Liberty to apply.

THIS was a reference under s. 438 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882) by F. S. P. Lely, Esq., District Magistrate of Surat.

The accused was charged with the offence of keeping in his possession implements for the purpose of drawing toddy, and convicted by the Second Class Magistrate of Olpad under [429] s. 43, cl. (f) of the Bombay Abkari Act (V of 1878) and sentenced to a fine of Rs. 8.

The District Magistrate on examining the record of the case was of opinion that mere possession of implements for the purpose of drawing toddy was not an offence punishable under s. 43, cl. JUDGMENT.

PER CURIAM.—We do not think that drawing toddy is manufacturing liquor as defined in cl. 11 of s. 3 of Bombay Act V of 1878, for it will be observed that in s. 43 of the Act the drawing of toddy and the manufacture of liquor are treated separately. We concur, therefore, with the District Magistrate that the mere possession of implements for the purpose of drawing toddy is not an offence punishable under cl. APPELLATE CIVIL.

18 B. 429.

One Amtulnissa Begam filed a suit (No. 76 of 1886) in the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge of Surat for a partition of three jaghir villages.

On the 29th October, 1890, the Subordinate Judge passed a decree directing the villages to be divided among the parties to the suit according to their respective shares under the Mahomedan law.

On 15th April, 1891, defendant No. 2 presented a darkhast for execution of the decree.

On the 27th July, 1892, the Subordinate Judge dismissed the darkhast for default of appearance of the applicant's pleader in support of the darkhast.

On the 29th July, 1892, the pleader made an application to the Court to restore the darkhast to the file. This application was granted on 27th August, 1892.

Thereupon defendant No. 14 moved the High Court under its extraordinary jurisdiction, and obtained a rule nisi calling upon defendant No. 2 to show cause why the Subordinate Judge's order restoring the darkhast to the file should not be set aside.

Ganpat Sadashiv Rao, for the applicant :—The lower Court had no jurisdiction to restore the darkhast to the file. There is no provision in the Code of Civil Procedure empowering the Court to restore an application for execution which has been dismissed for default. Under s. 4 of Act VI of 1892, the provisions of s. 647 of the Civil Procedure Code are no longer applicable to applications for execution of decrees. That being the case, [431] s. 103 of the Code, under which the lower Court's order purports to have been passed, has no application to the present case—Dhonkal Singh v. Phakkar Singh (1).

Motilal M. Munshi, for the opponent.—The darkhast was dismissed for default on the 27th July, 1892. The application for its restoration to the file was made on the 29th July, 1892,—that is, before Act VI of 1892 came into force. Section 4 of that Act does not, therefore, apply to the present proceeding. That being so, the provisions of chap. VII of the Code of Civil Procedure relating to suits are applicable also to execution proceedings under s. 647 of the Code.

Ganpat Sadashiv Rao, in reply :—Act VI of 1892, relating as it does to procedure, applies to all pending proceedings, and, therefore, governs the present case— Sha Jasraj Himaraj v. Chudasama Vakhatsang (2) ; Javanmal Jitmal v. Muktabai (3).

JUDGMENT.

FULTON, J.—As by s. 4 of Act VI of 1892 it is declared that s. 647, Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882), is inapplicable to applications for execution which are proceedings in suits, it seems impossible to rely on this latter section as justifying the use of s. 103 for the purpose of restoring to the file an application for execution. We, therefore, concur in the opinion of the learned Chief Justice of Allahabad expressed in Dhonkal Singh v. Phakkar Singh (1), that there is nothing in the Code of Civil Procedure as now amended which authorizes a Court to apply to an application for execution any of the procedure enacted in chap. VII of the Code.

But the question remains whether, apart from the provisions of s. 103, a Court can restore to the file an application for execution dismissed in the absence of the applicant. This question, we think, must be anwered in the negative. The decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the Delhi and London Bank v. Orchard (1) is an authority for holding that such a dismissal, not being an adjudication that the decree is not to be executed, is not a bar to a subsequent application for execution, for it shows that an order refusing execution on a particular [432] application does not prevent a second application when such order is based on some ground peculiar to the first and not on any decision as to the right of the applicant to enforce the decree. And the judgment in Ram Kirpal Shukul v. Mussamat Rup Kuari (2) shows that, in the absence of statutory provision, a Court, when it has once passed an interlocutory judgment or order in a suit, cannot alter that order. As, however, there is, as above pointed out, no statutory authority for restoring to the file an application for execution which has been dismissed for default, it follows that the Court cannot, without departing from the principles laid down in the last-mentioned case, set aside the order of dismissal, and place the parties in the position they occupied before it was passed. So far as the order is ineffectual to bar a subsequent application for execution it is innocuous; but in so far as it may be accompanied by any order as to costs or otherwise places one party in a position of advantage over the other, it appears to be an order in a suit which cannot subsequentiy be changed by the Court which made it, excepting possibly on review. It was not suggested in argument that the application granted on the 27th August, 1892, could be treated as an application for review, and it is clear that it could not be so treated, as notices were not served on all the parties liable to be affected as required by s. 626, proviso (a). We must, therefore, hold that, assuming the proceeding to be governed by Act VI of 1892, the Court had no jurisdiction to pass the order of the 27th August, 1892.

Next it was contended that Act VI of 1892 did not apply to this proceeding, because the application for restoration to the file was presented on the 29th July before the Act came into force. Whether, considering that the Act came into force on the 29th July, any application presented on that day could be treated as made before it came into force, is a point which we need not consider; for even if the application were pending when the law was enacted, the case would be governed by the general principle, that alterations in forms of procedure are retrospective in effect and apply to pending proceedings—Sha Jasraj Himaraj v. Chudasama Vakahtsang (3). Section 5 does not seem to have [433] any reference to applications for execution, and merely deals with appeals and applications for review.

We set aside the Subordinate Judge's order of the 27th August, 1892, but, under the circumstances, we think it fair to direct that the parties severally pay their own costs in both Courts.

Order reversed.

RAMCHANDRA NARAYAN MANTRI AND OTHERS (Original Defendants), Appellants v. ANANT AND OTHERS (Original Plaintiffs, &c.), *Respondents. [8th August, 1893.]

Landlord and tenant—Permanent tenancy—Bombay Land Revenue Code (Bombay Act V of 1879), s. 83.

The mere fact that a tenancy has commenced subsequently to the commencement of the landlord's tenure, does not prevent the application of s. 83 (1) of the Bombay Land Revenue Code (Bombay Act V of 1879), in cases where by reason of the antiquity of the tenancy no satisfactory evidence of its commencement is forthcoming.

G. held certain lands as a tenant under M. an inamdar. The lands continued in G.'s family for nearly 80 years. It was found that owing to this antiquity of the tenancy, its commencement or duration could not be satisfactorily established by evidence.

Held that, in the absence of any local usage to the contrary, G.'s tenancy must be presumed to be permanent.

THESE were appeals from the decree of Rao Bahadur R. S. Tipnis, Acting Assistant Judge of Ratnagiri, in appeal No. 349 of 1889.

The plaintiffs sought to recover possession of the lands mentioned in the plaint, alleging that they belonged originally to a family named Mantri, who were jaghirdars in the district of [434] Satara; that they were let on a permanent lease to one Ganesh Savant; that Ganesh's rights were purchased by the plaintiffs at a Court sale; that plaintiffs were in possession until 1881, when they were wrongfully dispossessed by defendants Nos. 1 to 9.

Defendants Nos. 1 to 9 pleaded (inter alia) that Ganesh was only a yearly, and not a permanent, tenant, and that the plaintiffs' alleged purchase had given them nothing. Defendants Nos. 10 to 15 pleaded that they were tenants of defendants Nos. 1 to 9, and were not liable to the plaintiffs' suit.

The Court of first instance found that Ganesh's tenancy was yearly tenancy, although it had continued in his family for over fifty years, and the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover. It, therefore, rejected the claim with costs.

On appeal, the Assistant Judge found that Ganesh's tenancy "though it admittedly arose at the hands of the Mantris, was of a very ancient date—certainly not less than eighty years, and that by reason of this antiquity of the tenancy its commencement or duration could not be satisfactorily established by evidence." He further found that there was no evidence of local usage as to the duration of such tenancy. In the absence of any local usage, he held that under s. 83 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code (Act V of 1879) Ganesh's tenure must be presumed to have been co-extensive with that of the landlord's, and that the permanent tenancy of the plaintiffs as assignees of Ganesh must be held proved. He, therefore, awarded the plaintiffs' claim.

(1) Section 83, Bombay Act V of 1879:—

And where by reason of the antiquity of a tenancy, no satisfactory evidence of its commencement is forthcoming and there is not any such evidence of the period of its intended duration, if any, agreed upon between the landlord and tenant, or those under whom they respectively claim title, or any usage of the locality as to duration of such tenancy, it shall, as against the immediate landlord of the tenant, be presumed to be co-extensive with the duration of the tenure of such landlord and of those who derive title under him.

Against this decision the defendants preferred these appeals to the High Court.

In appeal No. 682—

Ghanasham Nilkant, appeared for appellants (defendants Nos. 5, 6, 7, 9 and 17).

Manekshah Jehangirshah, for respondents (Nos. 1—3).

In appeal No. 758—

Messrs. Chitnis, Motilal and Malvi, for appellants (defendants Nos. 1 to 4).

Manekshah Jahangirshah, for respondents Nos. 1—3.

[435] V. G. Bhandarkar, for respondents Nos. 4, 5, 8 and 9.

Ghanasham Nilkant, for appellants (defendants).—The interest purchased by the plaintiffs was not a permanent tenancy. It is admitted that the original tenant (Ganesh) came in under the defendants' ancestors (the Mantris) subsequently to the commencement of their tenure. That being so, s. 83 of the Land Revenue Code does not apply. Mere length of possession at an invariable rent cannot establish a perpetual tenancy—Narayanbhat v. Daulata (1) ; Gangabai v. Kalapa (2) Ramabai v. Babaji (3) ; Kalidas v. Bhaijai (4) ; Lakshman v. Vithu (5).

Manekshah Jehangirshah, for respondents (plaintiffs) ;—It is found that the tenancy in question is ancient. It is also found that by reason of its antiquity the commencement and duration of the tenancy cannot be established by satisfactory evidence. The case, therefore, falls within s. 83 of Bombay Act V of 1872. Daulata v. Sakharam (6) is conclusive on the point.

JUDGMENT.

CANDY, J.—The preliminary and main argument in these appeals relates to the applicability of s. 83 of the Land Revenue Code. The Subordinate Judge found as a fact that the thikan had continued in the family of Ganesh Savant for nearly three generations for a period of over fifty years, but that the tenancy was simply an annual tenancy, and such tenancy by any lapse of time could not be converted into a permanent tenancy. On appeal the Assistant Judge found as follows :—" The tenancy, though it admittedly arose at the hands of some Mantri " (the thikan is the inam property of the Mantris, who are jaghirdars in the Satara Collectorate) " is of a very ancient date, certainly not less than eighty years. It is on account of this antiquity that the commencement or period of duration of the tenant (tenancy ?) cannot be satisfactorily established by evidence. . . . On the whole, then, it seems to me that by reason of the antiquity of the tenancy its commencement or duration cannot be satisfactorily established by evidence . . . . When this case was decided by the [436] Subordinate Judge he had not before him the rulings in Daulata v. Sakharam (6) and Jaikrishna v. Lukshmanrav (7). These cases were decided with reference to s. 83 of the Bombay Act V of 1879, and they govern the present case. It must be presumed that the duration of Ganesh's tenancy is co-extensive with the duration of the tenure of the Mantris."

Thus the question arises whether the Assistant Judge was right in applying s. 83 of the Land Revenue Code, he having taken it as admitted that the tenancy of Ganesh Savant arose at the hands of the landlord (Mantri). If the Assistant Judge was right, then I concur in holding that the finding of the Assistant Judge as to the tenancy being at least eighty years old is a finding of fact with which this Court cannot interfere, and that the decree of the District Court on the main point must be confirmed.

It is to be noted that neither before the Subordinate Judge nor before the Assistant Judge does the applicability of s. 83 appear to have been raised. It is possible that, apart from that section, the plaintiffs may be able to establish the permanent tenancy of Ganesh, whose rights they have purchased. But the Assistant Judge evidently considered the case to be governed by s. 83: hence the importance of the question whether that section can be applied.

Taking the words of the section in their plain grammatical sense, I am of opinion that the fact taken as admitted in the present case, that the tenancy commenced subsequent to the origin of the landlord's tenure, does not prevent s. 83 of the Land Revenue Code being applied. The following are the conditions which must exist before the presumption can be drawn under the section:—

(1) By reason of the antiquity of the tenancy, no satisfactory evidence of its commencement is forthcoming.

(2) There is nosatisfactory evidence of the period of its intended duration.

(3) There is no usage of the locality as to duration of such tenancy.

[437] When all these three conditions exist, it shall be presumed that the tenancy (or the duration of the tenancy. I take it that there is no practical difference, whether we refer "it" to "tenancy" or "duration of such tenancy,") shall be presumed to be co-extensive with the duration of the tenure of the landlord.

In the present case there is no dispute about the second and third conditions. We are concerned solely with the first. The question is, when we are satisfied that the tenancy commenced subsequently to the tenure of the landlord, can it be said that there is no satisfactory evidence of the commencement of the tenancy? In my opinion it can. If the Legislature had intended to say 'where by reason of the antiquity of a tenancy there is no satisfactory evidence that it commenced subsequent to the landlord's tenure," it would have used plain words to that effect. The words simply mean, there is nothing to show satisfactorily the origin of the tenancy, i. e., the terms under which the tenant commenced to hold.

When the Bill was introduced, which afterwards became Bombay Act V of 1879, it was not asserted that the section now under consideration (s. 134 in the Bill) merely enunciated the law as established by a series of decisions. On the contrary it seems to have been understood that a new tenant law was being enacted. In the Statement of Objects and Reasons it was remarked:—

"In s. 134 some provisions have been introduced with a view of facilitating the determination of the status of tenants and their liability to the payment of rent. The principles therein laid down will, it is believed,

APPELLATE CIVIL.

18 B. 433.

tend to the settlement upon an equitable basis of all questions arising between landlords and tenants when, owing to the antiquity of the tenancy, no satisfactory evidence can be produced with regard to its origin."

It is of no use, therefore, to refer to decisions passed before Bombay Act V of 1879 became law, such as the case of Kalu v. Hari (1) where the tenancy must have commenced subsequent to the origin of the landlord's tenure, and this was taken to be one of the reasons (not the sole reason) why the tenancy was not perpetual. [438] So, too, in the case of Daulata v. Sakharam (2), which was quoted by the Assistant Judge. No doubt in the judgment of this Court it was remarked that if the defendants could prove that their tenancy was in existence previously to the grant of the sanad under which the plaintiff claimed, then undoubtedly that tenancy would be of the nature claimed by defendants. But that was apart from the statute. After showing, that in the absence of evidence to the contrary, defendants' possession could be referred back to a time not later than the date on which the plaintiff's tenure commenced, the judgment proceeds (p. 394) :—

"It is not, however, necessary to cite cases on this point. The second clause of s. 83 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code lays down the law on the subject, and distinctly applies to the present case. No satisfactory evidence of the commencement of this tenancy appears on the record, and there can be no doubt that this is by reason of the antiquity of that tenancy. There is no such other evidence as is referred to in the section. In such a state of things the Assistant Judge ought to have presumed the defendants' tenancy to be, as against the plaintiff, co-extensive with the duration of the tenure of the plaintiff, and thrown upon the plaintiff the burden of proving the reverse."

The above enunciation of the law is applicable to the present case, and there is no suggestion in the judgment just quoted that the applicability of s. 83 depends upon whether the landlord is unable to show that the tenant's tenancy commenced subsequent to the time when his own tenure began.

For these reasons I would confirm the decree of the Assistant Judge with costs.

FULTON, J.—Whether antiquity of tenancy has been proved, and whether it is by reason of such antiquity that no satisfactory evidence of the commencement of such tenancy is forthcoming, are questions of fact which it was within the competency of the Assistant Judge to decide; and looking to the evidence of Ganesh Baba Savant, I am unable to say that it was not open to him to draw the inference that the tenancy is of a very ancient date [439] certainly not less than eighty years. Though the Judge rejected the witnesses' statement as to the existence of a lease, he was entitled, if he thought proper, to rely on other parts of his deposition relating to the reputed antiquity of tenure. He noted that there was no evidence to show how rent was paid by Ganesh, whether at an uniform rent or otherwise; and if notwithstanding this circumstance he still considered that the present tenancy was of very ancient date, there was nothing illegal in his doing so. Mr. Ghanasham referred us to the decision of this Court in Special Appeal No. 242 of 1871, Bechar Nathu v. Bai Hari (3) and those in Narayanbhat v. Davlata (4), Ramabai v. Babaji (5), Kalidas v. Bhaiji (6) and Lakshman Vithu (7), and further quoted the case of Gangabai v. Kalapa (8) in which a tenant was held not to be a mirasdar though he and his predecessors had held for over a century. But this last-named case is really inapplicable, as the tenancy commenced with a lease on the construction of which the decision depended; and looking to the other decisions above referred to, as also to those in Babaji and Nanaji v. Narayan (1) and Daulata v. Sakharam (2), I think that, finding as the Assistant Judge did that the tenancy had lasted for at least eighty years and that its commencement could not be ascertained, he was entitled to hold that it was by reason of antiquity that no satisfactory evidence of the origin of the tenancy was forthcoming and to apply s. 83 of the Land Revenue Code.

As regards the mesne profits, it was contended that allowance should have been made for the plaintiff's rents for two years. But I think the Assistant Judge was right in holding that as the Mantris had not proved what rent they were entitled to, no deduction could be made on account of it. It was their duty to give evidence as to the amount of rent due, and as they failed to do so, such rent could not be taken into account.

The point taken in the memorandum of appeal, that the Court should have considered whether the purchase by the plaintiffs, [440] who were agents of the inamdars, was or was not for the inamdars, was not pressed in argument.

Under these circumstances, I think we must confirm the decree of the lower Court and direct the appellan s in appeals Nos. 682 and 758 respectively to pay all costs of such appeals.

Decree confirmed.

(1) or the excess charge and any difference of fare mentioned in sub-s. THE accused was prosecuted before the First Class Magistrate of Poona under s. 113 of the Indian Railway Act (IX of 1890) for travelling in a railway without a ticket.

The Magistrate ordered the accused to pay the Railway Company Rs. 2-1 on account of railway fare, and Re. 1 as excess charge, or in default to undergo three days' simple imprisonment.

The High Court in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction sent for the record of the case.

[441] There was no appearance either for the Crown or for the accused.

JUDGMENT.

Per Curiam.—We do not think that the provision in s. 113 of the Railway Act, which directs that on failure to pay on demand excess charge and fare when due, the amount shall on application be recovered by a Magistrate as if it were a fine, authorized the Magistrate to impose imprisonment in default. Section 64 of the Indian Penal Code applies to all fines imposed for offences. And by s. 5 of the General Clauses Act (I of 1868) ss. 63 to 67 of the Indian Penal Code and 63 of the Criminal Procedure Code (now s. 386) apply to all fines imposed under the authority of any Act hereinafter to be passed. But we cannot say that the excess charge and fare referred to in s. 113 of Act IX of 1890 is a fine, though it may be recovered as such. The provisions of s. 64 of the Indian Penal Code provide imprisonment as a punishment for the offender, and not merely as a means of recovering the fine, which can be recovered under s. 386 of the Criminal Procedure Code (X of 1882). It is true that in s. 560 of the Criminal Procedure Code (as in the old s. 250) it seems to be assumed that the expression "recoverable as a fine" includes the power of imprisonment in default of payment, but the language of s. 552 suggests a contrary inference. We think, then, that we cannot safely determine the construction of s. 113 of the Railway Act by any analogy based on the wording of either s. 552 or 560 of the Criminal Procedure Code, but must be guided by the general principle that imprisonment cannot be ordered except in cases in which it is expressly prescribed.

Judge—Disqualification of a Judge—Personal interest—Crim. Pro. Code (Act X of 1882), s. 555—Bombay District Municipal Act (VI of 1873), s. 84—Municipal offence.

The mere fact that a Magistrate is the vice-president of a district municipality and chairman of the managing committee does not disqualify him from trying a charge of an offence brought by the municipality under Bombay Act VI of 1873. But if he has taken any part in promoting the prosecution, as, for instance, by concurring in sanctioning it at a meeting of the managing committee or otherwise, he will be disqualified by reason of the existence of a personal interest over and above what may be supposed to be felt by every municipal commissioner in the affairs of the municipality.

The accused was prosecuted by the Municipality of Broach for allowing sullage water from his house to flow into a public street.

The trying Magistrate was vice-president of the municipality and chairman of the managing committee. He convicted the accused and sentenced him to pay a fine of annas two under s. 54 of the Bombay District Municipal Act (VI of 1873).

Against this conviction and sentence the accused applied to the High Court under its revisional jurisdiction.

Manekshah Jehangirshah, for accused:—This was a prosecution by the Municipality of Broach. The trying Magistrate was vice-president of the municipality and chairman of the managing committee. As such, he was not competent to try the case. There was a likelihood of his being biassed against the accused. He ought not, therefore, to have taken cognizance of the case. Refers to Nobin Krishna v. The Chairman of the Suburban Municipality (1); Kharak Chand Pal v. Tarak Chunder Gupta (2).

There was no appearance for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

[443] FULTON, J.—Having regard to s. 84 of the Bombay District Municipal Act and the explanation to s. 555 of the Criminal Procedure Code, we do not think that the mere fact that the Magistrate was vice-president of the municipality and chairman of the managing committee disqualified him from trying this case. It cannot be said that as chairman of the managing committee or as vice-president he was necessarily a party to the prosecution any more than any municipal commissioner was a party, and any disqualification on the ground of his being a municipal commissioner is removed by the sections above referred to. But if it were shown that he had taken any part in promoting the prosecution, as, for instance, by concurring in sanctioning it at a meeting of the managing committee or otherwise, he would doubtless be disqualified by reason of the existence of a personal interest over and above what may be supposed to be felt by every municipal commissioner in the affairs of the municipality. This has been ruled in England in The Queen v. Lee and others (3), in reference to a provision in the Public Health Act, 1875, which provides that "except as expressly otherwise provided, any person shall not be disqualified or disabled to act as justice of the peace, coroner, juror or otherwise in any matter arising under or in relation to this Act by reason of his being a rate-payer in the borough or liable to any payments under this Act or a member of the Council or any committee thereof." In The Queen v. Handsley (4) it was held under this section that it was not sufficient, in order to establish the disqualification of a justice, to prove that he was a member of the town council, but that it must be shown that he had a substantial interest in the results of the trial, such as to make it likely that he had a real bias in the matter.

In the present case it is not alleged that the complaint was instituted at the instance of the managing committee. Our attention has been drawn to the cases reported in I. L. R., 15 Mad., 50 and I. L. R., 10 Calc., 194 and 1030, but they do not appear in any way inconsistent with the principles above laid down.

We must dismiss the application.

A. mortgaged land to B. by a mortgage duly registered. A. subsequently got back the title-deeds, and handed them to C., to whom he mortgaged the same property. B. sued C. (the second mortgagee) for a declaration of priority. The lower Court found that B. had not been guilty of fraud or negligence in parting with the title-deeds.

Held, that B., as first mortgagee, was entitled to priority. The registration of his mortgage was notice to C., and there was no misrepresentation by B. which would relieve C., as subsequent mortgagee, of the duty of inquiry, or destroy the effect of such constructive notice.

[F., 6 Bom. L.R. 1043 (1050); R., 31 M. 7=17 M.L.J. 499 (502)=3 M.L.T. 87.]

APPEAL under s. 15 of the Amended Letters Patent, 1865, against the decree of Telang, J., dismissing, under s. 551 (cl. 1) of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), a second appeal from the decision of J. B. Alcock, District Judge of Surat.

One Ghelabhai Nandram mortgaged certain property to the plaintiff for Rs. 499 by a registered mortgage-bond dated 11th November, 1884. Subsequently to the mortgage the title-deeds got back into the hands of the mortgagor, but the record did not show the circumstances under which they did so.

On the 9th July, 1886, Ghelabhai mortgaged the same property to defendant No. 2 and gave him the title-deeds.

On the 6th August, 1890, defendant No. 2 obtained a decree upon his mortgage for sale of the property mortgaged. In the execution proceedings plaintiff applied to the Court that the property should be sold subject to his mortgage lien. The Court refused this application.

Thereupon the plaintiff filed the present suit to enforce his mortgage lien against the property in dispute, and also for a declaration that his mortgage was entitled to priority over the mortgage to defendant No. 2.

[445] Defendant No. 1 (the mortgagor) did not contest the plaintiff's claim.

Defendant No. 2 (the second mortgagee) pleaded that he had no notice of the plaintiff's mortgage; that plaintiff had fraudulently restored the title-deeds of the property to the mortgagor, and thereby led him (defendant No. 2) to believe that the property was unincumbered, and that acting on such belief he (the defendant No. 2) had made advances to the mortgagor on the security of the same property under a mortgage-bond dated 9th July, 1886. Defendant No. 2, therefore, contended that his mortgage was entitled to priority over plaintiff's.

* Appeal No. 12 of 1893 under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent, 1865.

AUG. 17.
APPELLATE CIVIL.
18 B. 444.

The Court of first instance held, on the authority of The Madras Hindu Union Bank v. C. Venkatrangiah (1) and Madras Building Company v. Rowlandson (2), that as the plaintiff had parted with the title-deeds, and as they were now in the possession of defendant No. 2, he (defendant No. 2) had priority. The Court, therefore, passed a decree directing the plaintiff to recover his mortgage-debt from the mortgagor (defendant No. 1) personally, and dismissed the suit as against defendant No. 2.

On appeal the District Judge was of opinion that the registration of the plaintiff's mortgage was a sufficient notice of it to defendant No. 2, and that his possession of title-deeds did not give defendant No. 2 a claim to priority. He further held that there was nothing to show that plaintiff (the first mortgagee) was guilty of negligence or fraud with respect to the title-deeds. He, therefore, reversed the decree of the first Court and awarded the plaintiff's claim.

Against this decision the second defendant preferred a second appeal to the High Court. The appeal was dismissed by Telang, J., under s. 551, cl. 1 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882).

Against this decree the present appeal was made under the Letters Patent. The appeal came on for hearing before a Division Bench (Candy and Fulton, JJ.).

Kalabhai Lallubhai, for appellant (defendant No. 2):—The plaintiff is a prior mortgagee. He has negligently allowed the [446] title-deeds of the property in dispute to remain with the mortgagor. He has thereby put it in the power of the mortgagor to raise fresh loans from others on the security of the same property, as if it was unincumbered. He has thus assisted in or connived at the fraud practised by the mortgagor. He cannot take advantage of his own wrong. Equity will postpone his rights to those of a puisne mortgagee. Refers to Northern Counties of England Fire Insurance Company v. Whipp (3). The plaintiff's mortgage is no doubt registered. But registration is not equivalent to a notice in a case of fraud—Agarchand v. Rakhma (4)

There was no appearance for the respondent.

JUDGMENT.

FULTON, J.—I think this appeal should be rejected. Even assuming that the conduct of the prior mortgagee in allowing the sanad to pass into the hands of a mortgagee after he had once been given possession of it would, in the absence of notice to the puisne mortgagee, have amounted to gross negligence such as would have justified the Court in concluding that he was "an accomplice" in the mortgagor's fraud (5), no question of assistance in fraud here arises, inasmuch as in this Presidency registration is held to be equivalent to notice. It is not alleged that there was any actual misrepresentation on the part of the prior mortgagee. If there had been such misrepresentation, doubtless the doctrine of constructive notice would not have applied. "If a man is induced to enter into a contract by a false representation, it is not a sufficient answer to him to say, 'If you had used due diligence you would have found out that the statement was untrue. You had the means afforded you of discovering the falsity and did not choose to avail yourself of them'" (per Jessel, M. R., in Redgrave v. Hurd (6). But in a case like the present, in which it is not suggested that there was any misrepresentation by the prior mortgagee of a kind to relieve the subsequent mortgagee of the duty of inquiry, we cannot hold, consistently with the doctrine recognized in this Presidency that registration gives notice, that the latter was misled by the conduct of the prior mortgagee and induced thereby to lend money on the property. In the case [447] of the Northern Counties of England Fire Insurance Company v. Whipp(1) relied on by Mr. Kalabhai, the authorities summarised were held to lead to the conclusion that the Court would postpone the prior legal estate to the subsequent equitable estate where the owner of the legal estate had assisted in or connived at the fraud which had led to the creation of a subsequent equitable estate, without notice of the prior legal estate. But no decision was shown to us in which it had been held that the surrender of a title-deed by the holder of a prior estate could postpone his rights to those of a subsequent encumbrancer who had notice of the prior mortgage when he accepted the later one.

Mr. Kalabhai referred us to the case of Agarchand v. Rakhma (2) as throwing doubt on the doctrine that registration is equivalent to notice. I do not think, however, that it has that effect. I understand it simply to mean that a mortgagee who puts up property to sale in execution of a money decree, and makes no mention of his prior mortgage, necessarily leads the purchaser to believe that no such prior mortgage exists and thereby relieves him of the duty of inquiry, and that he is, therefore, subsequently estopped from alleging such mortgage. The principle is more fully explained in Hari v. Lakshman (3) and is no way in conflict with the decision in Lakshmandas v. Dasrat (4).

We have referred to the decision in Shan Maun Mull v. Madras Building Company (5); but as the Courts in the Madras Presidency do not recognize the principle that registration is equivalent to notice, it cannot be treated as an authority to govern the case now under consideration.

In the above remarks I have assumed that the prior mortgagee's conduct might, in the absence of notice, have amounted to connivance at fraud, but I am very doubtful whether, having regard to the usages in the mofussil of this Presidency, in which I do not think that there is any settled practice about the custody of title-deeds, it would, in the absence of clear proof of fraudulent intention, be safe to hold that the omission by a mortgagee to obtain or keep the title-deeds was prima facie evidence [448] of assistance in or connivance at fraud. Whether it would constitute gross neglect under s. 78 of the Transfer of Property Act, IV of 1882, is a point which need not be considered, as the transactions which gave rise to this suit occurred before that Act came into force.

CANDY, J.—I concur in holding that this appeal should be dismissed under s. 551 of the Civil Procedure Code.

The District Judge was mistaken in saying that no issue about negligence or fraud was raised in the lower Court. The second issue ran,—"Is the second defendant's mortgage, though subsequent to the plaintiff's, entitled or not to priority over the plaintiff's for the reasons given in his written statement"? The plea in the written statement was that plaintiff had parted with the title-deeds of the property and so his conduct was fraudulent, and he could not take advantage of his own fraud. Turning to the proceedings of the Court of first instance in this and in the companion case, wich was tried with it, it is at once apparent that the only allegation of fraud was that plaintiff had lost the title-deed (sanad), and so allowed the document to go into the possession of the mortgagor. This, on the very authority relied on by Mr. Kalabhai, Northern Counties of England Fire Insurance Company v. Whipp (1), would not postpone the plaintiff's prior title.

The Madras authorities quoted by the Subordinate Judge are clearly not applicable in this Presidency. In Shan Maun Mull v. Madras Building Company (2), where the authorities are all reviewed, the judgment of the Court proceeds (p. 277) on the assumption that the subsequent mortgagee had no notice of the prior mortgage, and then it is shown that in Madras Presidency it has not yet been held that registration is notice, while in Bombay the contrary is the rule. The Full Bench decision of this Court given so long ago as 1880 in Lakshmandas v. Dasrat (3) must of course govern the present case, and thus there is no reason for questioning the District Judge's decision. The present appeal should be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

APPLICATION under the extraordinary jurisdiction of the High Court (s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code, Act XIV of 1882) against the order of the Mamlatdar of Bhusaval.

One Abdul Alli filed a possessory suit on a rent-note against Gulab in the Mamlatdar's Court and obtained a decree. When the patil and kulkarni of the village proceeded to execute the decree they found that the land was in the possession of one Nathekha (the opponent), who was not a party to the suit. They made a report to the Mamlatdar that Nathekha was in possession on behalf of the defendant Gulab. The Mamlatdar, thereupon, passed an order that Nathekha should forthwith give up possession. His order was as follows :—

"But even if Nathekha be living there, the plaintiff must get possession according to the order made (for the same). You should, therefore, take steps to make over possession of the same as soon as you receive the order. If Nathekha does not vacate the house, and make over the same by persuasion, he should be forced to vacate the same."

The Mamlatdar's order was apparently based on a Government Resolution No. 1673, dated the 11th March, 1882, from which the following is an extract :—

"The decision of the Mamlatdar is good, not only against the defendant, but the whole world ; and as the village officers are bound, under s. 17 of Bombay Act III of 1876, to give effect to the Mamlatdar's decision by putting the plaintiff in possession, any resistance or obstruction on the part of any person will render such person liable to punishment under the Indian Penal Code."

Nathekha being evicted in pursuance of the order of the Mamlatdar, he applied to the High Court under its extraordinary jurisdiction, and obtained a rule nisi calling upon the plaintiff Abdul Alli to show cause why the Mamlatdar's order for possession should not be set aside, contending that the Mamlatdar's decree could not be executed against him, as he was not a party to it, and that the Mamlatdar had no jurisdiction to pass the order.

[451] Balkrishna N. Bhajekar appeared to show cause for the opponent (Abdul Alli) :—The ruling in Kasam Saheb v. Maruti (1) is a conclusive authority in our favour. The applicant's remedy is a suit in a civil Court and not an application under the extraordinary jurisdiction—Govinda Babaji v. Naiku Joti (2). If the applicant is right, a judgment-debtor can always upset a Mamlatdar's decree by alleging that some other person is in possession. The Mamlatdar's order does not debar the applicant from bringing a regular suit.

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—In this case the Mamlatdar passed a decree in favour of the opponent directing possession to be given to him by one Gulab. The patil kulkarni having reported that in proceeding to execute the decree he found that the applicant Nathekha had been occupying the place on behalf of the defendant Gulab, the Mamlatdar ordered that if the applicant "did not vacate the place and make over the place by persuasion, he should be forced to vacate the same." The applicant complains of this order as being beyond the jurisdiction of the Mamlatdar.

The Division Court in Kasam Saheb v. Maruti (1) remarks that "The Mamlatdars' Act does not seem to contemplate the case of a third party being ousted in the execution of an order for possession, for such order is only made on finding that the defendant himself is in possession." We agree in this view of the Act. It is to be remarked that the language in cl. (a), (sub-cl. 1) of s. 15 of the Act with respect to the "plaintiff's possession" differs materially from that used in sub-cl. (2) with regard to "defendant's possession," which standing alone, without any additional words to enlarge its meaning, must be understood as "actual" possession. Moreover, s. 18 shows that the only person who is contemplated as being affected by the Mamlatdar's giving possession to the plaintiff is the person against whom the decree is passed. This view of the Act may lead to a practical difficulty in the working of [452] it which it would be perhaps advisable to remove by legislation, but which is quite beyond the power of a Government Resolution to remedy, as was apparently attempted to be done by Resolution No. 1673 of 11th March, 1882. We think, therefore, that the Mamlatdar's order was, strictly speaking, beyond his authority, as the exercise of our extraordinary jurisdiction is one of discretion, and as the applicant's petition contains no distinct denial that he was occupying merely on behalf of Gulab, we must refuse to interfere in the matter. The applicant is not without his remedy by suit. See Kasam Saheb v. Maruti (1).

SECOND appeal from the decision of T. Hamilton, District Judge of Dharwar.

The plaintiff sued to recover certain land from the defendant. He alleged that his deceased father was the undivided brother of Ratnapa, whose son was the husband (deceased) of Yellawa, the first defendant, and that on Ratnapa's death Yellawa had taken wrongful possession of the lands and got her name registered as owner in the revenue records. He also claimed Rs. 100 as mesne profits.

Yellawa (defendant No. 1) pleaded (inter alia) that a partition had been effected between her father-in-law Ratnapa and his [453] brother Pavdapa, the father of the plaintiff; that she was the heir of her father-in-law, and that she had sold one of the fields in question and mortgaged two of them to defendant No. 2.

Defendant No. 2, Maharudrapa bin Basapa, answered to the same effect.

The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit.

On appeal by the plaintiff the Judge held that though there had been a partition between Pavdapa and Ratnapa, the plaintiff's claim to inherit Ratnapa's property was preferable to that of defendant Yellawa; that the suit with respect to the transfer of the lands to the plaintiff's name was maintainable in the Civil Court, and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover possession of the lands in dispute and also mesne profits, which the Judge found amounted to about Rs. 50 a year. He, therefore, reversed the decree and allowed the claim.

The defendants filed a second appeal.

Manekshah J. Taleyarkhan, for the appellants (defendants):—The Judge was wrong in making no provision for the maintenance of the defendant Yellawa who is a Hindu widow and is entitled to be maintained out of family property. This application for maintenance is no doubt made now for the first time in second appeal, but that can be done—Jamnabai v. Raychand (1). The order with respect to mesne profits is wrong. The Judge found the mesne profits amount to Rs. 50 per year, and that sum is barely sufficient for our maintenance.

Balaji Abaji Bhagavant, for the respondent (plaintiff):—We are at least entitled to recover mesne profits from the second defendant Maharudrapa, who is the alienee of the first defendant. The first defendant had no authority to make the alienations.

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C.J.—The decision in Jamnabai v. Raychand (1) shows that it is the settled practice of the Court not to allow the heir to recover the family property from a widow entitled to be maintained out of it without first securing a proper maintenance for her out of the property or by such other means as may be [454] deemed sufficient. The order for payment of mesne profits as against the widow, the amount of which did not exceed what was required for her maintenance, cannot, therefore, stand, and the decree must, therefore, be varied by reversing the order for mesne profits as against defendant No. 1, and a declaration must be added to the decree as was done in the above case to the effect that "the plaintiff takes the property awarded to him, subject to the obligation to provide a sufficient maintenance for the defendant; and we direct that when executing the Pauper—Suit in forma pauperis—Costs of plaintiff—Court fees payable by plaintiff—Decree omitting to order plaintiff to pay Court fees when suit dismissed—Application by the Collector under the extraordinary jurisdiction of High Court—Practice—Procedure.

The plaintiff's suit in forma pauperis was rejected by the Subordinate Judge. The decree, however, omitted to order the recovery from the plaintiff of the Court fees payable in the plaint. The Collector applied to the High Court under its extraordinary jurisdiction for the rectification of the decree. It was contended that, as the omission might have been remedied by an appeal or on review, the Collector could not apply under the extraordinary jurisdiction of the Court.

Held, on the authority of The Collector of Ratnagiri v. Janardan (1), that no appeal by Government would lie in the case, and that in the exercise of its extraordinary jurisdiction the High Court would rectify the decree by directing the plaintiff to pay the costs of Government.

APPLICATION under the extraordinary jurisdiction of the High Court (s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code, Act XIV of 1882) [455] against the decision of the Subordinate Judge of Sirsi in the Kanara District.

The plaintiff brought a suit in forma pauperis against Shrinivas Subhaya and three others to set aside a certain deed. The suit was valued at Rs. 4,450, and was, therefore, liable to a Court-fee of Rs. 250, which the plaintiff would have had to pay if he had not sued as pauper. The Subordinate Judge rejected the suit and ordered the parties to bear their own costs. The decree under the head of "Plaintiff's costs" set forth a sum of Rs. 250 as the amount of Court-fees payable on the plaint, but it contained no order for the recovery of that sum from the plaintiff permitted to sue as a pauper. The Collector of Kanara applied to the High Court under its extraordinary jurisdiction, alleging that the decree was imperfect and contrary to the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code, and he prayed that the decree might be rectified.

A rule nisi was issued calling on the plaintiff to show cause why the Collector's prayer should not be granted.

Narayan Ganesh Chandavarkar appeared for the plaintiff to show cause.—The Collector cannot apply under the extraordinary jurisdiction. He is not a party to the suit. The non-insertion of the provision in the decree as to the payment of the Court-fees by us was an omission which

The opponent Rahimtulla Nurmahomed Khoja obtained a money decree against two persons, viz., Anna Gangaram and another, in the High Court in its original civil jurisdiction. He obtained an order for execution from the Second Class Subordinate [457] Judge of Bijapur, who attached certain property belonging to the said Anna Gangaram and made an order for sale.

The applicant Dattatraya was the holder of a decree passed against the said Anna Gangaram alone by the First Class Subordinate Judge of Sholapur, the amount of the claim being more than Rs. 5,000, and, therefore, cognizable by that Court. In that Court he obtained an order for the attachment and sale of Anna Gangaram's property, which, as above stated, had been already attached by the Second Class Subordinate Judge of Bijapur. He then applied to the last-mentioned Court for a rateable distribution of the proceeds of the sale under s. 295 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882). His application was rejected on the ground that as he held a decree against Anna Gangaram alone, he could not obtain a rateable distribution in the assets realized in execution of the opponent's decree against Anna Gangaram and another.

The applicant applied to the High Court to set aside the order of refusal, and obtained a rule.

Narayan G. Chandavarkar appeared for the opponent to show cause against the rule:—The application was rightly refused. The Second Class Subordinate Judge of Bijapur had no jurisdiction to entertain an application with respect to a decree passed by the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge of Sholapur, because the decree had not been transferred to that Court for execution. Section 223 of the Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882) provides for the transfer of a decree to another Court for execution—Jetha v. Najeeralli (1); Krishnashankar v. Chandrashankar (2).

Decree—Execution—Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882), ss. 285, 295—Concurrent decrees—Distribution of assets among several decree-holders—Sale in execution by inferior Court of property while under an attachment issued by superior Court—Practice—Procedure.

On the 9th October, 1891, A. obtained a decree against B. in the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge of Surat. On the 13th October, 1891, C. also obtained a decree against B in the Court of the Second Class Subordinate Judge of Surat and immediately, viz., on the 16th October, 1891, applied for execution. B.'s property was consequently attached on the 18th October, 1891. On the 7th July, 1892, an order for sale was made, and the proclamation of sale was issued on the 9th July, 1892. The 17th August was fixed as the date of the auction sale.

On the 23rd July, 1892, A applied to the First Class Subordinate Judge for execution of his decree of the 9th October, 1891, and B.'s property (with respect to which the proclamation of sale had been already issued by the Second Class Subordinate Judge) was attached on the 14th August, 1892. Three days later, however, viz., on the 17th August, 1892, the property was sold under the decree of the Second Class Subordinate Judge.

A. then applied to the Second Class Subordinate Judge to set aside the sale on the ground that it was invalid under s. 285 (1) of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), having been made while the attachment levied by the First Class Subordinate Judge was pending, and on the Second Class Subordinate Judge's refusal to do so, A. applied to the High Court under its extraordinary jurisdiction.

Held, that the sale was good.

APPLICATION under extraordinary jurisdiction of the High Court s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code, (Act XIV of 1882) against an order passed by the Second Class Subordinate Judge of Surat.

[459] On the 9th October, 1891, the applicant, Patel Naranji Morarji, obtained a decree against Bai Parvati in the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge of Surat.

On the 13th October, 1891, the opponents obtained a decree against Bai Parvati in the Court of the Second Class Subordinate Judge of Surat, and immediately, viz., on 16th October, 1891, applied for execution. Bai Parvati's property was consequently attached on the 18th October, 1891. On the 7th July, 1892, the Second Class Subordinate Judge made an order for sale in execution, and on the 9th July, 1892, the proclamation of sale was issued.

On the 9th January, 1892, the District Judge of Surat transferred the execution proceedings (probably at the instance of the applicant,

Where property not in the custody of any Court has been attached in execution of decrees of more Courts than one, the Court which shall receive or realize such property and shall determine any claim thereto and any objection to the attachment thereof shall be the Court of highest grade, or, where there is no difference in grade between such Courts, the Court under whose decree the property was first attached.

Naranji Morarji) from the Court of the Second Class Subordinate Judge to that of the First Class Subordinate Judge and again re-transferred the proceedings to the Second Class Subordinate Judge in the beginning of July, 1892.

On the 23rd July, 1892, the applicant applied to the First Class Subordinate Judge for the execution of his decree of the 9th October, 1891, by the attachment and sale of Bai Parvati's property (with respect to which, as above stated, the Second Class Subordinate Judge had already issued the proclamation of sale), and on the 14th August, 1892, he attached the property.

In the meanwhile, however, viz., on the 12th August, 1892, the Second Class Subordinate Judge issued the necessary warrant for the sale of the property, and fixed the 17th August, 1892, as the date of the auction sale. On the 13th August, 1892, the applicant applied to the Second Class Subordinate Judge for the postponement of the sale, but his application was rejected, and the property was sold on the day fixed, that is the 17th August, and was purchased by Parabhulal Bechar, opponent No. 4.

The property being thus sold during the pendency of the attachment levied by the First Class Subordinate Judge, the applicant applied to the Second Class Subordinate Judge, to set aside the sale. The Subordinate Judge rejected this application also, holding that the sale was valid, and that s. 285 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) was not applicable, [460] because the attachment levied by the First Class Subordinate Judge was not subsisting at the time the sale was ordered.

The applicant, thereupon, applied to the High Court under its extraordinary jurisdiction, and obtained a rule nisi calling upon the opponents to show cause why the order of the Second Class Subordinate Judge refusing to set aside the sale should not be reversed.

Kalabhai Lallubhai appeared for the applicant in support of the rule:—The point now raised relates to the construction of s. 285 of the Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882). The question is whether after the attachment of the property by the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge, which is a Court of higher grade than that of the Second Class Subordinate Judge, the latter is competent to proceed to sell it. It is admitted that at the time of the sale by the Second Class Subordinate Judge, the attachment levied by the First Class Subordinate Judge was subsisting, though it was not in existence on the day the Second Class Subordinate Judge passed the order for sale, or on the day of proclamation of sale. We contend that the sale is the realisation of the property, and under s. 285 it was the higher Court only which had the power to sell.

What is the effect of the attachment, the order of sale, and the issue of the proclamation? They are all steps in the realization of assets in execution proceedings, but they do not amount to realization. The attachment does not divest the ownership. The ownership continues in the judgment-debtor till sale. The mere order for sale followed by the proclamation of sale does not extinguish his ownership in the property. Section 285 deals with cases of attachments by Courts of either the same grade or of different grades. In one case it provides for the realization to be made by the Court of higher grade and in the other by the Court that first seized the property. In s. 285 as well as in s. 295 the word used is "realize," and as the realization cannot be effected without sale, we submit that the term means that in the case of simultaneous seizure the sale shall be made by the superior Court when the Courts are of different grades, and in the case of those that are of the same grade, by the Court that first attached the property.

[461] Under the former Code (VIII of 1859) the first attaching creditor had the preference. He was entitled to be fully satisfied out of the property of the debtor, leaving only the balance, if any, for distribution among those that followed him. The main object of the two sections in the present order is to avoid confusion and undue preference. The difference between the two sections is that s. 295 requires an application for execution to the Court which realized the assets to entitle the creditor to share in the distribution, while s. 285 needs no such application. Section 285 contemplates applications for execution in different courts and realization of assets by such Courts at the same time. It does not require, as under s. 295, a repetition of the same process to enable the creditor to share in the distribution. It leaves the proceedings, so far as they have gone, unaffected, and the Court of superior grade by virtue of that grade in one case and the first attaching Court by virtue of priority in the other become cognizant of the proceedings so far as the common property is concerned to complete the process of realization and distribution of assets.

In the present case the effect of the confirmation of the sale by the Second Class Subordinate Judge will be that we shall not get anything out of the assets realized by him, although we hold a decree of a Court of superior grade and although we attached the property in execution of our decree before the actual sale took place. The opponent will thereby get the preference which the code seeks to prevent. The rulings of the Madras and Allahabad High Courts are in our favour. The point has been directly raised in those Courts. In the matter of the Petition of Badri Prasad v. Saran Lal (1) ; this ruling was followed in Aghore Nath v. Shama Sundari (2) ; Muttukaruppan Chetti v. Mutturamalinga Chetti (3) ; the Bombay High Court also in Nimbaji Tulsiram v. Vadia Venkati (4).

The rulings of the Calcutta High Court are apparently in conflict with the rulings of the Allahabad and Madras High Courts—Dwarka Nath Dass v. Banku Behari Bose (5) ; Bykant Nath Shaha v. Rajendro Narain Rai (6).

[462] Anderson with Motilal M. Munshi, appeared for opponents Nos. 1, 2 and 3 to show cause.

ORDER.

SARGENT, C. J.—The question in this case turns on the proper application of s. 285 of the Civil Procedure Code, the practical importance of which arises from its necessary connexion with s. 295 of the Civil Procedure Code, which provides for the distribution of the assets realized in the execution of a decree amongst the several decree-holders who had, prior to such realization, applied to the Court by which such assets are held for execution of such decrees against the same judgment-debtor.

The decisions in In the matter of the petition of Badri Prasad v. Saran Lal (1) ; Muttukaruppan Chetti v. Mutturamalinga Chetti (3) ; Bykant Nath Shaha v. Rajendro Narain Rai (6), and Dwarka Nath Dass v. Banku Behari Bose (5) show that there is a difference of opinion as to the effect of s. 285 of the Civil Procedure Code, between the Allahabad and Madras High Courts on the one side and the High Court of Calcutta on the other. In the cases before the Allahabad and Calcutta High Courts there were sales in both the Courts which had passed the decrees in pursuance of concurrent attachments in those Courts. The Allahabad High Court held that the sale under those circumstances by the wrong Court as determined by s. 285 was null and void. The latter Court held that such a sale by the Munsif's Court, not having been objected to, was not void, as "it was perfectly regular so far as the facts were known to the parties concerned" and also, as the High Court assumed, to the inferior Court itself which ordered the sale; but the Court suggested that the Subordinate Judge might have sent for the proceeds of the sale by the Munsif's Court.

In Muttakaruppan Chetti v. Mutturamalinga Chetti (1) the circumstances were the same as here: the inferior Court had ordered the sale and issued proclamation before the property was attached in the [463] superior Court; but the property having been subsequently sold by the Court, the High Court held, in deciding upon the claim of two rival purchasers, that the sale by the inferior Court was null and void. Without expressing any opinion on the effect of s. 285 under the circumstances in the cases before the Allahabad and Calcutta High Courts we think that neither the language of the section nor the object with which it may be supposed to have been introduced, viz., to prevent confusion in execution proceedings, requires us or makes it convenient to hold that the effect of the section, under the circumstances of the present case, is to render the sale by the Second Class Subordinate Judge a nullity; it having been the result of an order of sale and proclamation which were perfectly valid when they were made by that Judge on the 7th and 9th July respectively. The District Judge, it is true, had transferred on the 9th January, 1892 (it is not clear on whose application) the execution proceedings from the Second Class Subordinate Judge to the First Class Subordinate Judge's Court as was done in Krishna Velaji Marwadi v. Bhau Mansaram (2) (Application No. 217 of 1892 in the extraordinary jurisdiction) which recently came under our consideration. But in the beginning of July, 1892, the proceedings were transferred by the District Court to the Second Class Subordinate Judge's Court. The result is that the applicant had no right to ask the Second Class Subordinate Judge to set aside the sale as made without jurisdiction, although possibly he might have applied to the District Judge to transfer the proceeds realized by the sale to the First Class Subordinate Judge's Court.

We must, therefore, discharge the rule with costs; but we think it right to take this opportunity of expressing our opinion that the Civil Procedure Code should be amended so as to remove all doubt as to the proper application of ss. 285 and 295 to the different cases which are constantly arising in practice in the execution of concurrent decrees.

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 412 and 414—Costs—Appeal in forma pauperis —Withdrawal of appeal—Right of Government to costs—Agreement between the parties.

The plaintiffs filed a suit in forma pauperis to recover possession of certain property. The Court of first instance dismissed the suit. Thereupon the plaintiffs preferred an appeal in forma pauperis to the High Court. Pending the appeal the parties entered into a compromise, under which it was agreed (inter alia) that the appeal should be withdrawn, and that the respondent should pay to Government the Court fees which the plaintiffs were liable to pay both in the first Court and in the Court of appeal. When the appeal came on for hearing, the appellants informed the Court of their intention to withdraw from the appeal. Thereupon the Government Pleader intervened, and applied for an order directing the respondent to pay, in accordance with the terms of the compromise, all the costs payable to Government on account of institution fees, &c., in the first Court as well as in the appellate Court. This application was opposed by both parties. The Government Pleader then moved the Court to dispauper the appellants under s. 414 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882).

Held, that the appeal having been withdrawn, no order could be made either under s. 412 or under s. 414 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Held, also, that it was not open to the Court to order the respondent to pay any fees on the strength of any agreement between the parties.

APPEAL in forma pauperis from the decision of Rao Bahadur Chunilal Maneklal, First Class Subordinate Judge of Ahmedabad, in suit No. 420 of 1888.

The plaintiffs filed a suit in forma pauperis to recover possession of the taluka of Sonipur belonging to their deceased husband, Thakor Amarsang Bahadursang.

The defendant pleaded that, according to the custom prevailing among the thakors and talukdars of the district, females were excluded from succession to a talukdar's estate ; that, in accordance with this custom, the plaintiffs had no right to inherit the property in dispute, and that the Government of Bombay had placed him in possession of the estate as the legal heir of the deceased thakor.

[465] The First Class Subordinate Judge, who tried this case, found the alleged custom proved, and dismissed the suit, ordering the plaintiffs "to pay all the costs which they would have incurred had they not been allowed to sue in forma pauperis."

Against this decision the plaintiffs preferred an appeal (No. 82 of 1889) in forma pauperis to the High Court.

The respondent (defendant) applied to the Court for an order to dispauper the appellants, on the ground that they had sufficient means to pay the Court fees leviable on the memorandum of appeal.

Pending the disposal of this application, the parties entered into a compromise, under which it was arranged that the appellants should receive the income of certain villages during their lifetime in lieu of maintenance; that the appeal pending in the High Court should be withdrawn; and that the respondent should pay to Government all the Court fees which the appellants would have had to pay both in the Court of first instance and in the Court of appeal, if they had not been allowed either to sue, or to appeal, in forma pauperis.

The appeal came on for hearing on 20th April, 1893. On that day the appellants informed the Court of their intention to withdraw the appeal.

Thereupon the Government Pleader intervened, and applied for an order, directing the respondent to pay, in accordance with the terms of the compromise, the Court fees which the appellants were liable to pay both in the Court of first instance and in the Court of appeal. This application was opposed by both parties.

The Government Pleader then applied on behalf of the Collector to have the appellant dispaupered under s. 414, cls. (b) and (c) of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882).

Rao Saheb Vasudev J. Kirtikar (Government Pleader), for the Crown.—I contend, in the first place, that the appellants have sufficient means to pay the necessary Court fees. There cannot be better evidence of this fact than the affidavits and documents which the respondent has himself filed in support of his application to dispauper the appellants. The appellants should not, [466] therefore, be allowed to proceed with the appeal in forma pauperis. I contend further that, under the compromise effected between the parties, the appellants have allowed other persons to obtain an interest in the subject-matter of this suit. They should, therefore, be dispaupered under s. 414 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

V. K. Bhatavdekar, for the appellants (plaintiffs).—The appeal having been already withdrawn, the present application under s. 414 of the Code will not lie. We do not wish to continue the appeal any further. Clause (b) of the section does not, therefore, apply, even assuming that we had sufficient means to pay the Court fees, as alleged by the Collector. Nor does cl. (c) apply, as the agreement referred to therein should be of the nature of a champertous or maintenance agreement. The compromise between the parties is not of this character.

Ganpat Sadashiv Rao, for the respondent (defendant).—The Collector is not entitled to recover the costs of this appeal from the respondent. The appeal is withdrawn, and not dismissed, under s. 97 or 98 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Section 412 of the Code does not, therefore, apply—The Collector of Kanara v. Krishnapa (1).

JUDGMENT.

CANDY, J.—The suit in this case was brought in forma pauperis, and was dismissed by the First Class Subordinate Judge, who ordered that plaintiffs do pay all the costs which they would have incurred had they not been allowed to sue in forma pauperis. Plaintiffs then filed First Appeal No. 82 of 1889, and this was also in forma pauperis. Respondent (defendant) then objected that appellants (plaintiffs) had sufficient means to pay the Court fees. Subsequently at the request of the parties the appeal and application stood over, and eventually the case was compromised.

Appellants then applied to withdraw their appeal, and respondent agreed, not wishing any order as to costs, and not pressing the application above mentioned. Then the Government Pleader intervened, applying for an order from this Court that the amount of Court fees payable by the original plaintiffs in the Court of first instance and also in this Court of appeal be paid [467] by the respondent, one of the terms of the settlement between the parties being that respondent-defendant should pay all the costs payable to Government for institution fees, &c., which the appellants would have had to pay if they had not been permitted to sue or appeal in forma pauperis. This application was opposed by the parties, so the Government Pleader then filed an application, under s. 414 of the Civil Procedure Code, praying that the appellants should be dispaupered on the ground that their means were such that they ought not to continue to sue in forma pauperis, and that they had entered into the agreements above mentioned, and that respondent had already prayed that appellants should be dispaupered. I am of opinion that the applications of the Government Pleader must be rejected.

Certainly it is not open to this Court to order the respondent to pay any fees on the strength of any agreement between the parties. The appeal having been withdrawn, the decree of the First Class Subordinate Judge stands, and thus the right of Government to the Court fees payable in the Court of first instance is secured.

Appellants have not failed in their appeal, nor has it been dismissed in consequence of appellants' failure to cause notice of the appeal to be issued, or in consequence of the absence of both sides; therefore no order can be made under s. 412, unless the appellants are dispaupered under s. 414. But this latter section clearly contemplates the continuance of the suit (or appeal). Clause (a) admittedly does not apply. Clause (b) is not applicable, because appellants do not wish to continue the appeal. Clause(c) answers to cl. (d) of s. 407, and prevents the prosecution of a suit or appeal when the plaintiff or appellant has entered into a champerty or maintenance agreement for the prosecution of litigation. That is evidently not applicable to the present case, in which the parties have settled their differences in order to put an end to litigation. Section 414 is, therefore, not applicable to the present case; and thus no order can be passed under s. 412.

Appeal No. 82 of 1889 is withdrawn. No order as to costs. The same order as to application No. 293 of 1892.

[468] Applications Nos. 48 and 205 of 1893 are dismissed.

In application No. 205 the Government Pleader will get the costs of that application from appellants.

FULTON, J.—I concur. The withdrawal of an appeal cannot, consistently with the decision in The Collector of Kanara v. Krishnappa Hegde (1), the correctness of which the Government Pleader has not impugned, be treated as failure by the appellants within the meaning of s. 412. The application to dispauper them under s. 414 appears to me to fall to the ground with the withdrawal of the appeal. But as the determination of this application has been prevented by the action of the appellants, I think the Government Pleader is entitled to recover from them his costs in respect thereof. The withdrawal of the appeal and the dismissal of the Government Pleader's application will not, of course, affect any orders which the Court below may have made for the payment of the Court fees due to Government in that Court.

ROZARIO (Applicant) v. INGLES (Opponent).* [16th October, 1893.]

Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), s. 488—Maintenance—Illegitimate children—Right of a married woman to claim maintenance for her illegitimate children—Evidence of wife to prove non-access—Evidence—Presumption of legitimacy—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 112.

A married woman is entitled under s. 488 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882), to claim maintenance for her illegitimate children from the putative father.

A wife can be examined as to non-access of her husband during her married life, without independent evidence being first offered to prove the illegitimacy of her children.

[R., 19 M. 461 (463) = 2 Weir 623; 25 M.L.J. 594 = 14 M.L.T. 447 = (1913) M.W.N. 983.]

THIS was a reference by Khan Bahadur P. H. Dastur, Presidency Magistrate, under s. 432 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882).

[469] The reference was in the following terms:—

"The respondent in the above case is charged by one Mrs. Rozario, a married woman, with the maintenance of her three illegitimate children under s. 488, Criminal Procedure Code.

"In the course of these proceedings it was contended by Lord Colin Campbell for the defence that in England the Bastardy Acts apply only to single women, or those in the position of single women; and that as the law in India was based on the same Acts, the Legislature could never have intended s. 488, Criminal Procedure Code, to apply to illegitimate children of married women. Cites Stacey v. Lentill (1); 7 and 8 Vict., c. 101; 35 and 36 Vict., c. 65, in support of his contention.

"The learned counsel also maintained that the law presumes the children of married women to be legitimate, unless this presumption is rebutted by impotency of the husband or his non-access to his wife, and this could only be proved by calling independent evidence and not by examining the wife as a witness. Cites Hargrave v. Hargrave (2); The King v. The Inhabitants of Sourton (3); Queen v. The Inhabitants of Mansfield (4).

"Now it is no doubt true that the Bastardy Acts in England are limited in their application to single women, and it was, therefore, held in Stacey v. Lentill (1) that if a woman marries, she cannot be allowed to proceed against the putative father, as her husband becomes responsible for the maintenance of her children. This express provision of the English law is not, however, incorporated in s. 488, which in general terms makes a father responsible for the maintenance of his illegitimate children irrespective of their being born of a married or a single woman. For at the end of this clause provision has been made for the Magistrate ordering payment of the amount to such person as the Court deems fit. Now if the case of single woman alone were considered in this section, there would have been no adequate reason for the insertion of this provision. Moreover, this section is intended to provide for vagrants; illegitimate children of a married woman would not naturally be supported by her [470] husband; and they would, therefore, be thrown on the world if the putative father were not made responsible.

"With regard to the second objection, it is clear that some of the authorities cited by Lord Colin Campbell lay down that a wife cannot be examined in the first instance to prove the bastardy of her own children; non-access during marriage must be proved by independent evidence. But it has not been shown that this law is applicable to India. On the contrary the whole tenor of the Evidence Act shows that in it the admissibility of evidence is made the rule and its exclusion an exception. For s. 118 of this Act declares all persons competent to testify, unless the Court considers that they are prevented from understanding the questions put to them, or from giving rational answers to questions by tender years, extreme old age, disease of body or mind, and other cognate causes. This incapacity is due to physical causes, and the Legislature has, therefore, wisely excluded such evidence; but it has not gone beyond this and made exceptions in favour of those who can understand and rationally answer questions put to them. The only exception to this rule is that of an accused person, who owing to an express provision in the Criminal Procedure Code could not be examined on oath and is, therefore, incapable. Even ss. 121 to 131, Evidence Act, could not be said exceptions to the general rule laid down in s. 118, because there is a difference between competent and compellable witnesses. One can well understand why some people should not be compelled to divulge information received by them under peculiar circumstances, but there is no proper reason assigned, except a sentimental one, why the wife should not be heard against her husband or against her lover. Further, s. 120 of the Evidence Act makes a husband and wife competent witnesses for and against each other, and, if so, there is greater reason why the wife's evidence should be admitted against her lover. The only other section, then, that could apply to this case is 152, which forbids scandalous and indecent questions, and I readily admit that nothing could be more scandalous than a wife proclaiming her infamy from the witness box; but the latter part of this section expressly provides that if such questions relate to matters in issue, they shall be allowed. In the present [471] case the main fact to be established is the paternity of the children, and nobody could be in a better position than the wife to say whose they are. I do not think, therefore, that either of the objections is tenable, but the points raised by the learned counsel seem to be very important, and as I am not aware of any Indian cases deciding them, I think it proper to make this reference for an expression of their Lordships' opinion on the following two questions:—

"1st. Has a married woman a locus standi under s. 488, Criminal Procedure Code, to claim maintenance for her illegitimate children?

"2ndly. Could a wife be examined to prove non-access during a married life, without independent evidence being first offered to prove the illegitimacy of the children."

Inverarity (with Mathubhai and Jamaitram), the opponent.—A married woman is no doubt entitled under s. 488 of the Code of Criminal Procedure to claim maintenance for her illegitimate children. The English cases on the subject are decided under s. 3 of 35 and 36 Vict., c. 65, which expressly applies to unmarried women. Refers to Tozer v. Lake (1). Those cases, therefore, cannot govern the present case.

As regards the second point referred by the Magistrate to this Court, the practice in England is that neither parent is allowed to prove non-access when the legitimacy of a child is a fact in issue. A wife cannot confess her adulterous connection unless and until the fact of her husband's non-access has already been proved by independent evidence—Taylor on Evidence, p. 818; Lyon's Medical Jurisprudence, p. 505. The same principle ought to apply here. And we submit that a wife is not a competent witness to rebut the presumption of legitimacy referred to in s. 112 of the Evidence Act. Cites Guardians of Nottingham v. Tomkinson (1).

Applicant in person.

JUDGMENT.

CANDY, J.—The first question must be answered in the affirmative. Mr. Inverarity did not contest this point, and the words of s. 488, Criminal Procedure Code (X of 1882), are manifestly wide enough to include a married woman claiming maintenance for [472] her illegitimate children. The English cases depend upon the words of the English Statute applying to a "single woman."

To the second question I would answer that a wife can be examined to prove non-access of her husband during her married life, without independent evidence being first offered to prove the illegitimacy of the children.

No doubt in England the positive rule at common law is clear that neither husband nor wife can be examined for the purpose of proving non-access during marriage. That is still the law except as to any proceeding instituted in consequence of adultery—Guardians of Nottingham v. Tomkinson (1). But in this country we must follow the provisions of the Evidence Act. Section 112 provides that "the fact that any person was born during the continuance of a valid marriage between his mother and any man, or within 290 days after its dissolution, the mother remaining unmarried, shall be conclusive proof that he is the legitimate son of that man, unless it can be shown that the parties to the marriage had no access to each other at any time when he could have been begotten."

Mr. Inverarity quoting a note (of which he is the author) at p. 505 of Lyon's Medical Jurisprudence contended that the above section would be construed in accordance with English decisions. So far as the possibility of presumption of the husband being father of the children born to his wife during the continuance of their marriage, being rebutted, there is no difficulty. The leading case is Morris v. Davies (2), which decides that non-access may be proved by means of such legal evidence as is admissible in every other case in which it is necessary to prove a physical fact, and that the presumption as to the husband being the father of a child alleged to be illegitimate can be rebutted by the conduct of the parties (taking the whole res gestæ) raising a strong and irresistible conclusion that the child born was not the child of the husband, but the child of another. See also The Aylesford Peerage (3) case, in which it was decided that where the legitimacy of a child born in wedlock is in issue, previous [473] statements by the mother that the child is a bastard are admissible as evidence of her conduct, although she could not be allowed to make such statements in the witness box. Here Mr. Inverarity did not contend, and the question referred by the Magistrate does not assume, that the wife cannot under any circumstances be allowed to make statements in the witness box bastardizing her own issue; but the learned counsel contended, quoting Taylor on Evidence, s. 951, that in a case of bastardy, provided that the husband's non-access has first been proved by independent evidence, the wife may in the witness box confess her adulterous connection with another person, and thus enable the order of maintenance to be made in the event of her testimony being corroborated in some important particulars. I can find no authority in the Evidence Act for laying down the order in which evidence would be led to prove the fact of non-access in accordance with s. 112. Proceedings under s. 488, Criminal Procedure Code, have been held to be of a civil nature—Nur Mahomed v. Bismulla Jan (1). By s. 120, Evidence Act, in all civil proceedings the parties to the suit shall be competent witnesses. Here Mrs. Rozario is a party and a competent witness. If she states in the witness box that her husband had no access to her at any time when the children now in question could have been begotten, her statement may be taken for what it is worth. If her evidence of this alleged fact cannot be excluded as inadmissible, then there is no provision of law determining at what stage of the proceedings her evidence may be recorded.

FULTON, J.—I concur. The wording of s. 488, Criminal Procedure Code, and s. 118 of the Evidence Act seems to me so clear as to leave no room for doubting that both the questions referred by the learned Magistrate must be answered in the affirmative.

[474] ORIGINAL CIVIL.

Before Sir Charles Sargent, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Farran.

GHANASHAM NILKANT NADKARNI (Original Defendant). Appellant v.. MOROBA RAMCHANDRA PAI (Original Plaintiff), *Respondent.

[9th, 16th and 17th February and 16th March, 1894.]

Easement—Light and air—Obstruction—Injunction or damages—Specific Relief Act I of 1877—Costs—Costs where lower Court grants an injunction and appeal Court refuses injunction, but awards damages.

The plaintiff was the owner of a house in Jambulwadi street in Bombay. The defendant owned a house to the east of it, and between the two houses was a gully three feet seven inches wide, the part of which next the defendant's house was a gutter. On the ground floor of the plaintiff's house were four windows and on the first floor two windows all looking out into the gully and all of them ancient windows. The defendant's house originally was a little higher than the plaintiff's house and consisted of a ground floor, a first floor and a loft. Shortly before suit, the defendant pulled down this house and on the same site began to build a new four-storied house with a loft. The plaintiff sued for an injunction, alleging that this new house, which would be of much greater height than the old one, would completely block up his ancient windows and cause him material damage, there being no other window in his house on the side next the defendant. The defendant in his written statement denied that his new house would cause material damage to the plaintiff. He alleged that his old house, which was higher than the plaintiff's, had a projecting cornice, so that hardly any direct light came to the plaintiff's windows, which were almost, if not entirely, lighted by the light that came from each end of the gully. He further stated that his new house would have no cornice and that he had widened the gully, so that light to the plaintiff's windows would not be appreciably diminished, but that even if the passage had not been widened there would have been little diminution of light. He also alleged that the plaintiff had other windows and sources of light than the said six windows. While denying all damage, the defendant, however, to avoid litigation and without prejudice paid into Court Rs. 200, which he said was more than sufficient to compensate the plaintiff.

After filing the suit the plaintiff obtained a rule for an injunction at the date of which the walls of the defendant's house had been built up as far as the second floor. The rule was subsequently discharged, the defendant consenting that the case should be argued at the hearing as if the new house was then in the same condition. The defendant, however, subsequently, continued to build, and at the date of hearing it was practically complete.

The lower Court (STARLING, J.) found that prior to the building of the new house direct light came to the plaintiff's windows to the extent at all events of 5° and in addition to this a considerable amount of lateral light came to the windows over the defendant's roof. The Court held that, as the plaintiff had a right to this light by [475] prescription, he was absolutely entitled to the whole of it: that the defendant had by his new building cut off all the direct light, and that practically all the light left to the plaintiff was reflected light, the amount of which depended on the condition in which the defendant might choose to keep the walls of his house. Under these circumstances the lower Court, looking at the house, as if it was still in the condition in which it was at the time the injunction was discharged, held that the plaintiff was entitled to a mandatory injunction, and directed the defendant to remove the upper portion of the house which had been built since that time. On appeal:—

Held, that although the plaintiff's light had been sensibly diminished by the defendant's new building, there had not been such a large, material and substantial damage as to require interference by injunction, or that the plaintiff's room had been rendered unfit for the purpose for which it might reasonably be expected to be used.

The appeal Court, therefore, varied the decree of Starling, J., and refused an injunction, but ordered the defendant to pay the plaintiff Rs. 500 as damages.

On the question of costs it was argued for the defendant (appellant) that he should be given his costs of appeal, as he had succeeded in setting aside the injunction granted by the lower Court and should also get his costs of hearing in the lower Court, as the whole contest there had been as to the right to an injunction, which in appeal had been refused. The defendant had paid Rs. 200 into Court when he filed his written statement, and would have paid more if he could have obtained any indication from the plaintiff of the amount that would satisfy him. Nothing, however, would satisfy the plaintiff but an injunction, and he had failed to get it.

Held, that the plaintiff should have his costs of hearing in the lower Court and that each party should pay his costs of the appeal and of the proceedings on the rule for an injunction before the trial. The ordinary rule should be observed, and the costs should follow the event. The event in this case was that the plaintiff had proved his case against the defendant, although he had not got the precise form of relief which he wanted. If a party substantially succeeds he is entitled to his costs.

SUIT for an injunction, &c. The plaintiff owned a house in Jambulwadi Street in Bombay. The defendant was the owner of a house situated to the east of it, and between the two houses was a space of about three feet seven inches, the part of which adjacent to the plaintiff's house was a passage, and that part adjacent to the defendant's house was a gutter of about eighteen inches wide. The plaintiff claimed to be the owner of the passage: he admitted the defendant to be the owner of the gutter, but claimed the right to use the gutter for the flow of refuse water from his own house, alleging that it had been so used for more than fifty years.

ORIGINAL CIVIL.
18 B. 474.

On the ground floor of the plaintiff's house were four windows and on the first floor two windows. The plaintiff alleged that [476] these six windows were ancient windows through which he and his predecessors had enjoyed light and air without any obstruction, except that caused by the old house of the defendant, which consisted only of a ground floor, a first floor and a loft and was of about the same height as the plaintiff's house.

The plaintiff complained that the defendant had recently pulled down his old house and had begun to build a new four-storied house with a loft on the site of his old house: that in doing so he had wrongfully placed scaffolding on the aforesaid passage of the plaintiff and had blocked it up: that he had also threatened to alter the position of the aforesaid gutter so as to prevent the plaintiff using it. He further complained that, if the defendant completed his new house, which would be of much greater height than the old one, he would completely block up the ancient windows of the plaintiff's house and cause material damage to the said owner, as there was no other window therein on the side next the defendant. The plaintiff prayed for a declaration that the passage was his, subject to the defendant's right to use it, and that the plaintiff was entitled to use the gutter to carry off refuse water, and for an injunction against the threatened obstruction to the plaintiff's windows. He also prayed that the defendant should be ordered to pull down so much of his new house as interfered with his said rights, and for damages.

The defendant denied the plaintiff's ownership of the passage and his right of user of the gutter. He complained that the plaintiff had known of his intention to build, but delayed taking proceedings until a large quantity of materials had been collected, and had then, just before the vacation, obtained an interim-injunction which was afterwards discharged, but by reason of which he (the defendant) had suffered severe loss. He denied that the erection of his new house would cause material damage to the plaintiff. He alleged that his old house was higher than the plaintiff's and had a projecting cornice, so that hardly any direct light came to the defendant's windows, which were almost, if not entirely, lighted by the light that came from each end of the gully. He stated that his new house would have no cornice, and that he had widened the passage, so that the light [477] to the plaintiff's windows would not be appreciably diminished; but that even if the passage had not been widened, there would have been little diminution of light. He also alleged that the plaintiff's rooms had other windows and sources of light besides the six windows mentioned.

The defendant's written statement contained the following paragraph:—

"8. Although the defendant believes that no damage has been done to the plaintiff's light, and that he is not entitled to any sum whatever as damages, the defendant, for the sake of peace, and to avoid litigation, and without prejudice to his contention, brings into Court the sum of Rs. 200, and is willing that the plaintiff should receive the same; and the defendant says that such sum is more than sufficient to compensate the plaintiff for any injury done to the plaintiff in consequence of the defendant's new building."

The case was heard on the 12th December, 1892, and following days by Starling, J.

Anderson and Scott, for plaintiff.

Lang (Advocate-General), Inverarity and Jardine, for the defendant.

Counsel referred to Dhunjibhoy Cowasji Umirgar v. Lisboa (1); Manekial v. Narbheram (2); Aynsley v. Glover (3).

16*th January*, 1893. STARLING, J.—[Upon the evidence His Lordship found that the defendant had trespassed upon the plaintiff's passage, but that the plaintiff had not suffered damage from such trespass. He awarded the plaintiff Re. 1 as nominal damages. He also held that the plaintiff was entitled to drain the refuse water from his house into the defendant's gutter. On the question of light and air his judgment was as follows :—]

The last point to be considered is that of light and air. I do not propose to consider each window separately, but shall deal with number 5 only; as, if the plaintiff can establish his right with regard to that, he will get all he is entitled to with regard to the others. Now, according to the defendant's surveyors, direct light came to that window over the defendant's cornice to the outer edge of the sill of that window in a line, making an angle of 10 or 11 degrees with the wall of the plaintiff's [478] house; the plaintiff's surveyor makes the angle 16. A portion of that light was intercepted by the plaintiff's own roof, but that does not prevent him from being entitled to the remainder, which the defendant puts at 5 and the plaintiff at 11. Besides this, it must be borne in mind that this window was on the south side of the highest point of the defendant's larger roof. Consequently over the sloping portion of that roof and the smaller roof, a considerable amount of lateral light would come to that window. As the plaintiff claims this light by prescription, he is absolutely entitled to the whole of it. See Birmingham, &c., Banking Co. v. Ross (4), and, further, he would be entitled to it even if acts had been done to other buildings or to other parts of the same building by which he got additional light from other points—Dyres Co. v. King(5). Now it is admitted that by his present building the defendant has cut off from this window the whole of the direct light which hitherto came to it, but he says that no damage has been done to the plaintiff, and that substantially his rooms are as comfortable and as well adapted for occupation as in times past. He also says that no portion of the light which came over his house ever passed directly into the room itself, because of the smallness of the angle and the thickness of the wall in which the window was fixed. Possibly this may have been so, but the photograph (Ex. D), shows that at a certain time in the day the sun shone directly on the wall in which the window was, and the effect of having a beam of sunlight passing directly in front of the window, although it might not actually enter it, must have caused a large amount of sunlight to be diffused through the window and very much increased the comfort of the room, and it must be remembered that it is light, not direct sunbeams, which is claimed.

The defendant further says that he has done no substantial damage to the plaintiff, as there is still ample light in the room, and I was taken down to view the premises in order to satisfy myself as to the amount of light. In this room I could read a book which was presented to me for that purpose. It was a book clearly printed in good type, and I could read it when the face of the page was turned towards the window, and when I stood in front of the [479] window or just a little on one side. I should not, however, have cared to read the book within that space for half an hour continuously, except perhaps quite close to the window. The rest of the room was very deficient in light, and this was about 10 A. M. on a bright day. The room was pretty fairly lighted, as far as native rooms of that description are concerned, within the cone of light coming through the window, but I should not consider it was well lighted.

In order, however, to consider what the effect of the defendant's acts may be, it is necessary to consider what the light which does come in consists of. In the first place, there is a very large proportion of reflected light thrown off from the freshly whitened surface of the defendant's wall and a very small proportion of horizontal light which comes in from the ends of the gully, which, I think, need not be seriously taken into account, as, according to the evidence of the defendant's surveyor, none of that can go directly into the room. Consequently the light which the plaintiff now gets in this room is practically all reflected light, and the amount of that light depends upon the whiteness of the defendant's wall. There is no means by which the defendant can be made to keep his wall well whitewashed, or even to prevent him painting it a dark colour, in which case there would be but a very small amount of light reflected, and the Courts have always refused to take into account suggestions of this kind —see Dent v. Auction Mort Co. (1); besides which, in order that the plaintiff may continue to enjoy the amount of reflected light which he now does, assuming that the defendant keeps the wall of his house well white-washed, the plaintiff must keep his house at the same height it is now, and thus would be deprived of his undoubted right to build his house higher. Consequently I must regard the plaintiff as in the present enjoyment of but a very small amount of the light to which he can legally enforce a claim, and I am of opinion that the defendant by shutting off all the direct light which came to this window, although the quantity was not large, has done to the plaintiff material and substantial damage. That being so, [480] it is no excuse for the defendant to say to the plaintiff, if you open windows in your west wall, and keep the western doors of the rooms open, you will get ample light. He is entitled to his ancient lights, and is not to be forced to adopt other ways of meeting the wrong done to him by the defendant. The fact, too, that in the northern wall of the room lit by No. 5 there is an opening, ordinarily closed by a shutter, which looks into the room to the north opposite a window which opens directly into the street, does not lessen the defendant's liability, because it is evident that that shutter is intended to be opened or closed at the occupant's pleasure, and ought not to have to be kept always open to make up for the result of the defendant's wrong-doing. Besides this, as a matter of fact, the amount of light which enters the room when the shutter and the opposite window are both open is by no means large, and does very little else than make darkness visible.

What relief, then, am I to give to the plaintiff? The defendant relying on Lisboa's case (2) says that damages only ought to be given, and asserts that the Rs. 200 paid into Court are sufficient. But this case differs from Lisboa's case in that here the defendant has cut off the whole of the plaintiff's direct light and left him a very small portion of light from other sources, the enjoyment of which he can enforce. In Lisboa's case although the light was diminished, there was still some direct light left. This, I think, would of itself point to the fact that an injunction is the proper remedy. Further, the defendant admitted in his cross-examination that he had all along been aware that the building of his house would do damage to the plaintiff, although in the letter of his attorney's (Ex. L) he denies the plaintiff's rights, and asserts that his new house would cut off no more light than the old one; but he thought that Lisboa's case would protect him, and under that impression he doubtless consented that this case should be argued at the hearing as if his house was in the condition in which it was on the day the injunction was discharged, i.e., with the walls on the plaintiff's side built up no higher than the second floor. I look at his house, therefore, at the present time as if it had not risen above the second floor, and taking into account that any substantial increase above that will cut off all [481] the plaintiff's direct light, I must prevent him continuing his house above that line. All that he has built above that has been built at his own risk, not merely by reason of notice of the plaintiff's claim, but at his own risk solemnly taken upon himself at the time the rule was discharged. The case otherwise is very much like that of Lawrence v. Horton (1). I must, therefore, grant a mandatory injunction for the removal of the upper portion of the defendant's house, as I shall hereafter set it out in the decree. Defendant must pay the costs of the suit and the costs of, and incidental to, the rule.

The defendant appealed. The appeal came on for hearing before SARGENT, C. J., and FARRAN, J.

JUDGMENT.

16*th March*, 1894. SARGENT, C.J.—The most important question in this case is as to the extent of the obstruction, by the defendant's new house, of the light and air hitherto enjoyed by the plaintiff's ancient windows, and the nature of the relief (if any) he is entitled to. The Judge of the Division Court came to the conclusion that, having regard to the diminution of light in the room to which the window No. 5 in the upper floor belongs, the plaintiff was entitled to a mandatory injunction, which would practically serve the plaintiff's purpose as regards all the windows in question, and, therefore, render it unnecessary to consider the case of the other windows.

[482] The houses are separated by a gully or passage three feet nine inches wide runing north and south. The defendant's original house, like the plaintiff's, was a house with a pole running west and east and eaves sloping towards the north and south parallel to the eastern face of the plaintiff's house. It was higher than the plaintiff's house, the roof running south being seven feet above the top of window No. 5. The light from the sky found its way over the eaves of defendant's roof into the gully, but owing to the cornice and weather-boards of defendant's roof and windows and the overhanging eaves of the plaintiff's roof, the angle of the cone of lateral light actually entering the gully was much diminished, and it was not disputed at the hearing before us that it could not have been more than five or six degrees. At the time of the trial by the Division Court this fact was not clearly made out. The learned Judge who visited the premises seems to have thought it highly probable, as stated by defendant, that this lateral light owing to the smallness of the angle and thickness of the wall only struck the sill of the window, and that very little, if any, entered directly into the window. Having visited the premises ourselves, I cannot doubt that this must have been the case. The gully was, of course, also lighted by the sky vertically above it and by the light which found its way into it at both ends, and, lastly, by the light reflected from the walls of the two houses.

Such being the sources of light with which the room was supplied, it is plain, I think, that it was substantially a gully room, in the sense I mean of deriving its light almost, if not entirely, from the light in the gully, and must always have been a dark room even according to native ideas.

Since the defendant's house has been raised, there can be no doubt that the light which now finds its way into the gully is sensibly diminished, although not by any means so much as might be expected owing to the cornices and weather-boards of the plaintiff's house, which used to obstruct the light, having been removed and also owing to the larger area of the western wall of defendant's new house, which has increased the reflected light, which must always have been an important part of the light with which the room was lighted, especially in the afternoon.

[483] Mr. Justice Starling, who visited the room in the morning, says: "The room was fairly lighted as far as native rooms of that description are concerned, but I should not consider it well lighted." We ourselves found on visiting the room that, although a dark room according to the European ideas, it was light enough to enable us to read small print two or three feet from the window. Mr. Justice Starling, however, considered that all the light the window now gets, with the exception of the light coming into the gully vertically and at the end, is practically reflected light, which depends on the whiteness of the walls, and as to the former, thought it of little importance as not entering the room. But I have already stated (and this Mr. Justice Starling appears to have overlooked or not to have fully appreciated, as the matter was represented to him) that the room must, having regard to the small angle of light, have been substantially lighted by the light in the gully, and have had very little (if any) other light. Moreover, the light which entered the gully at the ends, and which is practically unaltered owing to the gully being only 30 feet long and open at both ends (there being an open space between the front and rear bungalows), must always have contributed very considerably to the light in the gully.

At this stage, it will be convenient, I think, to consider the authorities bearing on this class of questions. The English cases were discussed at length in Dhunjibhoy Cowasji v. Lisboa (1), and the conclusions arrived at is that the view taken by Pearson, J., (in Holland v. Worley(2) when discussing Lord Cairn's Act), "if applied with caution is suited to the circumstances of this city, which, from its nature, can in most parts of it only extend itself vertically upwards, and, we think, therefore, that it ought to be considered as the general practice of this Court, although doubtless one to be administered with much care and with due regard to the special circumstances of each case." Mr. Justice Pearson in his judgment in the above case (see p. 587), after referring to Smith v. Smith (1), where Jessel, M. R., discusses the application of the above Act, which enabled the Court of Chancery to [484] give damages in a case in which an injunction would otherwise have been given, draws the conclusion that "where the property may still remain the plaintiff's (i.e., as distinguished from the case where the only fair compensation would virtually be to make the plaintiff to sell his property to the defendant) and be substantially useful to him as it was before," the injury is one which can in that case be properly compensated by money.

MARCH 16.
ORIGINAL CIVIL.
18 B. 474.

This view of Lord Cairn's Act is spoken of by Kekewich, J., in Dicker v. Popham Radford & Co. (2) as not laying down any new rule, and as amounting to no more than that (as had already been said in several cases), where there is a discretion exerciseable, the Court is bound to look at all the circumstances of the case. In this country the jurisdiction of the Civil Court in granting relief by injunction is given by the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877). Section 54 of the Act provides that it may be granted in certain cases, one of which is where pecuniary compensation would not afford adequate relief. No doubt the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery in question of relief by injunction, &c., as stated by Lord Eldon in Attorney-General v. Nichol (3), and explained by V. C. Wood in Dent v. Auction Mart Co. and by Sir G. Jessel in Aynsley v. Glover (4), is treated as existing where substantial damages would be given by a Court of law. But this Court has the jurisdiction, both of a Court of Law and Equity, and in the exercise of the discretion will regard the "materiality" of the injury in the sense in which that expression was used by Sir G. Jessel in Smith v. Smith (1), and which, as pointed out by Fry, J., in National Provincial Plate Insurance Company v. Prudential Insurance Company (5), means something more than is sufficient to give the Court jurisdiction to grant an injunction and may depend on all the circumstances of the case.

In the present case, as we have already expressd the opinion that little or no light found its way directly into the room, and that the room was always, for all practical purposes, a gully room receiving its light from the light in the gully, the question for consideration is, whether that light has been so diminished as to [485] render the room,—having regard to the habits of the people who occupy rooms so situated,—unfit for the purpose to which it might reasonably be applied, which purpose would be sleeping and living in during the day. That the light which came into the gully laterally has been sensibly diminished, there can be little, if any, doubt; but the light coming in vertically and at the ends remains substantially unaltered, and must always, as we have stated, have played an important part in lighting the gully from which the room derived almost all, if not entirely, its light. Again, the light from the increased area of the defendant's west wall, as I have already pointed out, ought not to be altogether disregarded. Mr. Justice Starling refers to the remarks of Lord Hatherley in Dent v. Auction Mart Co. (6) as showing that the plaintiff cannot be expected to trust to the consideration of the defendant. But in that case the defendant had offered to have his roof tiled with glazed tiles to remove the plaintiff's objection, continuance of which it was said the plaintiff could not be sure of or enforce; but here the only possibility is that the defendant may not whitewash his house as often as the plaintiff might wish.

On the whole I do not think, although the light has been sensibly diminished, that there has been such a "large, material and substantial damage," to use the language of Sir G. Jessel in Aynsley v. Glover (1), as to require interference by injunction, or that the room, although the light has been sensibly diminished, has been rendered unfit for the purpose for which it may reasonably be expected to be used. The above remarks apply with even greater force to the other windows. As to the amount of damages, we do not think the Rs. 200 paid in by defendant is sufficient, and that, having regard to the evidence in the case, they should not be less than Rs. 500.

As to the ownership of the gully, the Division Court has found it belongs to the plaintiff up to the middle line between the two houses, relying on the plans annexed to the conveyance to the plaintiff's and defendant's predecessor, Shantaram Narayan.

An examination of those maps, however, clearly shows that the plaintiff's ownership is, in fact, confined to the west of a line [486] which is the continuation of the wall of the rear bungalow. Mr. Scott contended that Mr. Inverarity had admitted that the plaintiff's ownership extended to the middle line of the passage, but he did this on the condition that he would give up the right to have the water from his house run down the passage, which was refused.

It remains to consider the right claimed by plaintiff to drain his refuse water from the nanis in his house into the gully. As to this the evidence is very conflicting, and embarrassing and, looking at the probabilities as stated by Mr. Justice Starling, we do not think we ought to disturb the conclusion he has arrived at.

As to the damage done to the plaintiff's portion of the passage by the defendant's scaffolding and building materials, as the Division Court has only awarded one rupee, it is not necessary to consider it, as it cannot affect the question of costs.

The defendant's claim for damages by reason of the granting of the injunction must be rejected.

FARRAN, J.—The defendant's building at the time the suit was commenced had reached the top of its first floor, and had obstructed the light which used to pass over the sloping roof of the defendant's old house and strike the plane, in which the plaintiff's windows are set, in an oblique direction. Since the dissolution of the injunction the defendant has added two more stories and a loft to his building after having given an undertaking to argue the case at the hearing as if the building had been left in the state in which it was when the rule was discharged. Under these circumstances we ought, I think, to consider the case as if at the hearing the defendant's house had reached only the height at which it stood when the suit was brought and the injunction was applied for. On that footing the Division Court has held that the plaintiff was entitled to an injunction in the terms of its decree.

The facts of the case are very similar to those which the Court had to deal with in Dhunjibhoy Cowasji v. Lisboa (2) so [487] much so that it is quite impossible, to my mind, to draw any substantial distinction between them ; and were I sitting in the Court of first instance, I should be satisfied to say that I considered myself bound by the decision of the appellate Court in that case. But, as the judgment of the Division Court by necessary implication and the argument of counsel before us directly impugned the basis upon which that decision rests, I propose to state my views of the law applicable to the case.

When the Specific Relief Act was passed in 1877 the law in England on the subject of injunctions—I speak more particularly in reference to injunctions restraining the obstruction of ancient lights—was this. A plaintiff who had sustained, or who was likely to sustain, material injury entitling him to substantial damages by reason of the obstruction or proposed obstruction of his ancient lights by the defendant's buildings, was, in the absence of special circumstances, entitled to an injunction, according to the established principles of Courts of Equity—Martin v. Price. (1). Lord Cairn's Act had, however, conferred upon Courts of Equity the power to award damages to the party injured, either in addition to, or in substitution for, an injunction, in cases in which those Courts had jurisdiction to entertain an application for an injunction. That power was a discretionary one, but the law as to the circumstances under which the Courts would exercise that discretion was in an unsettled state, and no clear rules for the guidance of the Court had been established by the decisions—Holland v. Worley (2). Even now it is an open question whether damages in lieu of an injunction can be awarded by way of compensation for an injury not yet committed, but only threatened and intended—Martin v. Price (1). Section 33 of the Easements Act, 1882, lays down for us the law as to the case in which damages or compensation can be awarded, and sets that question at rest.

The Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 54, enacts that when the defendant invades or threatens to invade the plaintiff's right to or enjoyment of property, the Court may grant a perpetual injunction in the following case : —(c) when the invasion is such [488] that pecuniary compensation would not afford adequate relief. (I omit cls. (a), (b), (d) and (e) as not specially applicable to the present circumstances.) The Court has under that section jurisdiction to grant an injunction only in those cases where pecuniary compensation would not afford adequate relief. The expression "adequate relief" is not defined, but it is probably used in the sense in which Kindersley, V. C., uses it in Wood v. Sutcliffe (3) as meaning "such a compensation as would, though not in specie, in effect place the plaintiffs in the same position in which they stood before." If that be the correct meaning of the phrase, it is, I think, difficult to predicate of any material obstruction to ancient light that pecuniary compensation for it would in effect place the plaintiff in the same position as before, and more particularly so where the light is obstructed in a house in which a man is himself residing.

It does not, however, follow that in such cases a plaintiff is entitled as of right to an injunction. Under the Specific Relief Act the Courts are given a discretion to grant or withhold an injunction, as in England they have a discretionary power to award damages in lieu of an injunction. In this view of the law, the Court has to consider in each case not merely whether the plaintiff's legal right has been infringed, or even materially infringed, but also whether under all the circumstances of the case he ought to be granted an injunction as the proper and appropriate remedy for such infringement.

Two principles are, I think, deducible from the English cases, which may be deemed binding upon our Courts (1) : that Courts ought not to interfere by way of injunction when obstruction of light is very slight and where the injury sustained is trifling, except in rare and exceptional cases —Dent v. Auction Mart Co. (1) ; Herz v. Union Bank of London (2); Goddard on Easements, p. 438 ; and (2) that where " the defendant is doing an act which .will render the plaintiff's property absolutely useless to him unless it is stopped, in such a case, inasmuch as the only compensation, which could be given to the plaintiff, would be to compel the defendant to purchase his property out and out, the Court will not, [489] in the exercise of its discretion, compel the plaintiff to sell his property to the defendant " by refusing to grant him an injunction and awarding him damages on that basis (see Holland v. Worley (3)). Between these two extremes, where the injury to the plaintiff would be less serious, where the Court considers the property may still remain with the plaintiff and be substantially useful to him as it was before, and where the injury is one of a nature that can be compensated by money, the Courts are vested with a discretion to withhold or grant an injunction, having regard to all the circumstances of the particular case before them, including the fact that the premises are situated in a city, like this, where land suitable for building is limited and very valuable, and where property owners should, so far as is possible consistently with the exlsting rights of their neighbours be allowed to utilize it to the utmost extent.

Mr. Scott for the respondent contended that the present was a case for an injunction, because it fulfilled the conditions of s. 54, sub-cl. (b), in as much as there was no standard for ascertaining the actual damage caused or likely to be caused by the invasion. I think, however, that this sub-clause has rather application to such cases as are referred to in the illustrations (h) and (i) to the section where there is no possible standard with reference to which the contemplated injury can be compensated, than to a case of injury to property like a house occupied by its owner in danger of being deprived of its ancient light. Juries have never experienced any insuperable difficulty in cases of the latter kind. In earlier times, before the passing of Lord Cairn's Act, Courts of Common law, rather than Courts of Chancery, were resorted to in cases of obstruction of ancient lights : Goddard (3rd Ed.), p. 423 —the aid of the Court of Chancery being invoked in later times on account of damages being an inadequate remedy or inappropriate to the circumstances of the case.

I proceed to a consideration of the facts of the case before us. The plaintiff had six ancient lights in the east wall of his house. They all opened upon a gully about 3 feet 9 inches wide, opposite to them being the wall of the defendant's old house about 30 feet [490] high at the apex of the roof and sloping down at each side to a height of about 20 feet. These windows admitted light to four rooms on the ground floor and two rooms on the upper floor. The lower floor was usually let to tenants, the upper floor was occupied by the plaintiff and his family. We are not, I think, embarrassed in this case by such considerations as weighed with Kekewich, J., in Dicker v. Popham Radford &

Co. (1) arising from the damage likely to accrue to the plaintiff within some reasonable time by reason of a probable change in the nature of the occupation of his premises. The house has always been used as a dwelling-house, and, as far as one can judge, will never be used for any other purpose. The mode of occupying it may be altered. The divankhana may be used as a bedroom, and room No. 5 may be occupied as a divankhana, or let separately to a tenant, or other changes in the use of the rooms may take place. These may fairly be contemplated and should be taken into account—Moore v. Hall (2), Dicker v. Popham Radford & Co. (1); but having regard to the small amount of light formerly admitted by the windows, 2, 3, 4 and 5 it is almost impossible to conceive the rooms lighted by these windows being used for purposes of delicate handicraft or indeed otherwise than for residential purposes.

The upper floor consists of a divankhana, a living room behind it, and behind that a kitchen. The divankhana is amply lighted by two windows looking into the public street to the north. The light admitted into this room by the gully window No. 5 cannot at any time have added appreciably to the light of the room. According to the plaintiff, only five degrees of vertical light reached the outer sill of this window, and according to the defendant's experts none at all. In neither view did any actually penetrate into the room. The window always looked into a narrow gully where the eye met a wall, and it does so still. In my view no appreciable injury has been caused to this room by the raising of the defendant's western wall.

I pass over for the present the room behind the divankhana lighted by window No. 5 and consider the ground-floor rooms. The kitchen on the upper floor is not lighted from the gully.

[491] On the ground floor are a living room next the street, not lighted from the gully, two rooms behind it each having a window opening into the gully, and behind them a kitchen lighted from the south, but having a small aperture resembling a smoke hole, which looks out into the gully. The kitchen is not, I think, in the smallest degree affected by the defendant's new building being higher than his old one. The two other rooms on the ground floor must always have been badly lighted. The plaintiff's surveyors give an angle of direct light of 4° to window No. 4 opening into the more northern of the two rooms and of 6° to window No. 3 lighting the more southern room. These angles are measured to the outer sills of these windows. The defendant's surveyors give the angles of 1° and 3° respectively measured in the same way. The difference is owing to the different measurement of the projecting cornice of the defendant's old house and of the eaves of the plaintiff's house. The measurement of the cornice of the defendant's house taken by Mr. Stevens appears to be the more correct, while he has a little minimised the plaintiff's eaves. Taking the mean, the angles of the direct light to the sills can never have exceeded 2° and 4° respectively. Owing to the thickness of the wall, which is 18 inches, the direct light cannot, except in a very small degree, have penetrated into these two rooms. They must have been always lighted principally from the light in the gully diffusing itself and being reflected into them. The light in the gully when the defendant's old house was standing was, I doubt not, somewhat better in the forenoon than it is now owing to the sun shining over the southern slope to the defendant's old house and striking the western wall of the plaintiff's house obliquely. In the afternoon, on the other hand, and at noon, the gully is now probably better lighted than of old owing to the removal of the defendant's weather boards. I cannot, therefore, think, in respect of the several windows which I have been hitherto considering, that there has been any marked or substantial diminution of light to the plaintiff's rooms. I think that as to them there is no case for an injunction.

(1) 63 Law Times, 379.

(2) 3 Q. B. D. 178.

It remains to consider the room lighted by window No. 5. The Division Court, having regard to that room only, has granted an injunction requiring the defendant to pull down and set back [492] the west wall of his new house above the second floor. The injunction does not interfere with the wall till it reaches the height of the second floor, which is nearly level with the apex of the defendant's old house. This injunction, as far as I can judge, will not materially benefit the room in which window No. 5 is situated or restore to it its former quantum of light, in as much as it principal source of direct light formerly was over the sloping roof of the defendant's old house reaching the window obliquely. The plaintiff has accordingly appealed from that portion of the decree as not affording him sufficient relief. This wall was, as I have said, built to the height of the top of the first floor, when the suit was brought. The lowering of it to the height of the old sloping roof would be an exercise of the mandatory powers of the Court, and out of the scope of the defendant's undertaking. Section 55 of the Specific Relief Act in express terms makes this exercise of our mandatory power discretionary. The plaintiff complained of the defenant's buildings as soon as the latter began to build: but though he could readily have seen the defendant's building plans, took no legal steps to restrain his building until the ground and first floors had been completed. Prompt action is very essential in these cases. if an injunction is the desired remedy.

The direct light which reached the sill of window No. 5 was 11° according to the plaintiff's case and 5° according to the defendant's, or, taking the mean as before, between 7° and 8° and besides this there was the oblique light from the sky which passed over the sloping roof. We cannot doubt that some portion of this light penetrated into the room lighted by window No. 5. From near the floor of the room the eye could see a small portion of the sky towards the east and south east, but not when standing or sitting on a chair. For purposes of habitation it was essentially a gully room, though it enjoyed the amount of direct light which I have indicated. The defendant's building, as it at present stands, has cut off all direct light from the sill of the window and from the room. The building when it reached the second floor had cut off all the oblique light, but had left the direct vertical light as before. In addition to the vertical light, which never could have been much, the room was [493] lighted by the gully light diffusing itself inwards and the light reflected from the defendant's wall. These must always have been the principal sources of light. These sources of light it still retains. The gully light is probably, as I have said, less bright in the morning hours than formerly, but in the afternoon must be nearly the same as it always has been. We visited the room about 11 A.M. and it was then fairly well lighted. One could read easily in most parts of it. The room from its position behind the divankhana would naturally be used as a sleeping room. There is a nani in it, and the household gods are said to have been kept there. There is a window opening into it from the divankhana which can be opened or closed at pleasure. It is a question of degree. All questions of discretion usually are. I think that it is not a case in which we should grant a mandatory injunction as to the wall built before suit; and as to the part subsequently built I think it would inflict serious damage upon the defendant to remove it without restoring the plaintiff to the position in which he originally stood, or doing him any real practical good. Damages will, I think, afford more suitable compensation in his case.

We will hear counsel on the question of costs.

Jardine for the defendant (appellant):—The appellant (defendant) should have his costs of appeal. He has succeeded in setting aside the decree of the lower Court which gave the plaintiff an injunction. He should also have his costs of the hearing in the lower Court, for there the whole contest was as to the plaintiff's right to an injunction, which has now been refused to him. The defendant was willing to compensate the plaintiff for the injury which he alleged he had suffered, and he paid into Court Rs. 200 when he filed his written statement. He would, no doubt, have been willing to pay more, but the plaintiff would give no indication of the amount which would satisfy him. In fact, it was not damages he wanted, but an injunction, and it was for an injunction he has fought all through. Pending the hearing he got a rule nisi for an injunction against us. The suit has entailed large costs in consequence of the plaintiff's persistent demand for an injunction. In his plaint he does not ask for damages as an alternative. The [494] single remedy he asked for he has failed to obtain. He should, therefore, pay the costs.

Scott, for plaintiff (respondent) contra:—The plaint prays for damages, and although it is not put as an alternative, that slight informality in the pleading will not affect the decree of the Court. There is also a prayer "for such further and other relief as the nature and circumstances of the case may require." The Court is thus asked to exercise its discretion as to the remedy, although the plaintiff states his preference for a particular remedy. He succeeds if he obtains any relief from the Court, and is entitled to his costs. The cases of National Provincial Plate Glass Insurance Co. v. Prudential Assurance Co. (1) and Holland v. Worley (2) were referred to.

JUDGMENT (Continued).

SARGENT, C.J.—We think that the ordinary rule should be observed and that costs should follow the event. What is the event in this case? It is obviously this, that the plaintiff has succeeded in proving his allegation. He has established his case against the defendant, although, no doubt, he has not got the precise form of relief which he desired. It is true that in his plaint he does not ask for damages as an alternative to an injunction. But he alleges that he has suffered an injury from the defendant, and he comes to the Court for redress. He has proved the injury. He has proved that he is entitled to some relief, and that being so I cannot see why he should be refused his costs, because, in the opinion of the Court, the extent of the injury proved may be sufficiently redressed by giving him damages rather than an injunction. A man may sue for Rs. 5,000 in damages for an alleged wrong, and only be awarded Rs. 3000, but that is not considered a ground for depriving him of his costs.

It is to be observed that the defendant throughout has denied that the plaintiff has suffered any injury and has thus compelled him to prove his case. It is true that he paid Rs. 200 into Court; but in his written statement he says expressly that he believes that no damage has been done: that the plaintiff is not entitled to any damages whatever, and that the Rs. 200 are paid [495] into Court merely for the sake of pleas and to avoid litigation. Thus the defendant has put the plaintiff to prove his case, and the plaintiff has done so. I think if a party substantially succeeds he is entitled to his costs. The plaintiff must have his costs of the hearing in the Court below, and each party must pay his own costs of this appeal and of the proceedings on the rule for an injunction obtained before trial.

(2) 26 Ch. D. 578.

Before Mr. Justice Starling.

AHMED BIN SHAIK ESSA KHALIFFA AND OTHERS (Plaintiffs),
v. SHAIK ESSA BIN KHALIFFA AND OTHERS (Defendants).*
[23rd June, 1894.]

Civ. Pro. Code, (XIV of 1882). s. 244—Decree—Execution—Questions arising in-execution between the parties—Decree incapable of execution by reason of events subsequent to decree—Decree giving an option to the parties—Practice—Procedure.

A partition suit brought by a son against his father was referred to arbitration. On the 9th January, 1890, the award was published, and on the 27th March, 1890, the defendants moved for and obtained a decree in terms of the award. By this decree it was ordered that in satisfaction of the plaintiff's claim the defendant should pay to him Rs. 1,05,000 in the manner therein stated, viz., Rs. 40,000 to be paid forthwith and the balance of Rs. 65,000 to be paid "upon the plaintiff's delivering to the defendant certain specified property, which included two vessels or buglows, called respectively the 'Nasri' and 'Sambuk'." In no event was defendant to be required to pay the Rs. 65,000 before the 15th November, 1890. At the date of the decree the vessel "Sambuk" wat at sea on a voyage, and on the 18th June, 1890, while still on the voyage, she was lost. On the 15th November, 1890, the plaintiff's attorneys demanded payment of the balance of Rs. 65,000. They offered to deliver the other properties specified in the decree, but stated that the vessel "Sambuk" had been lost. They offered to pay its value, which they estimated at Rs. 1,000. The defendants, however, demanded the delivery of the buglow, which they stated to be worth a very large sum. The defendant having, under the circumstances, refused to pay the Rs. 65,000, the plaintiff applied for execution of the decree, which was refused. He then obtained a rule calling on the defendant to show cause why the decree of the 27th March should not be amended or rectified by stating [496] therein the amount of money to be paid to the defendant as an alternative of its delivery of the vessal "Sambuk" could not be made, such delivery having become impossible.

That rule was discharged. The plaintiffs then took out a summons calling on the defendant to show cause why an order should not be made, under s. 244 of the Civil Procedure Code, directing the plaintiffs to pay to the first defendant, in lieu of the delivery of the vessel "Sambuk," such sum of money as might be fixed by the Court as the value of or compensation for the loss of the vessel "Sambuk" in the decree mentioned, and why an order should not be made that on payment of such sum and delivery of the other properties mentioned in the decree which the plaintiffs were to deliver under the decree to the first defendant on payment by the latter to them of Rs. 65,000, the first defendant should pay to the plaintiffs Rs. 65,000 and interest thereon from the 15th day of November 1890, mentioned in the said decree, and in the event of its being held that the first defendant was not bound to pay the said sum of Rs. 65 000 then why an order should not be made that the property mentioned in the decree which the plaintiffs were to hand over to the first defendant on payment of Rs. 65.000 should not be retained, used and appropriated absolutely by the plaintiffs for their own use and benefit freed and discharged of all claims on the part of the first defendant, and why the first defendant should not be directed to withdraw the claims made by him to the said debt of Rs 22,000, or thereabouts mentioned in the said affidavit of Ahmed bin Essa Khaliffa, and why such further or other order as to the Court might seem fit and the justice of the case may require should not be made in the premises and in relation to the properties mentioned in the decree which were to be delivered over by the plaintiffs to the first defendant on receiving from him Rs. 65,000 and why, in the alternative, this suit should not be restored on the board for trial.

It was contended by the plaintiff that the questions raised in the summons were questions arising in execution to be dealt with by a Judge in chambers under s. 244 of the Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882), and that a fresh suit was not necessary.

Held, (dismissing the summons) that the application was not one in execution of a decree, nor was the question one arising in the course of execution, but that the decree having become incapable of execution the summons asked the Judge to decide what were the rights of the parties in consequence of its non-execution.

Held, also (as to the part of the summons asking for restoration of the suit) that the matters in issue in the suit had been fully heard and determined and the rights of all parties had been settled by the decree, and consequently there was nothing further to be tried. The Court could not in this suit after passing a decree proceed to ascertain the rights of the parties under a state of facts quite different from those which appeared in the pleadings and arising subsequently to the decree.

Suit for partition. The first plaintiff was the son of the first defendant, and he brought this suit in September, 1886, praying that the property of his grandfather Khaliffa bin Abdulla [497] might be divided and partitioned among the parties entitled thereto according to their rights and interests therein.

By a consent order, made in the suit on the 15th August, 1889, the suit and all matters in difference between the parties were referred to arbitration. On the 9th January, 1890, the arbitrator made and published his award, which was filed on the 11th March, 1890. On the 27th March, 1890, on a motion made on behalf of the defendants, a decree was passed in terms of the award.

By this decree it was ordered that in full satisfaction of the claim of the plaintiff the first defendant should pay to the plaintiff the sum of Rs. 1,05,000 in the manner therein provided, viz., that the sum of Rs. 40,000 should be forthwith paid by the said defendant and the balance of Rs. 65,000 should be paid "upon the said plaintiff delivering over to the said Shaik Essa bin Khaliffa the five boxes mentioned in paragraph 5 of the plaint and two buglows (ships) 'Nasri' and 'Sambuk' referred to in the affidavit of Ahmed bin Essa, and the whole of the immoveable property in the Persian Gulf, &c." The said decree further provided that in no event should the defendant be required to pay the said balance of Rs. 65,000 before the 15th November, 1890.

At the date of the said award and decree, the vessel "Sambuk" was at sea on a voyage, and on the 18th June, 1890, while still on the voyage, was lost.

On the 15th November, 1890, the plaintiffs' attorneys wrote to the defendants' attorneys reminding them that the sum of Rs. 65,000 had become due on that day, and requiring payment. They offered to deliver the other properties mentioned in the decree, but stated that the vessel "Sambuk" had been lost at sea. In the correspondence which subsequently took place, the plaintiffs offered to pay the value of the lost vessel "Sambuk," but they and the defendants could not agree upon the value. The plaintiffs estimated her value at Rs. 1,000, but the defendants' attorneys in a letter of the 20th December, 1890, said "our client wants the said bungalow under one of the conditions in the decree, as your clients, the plaintiffs, are bound specifically to deliver [498] the same, and as it is worth a very large sum in our clients' estimation."

The defendants having under these circumstances refused to pay the Rs. 65 000, the plaintiff applied to the Judge in chambers (Telang, J.) for execution of the decree, but on the 16th July, 1891, his application was refused.

The plaintiff then obtained a rule nisi, calling on the first defendant "to show cause why the decree of the 27th March, 1890, should not be amended or rectified by stating therein the amount of money to be paid to the first defendant as an alternative if delivery of the vessel named 'Sambuk' could not be made to the said first defendant, and why such further order should not be made as justice and good conscience require in consequence of the loss of the said vessel 'Sambuk,' and by reason of all the circumstances of the case as disclosed in the said affidavit, and why (if necessary) the amount of money to be fixed as an alternative for the delivery of the said vessel should not be ascertained by this Honourable Court or by the arbitrator, Mr. Shaik Abdul Aziz bin Ali Ebrahim, heretofore appointed in this suit after taking such evidence as may be necessary." In his affidavit the plaintiff said: "The plaintiffs are unable to execute the said decree for the value thereof and interest without having the said decree amended by this Honourable Court in the following respect, namely, in regard to the delivery of the said vessel 'Sambuk' the delivery of which has become impossible by the act of God. Under the circumstances aforesaid this Honourable Court will be pleased to direct that the said decree should be amended by stating therein the amount of money, i.e., the value of the said vessel which is to be paid to the defendant in lieu of delivering the said vessel."

That rule, however, was discharged, the Court (Parsons, J.) holding that the objection was really to the award: that the award had been filed without objection, and a decree passed in accordance with the award, and that the Court had now no power to alter the award or the decree (see I. L. R. 17 Bom., p. 657).

The plaintiff appealed from this decision, but the appeal Court (Sargent, C. J., and Farran, J.) dismissed the appeal with costs.

[499] On the 10th day of April, 1894, the plaintiff took out the present summons calling on the defendant

"to show cause why this Honourable Court should not make an order under s. 244 of the Civil Procedure Code, directing that the plaintiffs do pay to the first defendant, in lieu of the delivery of the vessel 'Sambuk,' such sum of money as this Honourable Court may fix as the value of or compensation for the loss of the vessel 'Sambuk' in the decree mentioned, and why an order should not be made that on payment of such sum and delivery of the other properties mentioned in the decree herein which the plaintiffs are to deliver under the decree to the first defendant on payment by the latter to them of Rs. 65,000, the first defendant shall pay to the plaintiffs Rs. 65,000 and interest thereon from the 15th day of November, 1890, mentioned in the said decree;

"and in the event of this Court holding that the first defendant is not bound to pay the said sum of Rs. 65,000, then why an order should not be made that the property mentioned in the decree which the plaintiffs were to hand over to the first defendant on payment of Rs. 65,000 should not be retained, used and appropriated absolutely by the plaintiffs for their own use and benefit, freed and discharged of all claims on the part of the first defendant,

"and why the first defendant should not be directed to withdraw the claims made by him to the said debt of Rs. 22,000 or thereabouts mentioned in the said affidavit of Ahmed bin Essa Khaliffa,

"and why such further or other order as to the Court may see fit and the justice of the case may require should not be made in the premises and in relation to the properties mentioned in the decree which were to be delivered over by the plaintiffs to the first defendant on receiving from him Rs. 65,000 and why, in the alternative, this suit should not be restored on the board for trial."

In the affidavit on which he obtained the summons, the plaintiff stated that until the questions raised in the summons were decided, it was impossible to deal with properties which under the decree he was to assign and deliver over to the defendant. Amongst these was a debt of Rs. 22,000 due by a third person (Haji Mahomed bin Kazum), which remained unrecovered, and the defendant had written a letter which prevented its payment. In his affidavit the plaintiff on this point said: "The defendant, although he would not pay the Rs. 65,000, or any part thereof, still claims to prevent the plaintiff's recovering the said debt, and apparently seeks to recover the same himself. The plaintiffs are apprehensive that, unless the said sum of Rs. 22,000 is recovered forthwith, it will be entirely lost." He further stated that the second ship "Nasri," which under the decree was also to be delivered by him to the defendant, would soon become valueless if left undelivered.

[500] The last two paragraphs of the affidavit were as follows:—

23. "The plaintiffs submit that, in the events that have happened, the first defendant is bound to pay them Rs. 65,000 and receive the property aforesaid and the value of the 'Sambuk', or if he is not bound to do so he is not entitled to retain possession of the 'Nasri' or to prevent the plaintiffs recovering the debt aforesaid, but that the plaintiffs are entitled to possession of the 'Nasri' and to recover payment of the debt aforesaid, and the other property they were to deliver to the first defendant in getting payment of Rs. 65,000 from him, and that the first defendant has no claim on the said debt and vessel and the said property, and that the same may be declared to belong to the plaintiffs (in the event of it being held they are not entitled to the said Rs. 65,000).

24. "Under the foregoing circumstances I pray that this Honourable Court will be pleased to decide under s. 244 of the Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882) the foregoing questions which have arisen between the plaintiffs and the first defendant since the passing of the said decree, and to make such order in relation thereto as to this Honourable Court may seem fit and the justice of the case may require."

The summons now came on for argument in Chambers.

Inverarity for the plaintiffs in support of the summons:—The parties are now at a dead lock. The decree cannot be executed because a clause has been omitted from it which by s. 208 of the Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882) ought to be in it, viz., the clause which provides for the payment of money where delivery of moveable property cannot be given. The value of the lost ship is trifling and the plaintiff is willing to allow the defendants to deduct the amount out of the money to be paid by them, but the defendants will have the ship or nothing. The plaintiff consequently cannot get execution of the decree as it stands, and the Court has refused to alter it. The defendant thus keeps the properties which we sued to partition and our right in which is admitted and declared in the decree. We, therefore, have taken out this summons to prevent the defendant getting the benefit which the award and decree only intended him to get in case we got other benefits. He wants to get his rights under the decree, but prevents us getting ours. In this summons we seek to get an order under which we can pay the value of the lost vessel and recover the amount due to us by the defendant, or, in the alternative, to have the suit restored to the list for hearing. We say these are questions arising in execution within the meaning of s. 244 of the Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882) [501] and that we are not obliged to bring a new suit. The plaint prayed for partition of property to which we asserted a claim. The award and decree recognise our rights in the property, for they awarded us Rs. 1,05,000 in full satisfaction and discharge of our claim. If and when this money is paid to us we are to give up these rights. But the decree does not order us to give up these rights. It gives us an option. We are only to give them up if and when we are paid a certain sum. The decree says that "upon the plaintiffs delivering over certain property" and "upon the plaintiffs executing valid and effectual assignment of their rights in the said properties" the defendant is to pay us certain monies. This decree, therefore, gives the plaintiffs an option either to retain their rights or to hand them over and to receive the money from the defendant. But the plaintiffs cannot now hand over the ship, and the defendant refuses to take what the plaintiffs can give. So the plaintiffs must elect to stand by the other alternative and retain the property. But if they do so, it is plain that the award and decree have not dealt with all the questions raised by the plaint in the suit, and we, therefore, ask that the suit may be restored to the list for hearing. The award and decree only dealt with our rights in the event of our handing over the property, but not in the event of our not handing them over.

[STARLING, J.—Can the suit be restored after a decree is passed?]

Yes, for the decree was merely on an award, and the award is not complete. It does not dispose of all the questions raised in the suit. The suit was never heard. The reference to arbitration was made before the suit came on for hearing. If the defendant will not accept our proposals so as to enable the decree to be executed, we are entitled to have the suit heard.

[STARLING, J.—Has there not been a final decree in the suit? The circumstances that have created the difficulty are circumstances which have occurred subsequently to the decree and make execution impossible. Is not another suit necessary?]

No. The decree was not a final decree. Even supposing these events had not happened at all, there is nothing in the decree to [502] prevent us electing. We might have elected not to hand over the property, and our rights would then have been left undetermined. We ask now that your Lordship should say that under the decree the defendant is not entitled to these properties and that we are entitled to them. So it is a question relating to the execution of the decree under s. 244 of the Code. The fact that the defendant shows cause against this summons shows that he claims the properties. Our rights under the decree are a question in execution. We contend that the decree gives us these properties in the alternative, i.e., if we elect to retain them instead of handing them over and receiving their equivalent from the defendant. The decree in effect says: "If the plaintiff chooses he may hand over the property, and receive Rs. 1,05,000 from the defendant." We want a declaration of our rights under the decree.

Lang (Advocate-General), for the defendant, showed cause:—This is not a question relating to execution of a decree. The plaintiffs are only making another attempt to alter the decree by making it declare their rights. They have already made three attempts and failed.

JUDGMENT.

23*rd June*, 1894, STARLING, J.—This is a suit for a declaration of the rights of the plaintiffs in certain property, moveable and immoveable, and for its partition between the plaintiffs and defendants. The suit was referred to arbitration and the arbitrator awarded Rs. 1,05,000 to be paid by the first defendant to the plaintiffs—Rs. 40,000 at once and Rs. 65,000 on the plaintiffs handing over to the first defendant certain moveable and immoveable property and executing certain deeds of conveyance and releases. No objection was filed to this award, and a decree was passed in accordance therewith. The second portion of the decree has not been carried out, because a vessel, part of the moveable property to be handed over by the plaintiffs, has been lost at sea, and they are consequently unable to fulfil the condition on which alone they can claim payment of the Rs. 65,000.

Subsequently the plaintiffs issued a notice calling upon the first defendant to show cause why in the execution of the decree the Court should not ascertain and fix some sum as the value of the [503] lost vessel to be allowed to the first defendant out of the Rs. 65,000, because the vessel could not be delivered to him. The matter was heard before Telang, J., who dismissed the notice on the ground that what he was asked to do would be tantamount to making a fresh decree. Then the plaintiffs applied to Parsons, J., who had passed the decree on the award, to amend the decree by inserting some sum to be allowed in executing the decree as the value of the lost vessel. This application was refused on the ground that the only decree which could be passed was one in accordance with the award, and the amendment asked for was not in accordance with the award (1); and this refusal was on appeal upheld by the appeal Court.

The plaintiffs have now taken out a summons for an order to be made in one of three alternative ways. The first relief is the same as was asked for from Telang, J., and I must refuse it for the same reason, and also for the reason that the matter having been disposed of by him is now res judicata. The second alternative is that, seeing that the plaintiffs cannot hand over all the property referred to in the decree, and that consequently the first defendant is not liable to pay the Rs. 65,000, the Court should declare that the said property now in the hands of the plaintiffs should be retained, used and appropriated absolutely by them. In the first place, it would be impossible on this summons to make such an order, supposing it to be otherwise unobjectionable; because it appears by the plaint that all the defendants have some interest in all the property, the subject-matter of the suit, and it would be wrong for me to pass an order that the plaintiffs were absolutely entitled to any portion of it without the presence of all the parties to the suit. In the second place, this is not an application in execution of a decree, nor is the matter I am asked to decide upon, a question between the parties to the the suit arising in the course of the execution of the decree; but the decree being incapable of execution, I am asked to decide what are the rights of the parties in consequence of its non-execution. I think that if I made an order as asked, and a suit was brought to set it aside, the case would be [504] very similar to that of Chowdhry Wahed Ali v. Mussamut Jumaee (1), wherein at p. 157 their Lordships say: "Their Lordships cannot find, after the incongruous proceedings above described, that there exists any decree authorising an execution against the respondent's estate, and consequently the question in the present suit is one not properly relating to the execution of a decree, but to a sale under orders which have not the support of any decree." There is no decree in this suit which would authorize the order I am asked to make; it would, in fact, amount to an alteration in the decree or the making of a new decree. In my opinion, the only way in which the plaintiffs can obtain what they seek is by filing a fresh suit setting out the decree herein, and the circumstances which have transpired since the passing of that decree, and asking for a declaration of their rights under all the circumstances of the case.

As to the third alternative, the matters in issue in this suit have been finally heard and determined and the rights of all parties have been settled by the decree; consequently there is nothing further to be tried. The Court cannot in this suit after passing a decree proceed to ascertain the rights of the parties under a state of facts quite different from those which appear in the pleadings herein and arising subsequent to the decree. Under these circumstances I must dismiss the summons with costs. Counsel certified for.

KRISHNAJI BIN MALJI (Original Plaintiff), Appellant v. VITHU AND OTHERS (Original Defendants), *Respondents. [3rd August, 1893.]

Hindu law—Joint ownership—Decree against joint owner—Execution sale—Right of purchaser—Co-sharers made parties after period of limitation—Limitation.

The interest of Vithu, as co-sharer in certain land, was sold in execution of a decree against him. It was purchased by one Sakharam, who sold it to the plaintiff. The plaintiff sued for possession, and the other co-sharers were made party defendants to the suit, which, however, was held, as against them, to be barred by limitation.

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to be put into joint possession of the land with them although the suit as against them was barred.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

18 B. 505.

THIS was a second appeal from the decision of the First Class Subordinate Judge of Satara with appellate powers.

The plaintiff sued for possession of certain land which he purchased from one Sakharam bin Vithoji on the 11th June, 1888. Sakharam had purchased it on the 12th June, 1876, at a Court-sale in execution of a decree against the defendant Vithu.

In June, 1888, the plaintiff applied to the conciliator appointed under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879) to settle the dispute with regard to the land. The conciliator gave his certificate on the 31st May, 1889, and the plaintiff filed this suit on the 5th June, 1889, on which day the Court opened after the summer vacation.

The defendant alleged that the land was in possession of one Gangai, the widow of Ganu. On the 29th August, 1889, Gangai and her minor son were made defendants Nos. 2 and 3. They alleged that they were in exclusive possession of the land, and pleaded that as against them the suit was barred by limitation.

At the hearing the plaintiff admitted that Vithu and Ganu and their widows had held joint possession of the land since before the auction-sale in 1876.

The lower Court held that "excluding that conciliation period" the suit was not barred as against the first defendant, but that [506] whether the conciliation period was excluded or not, it was barred by limitation as against defendants Nos. 2 and 3. The Court, however, dismissed the suit as against all the defendants with the following observations :—" The defendants' case is that their possession was exclusive of the title of Vithu. If the defendants' story is believed, it is fatal to the plaintiff's claim. If the plaintiff's story is credited, the same is none the less fatal, since the possession of Vithu and Ganu or of their wives has been joint, and the claim was barred long before the heirs of Ganu were made parties to this suit ; and so it must be held to be barred against the defendant No. 1 too."

The plaintiff preferred a second appeal.

Ghanasham N. Nadkarni for the appellant (plaintiff) :—We purchased Vithu's interest in the land, and claim it in this suit which the Judge held is not barred. If that interest is a joint interest, we are entitled to it. Our claim was, no doubt, to eject the heirs of both Vithu and Ganu as we believed that the property belonged to Vithu alone. But if the Court found that Vithu's representative was in joint possession with other persons, we should have been given the relief to which we are entitled according to law. It was wrong to dismiss the suit in toto.

There was no appearance for the respondents (defendants).

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—As the Court has found that the plaintiff's title is proved as against defendant No. 1, and that his suit is not barred against him, the circumstance that his suit is barred as against Ganu's heirs affords no reason why he should not be put into joint possession of the land with them if Vithu had joint possession with Ganu and his widow Gangai after the sale in 1876. We must, therefore, send back the case for a finding on the following issue :—

Had Ganu and his widow Gangai exclusive possession of the properties in suit since the date of the sale in 1876 ?

The finding to be sent to this Court in two months.

Issue sent down.

VITHALBOWA (Original Plaintiff), Appellant v. NARAYAN DAJI THITE (Original Defendant), Respondent; AND NARAYAN DAJI THITE (Original Defendant), Appellant v. VITHALBOWA (Original Plaintiff), *Respondent. [22nd August, 1893.]

Math—Manager—Land appertaining to math—Sale of "miras malki" (ownership of Miras tenure)—Miras tenure—Mirasdar on inam estates, position of—Adverse possession—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), s. 28—Right to recover rent—Construction.

In 1860 Krishnaji, the manager of a math, sold to Baxarbhai the "miras malki" (ownership of miras tenure) of certain lands appertaining to the math, subject to the payment of assessment. Krishnaji died in the same year and was succeeded by Ramkrishna as manager. In 1864 Ramkrishna sued Baxarbhai to set aside the sale. The suit was dismissed in 1865 and Baxarbhai's miras right was confirmed. In 1871 one Gopal obtained a decree declaring him to be the legal manager of the math and removing Ramkrishna, who was held to have had no title to the office.

In 1887 the plaintiff, who succeeded Gopal in the management of the math, brought the present suit against the defendant who was the vendee of Baxarbhai, to recover possession of the lands or to recover assessment for three years previous to the suit. The defendant pleaded that the suit was barred by limitation.

The plaintiff contended that as there was no lawful manager between 1860 and 1875 that period ought to be omitted in computing the period of limitation, and that as under the deed of sale to Baxarbhai the vendee became a tenant, the possession of the vendee and of the defendant could not be adverse.

Held, that if defendant's possession was adverse to the ownership of the math during twelve years after Krishnaji's death, the operation of the law of limitation would not be affected by the fact that there was no legal manager during that time.

Held, further, that in the Bombay Presidency the mirasdar on inam estates is only "a tenant at quit-rent or at a reasonable rent not subject to ejectment so long as he pays it;" and as there was nothing in the sale-deed passed by Krishnaji to Baxarbhai which required a different construction to be put on the miras tenure created by it, Baxarbhai's possession under it could not be adverse to the math until there was an assertion by the grantee of his claim to be a permanent tenant, up to which time he would, in the eye of the law, be regarded as a tenant-at-will. But the suit brought by Ramkrishna in 1864 showed that Baxarbhai was then asserting his mirasi right, and as more than twelve years had elapsed between that date and the bringing of the present suit, the plaintiff's right as representing the math to recover immediate possession was barred.

Held, further, that the plaintiff's right to recover three years' arrears of rent as reserved by the mirasi grant was not affected, as the effect of s. 28 of the [508] Limitation Act (Act XV of 1877) was to extinguish the plaintiff's right as claimed by him to treat the grant as null and void.

THESE were cross second appeals from the decision of Rao Bahadur G. A. Mankar, additional First Class Subordinate Judge of Sholapur with appellate powers.

The plaintiff Vithalbowa alias Govindbowa Guru Gopalbowa Gosavi, manager of a math at Pandharpur in the Sholapur District, sued to recover possession of certain lands under the following circumstances:—

grant was made by Bahirji Raje bin Tukoji Raje Pandhare under a sanad dated the 2nd August, 1836, to Muneshvarbowa, who was then the chief manager of the math. The sanad, which was confirmed by the Inam Commission in 1854, mentioned that the lands in suit were granted as inam to the then manager of the math Muneshwarbowa, and that he was to apply the income thereof towards the expenses of the math at Pandharpur, which was a branch of the principal math of the Shri Jairam Swami at Vadgaon.

In the year 1860 Krishnaji, who was then the manager of the math, sold the "miras malki" (ownership of miras tenure) of the lands to one Baxarbhai. The following is an extract from the deed of sale:—

"To Rajashri Baxar valad Masubhai Musalman Sepoy Gosavi. Deed of sale passed in writing by Krishnaji Gosavi (of) sansthan Vadgaon is as follows:—There is at mauze Shirdhan, taluka Pandharpur, (some) inam land belonging to the sansthan. You having agreed to take (i.e. purchase) the mirasi ownership thereof, Rs. 250 (two hundred and fifty) of the Company's currency are received from you and the abovementioned jirayit land, survey No. 42, measuring bighas 155·1 and of the assessed value of Rs 120 of the Chandvad currency, of which Rs. 40 (being deducted) as tota (loss, discount) there remain Rs. 80, is sold to you as miras for this (i.e. Rs. 80), and for the above amount together with the trees in the land and the broken well (therein). The four boundaries of the same land are as follows:— * * * The land as comprised within the four boundaries is given (sold to you as) miras. The above chavdi amount is payable to the sansthan. But you being employed for the purpose of collecting the sansthan income on the aforesaid taluka, you are to give credit for (the above amount of the chavdi) as your remuneration and potgi (subsistence money). If there be any obstruction to (your) service, you should then deduct and take Rs. 40 [509] out of the assessment and pay the remaining Rs. 40 to the sansthan. This deed of sale is duly given in writing. Lunar date the 1st of Bhadrapad Sudh, Shak 1782 (17th August, 1860). (Here follows an explanation of an erasure.) The date aforesaid. You should carry on the management of the above-mentioned land from generation to generation."

Krishnaji died in 1860 subsequently to the sale, and Ramkrishna succeeded him as manager of the math, having obtained a certificate of heirship. In 1864 Ramkrishna brought a suit against Baxarbhai to set aside the sale of the "miras malki," but the suit was dismissed and Baxarbhai's rights were confirmed on the 18th January, 1865.

One Gopal subsequently claimed to be the manager of the math in preference to Ramkrishna. He sued to have him removed from the management, and obtained a decree in the year 1871 in the Court of the Principal Sadar Amin at Satara and this decree was confirmed, in appeal, by the High Court in 1875.

In 1887 the plaintiff, who succeeded Gopal as manager, sued the defendant Narayan Daji Thite, the vendee of Baxarbhai, to set aside the sale by Krishnaji and to recover possession of the lands, or, in the alternative, to recover Rs. 223-11 9, being the amount of assessment due by the defendant for three years previous to the suit, deducting the amount of the quit-rent, namely Rs. 134-3 3, paid by the defendant direct to Government.

The defendant pleaded that he had purchased the land from Baxarbhai, who had purchased it from the owner Krishnaji, and that the plaintiff's claim was barred by limitation.

The Subordinate Judge held that the claim for possession was barred, as the sale to Baxarbhai had not been set aside within twelve years either from its date or from the date of Krishnaji's death, but that the claim to recover assessment of three years before suit was within time. He awarded Rs. 223-11-9 to the plaintiff as the amount of the assessment.

Both parties appealed, but the decree was confirmed.

Both parties then filed second appeals to the High Court—the defendant appealing (appeal No. 683 of 1891) against the decree in respect of the assessment awarded, and the plaintiff [510] (appeal No. 670 of 1891) against the decree so far as it refused possession.

Macpherson (with Ghanasham N. Nadkarni) for the appellant (defendant) in appeal No. 683 of 1891 and the respondent in appeal No. 670 of 1891 :—The whole claim of the plaintiff was barred and not merely his claim for possession. The sale to Baxarbhai was a valid one and we claim under Baxarbhai. Krishnaji was de facto and de jure manager of the math and could sell. But even if he had no authority to sell, nevertheless we have been in possession for more than twelve years, and the plaintiff's claim is now barred—Bejoy Chunder Banerjee v. Kally Prosonno Mookerjee (1). The possession of the vendee was adverse when he entered. At all events it became adverse from the time Ramkrishna sued Baxarbhai in 1864 to set aside the sale, because Baxarbhai then openly asserted his title to the land. The claim to account is also barred.

Inverarity (with Mahadev B. Choubal) for the respondent (plaintiff) in appeal No. 683 of 1891 and the appellant in appeal No. 670 of 1891 :—Under the deed of sale the defendant is a tenant from year to year, and his possession cannot, therefore, be adverse to the plaintiff. A tenant cannot say he holds adversely to his landlord, and is not liable to pay rent. In calculating the period of limitation the time during which Ramkrishna was acting as manager (i.e. between 1860 and 1875) should be omitted, as he was judicially held not to have been the proper and legal successor of Krishnaji, and was removed.

Macpherson in reply :—If the deed of sale be construed to mean that we are tenants, we submit that the document confers upon us a mirasi tenure, and, therefore, we are not liable to be evicted so long as we pay rent. West and Buhler, p. 177 ; Prataprav Gujar v. Bayaji (2).

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C.J. :—These appeals arise out of a suit by the plaintiff as manager of the math at Pandharpur to set aside the sale in 1860 (Ex. 17) of the "miras malki" by Krishnaji, a previous manager of the math, of certain lands in favour of one Baxarbhai, subject to the payment of assessment as therein provided. [511] The Court below has found that the lands were not the private inam of Krishnaji, but the property of the math, and that the alienation by Krishnaji as manager was invalid beyond his life. This was not disputed before us on appeal. The lower Court of appeal has, however, held that the plaintiff's claim to recover the lands is barred by the Statute of Limitations, inasmuch as twelve years had elapsed both since the alienation and the death of Krishnaji in 1860, but that the plaintiff had not lost his right to recover full assessment on the land.

CIVIL.
18 B. 507.

This conclusion is resisted by appeal No. 670 on two grounds: first, that there was no lawful manager of the math between 1860 and 1875, Ramkrishnaji, who had succeeded Krishnaji, having been declared by the Civil Court to have had no title to the management; and, second, that Ex. 17 created the relationship of landlord and tenant, and that, therefore, there could be no adverse possession during 1860 and 1875 such as could run against the math according to the ruling in Radhabai v. Anantrav (1).

If the defendant's possession was adverse to the ownership of the math during the twelve years after Krishnaji's death, the operation of the Act cannot be affected by the circumstance that there was no legal manager of the math during that period. The important question is, what was the character of defendant's possession after Krishnaji's death?

It was contended by Mr. Macpherson, for the defendant, that the grant of a "mirasi malki," does not create the relationship of landlord and tenant between the grantor and grantee; and he relied on the judgment of Mr. Justice Markby in Bejoy Chunder Banerjee v. Kally Prosonno Mookerjee (2). In that case the Court treated a mirasi grant in Bengal as creating an estate in fee-simple and passing the ownership in the property, apparently on the ground that there was no reversion reserved to the grantor. It is not necessary for us to say whether that case was properly decided, as in this Presidency we must regard it as well established that the mirasdar on inam estates is only "a tenant at a quit-rent or at a reasonable rent not subject to [512] ejectment so long as he pays it"—see West and Buhler, p. 177, and Prataprav v. Bayaji (3), and the note at p. 145; and there is nothing in the language of Ex. 17 which requires a different construction to be put on the mirasi tenure created by it. That being the true position of Baxarbhai by virtue of the grant, his mere possession under it after Krishnaji's death could not be adverse to the math until there was an active assertion, by the grantee, of his claim to be a perpetual tenant, up to which time he would, in the eye of the law, be regarded as a tenant, at-will. However, the suit brought by Ramkrishna Bowa in 1864 shows that Baxarbhai was then asserting his mirasi right, and as more than twelve years elapsed between that date and the bringing of the present suit, the plaintiff's right as representing the math to recover immediate possession is barred, and we must, therefore, dismiss appeal No. 670 of 1891, with costs.

This, however, does not affect the plaintiff's right to recover the three years' arrears of rent as reserved by the mirasi grant, as the effect of s. 28 of the Statute of Limitations would only be to extinguish the plaintiff's right as claimed by him to treat the grant as null and void.

With respect to the amount of the annual rent payable by defendant, it was stated by plaintiff that the service of collecting the assessment on the inam estate has not been performed by Baxarbhai or his alienee, the defendant, during the last three years as contemplated by the grant. It was contended by Mr. Ghanasham that even if not so collected, and whatever may have been the reason for it, and indeed even if it were due to the defendant's own default, the defendant has to pay Rs. 40 rent, and no more. We entertain no doubt that, upon the proper construction of the grant, Baxarbhai or his alienee, the defendant, must pay the full rent of Rs. 80 if the rent was not so collected unless they were prevented from collecting it by reason of some obstruction caused by the manager of the math, and we must, therefore, send down the following issues for determination :—

1. Was the assessment on the inam estate collected by Baxarbhai or the defendant during the three years preceding the suit ?

[513] 2. If not so collected, was it due to the default of Baxarbhai or his alienee, the defendant, or on the contrary to "obstruction" caused by the manager of the math that the assessment on the inam estate was not collected by Baxarbhai or the defendant during the three years preceding the suit ?

The findings to be sent to this Court within two months, and the parties to be allowed to give fresh evidence.

Issues sent down.

HANMANTA KOLAJI (Original Plaintiff), Appellant v. MAHADEV KONDAJI (Original Defendant), *Respondent. [29th August, 1893.]

Limitation—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), sch. II, arts. 127, 144—Suit for possession of land alleging a previous partition—Partition—Co-sharers—Adverse possession—Burden of proof—Evidence.

The defendant had purchased the land in question at a sale in execution of a decree obtained by him against cousins of the plaintiff. The plaintiff claimed to recover the land, alleging that it was his share of ancestral property which had been allotted to him on partition four or five years before suit, and of which he had actually been in separate possession. The lower Court upon these allegations rejected the plaintiff's claim, holding that the suit was not one for partition and did not fall within art. 127 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), but that art. 144 applied, and that the plaintiff had failed to show that the defendant's adverse possession had begun within twelve years preceding the suit. On appeal to the High Court, Held (reversing the decree and sending back the case) that under art. 144 it was for the defendant to prove adverse possession for twelve years before suit.

THIS was a second appeal from the decision of S. Hammick, District Judge of Ahmednagar.

Suit to recover certain land.

The defendant was in possession of the land in question as purchaser at a sale held in execution of a decree obtained by him against one Rama and his brothers. The plaintiff was Rama's cousin and he alleged that the land was ancestral, and that it had been partitioned equally between himself and Rama's branch of [514] the family four or five years before suit. He claimed to recover his half share.

The defendant (inter alia) pleaded limitation.

The lower Court rejected the plaintiff's claim as barred, being of opinion that as the plaintiff alleged that he had been in separate possession of his share after the division, the suit was not one for partition under art. 127 of the Limitation Act, but that the burden of proof was on the plaintiff to show that the defendant's adverse possession had begun within twelve years before suit. He dismissed the suit. The following is an extract from his judgment:—

"The plaintiff-appellant's pleader has contended that art. 127 of the Limitation Act is the article which is applicable to the appellant's claim. Article 127 prescribes the period of limitation for a suit brought by a person excluded from joint family property to enforce a right to share therein. The plaint in this suit, however, does not exhibit a claim of this nature, and the plaintiff's evidence asserts repeatedly that the field in question was divided by the plaintiff and Rama four or five years before the suit, and that the plaintiff entered into separate possession and separately cultivated the moiety which fell to his share. The suit, therefore, is not a suit to enforce a right to share in joint family property, and art. 127 of the Limitation Act does not apply to it.

"The plaintiff was, therefore, bound to show under art. 144 of the Limitation Act that the adverse possession of the defendant had begun within twelve years of the institution of the suit. I have gone through the evidence, and find that he has failed to discharge this obligation. I concur with the Subordinate Judge in not being satisfied that the plaintiff was ever in possession of the field before suit. His claim is, therefore, time-barred."

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Goverdhanlal M. Tripathi, for appellant:—The suit is really one for partition and falls within art. 127. It is a suit to carry out a partition arranged and agreed to four or five years ago. In no case, moreover, could the possession of the defendant or his predecessor have been adverse to plaintiff further back than the [515] partition, as a co-sharer's possession is not adverse. The burden of proof lay on the defendant—Faki Abdulla v. Babaji Gungaji (1).

Ghanasham N. Nadkarni, for the respondent (defendant).

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—The District Judge has not recorded any finding as to the plaintiff's title to the land, but has proceeded at once to dispose of the plea of the Limitation Act, on the assumption that the plaintiff's title to the land was, as stated by him in his plaint, viz., that the land being ancestral property had been divided between him and Rama four or five years before the suit: that this was, therefore, not a suit for partition, and that art. 144 and not art. 127 applied, and that the plaintiff must fail, because he had not proved that defendant's possession had become adverse within the twelve years preceding the suit. It was not, however, for the plaintiff to prove this under art. 144, but for the defendant to prove his adverse possession for twelve years before suit; see Faki Abdulla v. Babaji Gungaji (1). Moreover, if the plaintiff's case is to be accepted, the possession of the family property by Rama and Jaba previously to the division cannot be taken as having been adverse to the plaintiff, and it is clear, therefore, that defendant's possession cannot be treated as adverse further back at any rate than the date of the division.

Under these circumstances, we must reverse the decree of the Court below and send back the case for a fresh decision after recording a finding on the first issue raised by the Subordinate Judge. Costs to abide the result.

Decree reversed and case sent back.

GOVIND SITARAM AND OTHERS (Original Defendants Nos. 4, 5 and 6) Appellants v. BAPUJI MAHADEO AND ANOTHER (Original Plaintiffs), *Respondents. [28th April, 1893.]

Kulkarni vatan—Suit for partition and declaration to a specific share in the vatan and to officiate—Power of Civil Courts to make the declaration—Vatandars Act (Bombay Act III of 1874), s. 67†—Money grant—Vatan consisting exclusively of cash allowance—Collector's certificate—Pensions Act (XXIII of 1871), s. 4.

In a suit for partition of a kulkarni vatan, for a declaration that the plaintiffs were entitled to officiate as kulkarnis and for a third share in the moiety of the vatan belonging to the parties, it was contended that under the Vatandars Act (Bombay Act III of 1874) the suit was not maintainable in the Civil Court.

Held, that the Vatandars Act does not preclude the Civil Court from declaring the plaintiffs' right to the status of vatandars when the share defined is in respect of a share in the vatan belonging to the branch of the parties, and the declaration does not interfere with the rights of the Collector in any way as given by the Act. In preparing the register the Collector's duty as determined by s. 67 of the Act is confined to specifying the names of the heads of families and the proportionate part possessed by each head, and is in no way concerned with the rights of the members of a particular branch inter se.

[517] A suit for a declaration that the plaintiffs are vatandars of a share of a moiety of a kulkarni vatan consisting exclusively of a cash allowance from Government, is not a suit relating to a "money grant" within the contemplation of s. 4 of the Pensions Act (XXIII of 1871).

APPELLATE CIVIL.

18 B. 516.

Defendant No. 1. Ravji Vitthal admitted the claim.

Defendants Nos. 2, 4, 5 and 6 contended (inter alia) that under the Vatan Act (Bombay Act III of 1874) the plaintiff's claim with respect to the vatan was not maintainable in a Civil Court.

Defendant No. 3 did not appear.

The Subordinate Judge allowed the claim in so far as it related to the properties other than vatan, with respect to which he held that the Civil Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit under the Vatan Act.

On appeal by the plaintiff, the appellate Court varied the decree by declaring that the plaintiff had a third share in the moiety of the vatan in suit.

Defendants Nos. 4, 5 and 6 preferred a second appeal.

Mahadeo Chimnaji Apte, for the appellants (original defendants Nos. 4, 5 and 6).—Under the Vatan Act, a Civil Court has no jurisdiction to make a declaration that a particular individual has a specified share in a vatan or that he has a right to serve as a vatandar by turns—Parsha v. Lagmya Shan (1). Under the Vatan Act the share in the emoluments of a vatan is to be fixed by the Collector. A Civil Court can make a declaration that a particular individual is a vatandar, but it cannot fix his share in the emoluments of the vatan. We do not say that the plaintiffs are not vatandars. We admit that they are members of the vatandar [518] family. In this suit we only dispute their right to demand a specific share on the ground that a Civil Court has no jurisdiction to entertain such a suit. If Civil Courts were to determine the rights of the vatandars among themselves, then there would be nothing left for the Collectors to decide—Khando Narayan v. Apaji Sadashiv (2); Chinto Abaji v. Lkshmibai (3). We also contend that the suit is barred under the Pensions Act (XXIII of 1871), as the kulkarni vatan in dispute consists of cash allowance to be paid by Government to the kulkarni.

Daji Abaji Khare, for the respondents (original plaintiffs).— The defendants denied our right as a vatandar. A Civil Court has jurisdiction to make a declaration that a person is a vatandar co-sharer—Ramchandra Dabholkar v. Anant Sat Shenvi (4). If a Civil Court has jurisdiction to make such a declaration, then there is nothing either in the Vatan Act, or in the reported cases, to prevent a Civil Court from defining the share of a vatandar. Under s. 64 of the Vatan Act the Collector is authorized to do certain things with respect to vatandars; but s. 63 of the Act lays down that the provisions of s. 64 are applicable to hereditary village offices of lower degree than that of patel or kulkarni. Section 64 is, therefore, not applicable to the present case. The vatandars concerned in Parsha v. Lagmya Shan (1) were inferior vatandars.

The Pensions Act cannot bar the present suit, because we do not seek to recover our share in the cash allowance by virtue of the decree. When the allowance has reference to the officiator's remuneration, it is then that the Pensions Act applies, and not otherwise. We do not seek for a declaration to be an officiator, but only to recover our share in the allowance.

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C.J.—The District Court has declared the plaintiffs to be vatandars of one-third share in the moiety of the kulkarni vatan.

APPELLATE CIVIL.
18 B. 516.

It has been argued by Mr. Apte, for the appellants, that the Vatandars Act precludes the Civil Court from making such a declaration.

[519] It has been long settled that the Civil Court has still the power to declare the plaintiffs' right to the status of vatandars—Ramchandra Dabholkar v. Anant Sat Shenvi (1). It was said, however, that the decree of the Court in this case does more than merely declare the plaintiff's status as vatandars, as it defines the amount of the share in the vatan. That is true, but the share so defined is in respect of the share in the vatan belonging to their own particular branch, and the declaration does not interfere with the rights of the Collector in any way as given him by the Act. In preparing the register, his duty as determined by s. 67 is confined to specifying the names of the heads of families and the proportionate part possessed by each head, and is in no way concerned with the rights of the members of a particular branch inter se. We are of opinion, therefore, that there is nothing in the Vatandars Act which takes away the power of the Civil Court to make such a declaration as the lower appeal Court has made in this case.

It was, however, said that as the vatan consisted exclusively of a cash allowance by Government, this was a suit relating to a "money grant" within the contemplation of s. 4 of the Pensions Act, XXIII of 1871, and one which the Civil Court cannot entertain. This objection, it is to be remarked, was unsuccessfully urged in Ramachandra Dabholkar v. Anant Sat Shenvi (1) under precisely similar circumstances. As the Vatandars Act itself precludes the suit being entertained except for the purpose of declaring the plaintiffs' status as vatandars, it cannot, we think, in its restricted form be regarded as a suit relating to a grant of money within the meaning of the above section. We must, therefore, confirm the decree with costs on appellants.

Decree confirmed.

18 B. 520.

SECOND APPEAL from the decision of Arthur H. Unwin, District Judge of Kanara.

Suit against two brothers (defendants Nos. 1 and 2) to recover money due on a promissory note passed by the elder of them (defendant No. 1) to the plaintiff for money borrowed by him as manager of his family. The plaintiff alleged that the two defendants were joint; loan was obtained by defendant No. 1 for trading purposes and for the family.

The first defendant did not appear, and the second defendant pleaded that there was no necessity for the loan, and alleged fraud and collusion between the plaintiff and the first defendant.

The Subordinate Judge passed a decree against the first defendant, but dismissed the suit as against defendant No. 2, and he ordered that his costs should be paid by defendant No. 1.

The first defendant appealed, and on appeal the District Judge raised an issue as to whether the debt contracted by defendant No. 1 was for other than family purposes. He required the second defendant to prove this issue. and found that he had failed to do [521] so. He varied the lower Court's decree by awarding plaintiff's claim against both defendants, one-half to be paid by each, and ordering the second defendant to pay all costs throughout.

The second defendant filed a second appeal.

N. G. Chandavarkar for the appellant (defendant No. 2).—In this suit the plaintiff claimed against us. The Subordinate Judge as against us dismissed his suit, but passed a decree against the first defendant. The plaintiff did not appeal as against us. It was the first defendant who appealed. His appeal is against the plaintiff, and resists plaintiff's claim against him. The first defendant could not appeal against the second defendant, and on the appeal brought by the first defendant against the plaintiff the District Judge had no power to vary the decree and make an order against the second defendant—Greesh Chunder Singh v. Gour Mohun (1); Gudadhar v. Mun Mohuuee Dossea (2) and Atma Ram v. Balkishen(3). The District Judge was, therefore, wrong in requiring the second defendant to prove the issue raised by him. The plaintiff alleged the debt to be a family debt, and the burden of proof lay on him.

Shamrao Vithal, for respondent No. 2 (the first defendant).—The defendants set up different cases in the lower Court, and the Judge found against us, and directed us to pay the costs of defendant No. 2. Under these circumstances we had a right to appeal and join defendant No. 2 as a respondent to the appeal. In filing the appeal our object was to get the finding of the Subordinate Judge, namely, that the debt was not a family debt, set aside. The cases relied on are, therefore, distinguishable.

No doubt, proper issues have not been framed; still the judgment clearly shows that the Judge has considered the whole of the evidence adduced by the parties, and that after a careful consideration he has come to the conclusion that defendant No. 2 has failed to prove his case.

D. K. Gandhi, for respondent No. 1 (plaintiff).

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—A preliminary objection has been taken that defendant No. 1 could not appeal as between himself and defendant No. 2. The Subordinate Judge's judgment, however, shows that he dealt with the case at the hearing as if it raised not only [522] a question between the plaintiff and defendants, but also one between the defendants, as his decree directs defendant No. 1 to pay defendant No. 2's costs. This distinguishes the case from cases of Gudadhar Banerjee v. Mussamat Mun Mohunee Dossea (1) and Atma Ram v. Balkishen (2).

But we think that we cannot accept the finding of the lower appeal Court on the issue whether the debt was for a family purpose. It has raised the issue in a form, and dealt with the evidence in a manner, which clearly implies that it considered the onus lay on the second defendant to show that the loan was not for a family purpose. This is a mistake, as there is no presumption, as the District Judge would appear to think, that a loan contracted by a manager of a Hindu family is for a family purpose. We must, therefore, without intending to express any opinion on the merits, reverse the decree and send back the case for a fresh decision by the lower appeal Court, having regard to the above remarks. Costs to abide the result.

Decree reversed and case sent back.

GOVIND BALVANT SHIVNEKAR (Original Applicant), Applicant v. LAKSHMAN BIN NANA TELI (Original Opponent), *Opponent.

[5th September, 1893.]

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 335—Principal and agent—Joint managers—Mortgage by one of such managers—Sale by mortgagee in execution of decree on mortgage and dispossession of the other manager—Application for restoration of possession by other joint manager.

Kushambhat, the owner of certain property, gave the management of it to his three nephews, Govind, Gajanan and Narayan. Gajanan mortgaged the property to Kamalchand, who sued on the mortgage and got a decree. In execution of the decree the property was sold and purchased by Lakshman who was put in possession by the Court. Govind, one of the managers, then applied for possession under s. 335 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), alleging that he had been wrongfully dispossessed.

Held, that the mortgagee Kamalchand got no title to the property by his mortgage from Gajanan against the real owner Kushambhat; and Govind, who was in actual possession as his manager (whether or not there were others equally entitled to share in the management), was entitled to prevent the purchaser [523] Lakshman taking possession, and having been dispossessed had a claim to be restored to possession under s. 335 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882).

APPLICATION under the extraordinary jurisdiction (s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code, Act XIV of 1882) against an order passed by Rao Saheb N. V. Atre, Subordinate Judge of Baramati.

This was an application under s. 335 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) to be restored to the possession of certain land.

The land belonged to one Kushambhat, who gave the management of it to his three nephews, Govind, Gajanan and Narayan. Gajanan alone, however, mortgaged it to one Kamalchand Gujar, who obtained a decree on the mortgage against him, and in execution the land was sold and was purchased by Lakshman bin Nana Teli, the opponent, who obtained possession through the Court. The applicant Govind had originally been a party to the suit brought by the mortgagee Kamalchand, but his name was afterwards struck off. After the purchaser Lakshman was put in possession, Govind applied to the Subordinate Judge under s. 335 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), to be restored to possession, alleging that he had been in possession and had been wrongfully dispossessed. Lakshman answered that it was Gajanan, the judgment-debtor, and not Govind who had been in possession, and that Govind was not entitled to recover the land. The Subordinate Judge rejected Govind's application on the following grounds :—

"It seems that the petitioner was joined as one of the defendants in the suit brought against Gajanan on the mortgage-bond. The summons was served upon him. He was thus aware of the suit brought against him, and yet he has not taken any step to assert that the land did not belong to Gajanan. His name was struck off, and a consent-decree was passed against Gajanan alone. In execution of the decree the land was sold by the Collector. The petitioner did not urge his title to the land, as there is nothing to show that he put forward any objection to the sale. Subsequently to the sale, possession was given to the purchaser, and yet the petitioner seems to have remained quiescent. This conduct of the petitioner goes strongly against him.

[524] "It is alleged that the land belongs to one Kushambhat, uncle of petitioner. Petitioner and his brothers are equally entitled to the land of their uncle, and I see no reason why petitioner should have the preference.

"If the land does not belong to petitioner, he has no leg to stand upon. It is Kushambhat who is entitled to apply or sue for recovering the land. Kushambhat gave its management to his nephews, as would appear from the mortgage and rent-notes, and not to Govindbhat alone, as alleged by him. Thus I am of opinion that the three brothers have equal rights, and so one cannot claim to hold it exclusively. Kushambhat's rights, whatsoever they may be, would not be prejudiced by these proceedings.

"I, therefore, think it but just to hold that petitioner is not entitled to present possession."

Against this order Govind applied under the extraordinary jurisdiction of the High Court and obtained a rule nisi, calling upon the opponent Lakshman to show cause why the order of refusal should not be set aside.

Dhondu Moroba Sanzgiri appeared for the opponent to show cause.

Daji Abaji Khare, contra, in support of the rule. He relied upon Balaji Anant v. Ganesh Janardan (1).

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—The Court has found that the property belongs to Kushambhat, the applicant's uncle, and that it was given by him into the management of his three nephews, the applicant, the mortgagor Gajanan, and Narayan. The opponent, therefore, acquired no title to the property by his mortgage from Gajanan as against the real owner Kushambhat, and the applicant, who was in actual possession as his

Before Sir Charles Sargent, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Bayley.

GANGADHAR HARI KARKARE (Original Defendant), Appellant v. MORBHAT PUROHIT AND ANOTHER (Original Plaintiffs), *Respondents.

[6th September, 1893.]

Inamdar—Inam village—Suit by an inamdar against a khot to recover balance of land revenue—Assessment—Survey made by the British Government—Collector's certificate—Change in rate of assessment—Pensions Act (XXIII of 1871), s. 4†—Jurisdiction of Civil Courts—Revenue Jurisdiction Act (Bom. Act X of 1876), s. 4, sub-cl. (b)‡—Land Revenue Code (Bom. Act V of 1879), s. 216, cls. (a), (b) and (c)§—Village partially alienated.

In a suit by an inamdar of a village against a khot to recover rent in kind (according to the market rate at the time of payment), the defendant (khot) contended (1) that he was only liable to pay cash assessment as fixed by the survey made by the British Government, which was at a lower rate than he had previously paid; (2) that the suit was barred for want of Collector's certificate under s. 4 of the Pensions Act (XXIII of 1871), and (3) that the Civil Court had [526] no jurisdiction to entertain the suit under the Revenue Jurisdiction Act (Bom. Act X of 1876), s. 4, sub-cl. (b), and the Land Revenue Code (Bom. Act V of 1879), s. 216, sub-cl. (b).

* Second Appeal No. 98 of 1892.

† Section 4 of the Pensions Act (XXIII of 1871):—

4. Except as hereinafter provided, no Civil Court shall entertain any suit relating to any pension or grant of money or land revenue conferred or made by the British or any former Government, whatever may have been the consideration for any such pension or grant, and whatever may have been the nature of the payment, claim, or right for which such pension or grant may have been substituted.

‡ Sub-cl. (b) of s. 4 of the Revenue Jurisdiction Act (Bom. Act X of 1876):—

4. Subject to the exceptions hereinafter appearing, no Civil Court shall exercise jurisdiction as to any of the following matters.

(b) objections—to the amount or incidence of any assessment of land-revenue authorized by Government, or to the mode of assessment, or to the principle on which such assessment is fixed, or to the validity or effect of the notification of survey or settlement, or of any notification determining the period of settlement.

§ Section 216, cls. (a), (b) and (c) of the Land Revenue Code (Bom. Act V of 1879):—

Save as is provided in s. 111 and hereinafter in this section, the provisions of chap. VIII to X of this Act shall not be applied to any alienated village except for the purposes of fixing the boundaries of any such village, and of determining any disputes relating thereto. But the provisions of the said chapter shall be applicable to—

(a) all unalienated lands situated within the limits of an alienated village;

(b) villages of which a definite share is alienated, but of which the remaining share is unalienated;

(c) alienated villages the holders of which are entitled to a certain amount of the revenue, but of which the excess, if any, above such amount belongs to Government.

But it shall be lawful for the Governor in Council, on an application being made by the holder of any such village to that effect, to authorize the extension of all or any of the provisions of the said chapters to any such village.

18 B. 525.

Held, that as there was no objection by either party to the amount or incidence of assessment of land revenue fixed by Government, and the question being whether the khot was liable to pay to the inamdar maktas or assessment, the suit was not taken away from the cognizance of Civil Courts by the Revenue Jurisdiction Act (Bom. Act X of 1876), s. 4, sub-cl. (b).

Held, further, that the Court was not precluded from entertaining the suit for want of Collector's certificate under the Pensions Act (XXIII of 1871), s. 4, because the original grant passed the lands, and because it is the original grant which determines whether the Pensions Act is applicable, and not the actual right which the grantee, as a matter of fact, may have enjoyed by it.

Held, further, that the payment which the khot had been making to the inamdar before the time of the British survey was in the nature of assessment or rating by Government, but held also that the plaintiffs were entitled to the old assessment as claimed by them. It was plain that in cases falling within sub-cls. (a) and (e) of s. 216 of the Land Revenue Code, Bombay Act V of 1879, the inamdar's interest in the assessment would not be affected by the application of chaps. VIII to X of that Act. He would still get the old assessment in the alienated lands in the village in the former case and the same amount of assessment in the latter, and the same must have been the intention in cases contemplated by sub-cl. (b).

The "holder of the village" in the concluding para. of s. 216 must be read as meaning the "holder of the assessment or any part thereof of an alienated village."

SECOND appeal from the decision of Rao Bahadur Kashinath B. Marathe, First Class Subordinate Judge of Ratnagiri, with appellate powers.

Suit by the inamdar of a village to recover rent from the khot.

[527] This action was brought by plaintiffs Morbhat bin Narayanbhat and Moro Bapuji Ketkar to recover from the defendant a balance of rent for the inam village of Ranzankond for the years 1885-1886 to 1887-1888, with interest. It was alleged that the first plaintiff was inamdar Purohit (priest), and the second plaintiff was mortgagee in possession of the inam; that they as inamdars were entitled to recover rents in specie and kind from the defendant to the extent specified in the plaint; that the defendant paid these amounts until 1884-85, but subsequently would only pay cash rent at rates specified by the survey officers. The plaintiffs stated that they never consented to a survey being made, and they claimed to be entitled to the rent that had always been paid. They further stated that they had been assisted by the Revenue Court in collecting what they could, and that they brought the present suit for the balance which remained due.

The defendant Gangadhar Hari Karkare pleaded (inter alia) that the first plaintiff having formerly received such revenues as were fixed by the Peshwa, he was now bound to accept such revenue as was fixed by the Survey Department of the British Government which had succeeded the Peshwa's Government; that a suit would not lie without a certificate of the Collector under the Pensions Act, and that the plaintiff ought to have deducted from the amount of his claim the quit-rent which was paid to Government by the defendant.

The Subordinate Judge found that the defendant was liable to pay the rent according to the paimash (survey) (i.e., the new rate) and not according to the mamul (old) rates; that Rs. 176-11-3 only were recoverable by plaintiffs from defendant, of which Rs. 160-10-8 had already been recovered by the former. He, therefore, allowed the claim to the extent of Rs. 16-0-7 with costs in proportion.

On appeal by the plaintiffs the Judge held that the inamdar plaintiff was entitled to recover rent according to mamul (old) and not the survey rate. He, therefore, varied the decree of the Subordinate Judge and awarded the whole of the claim, namely, Rs. 260-0-0, with costs in both Courts.

[528] The following is an extract from the Judge's judgment, which gives the history of the case and the pleadings of the parties :—

"The plaintiff was inamdar of five konds (tracts of land) under two sanads (Exs. 48 and 49) granted by the Chhatrapati of Satara. Of these, $4\frac{1}{2}$ konds were resumed, only a half of one being left to the grantee's descendants, the other half being commuted by the Government into a grant of a fixed quantity of paddy (5 maunds). The khot defendant is held liable, and admits his liability to pay rent for the former half kond on account of his having established by long arduous litigation (vide Ex. 37) his right to manage the inam lands. The defendant paid up to 1884-85 a fixed amount of rent in kind, valued according to the market rate at the time of payment under a ruling of the High Court, I.L.R., 8 Bom. 234. This rent in kind was fixed by Parasharampant's survey in 1787-88 A.D. The British Government effected a fresh survey of the inam lands in the year 1886-87 (vide Ex. 30) under the Revenue Code (Bom. Act V of 1879), s. 216, and decided that the inam lands were liable to a cash assessment of Rs. 58-14-5 per year (Ex. 30). The defendant contends on the strength of this survey that he is no longer liable to pay the money value of rent in kind fixed by Parasharampant's survey. The question now is, whether the defendant is bound to pay rent according to the old or new survey. The plaintiff urges he received till late the rent according to the old survey and not according to the new survey to which he never consented, inasmuch as it reduced the amount of rent. The plaintiff urges that as a gift of lands was made to his ancestor, and as his right to rent arises from the gift of lands, the Government having parted with their interest in certain lands under sanads they have no right to interfere with the amount of rent that he has received from long time. The plaintiff quotes I.L.R. 1 Bom. 523, in support of his contention. The defendant replies that the sanads in the present case have been declared inoperative as regards the enjoyment of lands mentioned in them, and the inamdar is declared entitled to a fixed assessment (vide Ex. 37.)."

The defendant preferred a second appeal.

Mahadeo Chimnaji Apte, for the appellant (defendant).—The defendant is the khot of the village in question. The plaintiff as inamdar seeks to recover a certain sum from the defendant as the amount of land revenue. The Civil Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit under s. 4, cl. (b) of the Revenue Jurisdiction Act (Bom. Act X of 1876). Further, the suit must fail, because the plaintiff has not obtained a certificate from the Collector, which is necessary for the maintenance of such a suit under the Pensions Act (XXIII of 1871)—Janardhan Bhaskar v. The Secretary of State (1); Vyankaji Balkrishna v. Sarjerav Apajirav (2); Jijaji v. Balkrishna (3).

[529] As to the rate, we contend that the Peshwa's Government having formerly fixed the amount of assessment, the British Government, which has succeeded that Government, is now entitled to fix it.

The plaintiffs' ancestors originally acquired five hamlets in five different villages from the Satara Government. No doubt, the original grant purported to be a grant of lands, but the grantees really got only the land revenue and not the lands. The lands were occupied by tenants with occupancy rights. It is impossible that when the sanads were granted to the plaintiffs' ancestor the lands were unoccupied. Therefore, what the plaintiffs' ancestors really acquired by the sanads was the land revenue. The plaintiffs are now merely the alienees of the Government revenue, and Dr. Pollen also having come to that conclusion on a former occasion in connection with a dispute between the parties (in Appeal No. 361 of 1873), the question is now res judicata.

The plaintiff can recover from the khot only that which the khot can recover from the tenants under the existing law. The inamdar plaintiff wishes to levy the mamul rates because those rates were higher than they are now under the British survey. But the tenants do not pay the dues according to the old rates. They pay at the new rate fixed by the British survey. Therefore, if the plaintiff be allowed to recover the mamul rent from us, we shall have to pay the difference ourselves.

Out of the five hamlets originally granted to the plaintiffs' ancestors, only half a hamlet has remained alienated and the four and a half have now become unalienated lands. These, therefore, fall under the operation of s. 216 (b) of the Land Revenue Code (Bom. Act V of 1879), and that being so, chaps. VIII to X of that Code apply. If, therefore, half of the hamlet which became unalienated came under the operation of the Land Revenue Code, the other half, which remained alienated, must needs be subject to it. The Judge, therefore, has no authority to come to the conclusion that the plaintiff is not bound by the survey rates because he had not consented to the survey, or that there was [530] any contractual relationship between the ancestors of the parties. We are the khot of village in our own right.

Vasudeo Gopal Bhandarkar with Vasudeo J. Kirtikar (Government Pleader), for the respondent (plaintiff No. 1) :—It was not necessary for the plaintiff to produce the Collector's certificate under the Pensions Act for the maintenance of the suit. According to the sanads, the grant to our ancestors was not a grant of land revenue, but of the land itself. A certificate under the Pensions Act is necessary when the grant is a grant of land revenue. The sanads do not show that there was any person on the land when the grant was made, nor is there evidence in the case that it was already in the occupation of any one prior to the grant. It is true that we have been getting only the revenue; but, in order to determine whether a certificate is necessary under the Pensions Act, the nature of the original grant must be taken into consideration; any subsequent change in it will not make any difference—Babaji Hari v. Rajaram Ballal (1); Ravji Narayan v. Dadaji Bapuji (2).

Further, our claim is recognized by the Government, inasmuch as we hold a sanad under the Summary Settlement Act (Bombay Act VII of 1863) and that being so, we are entitled to bring the suit under s. 9 of the Pensions Act even without the Collector's certificate. The sanad admits our title to the land.

The point with regard to the certificate under the Pensions Act is taken for the first time in second appeal; and if the Court comes to the conclusion that a certificate is necessary, an opportunity should be given us to produce it.

(1) 1 B. 75.

(2) 1 B. 523.

The other point urged was that of jurisdiction under the Revenue Jurisdiction Act (Bombay Act X of 1876), s. 4, cl. (b). That clause does not apply, because there is no dispute now as to the amount or the incidence of assessment. We claim in the present suit only the balance of inam dues. Even supposing that the above section is applicable, still our claim would be saved under s. 5 of the Act.

The main question is, whether we can recover the same inam dues as we did before the survey, or whether we are entitled [531] only to the survey rates which are less. The Land Revenue Code (Bombay Act V of 1879) does not impose any condition upon us. Section 216, cl. (b), was relied on. Government may survey lands in a village of which a definite share is alienated, as in the present case, to an inamdar. For the purposes of account and other matters it may be necessary for the Government to survey the unalienated portion. But there is no obligation on the inamdar to accept the survey rates in connection with the portion which is alienated to him. Even after the survey the inamdar has to pay to Government the same dues which he had to pay before. Section 217 applies to villages which are alienated in their entirety. Under s. 218, which applies to the present case, the inamdar is entitled to retain all his former rights. The only section that refers to alienated villages in chap. VIII is s. 111; therefore the other sections were not intended to apply to alienated villages, but to unalienated villages. There are also other indications in that chapter which show that the chapter is intended to apply to unalienated villages.

Government has to survey the whole village including the alienated portion, because they have to fix the judi (quit-rent) for that portion; but the survey rates are levied on the unalienated portion only. It is only when the entire village is alienated that survey is introduced with the inamdar's consent. But when a portion of a village is alienated, the survey is made without the inamdar's consent, because the unalienated portion remains with Government.

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C.J.—The question in this case is whether the defendant is bound to pay the amount of rent in kind according (to the market-rate at the time of payment) as fixed by the Parasharampant's survey in 1787-88 A.D., or the cash assessment of Rs. 58-14-5, per year, as fixed by the survey made by the British Government in 1886-87. The defendant contends that he is liable only for the latter.

It has been contended before us that the Court has no jurisdiction to try the suit, as it relates to the amount or incidence of assessment or land revenue authorised by Government, which [532] is taken away from the cognizance of the Civil Courts by Act X of 1876, s. 4, sub-cl. (b). But here there is no objection by either party to the amount or incidence of the assessment fixed by Government for the entire khond. The vital question between the inamdars and the khot is, whether the latter is liable to pay the former maktas or assessment.

It was said, however, that the suit related to a grant of money or land revenue, and the Civil Court was, therefore, precluded from entertaining it without a certificate of the Collector by s. 4 of the Pensions Act, XXIII of 1871. In Ravji Narayan v. Dadaji Bapuji (1), it was held by Sir M. Westropp, C.J., and Larpent, J., that it is the original grant

SEP. 6.
APPELLATE CIVIL.

which determines whether the Pensions Act is applicable and not the actual rights which the grantee, as a matter of fact, may have enjoyed in it. It was argued, however, that in this case, although the original grant passed the lands in the several khonds, that grant had been commuted, in Angria's time, into a grant of the assessment only as regards the one-half of the khond which the inamdars were allowed to retain in inam. But we do not think that the proceedings in Angria's time can be regarded as effecting a substitution of any sort. It was an act of State by which Angria resumed the one-half of the village of Tural which was in Ratnagiri then, under Angria, which left the inamdar, with his inam rights, whatever they were, over the other half of the khond. In the Peshwa's time the question was only as to plaintiff's right to the five maunds of rice allowed to the Purohits out of the half of the khond seized by Angria, and the Peshwa ordered his revenue officers to continue it. We are of opinion, therefore, that having regard to the ruling in Ravji Narayan v. Dadaji Bapuji (1) which, we think, is correct, that the present case does not fall under the Pensions Act.

Proceeding then to the consideration of this second appeal, the first question is as to the nature of the payment which the defendant had been making to the plaintiffs before the new survey was introduced by Government. It has been treated by the Subordinate Judge as in the nature of assessment originally [533] fixed in kind by the Parashrampant's survey in 1787. On the other hand, it is regarded by the lower appeal Court as a fixed payment arising from a contractual relation between the ancestors of the parties. We think that the question must be regarded as already decided by the findings of Dr. Pollen in appeal No. 361 of 1873, which, as West, J., points out in his judgment in Morbhat Purohit v. Gangadhar Karkare (2), only left to be determined whether "the khot was liable to pay the fixed quantities of grain as a propietor subject to assessment or rating by the Government and paying the inamdar as assignee of the Government or as an officer or agent of the Government, carrying out its command in favour of the inamdar." In either of these characters it could be only as assessment that it would be payable by the khot. We think, therefore, that the payment by the defendant must be deemed to have been settled by Dr. Pollen's judgment as being of the nature of assessment or rating by Government.

The question, therefore, which remains for determination is, whether the introduction of the new survey has affected the amount of that payment. The defendant relies on s. 216, cl. (b), of the Land Revenue Act, V of 1879, which, he says, applies to a case like the present. The village of Tural comes under the description referred to in that sub-clause, but, we think, that the operations of the several sub-clauses to s. 216 must be confined to enabling Government, of its own will, to introduce the new survey, so far as it might affect any interest it still had in the assessment of the village, as in the case of cl. (a) where there are unalienated lands in the alienated village, or as in cl. (b) where a certain definite share of the village still remains unalienated, or lastly as in cl. (c) where the excess of the revenue (if any) after deducting a certain amount belongs to Government. In the cases contemplated by sub-cls. (a) and (c) it is plain that the inamdar would not be affected as regards his interest in the assessment by the application of chaps. VIII to X. He would still get the old assessment on the alienated lands in the village in the one case, and the same "amount" of assessment in the latter, and we think that the [534] same must have been the intention in the case contemplated by sub-cl. (b). The holder of the village in the concluding para. of s. 216 must, we think, be read as meaning the holder of the assessment or any part thereof of an alienated village.

We agree, therefore, with the conclusion arrived at by the lower appeal Court that the plaintiff is entitled to the sum claimed, but subject to the quit-rent and judi which, the Joint Subordinate Judge held, should be deducted, and against which no cross-objections were taken by the defendant before the lower appeal Court. The decree of the lower Court must, therefore, be confirmed subject to the above amendment. Appellant must pay respondents their costs of this appeal.

Held, that although there might have been no absolute necessity for the widow to sell the property to provide herself with maintenance, still as there was no other family property, the property in question must necessarily have been sold at the expiration of the time fixed by the mortgage, and the sale by the widow ought to be supported.

THIS was a second appeal from the decision of S. Tagore, District Judge of Sholapur-Bijapur.

Suit by reversioners to set aside the sale of a house by a widow.

[535] The house in question had been the property of one Baba Balaji, who died chidless, and his widow Lakshmibai took possession. The property had been mortgaged by Baba before his death, and in 1859, while the mortgage term had still two years to run, Lakshmibai sold the property to the defendant.

The plaintiffs sued as reversioners to set aside the sale, contending that it was without necessity, and, therefore, illegal. The defendant pleaded that the sale was valid, Lakshmibai having sold the house in order to pay her husband's debts.

The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit, holding that it lay on the plaintiffs to show that the sale was improper and illegal, and that they had failed to do so.

APPEL-LATE CIVIL.
18 B. 534.

On appeal, the District Judge reversed the decree, holding that the burden of proof lay on the defendant, and that it was for him to show that the property was sold under such circumstances as to justify a Hindu widow in alienating the immoveable property of her husband without the consent of his heirs. The District Judge remanded the case for decision on the merits. The following is an extract from the Judge's judgment:—

"It might be inferred from the documents produced in this case (Exs. 78, 79, 80), that the sale was made by Lakshmibai to pay her husband's debts and to procure maintenance for herself. Both these objects are such as would justify a sale by a Hindu widow; but a mere recital in a widow's deed of sale of the object is not enough to prove it: West and Buhler, Vol. I, Introduction, p. 102. It appears that the shop was mortgaged by Baba Balaji to one Devidas for Rs. 150 in 1854. Three years after Baba borrowed from Devidas a further sum of Rs. 50 on the mortgage of the same property. This mortgage was made for five years, but before the expiry of the period stipulated, the shop was sold by Lakshmibai to the defendants. It has not been shown that there was any necessity to sell the shop to pay off the mortgage-debt before the time fixed in the mortgage instrument.

"It is urged by the respondents' pleader that such necessity arose out of the necessity on the part of the widow of procuring her own maintenance; but I am not satisfied that the widow was [536] in such straitened circumstances as to be compelled to sell the property for the small sum of Rs. 81 on account of her maintenance. There is a preponderance of evidence to show that she was in easy circumstances. Defendants' own witness, No. 60, a relation of Lakshmibai, says that she occasionally lived with the witness, and the latter declares that he was ready to support the widow in case she chose to reside with him permanently. Upon the whole, I find that the defendants have failed to make out a case of necessity for the absolute alienation by the widow of her husband's estate."

On remand the Subordinate Judge allowed the plaintiff's claim.
On appeal by defendants the Judge confirmed the decree.
Defendants preferred a second appeal.

Ghanasham N. Nadkarni, for the appellants (defendants):—He relied upon Chimnaji Govind Godbole v. Dinkar Dhondeo Godbole (1).

Mahadeo Chimnaji Apte, for the respondents.

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—In this case the District Judge has found that the property had been mortgaged by the widow's husband in his life-time; but he has held there was no necessity for the widow's selling the mortgaged property two years before the mortgage-debt fell due, as the state of her circumstances did not imperatively require it to be done in order to provide herself with maintenance. But we think that a widow, like a manager of the family, must be allowed a reasonable latitude in the exercise of her powers, provided, as Mr. Justice West says in Chimnaji Govind Godbole v. Dinkar Dhondev Godbole (1), "she acts fairly to her expectant heirs." Here then, although there may have been no absolute necessity to sell to provide herself with maintenance, still, as there was no other family property, and the property in question must necessarily have been sold at the expiration of the time fixed by the mortgage, we think that the sale is one which ought to be supported. The entire income of the property had been appropriated to the interest of part of the mortgage-debt, and 12 per cent. was running on the remaining [537] Rs. 50, which would necessarily have to be added to the principal when the entire mortgage-debt was paid off. The reversioners could, under the above circumstances, be in no way prejudiced by the widow's anticipating the date at which the mortgage-debt fell due.

(1) 11 B. 320.

We must, therefore, reverse the decree of the Court below and dismiss the plaint with costs on the plaintiffs throughout.

Decree reversed.

purchase-money to the defendant and had obtained possession, but was subsequently dispossessed. The plaintiff had claimed the value of standing crop or damages for the same. The Court found that the plaintiff had paid the purchase-money, but had not got possession, and ordered defendant to execute a deed of sale. On failure of the defendant to do so, the Court executed a deed of sale in plaintiff's favour under s. 262 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882). The plaintiff thereupon brought the present suit to recover possession on the strength of the deed of sale. Defendant pleaded that this second suit was barred under ss. 13 and 43 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Held, that s. 43 was not applicable and did not bar the present suit, because the alleged cause of action was not the breach of the contract, but a new and distinct one arising from the deed of sale which the defendant had contracted to pass.

Held, also, that s. 13, expl. II, was not applicable, because the object of that explanation would seem to be to compel the plaintiff to rely on all grounds which were open to him in support of the claim made by his plaint, which in the first suit was confined to obtaining a regular deed of sale.

SECOND appeal from the decision of A. Steward, District Judge of Khandesh.

Suit to recover possession of land. The land had been mortgaged by the defendant Budhu valad Bhika to one Sena Chowdari for [539] Rs. 1,550. On the 5th June, 1889, the defendant agreed to sell the land to the plaintiff for Rs. 1,550 which should be applied by the defendant in paying off the mortgage-debt. After it was paid off, the defendant was to execute a deed of sale to the plaintiff. In pursuance of the agreement, the plaintiff paid Rs. 1,550 to the defendant; but as the defendant failed to perform his part of the agreement by executing a deed of sale in plaintiff's favour, the plaintiff on the 5th October, 1889, filed a suit (No. 790 of 1889) against the defendant, praying, first, that either the defendant be directed to execute in his favour the sale deed in respect of the land as agreed upon, or that he be ordered to refund to the plaintiff the sum of Rs. 1,550 together with Rs. 100 as damages; and, secondly, that the crops standing on the land be delivered into plaintiff's possession, or that Rs. 200 be awarded as compensation for the same. The plaintiff further alleged that the land had been delivered into his possession, and he had sowed it on the 1st July, 1889, but that the defendant dispossessed him of the same, with the standing crops thereon, on the 15th September of the same year, and refused to execute the sale-deed.

The Court awarded the plaintiff's claim in respect of the sale deed, but disallowed his claim in respect of compensation, holding that he had not obtained possession of the land as alleged.

The defendant, however, did not execute the sale-deed as directed. The Court, therefore, executed the deed in plaintiff's favour on the 15th April, 1890, under s. 262 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882).

The plaintiff now, relying on the sale-deed, brought the present suit to recover possession of the land.

The defendant contended that the suit was barred under ss. 13 and 43 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882).

The Subordinate Judge overruled the defendant's pleas and awarded possession to the plaintiff.

18 B. 537.

On appeal by the defendant, the Judge reversed the decree, and rejected the claim, holding that it was barred under section [540] 43 of the Civil Procedure Code. He referred to Abhiram Doss v. Sriram Doss (1).

The plaintiff perferred a second appeal.

Vasudeo Gopal Bhandarkar, for the appellant (plaintiff).—The Judge dismissed our suit under s. 43 of the Code, because in our former suit we did not claim possession. In that suit we alleged that we were in possession and that we were dispossessed, and, therefore, in that suit we merely claimed the value of the crop. The Court found that our allegation as to possession was not proved; it, therefore, dismissed our suit for the value of the crop. The plaintiff's former suit was for the specific performance of the contract to convey, and it was not necessary to demand possession. That suit was on a different cause of action. The cause of action to recover mesne profits is different from the cause of action to recover possession. Section 43 is not applicable to the present case, and the Judge was wrong in holding that our present suit is barred because we did not ask for possession in the former suit—Tirupati v. Narasimha (2); Lalessor Babui v. Janki Bibi (3).

Mahadeo Chimnaji Apte (with Mahadeo Vaman Bhat), for the respondent (defendant):—We rely on ss. 13 and 43 of the Civil Procedure Code. In the former suit the plaintiff asked for possession of the standing crop sown by himself. When a person asks for possession of the standing crop sown by himself, his prayer virtually amounts to a prayer for possession of the land itself. If it did not, we submit he ought to have asked for possession in that suit, and having failed to do so, he cannot now sue on the same cause of action— Sections 13 (exp. II) and 43 of the Civil Procedure Code. A plaintiff cannot bring one suit for a title-deed and another for possession—Anderson, Wright and Co. v. Kalagarla Surji Narain (4); Abhiram Doss v. Sriram Doss (1).

[SARGENT, C.J.—The question is, whether the plaintiff, having got a conveyance, has got a fresh cause of action for possession ?]

[541] We submit not, because a conveyance is merely evidence of title.

[SARGENT, C.J., referred to Kalidhun Chuttapadhya v. Shiba Nath Chuttapadhya (5).]

In that case the first suit was for an account and the second for the result of the account, and, therefore, it was held that the second suit could be maintained. Our contention is supported by Shib Kristo Dah v. Abdool Sobhan Chowdhry (6).

Vasudeo Gopal Bhandarkar, in reply.—The words in s. 43 are "cause of action." In the present case the cause of action is different from that in the former one. In that suit the cause of action was the right to a conveyance. In the present suit, the cause of action is the right to possession. They, no doubt, are the result of the same transaction, but they are distinct, and separate suits are maintainable. The execution of the conveyance by the Court gave us a separate cause of action for the present suit.

on the 15th April, 1890, by the Court in execution of a decree passed against the defendant in suit No. 790 of 1889. The defendant pleaded that the suit was barred by ss. 13 and 43 of the Civil Procedure Code. The Joint Subordinate Judge held that it was not barred. The lower appeal Court held that it was barred under s. 43.

The previous suit, No. 790 of 1889, was one by the plaintiff for specific performance of an alleged contract of sale to him by defendant, by which the plaintiff was to pay Rs. 1,550, and the defendant undertook to execute a deed of conveyance to him. It was contended by Mr. Apte, for the respondent, that the plaintiff's present claim to be put into possession was part of the entire claim, which the plaintiff was then entitled to make in respect of the cause of action, viz., the defendant's default in performing his contract. In that suit, the plaintiff alleged that he had paid the purchase-money and had been put into possession; but the Court found that he had paid the purchase-money but had never had possession, and Mr. Apte argued that s. 43 [542] must be applied as if the facts had been as found by the Court, and not as alleged in the plaint in that suit, and in that case he urged that the plaintiff's claim would have included not only this right to have a deed of sale executed, but also to be put into possession, and that the plaintiff, therefore, cannot now sue in respect of the latter portion of the claim. We think this contention is a valid one, so far as the claim to possession is based on the contract; but it does not dispose of the question as to the applicability of s. 43 to the present suit, where the alleged cause of action is not the breach of the contract, but a new and distinct one arising from the deed of sale itself, which the defendant had contracted to pass. It was also argued by Mr. Apte that s. 13, exp. II, applied to the present suit, but the object of that explanation would seem to be to compel the plaintiff to rely on all the grounds which were open to him in support of the claim made by his plaint, which in the first suit was confined to obtaining a regular deed of sale.

For the above reasons, we reverse the decree of the Court below and restore that of the Subordinate Judge, with costs on the respondent here and in the lower Court of appeal.

Decree—Amendment of decree—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 206—Practice—Appeal.

In the lower appeal Court the plaintiff obtained a decree which directed parties to bear their own costs in proportion in both the Courts, while the judgment directed that the parties should bear each other's costs in proportion in both the Courts. The decree was confirmed by the High Court in cross second appeals without writing a judgment. There was no point taken in either of the appeals as to costs. The plaintiff subsequently applied to the High Court for the amendment of the decree under s. 206 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882). It was contended for the defendant, that the application should have been made to the lower appeal Court.

Held, that the only decree which existed for the purposes of execution after the High Court confirmed the decree of the Court below was the decree of the High Court into [548] which that of the lower Court became incorporated. The application was, therefore, properly made to the High Court.

Held, further, that that being so, and there having been no appeal by either party against the order as to costs, the Court might properly look at the judgment of the Court below with a view to making the decree as to costs agree with it.

THIS was an application under s. 206 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) to amend the decree of Rao Bahadur Chunilal Maneklal, First Class Subordinate Judge of Ahmedabad with appellate powers.

The plaintiffs sued the defendants in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Dohad and obtained a decree for Rs. 3,070-6-1 with costs and interest.

On appeal by the defendants, the First Class Subordinate Judge varied the decree by reducing the amount to Rs. 2,055-4-3 (Shiashi currency), and in the judgment directed the parties to bear each other's costs in proportion in both the Courts. But in the decree there was a discrepancy with respect to the order as to costs, the decretal order being "parties to bear their own costs in proportion in both the Courts."

Both plaintiffs and defendants preferred cross second appeals (No. 617 of 1890 and No. 15 of 1891) to the High Court, which confirmed the decree with costs. There was no point taken in either of the appeals with respect to the order as to costs.

The discrepancy between the judgment and the decree of the First Class Subordinate Judge with respect to costs having come to the notice of the plaintiffs, they now applied, under s. 206† [544] of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) to amend the order in the decree, and obtained a rule nisi calling upon the defendants to show cause why the amendment should not be made.

Nagindas Tulsidas Marphatia, for the opponents (defendants), showed cause against the rule:—The application ought to have been made to the First Class Subordinate Judge. The High Court merely confirmed his decree. It is, therefore, the decree of the Subordinate Judge that requires the amendment, and he had jurisdiction to entertain the application —Sundara v. Subbanna (1); Ram Saran v. Persidhar Rai (2); see also

† Section 206 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882):—

206. Contents of decree.—The decree must agree with the judgment: it shall contain the number of the suit, the names and description of the parties, and particulars of the claims as stated in the register, and shall specify clearly the relief granted or other determination of the suit.

The decree shall also state the amount of costs incurred in the suit, and by what parties, and in what proportions such costs are to be paid.

Power to amend decree.—If the decree is found to be at variance with the judgment, or if any clerical or arithmetical error be found in the decree, the Court shall, of its own motion or on that of any of the parties, amend the decree so as to bring it into conformity with the judgment, or to correct such error:

Provided that reasonable notice has been given to the parties or their pleaders of the proposed amendment.

remarks of Mahmood, J., in Muhammad Sulaiman Khan v. Muhammad Yar Khan (1).

Goverdhanram M. Tripathi, for the applicant in support of the rule.—When the High Court confirmed the decree of the Subordinate Judge, the decree became the decree of the High Court. The only decree in existence being that of the High Court, we could not make our application to any other Court—Sakhalchand v. Velchand (2); Bhanushankar v. Raghunathram (3).

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—This is an application under s. 206 of the Civil Procedure Code to amend the decree of the Subordinate Judge with appellate powers directing that the parties are to bear their own costs in proportion in both the Courts as to make it agree with the judgment of that Court, which, it is said, directed that the parties should bear each other's costs in proportion in both the Courts. A preliminary objection has been taken that this application should have been made to the lower appeal Court. Such, no doubt, is the view taken by the Madras High Court in Sundara v. Subbanna(4) and by Mahmood, J., dissenting from Sir J. Edge, C.J. and Straight, J., in Muhammad Sulaiman Khan v. Muhammad Yar Khan (1). This Court, however, has always held that the only decree which exists for the purpose of execution after the High Court has confirmed the decree of [545] the Court below is the decree of this Court into which that of the lower Court becomes incorporated—Sakkalchand Rikhawdas v. Velchand Ganesh Gujar (2)—and if that be so, it is difficult to understand how, consistently with that ruling, the lower Court can have the power to amend the decree even under s. 206. To allow that Court to bring the decree into conformity with what it may consider to be its judgment, might lead, as pointed out by Sir J. Edge, C. J., in Muhammad Sulaiman Khan v. Muhammad Yar Khan (1), to its being essentially a different decree from that which the High Court intended to confirm. We think, therefore, that the application was properly made to this Court.

That being so, and there having been no appeal by either party against the order as to costs, this Court may properly look at the judgment of the Court below with a view to making the decree as to costs agree with it. The judgment directed that the parties should bear each other's costs in proportion. The decree directs that costs of the parties should be borne in proportion; but if that be understood as meaning by one another, which it my well be, then there is no disagreement between it and the order in the judgment. To make it, however, quite clear, and to avoid any question in execution, it would be right under s. 206, Civil Procedure Code, to substitute the words in Gujarati "be koratman ek bijane sir" (on each other in both Courts) for the words "temne potpotane sir" (on their own selves) after the words "kharach pramanaman" (costs in proportion) in the vernacular decree of the First Class Subordinate Judge, A. P., in appeal No. 149 of 1888, and that the costs be calculated accordingly in execution, and we accordingly direct this is to be done. Parties to pay their own costs of this application.

MANJUNATH MANGESHAYA BAINDUR (Plaintiff) v. MANGESH SHESHAGIRIAPA GOKARNKAR (Defendant).* [26th September, 1893.]

Stamp—Stamp Act I of 1879, sch. II, art. 13, cl. (c)—Salt-pans—Lease.

A counterpart of a lease of salt-pans held not to be exempt from stamp duty, as it did not purport to be a counterpart of a lease granted to a cultivator.

REFERENCE from Rao Saheb H. S. Phadnis, Subordinate Judge of Kumta in the Kanara District, under s. 49 of the Stamp Act (I of 1879).

The plaintiff let his salt-pans to the defendant and brought a suit on the agreement. At the hearing he tendered in evidence a counterpart of the lease or agreement which was not stamped. He contended that it was exempt from stamp duty under sch. II, art. 13 (c) of Act I of 1879.

The Subordinate Judge referred the following question to the High Court :—

"Is the counterpart of a lease of salt-pans exempted from stamp duty under Stamp Act I of 1879, sch. II, art. 13 ?"

The following is an extract from the reference :—

"Schedule II, art. 13 (c) of Act I of 1879 exempts counterpart of any lease granted to a cultivator ;" and the question is, whether the defendant can be considered a cultivator. It is admitted that the defendant took his lease for the production of salt in plaintiff's salt-pan. A cultivator, according to Webster, is a tiller of the soil ; while the production of salt requires no tilling. The Salt Act, XII of 1882, invariably uses the word 'manufacture of salt' and not 'cultivation of salt' to denote the production of salt. I am, therefore, of opinion that the exemption does not extend to leases of salt-pans."

[547] The following is a translation of the counterpart of the lease :—

"The 5th of May 1889 A.D. To Manjunath Mangeshaya Baindur, residing at Hanehalli, in the taluka of Kumta.

"(I) Mangesh Sheshagiri Gokarnkar Mogeri give in writing (this) counterpart lease of a salt-work. In the salt-work No. 56 situate in the saja of Nagrabail, you have a share of $1\frac{3}{4}$ chittas. This I have rented from you for this the current year of 1889 A.D. for a fixed rent settled at Rs. 142. This money I will pay you in full by the 30th of Magh in the current year Virodhi (19th of February, 1890) and obtain back this counterpart of lease with your endorsement (of payment on it). I will at my own expense hire a place and store in the salt produced in your salt-work."

ORDER.

FULTON, J. (SARGENT, C. J., CANDY, J., concurring).—As the document referred does not purport to be the counterpart of a lease granted to a cultivator, we agree with the Subordinate Judge in thinking that it is not exempted from stamp duty by cl. (c) of art. 13 of sch. II of the Indian Stamp Act, 1879.

Municipality—District Municipality—Bombay Act VI of 1873, s. 33 †—Building—Damages.

Plaintiff having built a new wall on the site of an old wall including the old foundations, the Municipality pulled the wall down. Plaintiff thereupon sued the Municipality for damages. The Judge rejected the claim for damages.

Held, that the building of a new wall on the site of the old wall including the old foundations was not an addition to the existing building within the meaning of s. 33 of the District Municipal Act (Bombay Act VI of 1873). The Municipality was, therefore, liable in damages for any expenses which the plaintiff was put to by their pulling down the wall.

[548] SECOND appeal from the decision of J. W. Walker, District Judge of Satara.

This action was instituted by plaintiff Krishnaji Narayan Pokshe against the Municipality of Tasgaon in the Satara District to recover Rs. 48 on account of damages for pulling down a wall rebuilt by the plaintiff on the site of the old wall including the old foundations, and for an injunction restraining the defendant from obstructing the plaintiff in rebuilding the wall.

The defence of the Municipality was that the plaintiff had encroached upon the ground belonging to the defendant; that the defendant did not cause any damage to the plaintiff.

The Subordinate Judge found that the plaintiff's wall, which was partly pulled down by the Municipality, stood on its old foundation, and that the plaintiff did not appropriate any municipal ground. He, therefore, allowed the claim with interest at nine per cent. on Rs. 48.

33. Clause 1.—Before beginning to erect any building, or to alter externally, or add to any existing building, the person intending so to build, alter or add, shall give to the Municipality notice thereof in writing, and shall furnish to them, if required to do so, a plan showing the levels at which the foundation and lowest floor of such building are proposed to be laid by reference to some level known to the Municipality, and all information they may require regarding the limits, design and materials of the proposed building, and the intended situation and construction of the drains, sewers, privies and cesspools (if any) to be used in connection therewith.

Clause 2.—Within one month after receiving such notice, the Municipality may in writing issue such orders not inconsistent with this Act as they think proper with reference to such building. If the Municipality fail to issue written orders, whether of approval or otherwise, with reference to such building within the said period, the person originally giving notice may proceed to erect the building in question in the manner proposed by him to the Municipality, provided such building be in accordance with the provisions of this Act.

On appeal by the defendant the Judge found that the plaintiff was entitled to rebuild the wall as it stood when it was partly removed by the defendant, but that he was not entitled to damages. He, therefore, varied the decree. In his judgment he made the following remarks.—

"The only other point is whether plaintiff should be allowed any damages for the pulling down a part of the wall which he [549] is now held entitled to rebuild. He was required to pull down the wall, by a notice of the Municipality, Ex. 54, under s. 33, cl. 3, of the Bombay District Municipal Act, on the ground that the wall had been made without due notice to the Municipality. Under s. 33, notice must be given 'before beginning to erect any building,' and the amended s. 3 provides that the word 'building' shall include a compound wall such as that in dispute. The High Court have held that a person who, without giving notice, merely re-erects on the same foundation a part of a wall which has fallen down does not contravene the provisions of s. 33 (Cr. Rg. No. 63 of 30th August, 1888, Crown v. Tipanna). But here the wall rebuilt was the whole wall along its entire length, and it is clearly necessary that notice should first be given in such a case to prevent disputes as to the original site. The portion of the wall which the Municipality held was an encroachment, was subsequently removed. It appears that the plaintiff was convicted for building without notice, and the conviction was set aside by the High Court, but the grounds for the decision do not appear. Under s. 33 the Municipality was entitled to remove the whole wall; the first notice was not strictly legal, as it required the wall to be removed within 24 hours, while the period under s. 75 of the Act should have been not less than 3 days or more than one month. This defect might prevent the conviction of the accused, or the power of the Municipality to recover the cost from the plaintiff, but would not bar the right of the Municipality to remove the wall as having been built without notice. In any case, the plaintiff has only himself to blame for disobeying the law, and he cannot recover damages. He has also made an unfounded claim to ground outside the wall. There is no question now raised as to the amount of the damages awarded by the lower Court if plaintiff were held entitled to recover damages. I should add that, in my opinion, there was no occasion for awarding interest on the sum awarded by the Court.

"I amend the decree of the lower Court and direct that the defendants be restrained from obstructing the plaintiff in rebuilding his wall to the width of one foot or up to the line at [550] which the wall stood when it was partly removed by defendants."

Plaintiff preferred a second appeal.

Mahadeo B. Chaubal for the appellant (plaintiff):—We rebuilt our wall on the old foundation; the Municipality was, therefore, wrong in pulling it down. The lower Court disallowed our claim for damages on the ground that we have not given notice of our claim to the Municipality. This is a wrong view of the law on the point. We erected the wall on the old foundation, and in such a case no notice is necessary.

The District Municipal Act requires that a notice should be given in the case of a new building. It has been held that in a case like the present no notice need be given under s. 33 of the Act—Criminal Review No. 421 of 1890, decided on the 6th February, 1890. The Municipality had, on a former occasion, criminally prosecuted us, and even in that matter this Court held that no notice was necessary.

There was no appearance for the respondent (defendant).

ORDER.

SARGENT, C. J.—Both the Courts have found that the new wall was built on the sight of the old wall including the old foundations. Section 33 of Act VI of 1873, therefore, did not apply, as in point of fact according to the above finding there was no addition to any existing building. The Municipality would, therefore, be liable in damages for any expense the plaintiff may have been put to by their pulling down his wall. Those damages have been assessed at Rs. 48 by the Subordinate Judge, and no objection was taken to the amount in the lower Court of appeal by either party. We must, therefore, for clearness sake, amend the decree of the Court below by adding the words "on its old foundations" after the words "in rebuilding his wall" and also direct that the defendant do pay plaintiff Rs. 48. The plaintiff to have his costs throughout.

Decree amended.

[551] ORIGINAL CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Farran.

THE ADVOCATE GENERAL OF BOMBAY (Plaintiff) v. BAI PUNJABAI AND OTHERS (Defendants).* [18th June and 3rd July, 1894.]

Charity—Trust—Will—Deeds not carrying out will—Misapplication of funds—Mistake—Liability of trustee—Limitation—Fraud—Accounts when directed—Discretion of Court to order accounts—Jurisdiction of Court where charity established by will is outside the jurisdiction—Advocate General, right of—Advocate General barred by decree in prior suit brought by trustees of charity—Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882), s. 43.

One Bhimsi Ruttonsi, a Jain, died in February 1863, leaving a will. His widow Bai Punjabai (defendant No. 1) obtained letters of administration with the will annexed. The testator died possessed (inter alia) of a half share of certain property in Bombay known as the "Bhimpura property." The remaining half share belonged to two other persons, viz., Hirji Dossa and Muddon Tejsi. By his will the testator directed that a moiety of the rental of his half share should be spent on the sadharm (charitable or religious) endowment of a temple at Jackhoo in Cutch, and the other moiety thereof in establishing two sadavarats, one at Jackhoo and the other in Palitana. He also set apart a sum of Rs. 1,26,000, of which Rs. 1,01,000 were to be expended in building a temple at Jackhoo, and the balance of Rs. 25,000 in erecting a market near the temple at Jackhoo, or, if that was impossible, it was to be spent in Palitana. The plaint complained that of the Rs. 1,26,000 about Rs. 60,000 had been spent in buying a property in Bombay, called the "school property," for the purpose of establishing a school there, and about Rs. 50,000 had been expended in erecting a temple at Jackhoo, but that nothing had been done with the balance, nor had a market been established at Jackhoo. All that had been done there was to erect three shops which cost about Rs. 2,000. The plaint further stated that in 1868 Bai Punjabai (defendant No. 1) had made over the "school property" and the "Bhimpura property" to three trustees on trusts, not strictly in accordance with the testator's will as above set forth. Under this deed the trustees were to apply one moiety of the net rents (1) in Sadavarat or alms-giving at Jackhoo and Palitana, ; (2) in feasting the caste people in Bombay and Jackhoo annually; (3) in the worship called satarbhadi at the derasar (temple) in Bombay and Jackhoo, and (4) in entertaining and clothing the gorip (poor) in Bombay and Jackhoo. Of the remaining moiety of the rents (5), one-half was to go to sadharm (charities) of the derasar (temple) at Jackhoo, and (6) the other half to charities at such places as the trustees should think fit.

In the following year, viz., on 17th April, 1869, Bai Punjabai (defendant No. 1) and the owners of the other moiety of the "Bhimpura property" conveyed the whole of that property to trustees, who were to apply a moiety of the rents (which was to be considered as rent from Punjabai's share of the property) (1) in sadavarat and almsgiving at Jackhoo and Palitana; (2) in feasting the caste people in Bombay and Jackhoo annually on the anniversary of Bhimsi Ruttonsi's death; (3) in the worship of the [552] derasar called satarbhadi, and in the entertainment and clothing of the gorip (poor) in Bombay and Jackhoo. The deed also directed the application of the rents of the other moiety of the "Bhimpura property," part of which was to go to a temple at Tera in Cutch and part to another temple at Jackhoo. This later deed, it will be observed, omitted altogether trusts (5) and (6) of the earlier one of 1868 in favour of sadharm for the temple of Jackhoo and for sadharm generally. The trustees appointed by the two deeds were not the same, though some of the trustees of the first were also the trustees of the second. The second deed did not recite or in any way refer to the first. At the date of suit all the trustees named in the deeds were dead except the second defendant. By subsequent deeds, however, new trustees had been appointed, and they were all parties to the present suit. Defendants Nos. 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7 were trustees of the Bhimpura property, and defendants Nos. 8, 9, 10 and 11 of the school property. The plaint filed on the 10th March, 1892, at the relation of two members of the Jain community of Cutch prayed that the charitable trusts of the testator's will might be carried out, and sought for accounts against the widow of the testator and the trustees of both the deeds, and for a scheme, &c.

Held, that the High Court of Bombay had jurisdiction to make a decree declaring the trusts upon which the trustees of the deed of October, 1868, held the property comprised in that deed and for rectifying the deed in accordance with such declaration, but that the Court could not go further in settling a scheme.

Semble, when money is bequeathed for the purpose of founding a charity outside the jurisdiction, the Court hands the money to the trustees named by the testator, leaving it to the Courts of the country in which the charity is to be established to settle the scheme.

Held, also, that the suit was not barred by limitation. It was not one for rectification of the deed of 1868, but rather one against Punjabai (defendant No. 1) and her assigns the trustees of the deed of 1868 and 1869 for the purpose of following the trust property in their hands and having it applied to the proper purposes of the trust, and, therefore, came within s. 10 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877).

Charges of fraud and dishonesty made against trustees of a charity must be established at the hearing of the case, and cannot be allowed to be reserved and proved subsequently in the course of taking accounts.

Where the trust deed of a charity executed subsequently to the death of a testator under whose will the charity was established, does not strictly conform to the provisions of the will, it is not the practice of the Court, when the discrepancy has been made by mistake, to visit the past consequences of the mistake upon the trustees.

The plaintiff in this suit demanded an account from Bai Punjabai of the Bhimpura property from the testator's death to the execution of the deed of 13th October, 1868, and of the school-house property from the date of its purchase to the same time, and also an account against the trustees of the deed of 17th April, 1869, of the income of the Bhimpura property, and of its application.

Held, that accounts ought not to be required from Bai Punjabai. She had made over the property in question to trustees in 1868. There was no evidence that she had ever used any of the income for her own purposes, and the presumption was that she had faithfully discharged her duty. The account was probably barred by article [553] 120 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877). The trustees of the deed of 1869 had paid over the income received by them to the trustees of the earlier deed of 1868, who were entitled to receive it; and, therefore, no account would be decreed against them.

The plaintiff further prayed for an account against the representatives of Rupsi Bharmal, who had been trustee of the deed of 1868 from the date of its execution to his death in 1889. Under a decree passed in a previous suit (No. 113 of 1889), dated 10th August, 1893, brought by the trustees, they had received from Rupsi's estate the balance which in that suit they had claimed to be due from him to the charity. In that suit the trustees had not asked for an account against him.

Held, that the Advocate General as plaintiff in the present suit was barred by the decree in that suit under s. 43 of the Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882). The trustees having then omitted to ask for an account could not sue again. The Advocate General represented the same interests as they did, and was, therefore, equally bound. Even, however, if that were not the case, the Court in the exercise of its discretion would not direct the account asked for.

THE plaint in this case was filed by the Advocate General of Bombay at the relation of Hirji Hansraj, Khimji Vardhman and Jaitha Maneck, who were leading members of the Jain Jackhoo Dossa Oswal caste of Cutch residing at Bombay.

The plaint stated that one Bhimsi Ruttonsi, a member of the above caste, died on the 3rd February, 1863, leaving a will dated 31st January, 1863, and letters of administration with the will annexed were granted to his widow Bai Punjabai (the first defendant) on the 20th July, 1866.

The said testator died possessed of a half share of a certain property in Bombay, known as the "Bhimpura property," which half share yielded an annual rental of about Rs. 2,500. The other half share belonged to Hirji Dossa and Muddon Tejsi. By his will the testator directed that a moiety of the rental of his half share should be spent on the sadharam (charitable or religious) endowment of the derasar (temple) of Jackhoo in Cutch and the other moiety in establishing two sadavarats, one in the town of Jackhoo and the other in Sri Palitana. He also set apart a sum of Rs. 1,26,000, of which Rs. 1,01,000 were to be expended in building a temple at Jackhoo, and the balance of Rs. 25,000 to be spent in erecting a market near the temple at Jackhoo, or, if that was impossible, to be spent in Sri Palitana.

The plaint stated that the relators believed that of the Rs. 1,26,000 set apart by the testator, about Rs. 60,000 had been [554] spent in purchasing a property in Bombay (called the "school property") for the purpose of establishing there a school, and about Rs. 50,000 had been expended in erecting a temple at Jackhoo, but nothing had been done with the balance, nor had a market been established at Jackhoo. All that had been done there was to erect three shops, which did not cost more than Rs. 2,000.

It was further alleged that, after obtaining letters of administration, Bai Punjabai (the first defendant) had at first handed over the management of the testator's estate to the testator's brother Jewraj Ruttonsi, who continued to manage for a short time until he became insolvent. On his insolvency, Bai Punjabai (defendant No. 1) had caused a certain deed, purporting to be a trust-deed, to be prepared and executed, by which she purported to convey, as absolute owner in her own right, the "school property" and the half share in the "Bhimpura property" to trustees for purposes duly set forth. The said deed was executed by her on the 13th October, 1868.

On the 17th April, 1869, a second deed was executed by her, as owner in her own right, of the testator's said half share of the "Bhimpura property," and by the owners of the other half share of it. By this deed the whole of the said "Bhimpura property" was vested in trustees on trusts, more or less similar to those created by the first deed. The trustees, however, of the two deeds were not the same, though some of the trustees of the first were also trustees of the second ; nor did the second deed recite or in any way refer to the first.

The trustees named in the said two deeds were all dead at the date of suit except Walji Natha (the second defendant). By subsequent deeds, however, new trustees had been appointed, and these were all parties to the present suit. The defendants Nos. 2, 3, 4, 5, 6 and 7 were trustees of the "Bhimpura property," and defendants Nos. 8, 9, 10 and 11 were the trustees of the "school property."

The plaint further stated that by the testator's will, as by the said two trust-deeds, it was provided that money for certain purposes was to be sent to Jackhoo, but that none whatever had [555] been sent there for several years. It complained that no sadavarat had been established at Sri Palitana, and only a very small sum had been sent each year by the trustees for the sadavarat at Jackhoo.

One Rupsi Madan alias Bharmal was from the first a trustee of both deeds and continued a trustee until his death in 1889. It was he who chiefly collected the rents of both the "school property" and the "Bhimpura property" and kept the books of account, and the relators charged that during his management he and the testator's widow Bai Punjabai (defendant No. 1) had misappropriated and converted to their own use the greater part of the income of both these properties amounting to Rs. 40,000 or thereabouts. Rupsi Madan (alias Bharmal) being dead at the date of suit, his heirs, Dhanji Kessowji and Dhanbai, were made parties (defendants Nos. 12 and 13).

The plaint stated that the relators had been advised that it was doubtful whether the said trust-deeds were good and effectual dispositions of the property which they purported to dispose of: that many of the trusts thereof were not in accordance with the directions of the will and were consequently void, and they desired that the Court should decide how far the deeds were valid, and should provide for the proper administration of the religious and charitable trusts created by the will. They, therefore, prayed for a declaration as to what were the charitable devises and gifts of the will ; for an account against the first defendant and, if necessary, for administration of the testator's estate ; for a scheme for the management of the several charities created by the testator ; for an account against the trustee defendants, and that the heirs of Rupsi Madan alias Bharmal (defendants Nos. 12 and 13) should be ordered to pay what should be found due from his estate; for an injunction and receiver, &c.

The defendants denied all the allegations made against them and pleaded limitation.

The issues raised (inter alia) the following points :—

(1) Whether the trust-deeds were not executed bona fide, and whether, even if not in strict accordance with the testator's will, the Court would now interfere ?

[556] (2) Whether the trust moneys had not been properly expended, and whether, even if misapplied by mistake, the Court would order a refund after so long a lapse of time ?

(3) Whether there was not a misjoinder of causes of action in the suit ?

(4) Whether the proceedings in a former suit (No. 113 of 1892) were not a bar to this suit, wholly or in part ?

(5) The general issue.

Inverarity and Scott for defendant No. 13.
Defendants Nos. 8, 12, 14 did not appear.

Inverarity for first and other defendants:—There is a misjoinder of causes of action. The plaintiff repudiates the trust deeds. He, therefore, cannot join the trustees of those deeds with Punjabai, and sue them all together. He cannot approbate and reprobate. Nor can he join two sets of trustees under two separate deeds in one suit. By the deeds the trustees are given a large discretion in expending the trust money which the Court will not interfere with. Punjabai as administratrix acted bona fide in executing the trust deeds—Advocate General v. Vishvanath(1); Tudor on Charities (3rd Ed.), p. 1—11; Goodman v. Mayor of Saltash(2); Andrews v. M'Guffog(3); Tudor on Charities (3rd Ed.), p. 302.

The suit against Punjabai is barred by limitation. She is not a trustee within s. 10 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877)—Kathiawar Trading Co. v. Virchand(4). The trustees accepted the trusts declared in the deeds executed by Bai Punjabai. There is no allegation of fraud or breach of trust against them. An account is also sought against Rupsi Bharmal whose representatives have been made parties. But Rupsi's liability in respect of these matters has been already ascertained in suit No. 113 of [557] 1892, in which the trustees of the charity were plaintiffs, and his estate was ordered to pay a certain sum. The question of his liability is res judicata and cannot be re-opened in this suit. The Advocate General and the trustees of the charity represent the same interests. Whatever binds them binds him. In the former suit they omitted to ask for an account against Rupsi Bharmal, and they could not ask for it now: see s. 43 of the Civil Procedure Code. Neither, therefore, can the Advocate General, who has no independent right: Tudor on Charities (3rd Ed.), p. 295; Attorney General v. Cullum(5). As to the trusts of the deed, Tudor on Charities (3rd Ed.), p. 127; Mayor of Lyons v. Advocate General (6); Attorney General v. Caius College (7); Attorney General v. Shearman(8).

Lang (Advocate General) for plaintiff:—The trusts of the deeds are at variance with the trusts of the will: Tudar on Charities (3rd Ed.), p. 309. Trustees must be ordered to account—Attorney General v. Earl of Stamford(9); Attorney General v. Exeter(10).

JUDGMENT.

3rd July, 1894. FARRAN, J.—It will be convenient, before stating the nature of the pleadings and the questions which arise for decision, to refer to certain main facts which are not in dispute between the parties.

Ruttonsi Bhimsi, by his will dated the 31st of January, 1863, directed that one-fourth of the income of a certain property called the "Bhimpura property," in which he had a half-share, should appertain to the sadharm account of the derasar at Jackhoo in Cutch, and the remaining one-fourth share should be kept for his sadharm account, out of which two sadavarats were to be established, one in Jackhoo and one in Palitana. He also directed that the amount of the devdharm and sadharm money should be Rs. 1,26,000—Rs. 1,01,000 for devdharm and Rs. 25,000 for sadharm.

(10) Jacob, 443.

It will be necessary to refer more in detail to these charitable bequests hereafter. He appointed his wife, the defendant Punjabai, the heiress of his whole property after his death, and Hirji Dossa and Bojraj Devsi upris over her.

[558] The testator was of the Jain religion. Jackhoo in Cutch was his native town. He had built a temple there in his life-time. He died in February, 1863. At the time of his death he was reputed to be and was, in fact, a very wealthy man, but the greater part of his money was employed in the firm of Hirji Bhimsi & Co., in which he was a partner. The firm failed in Samvat 1925 (1864-1865), and the whole of his capital embarked in it was lost, and decrees for considerable amounts were passed against his widow Punjabai in consequence of her connection with the firm.

Soon after the death of the testator, Punjabai expended the Rs. 1,26,000. She purchased a house, now called the "school house," and laid out the balance in erecting and adorning a temple at Jackhoo, close to the temple built by the testator. The Advocate-General in his opening speech stated that he did not quarrel with this expenditure or ask for an account of it.

On the 13th October, 1868, Punjabai by a deed of that date conveyed the "school-house" and the testator's moiety of the "Bhimpura property" to Ramji Jehta, Rupsi Bharmal and Vardhman Punsi in trust for charitable and pious purposes in the indenture more particularly described. The trusts of the net rents were:—

(1) As to one moiety to apply the same in sadavarat or almsgiving at Jackhoo and Palitana, and in feasting the caste people in Bombay and Jackhoo annually on the anniversary of the death of Bhimsi Ruttonsi, in the worship called satarbhadi at the derasars in Bombay and Jackhoo, and in the entertainment and clothing of the gorip in Bombay and Jackhoo.

(2) As to one-fourth part, to apply the same towards sadharm charities of the derasar at Jackhoo.

(3) As to the remaining fourth part, to apply the same towards sadharm (charities) at such places as the trustees should think fit.

On the 17th of April, 1869, Punjabai and the owners of the remaining moiety of the "Bhimpura property," viz., Hirji Dossa and Muddon Tejsi, who were each entitled to one-fourth share therein, conveyed without reference to the deed of the 13th October, 1868, the Bhimpura estate to Ramji Jetha, Rupsi [559] Bharmal, Lalji Kessow, Nagsi Kirpal, Jaitha Muddon and Velji Nathu in trust:—

(1) As to one moiety of the net rents, which was to be considered as derived from the share of Punjabai, to apply the same in sadavarat or alms-giving at Jackhoo and Palitana, in feasting the caste people in Bombay and Jackhoo annually on the anniversary of the death of Bhimsi Ruttonsi, in the worship of derasar called satarbhadi, and in the entertainment and clothing of the gorip in Bombay and Jackhoo.

(2) As to one-fourth part of the net rents, which was to be considered as derived from the share of Hirji Dossa, to apply the same for the benefit of a certain temple of Tera in Cutch.

(3) As to the remaining fourth part of the net rents, which was to be considered as derived from the share of Muddon Tejsi, to apply the same for the benefit of another temple at Jackhoo in Cutch.

It will be seen that the trusts (2) and (3) in favour of sadharm for the temple of Jackhoo and for sadharm generally, declared in the indenture of

JULY 3.
ORIGINAL CIVIL.
18 B. 551.

October, 1868, are omitted in the later indenture. It is submitted on behalf of Punjabai—and her evidence tends to support the submission—that this omission arose from an error or oversight. It is not necessary to decide this absolutely, for Punjabai having divested herself of all interest in the Bhimpura property by the deed of October, 1868, and having declared the trusts defined by that deed, could not convey the same property to other trustees upon different or less extensive trusts, nor could she indeed validly convey it at all. The first two trustees of the later deed, being the same persons as the first two trustees of the earlier deed, had notice of the contents of the earlier deed, and through them, I think, that all the trustees of the later deed had similar notice. As to Punjabai's half share in the rents and profits of the "Bhimpura property," the trustees of the later deed were, therefore, bound to hand them over to the trustees of the earlier deed, who were legally entitled to them. Had they refused to do so, the trustees of the earlier deed could have recovered them as money received to their use. This will be an important circumstance when I come to consider the question of account.

[560] The second deed seems to have been intended as machinery for the more easy management and collection of rents of the Bhimpura estate, having regard to the sub-division of interests therein. It was evidently so regarded by the original trustees. The Bhimpura rents were collected, and its repairs were effected in common by one trustee of the deed of 1869 acting on behalf of all. At the close of each year the net rents were divided into four parts, of which two were made over to Rupsi Bharmal and Ramji Jetha on behalf of what I may call Punjabai's charities, while the remaining two-fourths were made over—one-fourth each—to the two trustees who were supposed to represent the charities of Hirji Dossa and Muddon Tejsi respectively. The half share received by Punjabai's trustees was brought into the account kept by the trustees of the deed of October, 1868. It must, therefore, be taken that the "school-house" and "Bhimpura" properties have been held since 1868 upon the trusts declared by the deed of October, 1868, by the trustees of that deed, though the rents of the Bhimpura estate have been, in fact, collected by the trustees of the later deed.

It is not denied that the trusts declared by the deed of October, 1868, are not in strict accordance with the directions contained in the will of Bhimsi Ruttonsi, and that the Court, if its aid had been invoked in time, and if it has jurisdiction in the matter, might properly have been called upon to ascertain the trusts of the will and those declared by the deed so as to bring them into accordance with the wishes of the testator, and for that purpose to frame a scheme. This is the main object of the suit. Such relief is prayed for in paragraphs (a) and (d) of the prayer of the plaint. Issues 2 and 22 raise the questions (1) as to whether the suit is not too late, and (2) as to whether the Court will undertake the administration of a trust to be executed in foreign territories. The question whether the Advocate-General can sue on behalf of the charities in question, is not directly or indirectly raised in the pleadings or issues, nor was it alluded to in argument. I must take it, therefore, that his right to sue is not disputed. See Re Frazer (1).

[561] First as to jurisdiction: The properties which are admitted to be held in charitable trusts are in Bombay, and the trustees of such properties are also in Bombay. The derasar at Jackhoo, one of the admitted objects of the trusts, complains (through the Advocate-General) that the deed under which the trustees hold does not correctly define the trusts created in its favour by the testator, and prays the Court to declare this and to rectify the deed. On principle I can see no objection to the Court granting this relief. How does the case stand upon the authorities ? I do not think that a strictly analogous case has arisen or could arise in England. The cases referred to in Tudor on Charitable Trusts (3rd Ed.), p. 157, notes (m) (n) and (o), are all cases of bequests of money to found a charity in territories out of the jurisdiction of the Court. What the Court in such cases does, is to hand the money to the trustees named by the testator, leaving it to the Courts of the country in which the charity is to be carried out, to settle the scheme in accordance with which the trustee is to deal with the money. They certainly do not decide that if the trustee for a charity abroad does not carry out the trusts in favour of such charity, the Court will not assist the charity, the trustee and the fund being in England. In a very recent case, where a fund was bequeathed to a trustee in trust for the benefit of the blind in Inverness Shire, the Supreme Court in London directed the Attorney-General to apply to the Court of Session in Edinborough to settle a scheme for its administration with a view to handing over the fund to the trustees indicated in such scheme, and thus in effect applied the money to the purpose indicated by the testator—Re Frazer (1). The case of The Mayor of Lyons v. East India Company (2) is, I think, direct authority for the making of a decree declaring the trusts upon which the trustees of the deed of October, 1868, held the properties comprised in that deed and for rectifying the deed in accordance with such declaration. I do not think that I ought, upon the authorities, to go further in the way of settling a scheme in this case.

Secondly, as to lapse of time: Independently of the Law of Limitation, I do not think that Courts in England have ever refused to stop the improper application of funds of a charity however [562] long the misapplication has continued—Attorney General v. St. John's Hospital, Bedford (3) ; Tudor's Charitable Trusts (3rd Ed.), p. 299. In the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) there is no specific article, that I can find, which is applicable to the present suit; but if it is not excluded from the Limitation Law by s. 10 of the Act, art. 120 would no doubt apply to it. This would give the Advocate General six years to sue for a rectification of the deed of 1868 from the time when his cause of action arose. The Advocate General, however, contends that this is not the nature of the case, but that it is a suit against Punjabai and her assigns, the trustees of the deeds of 1868 and 1869, for the purpose of following the trust property in their hands and having it applied to the proper purposes of the trust. He relies, in support of his contention, on the judgment of the Privy Council in Balwant Rao v. Purun Mal (4). I think that his contention is correct. If the deed had provided that half of the income of the premises was to be paid to Punjabai, it seems to me that the tenth section of the Act must have applied. Does it make any difference if the income is directed to be applied in part to some charitable object not within the scope of the original trust ? I am of opinion that it does not. It is not like the case of a lease improperly granted, where the statute begins to run in favour of the lessee from the date of the lease—Magdalen College v. Attorney General (5). It is the case of a volunteer holding trust lands to whom the statute does not apply, and in whose case notice is immaterial. The question is not free from difficulty, but I have come to the conclusion that the suit is not time-barred.

There is not much difficulty in declaring the trusts of the will of Bhimsi Ruttonsi and in indicating the lines of amendment required to bring the deeds into conformity with the declaration. As to the Bhimpura property, the will directs that half the net income of the testator's moiety is to be held in trust for sadharm account of the derasar at Jackhoo, and the other half of such income is to be held in trust for sadharm account generally, and that out of such last mentioned sadharm account, sadavarats are to be established at Jackhoo and Palitana. [563] Subject, therefore, to the establishments of such sadavarats the half of the net rents of the moiety of Bhimpura are applicable to sadharm generally. Of the Rs. 1,26,000 set apart for devdharm and sadharm, divided into Rs. 1,01,000 for devdharm and Rs. 25,000 for sadharm, Rs. 65,000 in round numbers have been already spent in devdharm works, which I think is properly applicable to the devdharm fund. The school-house represents the remaining Rs. 61,000. Its rents are applicable in the proportion of 36 to 25 to devdharm and sadharm objects respectively. When the funds are permanently invested, there does not appear to be any practical difference between these objects.

The important question is, whether the feasting of the caste upon the anniversary of the death of Ruttonsi Bhimsi can be legitimately kept up out of the net income of the charity property not specifically appropriated. If it can, the provisions of the deed of 1868 will require but little modification. Mr. Inverarity argued in favour of this contention very ingeniously. He started with the proposition that sadharm meant, as translated in the will, religious or charitable purpose. He cited authorities to show that a trust for the benefit of a particular class of the inhabitants of a parish or town was a charitable trust—Goodman v. Mayor of Saltash(1), and then drew the conclusion that the feeding of the caste on the anniversary in question was a charitable trust, and that the sadharm fund was, therefore, applicable to it. The reasoning is, I think, rather too fanciful. It starts with the assumption that sadharm is the equivalent of the English word "charitable" as judicially interpreted. This is really begging the question. If it is, his argument is correct. The argument fails if it is not. The real inquiry should be whether a Jain in the position of Ruttonsi Bhimsi could reasonably he held to include such feasting within the expression of sadharm. In the 12th clause of his will he directs as follows:—"In the derasar in the town of Jackhoo in Cutch and in Bombay, satarbhadi puja is to be performed and our caste is to be annually feasted one day each and every year." He sets apart no fund for this purpose. Linking the feasting of the caste with a particular worship seems to indicate that he placed them in the same category. As he set apart no fund for these purposes, it may not unreasonably be [564] supposed that the clause is a further direction as to how part of his sadharm is to be expended. That was apparently the construction which Punjabai and her upris put upon the will more than twenty-eight years ago—a construction which has been acted upon ever since, and which, therefore, ought not to be lightly disregarded. To do so now would be to defeat one particular object which the testator had in view in order to further an object which he expressed only in general terms, both being charitable. I have not evidence before me sufficient to enable me to determine whether the testator can be intended to have used "sadharm" in such a sense as to include this feast. I shall hear further evidence upon the point before I rectify the deed in accordance with this judgment. As to the deed of 1869, it will be sufficient if it is altered by striking out the particular charitable trust as to Punjabai's moiety, and directing that moiety of the rents to be held on the trusts of the deed of 1868 as amended by this decree.

I now come to the charges made in the plaint against the trustees and Punjabai, and to the accounts which are prayed for. It is objected that the plaint in this respect is multifarious. I do not consider that it is open to that objection, but I need not decide it. The decree which I shall make will not err in that respect.

Para. 11 of the plaint states that the trustee Rupsi Madan alias Bharmal chiefly collected the rents and profits of the charitable properties and kept the account relating thereto, and the relators charge that during his management the said Rupsi Madan and with his aid and connivance the defendant Bai Punjabai misappropriated and converted to their own use the greater part of the income of the said properties amounting to the sum of Rs. 40,000.

Issues 7 and 21 were raised on behalf of Punjabai and the representatives of Rupsi Madan respectively to challenge that charge. The Advocate General closed his case without offering a particle of evidence in support of it; but during the address of Mr. Inverarity, who was counsel for Punjabai and Rupsi Madan's representatives, he stated that he had called no evidence about the accounts, as the Court had intimated that it would not itself take the accounts. I allowed him at the close of Mr. Inverarity's [565] address to call such evidence as he might be advised. That which he called was of the most unsubstantial nature upon which to base so grave and serious a charge. (His Lordship discussed the evidence upon this point and continued :—)

Under these circumstances I must hold that the charge of fraud and dishonesty against Punjabai and Rupsi Bharmal has not been established. The Advocate General urges that, if the accounts are taken, he may still be able to establish it. Such a charge, however, if put forward, must be established at the hearing, and cannot be allowed to be reserved—Lalbhai v. Kavasji (1). I must, therefore, find the 7th and 21st issues in the negative. The plaint, in so far as it charges fraud and dishonesty against Punjabai and Rupsi Madan, will stand dismissed with costs.

Now as to the accounts. Admittedly the expenditure of the charitable income has not been in exact conformity with the will of Bhimsi Ruttonsi; but, if the deed of October, 1868, and the expenditure under it do not strictly conform to his directions I consider that this was the result of a bona fide mistake on the part of Punjabai, and it is not the practice of the Court to visit the past consequences of such a mistake upon the trustees of a charity—Attorney General v. Wax Chandlers Co. (2); Andrews v. M'Guffog (3); Tudor on Charitable Trusts (3rd Ed.), p. 303. For the consequences, therefore, of her execution of the deed of October, 1868, not being in accordance with Bhimsi Ruttonsi's will, no accounts will be directed against Punjabai, nor a fortiori against the trustees appointed under that deed, whose duty it was to carry out its provisions. The Advocate General in the course of Mr. Inverarity's address admitted the application of this principle, and said that he would be content if the accounts were taken, so that the trustees of the several deeds, including Punjabai, should account on the footing of their own deeds.

The accounts which the Advocate General eventually insisted were—

(1) An account against Punjabai of the income of the "Bhimpura property" from the death of Bhimsi Ruttonsi to the execution [566] of the deed of the 13th October, 1868, and of the income of the "school-house property" from the date of its purchase to the same time;

(2) An account against the trustees of the deed of 17th April, 1869, of the income of Bhimsi Ruttonsi's moiety of the "Bhimpura property," and of its application;

(3) An account against the trustees of the deed of 13th October, 1868, of the income of both properties and of its expenditure according to the trusts of the deed. As I understood him, Punjabai was to render, or be liable upon, this account with the trustees of the deed.

I deal with them in order:

(1) It appears to me that it would, at this distance of time, be a hardship, amounting to a positive injustice, to direct Punjabai to bring in the first mentioned accounts even if, having regard to the Law of Limitation, I have the power to do so. She made over the property to trustees in 1868. Down to then she says that her upris managed the property under her directions, and she swears that an anna of its income she never used for her own purposes. There is no evidence to the contrary to show that she did. The presumption, under the circumstances, is that she faithfully discharged her duty, and no account should be directed against her—Attorney General v. Earl of Stamford(1). I am inclined to think, however, that such an account is barred under art. 120 of the Limitation Act, even admitting that she was, as I consider that she was, a trustee in whom the trust property was vested as the heiress appointed by the will of Bhimsi Ruttonsi. The evidence does not afford any ground for supposing that Punjabai has trust property in her hands which it is sought to follow. The claim is now reduced to a simple claim against her as trustee for an account of income and disbursement and for the balance, if any. It falls within the ruling in Saroda v. Brojo Nath(2) followed in Shapurji v. Bhikaiji (3). The remarks of the Judges in Metropolitan Bank v. Heiron(4) do not militate against this view. Cotton, L.J., there assumes a [567] fund in the hands of a trustee and his waste or misapplication of it. These two facts proved, time, in England, does not bar the suit. These facts are not both proved here. In the absence of proof of dishonesty and fraud, no account can be directed against Punjabai in conjunction with the trustees of the deeds which she has executed, even if hers have been the hands, of which there is no proof, to administer the funds of the charities—Attorney General v. Chesterfield (5). No account will, therefore, be directed.

(2) The remarks which I have made in an early part of my judgment dispose of the second account. Regular accounts of the income of the "Bhimpura property" have been kept and adjusted each year, and the share of the net income appertaining to Bhimsi Ruttonsi's charities has been from time to time made over to Rupsi Bharmal. With the receipt of these sums from time to time the trustees of the deed of 1868 will be charged, and, as far as the trustees of the deed of 1869 are concerned, the matter ends there and an account is unnecessary. The defendants Nos. 2, 3, 4 and 11 are the present trustees of that deed, who are not also trustees of the deed of 1868. No account will be decreed against them. Two of them desire to retire. They can do so on taking the proper steps.

(3) The real difficulty is as to whether an account should be directed against the trustees of the deed of 1868 and as to the nature of such an account if it be directed.

The original trustees of the deed are all dead. Vardhman Punsi died on 10th November, 1880; Ramji Jetha died in 1885. Rupsi Bharmal then remained the sole surviving trustee, and continued so until his death on the 10th March, 1889. By an order of Court dated 26th August, 1889, the defendants Jethabhai Vardhman, Damji Ramji, Khetsi Jetha and Tejpal Coresi were appointed trustees of the deed, and are now its trustees. Since their appointment there has been considerable litigation in reference to the "school-house property." There can be no objection to directing them to bring in the account, so that on further directions the exact state of the funds may be known. It is not suggested [568] that there is any difficulty in bringing in this account, or that these trustees have not done what they could to carry out the trusts of their deed. Their accounts will be a mere matter of form from the date of their appointment. The representatives of Vardhman Punsi and Ramji Jetha respectively, as such, have not been made parties to these proceedings, so that the account which the Advocate General presses for, is an account against the representatives of Rupsi Bharmal. Ought I to grant it? It is admitted that it is a matter for the exercise of the discretion of the Court as to how far back the accounts should be directed. If directed here it would have to embrace the whole period from 1868, because, in order to arrive at the balance in any particular year to start with, the accounts of the preceding years would have to be investigated. Since the death of Rupsi the trustees of the deed have received from his estate the balance which they considered to be due from him to the charity. The decree awarding them that relief was passed in suit No. 113 of 1892, and is dated 10th August, 1893. The proceedings in that suit are relied upon as a bar to this claim. The trustees in that suit could have asked for an account, and did not. They omitted to sue in respect of that portion of their claim, and under s. 43 of the Code of Civil Procedure could not now sue in respect of it. The Advocate General, it is urged, represents the same interests as the trustees, and he is equally barred with them in now asserting his claim to an account. I am, I confess, much struck with this reasoning, and do not at present see the answer to it. The trustees and the Advocate General both represent the Jain community; the Advocate General has no right independent of that community—Magdalen College v. Attorney General (1). The trustees represent the derasar, and so does the Advocate General. It is not suggested that there was any fraud or collusion in the obtaining of the decree in suit No. 113 of 1892. The defendants in that suit objected to a decree being passed against them on the ground that this suit upon the same cause of action was then pending. The Advocate General was himself counsel for the plaintiffs in that suit, and notwithstanding the defendant's plea pressed for a decree. I hold that the decree in suit No. 113 of [569] 1892 is a bar to the present claim of the Advocate General against the representatives of Rupsi Bharmal.

Assuming, however, that I am wrong in that view, I still consider that I ought not to direct the accounts. I must consider the evidence laid before me, and having done so I think that it would not benefit the charities to direct this account. So far as I can judge, it would result in nothing of importance even if a few errors were detected in the accounts. It would be a long and costly account, and at this distance of time the books would be the only evidence in the case. The Court can see now pretty nearly what they would show. The cost of taking the account would most probably fall on the charity. On the whole I think that I am exercising a wise discretion in refusing to open up these accounts. I must decree accordingly.

The minutes of the decree will declare that the trusts declared by the deeds of 1868 and 1869 are not in accordance with the directions declared in the will of Bhimsi Ruttonsi, and that they ought to be amended so as to bring them into accordance with such last-mentioned direction.

Declare that the trusts declared by the will of Bhimsi Ruttonsi as set out in the judgment, and let the Judge in chamber rectify the deeds so as to bring them into accord with the trusts as declared by the judgment. Declare that the charges of fraud and dishonesty made against Punjabai and Rupsi Bharmal respectively have not been established.

Let an account be taken of the net income and profits of the properties comprised in the deed of 1868 and of all other moneys which have come to the hands of the defendants, the present trustees of the deed of 1868, as such trustees, and let it be ascertained what sum they now hold as such trustees.

The relators to pay the costs of the defendants Punjabai and Rupsi Bharmal's representatives occasioned by the charges of fraud and dishonesty and of the claim for an account against them and to pay their own costs on these heads. The Advocate General to have his general costs, except as aforesaid, paid out of the trust funds.

[570] The trustees of the deed of 1869 to have their costs out of the trust funds taxed as between attorney and client.

The trustees of the deed of 1868 to have their costs out of such funds taxed as between attorney and client.

Decree accordingly.

CASE stated for the opinion of the High Court under s. 69 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act (XV of 1882) by C. W. Chitty, Chief Judge.

The plaintiff having bought at Sholapur a shah jog hundi drawn upon the defendant at Bombay endorsed it to his agent at Bombay, Ramrukh Ramkisson, and sent it by post to him for collection. In course of its transmission it was stolen, and the [571] name of Ramrukh Ramkisson was expunged, and another name, viz., that of Dwarkadas Lalji, was substituted in its place. On the 9th December, 1893, the hundi was presented for payment to the defendants in Bombay by a person giving his name as Dwarkadas Lalji, and the defendants thereupon without inquiry paid it. The plaintiffs in this suit sought to recover the value of the hundi from the defendants.

The following is a full statement of the facts as stated in the judgment of the Chief Judge:—

On the 8th December, 1893, the plaintiffs' firm at Sholapur bought a shah jog hundi at that place and paid full value for the same. It was then endorsed in favour of Ramrukh Ramkisson, the plaintiff's agent in Bombay, for realization, and on the same day sent to him by post. At the same time a post card was sent advising the despatch of the hundi. Neither letter nor post card arrived at their destination. Not hearing of their arrival, the plaintiffs' firm sent a second post card, in reply to which their agent stated that no hundi was received. The plaintiffs at Sholapur thereupon on the 14th December, 1893, went to the drawer and demanded a petha. The drawer, however, having by that time received the khoka from the defendant, declined to give a petha. The plaintiffs' man then came to Bombay to make inquiries. It then appeared that the hundi had been presented to the defendant on the 9th December, 1893, by some person giving his name as Dwarkadas Lalji and giving an address in Hanuman Gully, and that the defendant had sent the money there by his man, who had paid it to some one whom he took to be the cashier of the said Dwarkadas Lalji. On the defendant's man going there again with the plaintiffs' man, no trace of any person known as Dwarkadas Lalji could be found, nor were his whereabouts discovered. It was quite clear that the hundi was stolen or intercepted during transit and the name of Ramrukh Ramkisson expunged and that of Dwarkadas Lalji substituted. The defendant admittedly paid the amount of the hundi without inquiry as to the respectability or position of the person to whom he paid.

[572] "I have no hesitation in adhering to my former finding that the old established custom still prevails, and that a defendant cannot avoid liability in respect of a shah jog hundi which he has paid, unless he can show that he has paid it to shah. The only question is whether in this case the hundi being specially endorsed makes any difference. No doubt the effect of the endorsement would be to restrict payment to the indorsee or some one claiming through him; but this cannot, in my opinion, render the words shah jog nugatory, and I think payment could only be made to such endorsee after due inquiry to see whether or not he was shah. This view is borne out by the case of Thakur Das v. Futteh Mull (1), and is also in accordance, to a certain extent, with the view taken by the defendant's own witnesses, who say they never look to the endorsement but only to the body of the hundi. No authority has been quoted in support of the proposition that a shah jog hundi loses its character as such, by being endorsed in favour of a particular person.

"As to whether the acts of the defendant amounted to a conversion of the hundi, I think that there can be no doubt. By accepting it, paying the amount to a person not entitled to it, and receiving the khoka and forwarding it to the drawer, the defendant clearly converted the hundi to his own use and deprived the plaintiff, the lawful owner of the hundi, of his right in it. The plaintiff can, therefore, sue him in trover.

"The charges of negligence on the part of the plaintiff are unsupported by any evidence, and must fail. In my opinion, the plaintiffs acted with all due diligence, and however soon they communicated with the defendants it would have been of no avail, as the hundi was paid on the 9th December, 1893, the very next day after its despatch. In my opinion, also the defendant is deserving of blame in not paying more attention to the endorsement on the hundi, a cursory glance at which would show that it had been tampered with, something expunged, and the name of Dwarkadas Lalji written over. Under these circumstances I must pass a decree for the plaintiffs for Rs. 1,010 and costs, and certify Rs. 135 as the professional costs of the plaintiff's attorney. At the request of the defendant I make my judgment contingent on the opinion of the High Court."

The following was the case stated for the High Court :—

"1. This was a suit brought by the plaintiffs as the last bona fide holders for value of a hundi for Rs. 1,000 to recover that sum and interest from the defendants, who were the drawer and drawee of the said hundi.

"2. On reading the plaint I was of opinion that there was no cause of action therein disclosed against the first defendant, the drawer of the hundi, and acting on the suggestion of the Court, the plaintiffs' attorney accordingly withdrew his claim as against the first defendant, and the suit proceeded against the drawee alone, who is hereafter called the defendant.

[573] "3. The facts of the case are fully set out in my judgment, copy of which is hereto annexed, and to which for brevity's sake I crave leave to refer.

"4. I was of opinion, on the evidence, that there had been no such change in the custom of merchants with regard to paying shah jog hundi as the defendant alleged, but that the custom as stated in the case reported at 6 Bom. H. C. Rep. 24, still obtained and is in force, and that such a hundi was only payable to a person who was shah, of which fact it is necessary for the payee to satisfy himself before he can safely make payment.

"5. I was of opinion that in this case the defendant having admittedly paid the amount of this hundi, without any inquiry, to a person who was not shah, and having received the khoka with an endorsement of payment, and having returned the same to the drawer, had been guilty of conversion of the said hundi and was liable to the plaintiffs, the lawful owners thereof, in trover (see Lovell v. Martin (1).

"6. It did not, in my opinion, alter the character of the hundi that it was endorsed for realization in favour of a particular individual. That fact could not, I thought, absolve the defendant of the duty which would otherwise lie upon him of making inquiries as to the respectability and position of the payee (see Thakur Das v. Futteh Mull (2)).

"7. Under these circumstances I held that the defendant had converted the hundi to his use, for which act he was answerable to the plaintiffs. I, therefore, passed a decree against him for Rs. 1,010 (the amount of the said hundi and two months' interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum) and costs, and certified Rs. 135 as the professional costs of the plaintiff's attorney. At the request of the defendant's pleader I made my judgment contingent on the opinion of the High Court.

"8. The defendant's pleader formulated the following questions:—

"(i) Whether the circumstances of the case amount to a conversion of the hundi on the part of the defendant?

[574] "(ii) If yes, whether the defendant is liable to refund to the plaintiffs the amount of the hundi?

"(iii) Whether (the hundi being payable by endorsement to Dwarkadas Lalji), the defendant is not discharged by such payment?

"(iv) Whether the hundi continued to be a shah jog hundi after being endorsed to a particular person?

"(v) Whether the drawee's omission to detect the alteration is such negligence on his part as to render him liable to the plaintiffs?

"Whether there was any privity of contract between plaintiffs, who were the payees of the hundi, and the defendant, the drawee, who had not accepted in their favour?

"9. The first question appeared to me to be a question rather of fact than of law, but otherwise unobjectionable.

"The second question depends on the answer given to the first.

"To the third and fourth questions I have no objection.

"The points raised by the fifth and sixth questions were not decided by me, as on the view which I took of the case it appeared to be unnecessary. I apprehend, therefore, that their Lordships will not answer them, unless their opinion on the point of conversion should be contrary to mine.

In case that may be so, I should perhaps mention that, in my opinion, and as a point of fact, the defendant was negligent in not detecting the forged endorsement on the hundi, inasmuch as it is apparent, on the most cursory glance, that some name has been expunged and the name of Dwarkadas Lalji written over it in a handwriting different to that of the rest of the endorsement.

"10. With these remarks I leave the case in their Lordships' hands. The defendant has deposited in Court the amount of the decree and costs, together with Rs. 50 to meet the costs of reference."

Lang and Scott, for the second defendant:—The question is whether the drawee who has not accepted is liable to the holder and endorsee. It is not a question of his liability to the drawer. We say there is no privity of contract between the plaintiff and the [575] defendant. We contend that the judgment in Davlatram v. Bulakidas (1) applies to the case where a hundi without endorsement is presented for payment. It is only then that the obligation to inquire into the solvency and respectability of the shah arises. But there is no such obligation where, as in this case, the name of the person actually presenting the hundi appears endorsed upon it. The only obligation in such a case is to see that the person so named in the hundi is the person presenting it. That person is then the shah. No further inquiry need be made. We rely on the case of Thakur Das v. Futteh Mull (2). They also cited Sulleman Hussein v. The New Oriental Bank Corporation (3) and Lovell v. Martin (4).

There was no negligence on the defendants' part, inasmuch as they ascertained that the name of the person who presented the hundi was the name endorsed on it. He referred to s. 85 of the Negotiable Instruments Act and s. 59 of the English Act 16 and 17 Vict., c. 59.

[FARRAN, J.—You must read the whole of the Negotiable Instruments Act with reference to s. 2. Local usage is not affected.]

Inverarity, for plaintiff:—The plaintiff is found to be the lawful holder of the hundi. He as lawful holder endorsed it to his agent for collection. It was stolen, and an endorsement was forged on it. A forged endorsement is a nullity; Chalmers on Bills of Exchange, p. 63—80. The hundi is to be regarded as if there was no name in it.

Dwarkadas Lalji was never the shah to whom payment was to be made. He referred to Thakur Das v. Futteh Mull (2); Byles on Bills of Exchange, p. 346. The Negotiable Instruments Act is to be read with ss. 6, 7 and 10 and s. 85. The defendant's honesty is irrelevant: Pollock on Torts, 310-311; Hollins v. Fowler (5).

J.—From the case stated by the Chief Judge of the Court of Small Causes, Bombay, it appears that on the 8th December, 1893, the plaintiffs' firm at Sholapur having bought a shah jog hundi for Rs. 1,000, and paid full value for it, endorsed it in favour of Ramrukh Ramkisson, their agent in Bombay, for realization, and on the same day, sent it to him by post. At the same time a post card was sent advising the despatch of the hundi. Neither letter nor post card arrived at its destination. The hundi had been stolen or intercepted during the transit, the name of Ramrukh Ramkisson expunged, and that of Dwarkadas Lalji substituted. Not hearing of its arrival, the plaintiffs' firm sent a second post card, in reply to which their agent stated that no hundi had been received. The plaintiffs at Sholapur, thereupon, on the 14th December, 1893, went to the drawer and demanded a petha. (duplicate). The drawer, however, having by that time received the khoka (receipted hundi) from the defendant declined to give a petha. The plaintiffs' man then came to Bombay to make inquiries, and it then appeared that the hundi had been presented to the defendant on the 9th December, 1893, by some person giving his name as Dwarkadas Lalji and giving an address in Hanuman Gully, and that defendant had sent the money there by his man, who paid it to some one whom he took to be the cashier of Dwarkadas Lalji. On defendant's man going there again with plaintiffs' man, no trace of any person known as Dwarkadas Lalji could be found, nor was his whereabouts discovered.

The Chief Judge was of opinion that defendant having admittedly paid the amount of the hundi without any inquiry to a person who was not shah, and having received the khoka with an endorsement of payment, and having returned the same to the drawer, had been guilty of conversion of the hundi, and was liable to the plaintiffs, the lawful owners thereof, in trover. He was also of opinion that it did not alter the character of the hundi that it was endorsed for realization in favour of a particular individual, and that that fact could not absolve the defendant of the duty which would otherwise lie upon him of making inquiries as to the respectability and position of the payee.

[577] The hundi, which is in the Marvadi language and character, is not made payable to any particular person by name, but, according to the translation annexed to the proceedings, states: "Immediately on the receipt of the hundi please pay the money in hundi currency to the shah."

Now the meaning of hundis made payable to shah and the usage in regard to such documents among native merchants on this side of India was very fully considered in a case which came before Sir Joseph Arnould in 1869 in which a large body of evidence was given on the subject—Davlatram v. Bulakhidas (1); and, as s. 1 of "the Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881" (Act XXVI of 1881) states that nothing in that Act contained affects any local usage relating to any instrument in an oriental language, unless such usages are excluded by any words in the body of the instrument which indicate an intention that the legal relations of the parties thereto shall be governed by that Act, and no such words are to be found in the hundi in question, the usage proved as well as the decision in that case afford a guide of which this Court can avail itself in the determination of the points submitted for our consideration by the Chief Judge of the Small Causes Court.

In his very able judgment in that case Sir Joseph Arnould said (p. 25) that "hundis made payable to shah, shah jogi, differ from bills of exchange in one very material circumstance, amongst others, that, as a general rule, the acceptance of the drawee is not written across them, so as thereby to give them an additional degree of mercantile credit, and to that extent make it just to impose an additional degree of liability on the acceptor," and "that as a general rule hundis are very frequently not presented for acceptance before they are presented for payment, before, that is, they are either due or overdue." "It is also stated," said the learned

Judge, "that the name of the shah or person who has bought or holds the hundi must always be endorsed on it, before it is presented." At p. 27, he says: "It will be convenient to advert to those points in which both parties substantially agree. And first as to the very important point of the meaning attached in the Hindu mercantile world to the formula 'Payable to shah.' Now the result of the evidence on both sides [578] as to this point, supported by the learned etymological evidence of Mr. Balaji Pandurang, is clearly this, that shah means a responsible and respectable person, a man of worth and substance known in the bazar. A hundi payable to shah is paid on the responsibility of the shah. If he be not known to the drawee, inquiry is to be made about him, and the amount of the hundi is not paid till that inquiry is satisfactorily answered, or till some one known to the drawee is found to identify him or speak to his responsibility."

The defendant was well aware of the existence of this usage, as it was alleged on his behalf at the hearing that the custom of merchants had changed with respect to the necessity which previously existed of making due inquiries before payment of a shah jog hundi, but the Chief Judge states that the defendant had entirely failed to prove any such change of custom, and that his witnesses called for that purpose were utterly unreliable.

The Advocate General, who appeared for the defendant in the argument in this Court, relied upon a dictum of Sir Barnes Peacock, C. J., reported in VII Bengal L. R. 289, note III, to the effect that the hundi in that case would pass at any rate prior to acceptance by delivery. The hundi there was drawn in Bombay on a firm in Calcutta and was payable fifty-one days after date in favour of Sewdas Damoni. The case was decided in 1865, four years before the decision of Sir J. Arnould, and it is difficult from the report to discover whether the hundi there was or was not a shah jogi hundi. The words shah jogi or shah do not occur anywhere in the report, and if the hundi in that case was not a shah jogi one, the expression of opinion of Sir Barnes Peacock would be extra judicial and of no binding authority. In a case which came before the Appellate Court at Calcutta in 1871—Thakur Das v. Futteh Mull (1) the dictum of Sir Barnes Peacock, C. J., was relied on, on behalf of the defendant, but the Court said that it was not clear how that expression of opinion was pertinent to the case before the Court, and that it supposed that the Court never meant to lay down that under Hindu law every one who took the hundi, even though he obtained it by fraud, would be treated as a "shah jog." The Judges said p. 302: "then who answers to the term 'shah jog' unless it be the person designated by real (not fictitious) endorsements? [579] And when a Hindu maker or rightful owner of a hundi payable in terms to the shah jog endorses it as sold or sent to A, he obviously means to pass the right of dealing with the hundi to A alone (p. 303)" . . . . . "I certainly am not aware (said Phear, J., in delivering the judgment of the Court) of any rule of Hindu law, customary or otherwise, which would have the effect of making the word 'shah jog' mean payable to bearer, quite independently of the endorsements" (p. 304).

Reliance was also placed on behalf of the defendant on s. 85 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881. That section says: "Where a cheque payable to order purports to be endorsed by or on behalf of the payee, the drawee is discharged by payment in due course." Assuming that that section might be applicable to a Marvadi hundi, the hundi in the present case, we may remark, is not a cheque, and is not payable to order, but to the shah. By s. 6 a cheque is defined to be a bill of exchange drawn on a specified banker; a bill of exchange is by s. 5 stated to be an instrument directing a certain person to pay a certain sum of money to or to the order of a certain person or to the bearer of the instrument whereas this hundi is payable to the shah, and, as already noticed, Sir Joseph Arnould points out how bills of exchange differ from hundis like the one now in question. Then by s. 85 the drawee is discharged only "by payment in due course." And by s. 10 "payment in due course means payment without negligence to any person in possession thereof under circumstances which do not afford a reasonable ground for believing that he is not entitled to receive payment of the amount therein mentioned."

In the present case, payment to Dwarkadas Lalji was not "payment in due course," as the defendant was bound by the custom of Hindu merchants to make inquiries as to the person who presented the hundi to him for payment, and the Chief Judge has found that the defendant admittedly paid the amount of the hundi without inquiry as to the respectability or position of the person to whom he paid; and, moreover, he found as a fact that the defendant was negligent in not detecting the forged endorsement on the hundi, inasmuch as it was apparent on the most cursory glance that some name has been expunged and the name of Dwarkadas Lalji written over it in a handwriting [580] different to that of the rest of the endorsement. He also found that the defendants' own witnesses said that they never looked to the endorsement, but only to the body of the hundi. The Chief Judge added that no authority had been quoted to him, nor was any cited to us, in support of the proposition that a shah jogi hundi loses its character as such by being endorsed in favour of a particular person. We think that the Chief Judge was justified in holding, upon the authority of Lovell v. Martin (1), that the defendants had been guilty of conversion of the hundi and were liable to the plaintiffs, the lawful owners thereof, in trover.

A similar point was decided in April, 1894, in England. There the payee of a crossed cheque specially endorsed it to the plaintiff and posted it to him. A stranger, having obtained possession of the cheque during the course of transmission, obliterated the endorsement to the plaintiff, and having substituted a special endorsement to himself, presented it at the defendants' bank and requested them to collect it for him. They did so, and handed the money over to him. In an action brought by the plaintiffs for conversion, it was held that the defendants were liable for the amount of the cheque—Kleinwort Sons & Co. v. Comptoir National D'Escompte De Paris (2).

We, therefore, agree with the view taken by the Chief Judge and answer the questions he had submitted to this Court thus:—We hold—(1) That the circumstances of the case amount to a conversion of the hundi on the part of the defendant. (2) That the defendant is liable to refund to the plaintiffs the amount of the hundi. (3) That (the hundi being payable by endorsement to Dwarkadas Lalji) the defendant is not discharged by such payment. (4) That the hundi continued to be a shah jogi hundi after being endorsed to a particular person. It is unnecessary to return any

[581] CRIMINAL REVISION.

Before Mr. Justice Candy and Mr. Justice Fulton.

In re DEVJI VALAD BHAVANI AND ANOTHER.* [11th September, 1893.]

Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), ss. 478 and 195—Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882), ss. 278, 273—Inquiry into claim to attached property—Civil Court's power to commit the party making such claim or his witness on a charge of forgery and perjury—Subsequent civil suit by claimant to establish his right to the property—Stay of Criminal proceedings pending civil litigation.

It is not an invariable rule that criminal proceedings should be stayed during the pendency of civil litigation regarding the same subject-matter.

Certain property was attached in execution of a decree. Thereupon accused No. 1 applied to have the attachment raised, on the ground that he had purchased the property from the judgment-debtor under a sale-deed executed long before the date of the attachment. In the summary inquiry which was made under s. 278 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), he produced the sale-deed, and accused No. 2 was called as his witness and supported his claim. The Subordinate Judge found that the deed was a forgery, and rejected the claim. Proceeding then under s. 478 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882) he held the inquiry directed by that section, and committed both the accused to the Sessions Court on charges of perjury and forgery. During the pendency of the inquiry under s. 478, the accused No. 1 filed a civil suit to establish the genuineness of the sale-deed and set aside the attachment. He also applied to the High Court to quash the commitment or stay the criminal proceedings pending the disposal of the civil suit.

Held, refusing the application, that the mere fact that a regular suit was filed to establish the genuineness of the sale-deed was not a sufficient ground for quashing the commitment, or for adjourning the trial pending the hearing of the civil suit.

Held, also, that the power given to a Civil Court under chap. XXXV of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882) to take action regarding "any offence referred to in s. 195" is not ordinarily restricted, in regard to offences relating to documents, to such offences only when committed by a party to the proceeding in which the document was given in evidence. It extends also to such offences when committed by a witness of the party.

THIS was an application under s. 435 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882).

Certain property was attached in execution of a decree. Thereupon Devji valad Bhavani (accused No. 1) applied, under s. 278 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to have the attachment raised, alleging that the property attached had been previously sold [582] to him by the judgment-debtor by a deed of sale dated 10th September, 1892.

CRIMINAL REVISION.
18 B. 581.

In the summary inquiry which followed, accused No. 2 was examined as witness for Devji (accused No. 1). He stated that he had attested the sale-deed, and also passed a receipt for part of the purchase-money on behalf of the others (the judgment-debtors).

The Subordinate Judge, who investigated the claim, under s. 278, was of opinion that the sale-deed was a fabrication, and that it was fabricated for the purpose of saving the property from being taken in execution. He, therefore, on 28th June, 1893, disallowed the claim, and at once proceeded to hold an inquiry, under s. 478 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (X of 1882), as to whether the accused should be committed for trial on the charge of forgery, &c.

Pending this inquiry, Devji (accused No. 1) on 3rd July, 1893, filed a suit, under s. 283 of the Code of Civil Procedure (XIV of 1882), to establish his title to the attached property, relying on the sale-deed of the 10th September, 1892.

On the 5th July, 1893, the Subordinate Judge completed the inquiry under s. 478 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and committed the accused to the Court of Session,—accused No. 1 on charges framed under ss. 467, 468, 471, 114, 193 and 207 of the Indian Penal Code (XLV of 1860), and accused No. 2 under s. 467 and 193 of the Penal Code.

Thereupon both the accused applied to the Sessions Court to quash the order of committal in respect of the charges under ss. 467, 468 and 114 of the Penal Code, and to stay further proceedings in respect of the other charges pending the disposal of the Civil suit which accused No. 1 had filed under s. 283 of the Code of Civil Procedure. This application was rejected by the Sessions Judge.

The accused then applied to the High Court under its revisional jurisdiction.

The High Court sent for the record and proceedings of the case.

[583] Inverarity (with him M. B. Choubal), for the accused :—The lower Court ought to have stayed all criminal proceedings against the accused till the decision of the Civil suit which is brought by accused No. 1. To carry on criminal proceedings during the pendency of the civil suit has the effect of intimidating witnesses. And this Court has often acted on the principle that criminal proceedings should not go on during the pendency of the civil litigation—In re Shri Nana Maharaj (1). The Subordinate Judge was mistaken in framing charges under ss. 467, 468 and 471 of the Penal Code. There was really no forgery. Execution of the sale-deed is admitted. The allegation is that the sale is a colourable transaction intended merely to secure the proprety from attachment. That does not make the deed a forgery. As regards accused No. 2, he was not a party to the investigation under s. 278 of the Code of Civil Procedure. He was only a witness in that proceeding. Chapter XXXV of the Code of Criminal Procedure (X of 1882) is not, therefore, applicable in his case. Section 476 of the Code authorizes a Court to make an inquiry into those offences only which are referred to in s. 495. And s. 195, cl. (c), refers to offences in respect of documents which are committed by a "party to any proceeding." The word "party" does not include a witness in such proceedings. It is, therefore, clear that with respect to accused No. 2 the Subordinate Judge had no authority to hold an inquiry under s. 478 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, or commit him to the Sessions Court on a charge of forgery.

CRIMINAL REVISION.

18 B. 581.

Rao Saheb Vasudev J. Kirtikar, Government Pleader, for the Crown :—The civil proceedings out of which the present prosecution has arisen, had come to an end before the inquiry under s. 478 of the Code of Criminal Procedure was begun. Pending this inquiry, the suit was brought under s. 283 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The object of this suit is simply to frustrate the criminal prosecution. Under s. 478 of the Code of Criminal Procedure the Subordinate Judge had jurisdiction to hold a preliminary inquiry into the charges of perjury and forgery against both the accused. If the Judge [584] was satisfied that either the parties to the proceeding or their witnesses had committed perjury or any other offence against public justice, he was justified in directing a criminal prosecution—In the matter of Mutty Lall Ghose (1). When a Judge directs a criminal prosecution, the High Court has no power to set it aside—Queen Empress v. Rachappa (2). Nor should it stay the criminal proceedings pending the final decision of the civil suit—In the matter of the petition of Ramprasad (3). The word forgery is used as a generic term in s. 463 of the Indian Penal Code. It is used in a comprehensive sense in s. 195 of Act X of 1882, so as to embrace all species of forgery including the offence under s. 467 of the Penal Code. The order of committal on charges under ss. 467, 468 and 471 of the Code was, therefore, proper.

JUDGMENT.

CANDY, J.—No doubt this Court has often acted on the principle that criminal proceedings should not go on during the pendency of civil litigation regarding the same subject-matter. But we do not think that this is an invariable rule. Under the circumstances of the present case as recited by the Subordinate Judge there was no course open to him but to make inquiries, under chap. XXXV of the Criminal Procedure Code, regarding the genuineness of the transaction put forward by the party who applied to raise the attachment. The fact that a regular suit has now been filed to establish the genuineness of that transaction is not sufficient to enable this Court to quash the commitment regularly made by the Subordinate Judge to the Sessions Court, or to direct the trial to be adjourned pending the hearing of the civil suit, and possibly of an appeal and second appeal.

The Sessions Court being thus seized of the case, we do not think it expedient to go into the merits, or express any opinion whether the offences recited in the charges as drawn up by the Subordinate Judge are those which prima facie, according to the facts of the prosecution, would be the most appropriate to include in the indictment. It will be for the accused to make an application [585] if so advised, to the Sessions Judge requesting that they may be released on bail.

With regard to the contention that the commitment of the accused No. 2 is illegal in regard to any offence relating to documents because he was not a party but only a witness to the proceeding in the Civil Court, we think that the power given to the Civil Court under chap. XXXV of the Criminal Procedure Code to take action regarding " any offence referred to in s. 185 " is not ordinarily restricted, in regard to offences relating to documents, to such offences only when committed by a party to the proceeding in which the document was given in evidence. No doubt sanction is only requisite in such a case, prosecution of a witness for an offence relating to documents being permissible without sanction. But that would not invalidate a prosecution commenced on a sanction which included both a party and a witness. The offences referred to in s. 195 (c) are the offences described in s. 463 or punishable under ss. 471, 475 or 476 of the Indian Penal Code. The limitation that sanction only is necessary in regard to prosecution for these offences, when such offences have been committed by a party, does not limit the reference to the offences in s. 476, so as to make it legal for a Subordinate Judge to commit a party to the Sessions Court on charges of offences relating to documents, and illegal for him at the same time to commit a witness of the party on similar charges.

Application rejected.

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), s. 19†—Acknowledgment—"Signing," what amounts to.

Certain letters admitting a debt were written by the authority of the debtor, who was a desai. The only words, however, of the letter which were actually in his own handwriting were the words "guru samarth" (the exalted preceptor is strong) at the beginning of each letter and the words "kalave, bahut kay lihine, lobh karava hi vinanti" (let this be known. What more need be written. Keep regard; this is the representation) at the end. It was proved by evidence that this was the usual mode of signing and authenticating letters and informal documents among the class to which the defendant belonged.

Held, that, by analogy, the writing of specified words by desais at the top and bottom of letters, which was shown to be the usual way, amongst persons of that class, of authenticating letters, was a "signing" within s. 19 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) and that the letter was a valid acknowledgment.

The ground upon which it is held that the mark of an illiterate debtor is a sufficient signature, is that the signing in such a manner as is usually adopted

19. Effect of acknowledgment in writing.—If, before the expiration of the period prescribed for a suit or application in respect of any property or right, an acknowledgment of liability in respect of such property or right has been made in writing signed by the party against whom such property or right is claimed, or by some person through whom he derives title or liability, a new period of limitation, according to the nature of the original liability, shall be computed from the time when the acknowledgment was so signed.

When the writing containing the acknowledgment is undated, oral evidence may be given of the time when it was signed; but oral evidence of its contents shall not be received.

Explanation 1.—For the purpose of this section an acknowledgment may be sufficient, though it omits to specify the exact nature of the property or right, or avers that the time for payment, delivery, performance or enjoyment has not yet come, or is accompanied by a refusal to pay, deliver or perform or permit to enjoy, or is coupled with a claim to a set-off, or is addressed to a person other than the person entitled to the property or right.

Explanation 2.—In this section 'signed' means signed either personally or by an agent duly authorized in this behalf.

by the debtor with the view of showing that he intends to be bound by the document, renders the document effective as an acknowledgment under the section. Whether the circumstance of the debtor not signing his name, is the result of necessity as in the case of an illiterate debtor, or of custom as in the case of a class of debtors having a special status in the community, can be of no importance.

[Appl., 31 C. 1043=9 C.W.N. 83 (86).]

SECOND appeal from the decision of A. D. Pollen, District Judge of Belgaum.

[587] The plaintiff sued to recover the sum of Rs. 1,988, due on a bond executed by the father of the defendants on 17th July, 1878. The bond was payable by instalments, the first of which was to be paid on 30th November, 1878, and it provided that in default of payment of an instalment the whole sum should be recoverable.

The suit was filed on the 15th March, 1888, and claimed to recover the whole sum on the ground of default in paying the first instalment. In order to prevent the bar of limitation the plaintiff relied on certain letters addressed by the deceased defendant to the plaintiff's undivided brother. He contended that these letters were signed acknowledgments within the meaning of s. 19 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877). The letters were all written by a third person in the defendant's name; and the question was whether they were "signed" by the defendant as required by the section. The letters began with the words "To the creditor from Rajeshri Desai." The only part of the letter, however, in the defendant's own writing were the words " guru samarth" (i.e., the exalted preceptor is strong) which were written at the beginning, and the words kalave, bahut kay lihine lobh karava hi vinanti" (let this be known. What more need be written. Keep regard; this is the representation).

Evidence was given that this was the usual mode of signing and authenticating letters and informal documents by persons of the class to which the defendant belonged.

The Subordinate Judge held that the letters were sufficiently " signed," and that the suit was not barred. The following is an extract from his judgment.

"The next point is, whether the three letters of the Desai can be treated as acknowledgments as required by s. 19 of the Limitation Act. That section lays down that an acknowledgment must be in writing signed by the debtor or by an authorized agent. In ordinary language, the word 'signing' means, I apprehend, the affixing of his own name by the person signing at the end of a writing with the avowed intention that the writing sohuld be considered as issued under his authority and upon his responsibility. The judicial tribunals have extended this limited meaning by including also a mark made by an illiterate man (Bheemangowda v. Eeranah, 7 Mad. H. C. R. 358), and the autograph name of the debtor appearing in any part of the document (Andarji v. Dulabh, I. L. R., 5 Bom., 88), to be within the meaning of the word as [588] used in the Act. By parity of reasoning it may also be said that the affixing of certain specified letters by the debtor himself, by which he intends to give the same effect to the writing as by an actual and proper signature, is also within the sense of the word as used in the Act. The case, Khwaja Muhammad v. Venkatarayar (2 Mad. H. C. R., 79) lends some support to this view, though I have not the full report before me. In the present case the letters kalave, &., appear in the autograph of the Desai, and it is a well-known fact that persons of his class do generally use this mode of signing in informal and private letters, and such letters are considered as equivalent to signing the full name. Moreover, the Desai's full name appears in the body of the communications, and their writer says that he indited them at the dictation of the Desai. I, therefore, find that the letters in question are sufficiently signed as to satisfy the requirements of the section."

In appeal by the defendants the Judge held the claim time-barred, and reversed the decree.

The following is the portion of his judgment which deals with the letters written by the Desai :—

"The letters 5, 6, 7, 8 are all open to the objection that neither in the body nor at foot are they signed by the debtor or by his agent duly authorized in that behalf. The letters are all written by a third person in the Desai's name, but they are not signed by the Desai. It is said that it is not usual for persons in the Desai's position to sign their names to letters. Instead of signing they write with their own hands certain formal words at the top and at the bottom of a letter. The words at the top of the above four letters are 'guru samarth;' and the letters end with the formal words 'kalave, bahut kay lihine, lobh karava hi vinanti;' and it is in evidence that these formal words are in the handwriting of the Desai or his widow. Now, the question arises whether the addition of these formal words in the handwriting of the debtor suffices to meet the requirements of s. 19 of the Limitation Act, which prescribes an acknowledgment made in writing signed by the debtor as being necessary to create a new period of limitation. The Subordinate Judge holds that the addition of the formal words specified above is equivalent to a signature. But on careful consideration of all the reported cases I am unable to agree with him. None of the cases under s. 19 or s. 20 of the Act go as far as this. There must be an autograph signature (which would include a mark in the case of an illiterate man) in some part of the document. A seal or other device, unless it bears the name of the person, would not be sufficient. The word 'sign' or 'signature' must, I take it, be construed in its ordinary and every-day sense. What the Legislature intended by the use of the word may be inferred from the definition given in the General Clauses Act of 1887, which shows that a person who can write must write his own name; and that a mark is only admissible in the case of a person who is unable to write. I cannot extend the meaning of the word 'sign' beyond that given to it in the reported decision; and I must hold that the letters 5, 6, 7 and 8 are not signed by the persons by whom they purport to be written, and, therefore, they have not the effect of giving a fresh starting point from these dates for the purpose of limitation."

The plaintiffs preferred a second appeal.

[589] P. M. Mehta (with Mahadeo C. Apte), appeared for the appellants (plaintiffs) :—The letters are sufficient acknowledgments of the debt. They were written, as is usual among persons of the class to which the Desai belongs, by his authority and are subscribed by him at the top and the bottom. Such subscription is tantamount to signature. Section 19 of the Limitation Act does not mean that in all cases the signature must be made by the debtor himself. He may authorize some one else to make his signature. Further, it is not necessary that the name should be formally subjoined—Khwaja Muhammad v. Venkatarayar (1). Though the name of the defendant is not in his handwriting, it appears at the top of each letter, and his authority may be inferred—Mathura Das v. Babu Lal (1); Darrell v. Evans (2).

Inverarity (with Vasudeo G. Bhandarkar) for the respondents (defendants):—The Judge found that the words which the defendant has himself written at the top and bottom do not amount to his signature. The name of the defendant in the body of the letters is not in his handwriting. Had it been in his handwriting, it would have been considered to be his signature under the provisions of the Limitation Act—Andarji v. Dulabh(3).

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—The only question which has been argued in this second appeal is, whether the three letters of the Desai can be treated as acknowledgments as required by s. 19 of the Limitation Act. The body of those letters is admittedly written by a third person and begins with the words "To the creditor from Rajeshri Desai." At the top of the letters are the words "guru samarth," and the letters end with the formal words "kalave, bahut kay lihine, lobh karava hi vinanti." These words are all found to be in the handwriting of the Desai himself, and the evidence shows that this is the usual mode of signing letters and informal documents, among the class to which the debtor belonged, with the view of authenticating such documents as the documents of the person so signing. The Subordinate Judge held that the requirements of the section were sufficiently complied with; but the District Judge held that the name of the debtor not being [590] found in the letters there was no signing as contemplated by the section, and, therefore, that the letters did not give a fresh starting point for the purposes of the statute.

The decision in Bhimangowda v. Eeranah(4) shows that the debtor's signature need not necessarily be by writing his name, and that the making his mark by an illiterate debtor at the foot of an acknowledgment makes it a valid one within the contemplation of the section. The ground of that decision must be that the "signing" in such manner as is usually adopted by the debtor with the view of showing that he intended to be bound by the document, renders the document effective as an acknowledgment under the section. It is on this ground indeed that it has also been held that the 'signing' (by which word in its ordinary acceptation is meant signing the name at the foot) may be by writing the name in any other part of the document, provided it be intended to operate as an acknowledgment by the party that it is his instrument—Mathura Das v. Babu Lal. Whether the circumstance of the debtor not signing his name is the result of necessity as in the case of the illiterate debtor, or of custom as in the case of a class of debtors having a special status in the community, can be of no importance. We agree, therefore, with the Subordinate Judge that by analogy the writing certain specified words by desais at the top and bottom of the letters which is admittedly the usual way, amongst persons of that class, of showing that the letter is to be regarded as written by their authority, is a 'signing' within the section. It is clear, on the findings of the Court below as to the part payments, that the suit would be in time if any one of the letters in question was a valid acknowledgment under the section, and we must, therefore, reverse the decree of the Court below and restore that of the Subordinate Judge. Costs on respondent here and in the Court below.

Mortgage—Redemption—Mortgage to a firm—Subsequent mortgage to one member of the firm for personal loan with stipulation for payment of new debt before prior mortgage-debt—Right to redeem first mortgage independently of later mortgage.

On the 13th July, 1877, a firm, of which defendants Nos. 1 to 4 were members, lent money to Nathu Narbheram on mortgage of certain property. Subsequently defendant No. 2 personally made a further loan to Nathu, who executed two san mortgage deeds to him of the same property containing stipulations that these bonds should be paid before the mortgage of July, 1877. Nathu died, and his widow and heir assigned the equity of redemption of the mortgage of July, 1877, to the plaintiff, who sued the defendants to redeem. The defendants contended that the plaintiff was bound to pay off the two later bonds as well as the original mortgage-debt.

Held, that the later loan by defendant No. 2 being a personal loan by him, the firm, as such, had no equity to insist on its being paid before the mortgage was redeemed, whatever right defendant No. 2 in his personal capacity might have. But in this suit, which was one to redeem the mortgage, he was a party as member of the firm, and not in his individual capacity, and he could not, therefore, resist the plaintiff's right to redeem on any ground based on the promise of the two bonds executed to himself.

THIS was a second appeal from the decision of Rao Bahadur Lalshankar Umiashankar, First Class Subordinate Judge of Ahmedabad with appellate powers.

Suit for redemption. One Nathu Narbheram mortgaged the land in question to defendants Nos. 1 to 4 for Rs. 337-4-0 by a registered deed dated 13th July, 1877.

On the 25th November, 1878, Nathu Narbheram obtained a further loan of Rs. 98 from defendant No. 2 (Mathur Kevalram) and executed to him two san mortgage-deeds each for Rs. 49, which stipulated for the payment of this san debt before the prior mortgage-debt.

Nathu Narbheram died, and on the 25th February, 1890, his widow assigned the equity of redemption of the mortgage of July, 1877, to the plaintiff, who now sued the defendants for redemption.

[592] The defendants contended that the plaintiff could not redeem this first mortgage without also paying off the two san mortgages.

The Subordinate Judge held that the two san mortgages were not proved, and ordered redemption of the first mortgage on payment, by the plaintiff, of Rs. 337-4-0 within three months from the date of the decree.

On appeal by defendants Nos. 1—4, the Judge found that the san mortgages (Exs. D and E) were proved, and that under the stipulation contained in those exhibits the plaintiff could not redeem the first mortgage without paying them off also. He, therefore, varied the decree, and directed the plaintiff to pay the mortgage-debt, Rs. 337-4-0, to defendants Nos. 1—4, and the san debt, Rs. 165-4-0, to defendant No. 2, Mathur Keval, within six months from the date of the decree, and to recover possession from the defendants of the mortgaged property free from all mortgage lien. In default, plaintiff to stand foreclosed.

SEP. 18.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

18 B. 591.

The plaintiff preferred a second appeal.

Sitanath Gopinath Ajinkya, for the appellant (plaintiff).—The plaintiff here is not the original mortgagor, but his assignee. He assigned to the plaintiff the equity of redemption of the mortgage of 1877. The equity of redemption which we got by that assignment is not affected by bonds passed by the mortgagor subsequently to the mortgage. Further, the original mortgage-bond was passed to the firm, while the subsequent bonds were passed to defendant No. 2, who is the munim of the firm. This distinguishes the present case from the case of Hari Mahadaji v. Balambhat(1).

[SARGENT, C. J.— But the munim is also the member of the firm.]

That is so; but in the case of the san mortgage-bonds he acted in his personal capacity, as shown by his taking these bonds in his own name and not in that of the firm. The amount secured by the bonds was a personal loan by him to be paid when the mortgagee demanded the mortgage-debt. The consideration of the bonds came from defendant No. 2 himself, while the mortgage [593] loan was paid from the funds of the firm. The condition that the debt to him should be paid before the mortgage-debt, clogs the equity of redemption, and, therefore, it should not be allowed.

Chimanlal H. Setalwad, for the respondent (defendant No. 2).—The question whether the subsequent loan was advanced from the funds of the firm or those of the munim is a question of fact not gone into by the lower Court. For the determination of the question the case will have to be sent down.

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—The san mortgage-bonds (Exs. D and E) were passed to Mathur Kevalram (defendant No. 2) in consideration of a personal loan, with a charge on the equity of redemption on the lands in question still remaining in the mortgagor Nathu Narbheram, and on the understanding that those loans were to be paid before the bond passed to the firm by the earlier mortgage (Ex. 45). This would not give the firm any equity to insist on bonds D and E being paid before the mortgage (Ex. 45) was redeemed, whatever right Mathur himself might have to insist on it. Mathur is a party to the suit as a member of the firm, and not in his individual capacity, and cannot, in this suit, which is one to redeem the mortgage (Ex. 45), resist the plaintiff's right to redeem for any reason based on the provisions of the other bonds (Exs. D and E).

We must, therefore, vary the decree by directing that plaintiff do redeem the land on payment of Rs. 337-4-0 to the defendants within six months from this day, and reverse so much of the decree as directs payment to defendant Mathur of Rs. 165-4-0. Appellant to have his costs of this appeal. Parties to pay their own costs in the Courts below.

VITHOBA (Original Opponent and Decree-holder), Applicant v. ESAT (Original Petitioner and Auction-Purchaser), *Opponent.

[21st September, 1893.]

Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882), ss. 313, 315 and 622—Execution—Execution sale—Auction-purchaser—Return of purchase-money when judgment-debtor found to have no saleable interest in property sold—Fact how found—Judgment-creditor to have notice—Party—Procedure.

One Vithoba obtained a decree against Bapu, and in execution sold certain land which was purchased by Esat, who got a certificate of sale, and obtained possession. Subsequently the land was claimed by one Bhowani, who sued Bapu (the judgment-debtor) and Esat (the auction-purchaser) to set aside the sale and establish his title to the land. He succeeded in his suit, and in execution got possession of the land. Thereupon Esat (the auction-purchaser) applied under s. 315 of the Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882) for a refund of his purchase-money, and the Subordinate Judge made an order directing Vithoba, the decree-holder, to repay it. Vithoba contended that he ought not to have been ordered to refund the money without having an opportunity of proving that the property had been properly sold in execution of his decree against Bapu, and that as he had not been made a party to Bhowani's suit he had had no opportunity of doing this. On application to the High Court, Held, that the order of the Subordinate Judge for the restitution of the purchase-money was wrong. Section 315 provides that the purchase-money paid at an execution sale is to be returned when it is found that the judgment-debtor has no saleable interest in the property sold. It does not prescribe how the fact is to be ascertained, but the conclusion from s. 313 as well as from general principles is that it must be a finding on some proceedings to which the judgment-creditor was a party or at any rate of which he had notice. In the present case there was no finding on which the Subordinate Judge could base his order for the restitution of the purchase-money.

THIS was an application under the extraordinary jurisdiction of the High Court (s. 622, Civil Procedure Code, XIV of 1882) against the order of Rao Saheb S. M. Kale, Subordinate Judge of Malegaon in the Khandesh District.

Vithoba obtained a decree against Bapu, and on 3rd May, 1887, in execution, sold certain land belonging to Bapu. Esat (the present opponent) was the purchaser at the execution sale, and he got a certificate of sale on the 6th July, 1887, and obtained possession of the land. Subsequently one Bhowani valad Mahipat claimed the land and filed a suit (No. 244 of 1890) against Esat and Bapu (the judgment-debtor) to set aside the sale and establish [595] his title, and on the 6th June, 1891, he obtained a decree. On the 4th September, 1891, in execution of that decree he obtained possession. Esat (the above-mentioned auction-purchaser) thereupon applied on the 9th September, 1892, under s. 315 of the Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882) for a refund of the purchase-money which he had paid to Vithoba for the property at the auction-sale. Vithoba resisted the application on the ground that he had not been a party to Bhowani's suit (No. 244 of 1890), and that if he had been made a party he could have proved that the land was Bapu's and was rightly sold. The Subordinate Judge, however, ordered Vithoba to repay the purchase-money to Esat.

Vithoba thereupon applied to the High Court in its extraordinary jurisdiction, and obtained a rule calling on Esat (the auction-purchaser) to show cause why the order of the Subordinate Judge should not be set aside.

Ganesh K. Deshmukh, for the applicant Vithoba, in support of the rule.—We sold the land in execution of our decree against Bapu and received the purchase-money. We are now ordered to refund the purchase-money under s. 315 of the Code, on the ground that Bapu, the judgment-debtor, had no interest in the property which we sold in execution of our decree against him. There is no evidence that he had no interest in it except the decree in Bhowani's suit (No. 244 of 1890). That decree is no evidence against us, as we were not a party to the suit. Further, we contend that, in all suits to set aside a sale held in execution of a decree, the decree-holder at whose instance the sale took place is a necessary party—Bank of Hindustan, &c. v. Premchand (1).

Mahadeo Chimnaji Apte appeared to show cause for Esat, the auction-purchaser.—The lower Court was right in ordering that the purchase-money we paid at the auction-sale should be refunded to us. The property we bought has been taken from us, the Court having declared, in Bhowani's suit, that it did not belong to Bapu. The auction-sale at which we bought was the act of the Court, and the Court should give back our money. The judgment-creditor Vithoba was not a necessary [596] party to Bhowani's suit—Kishun Lal v. Muhammad Safdar Ali Khan (2); Sivarama v. Rama (3); Raghubar Dayal v. Bank of Upper India (4).

The High Court cannot interfere with the order of refund made by the lower Court under s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code, because there is no question of jurisdiction or material irregularity.

Ganesh Krishna Deshmukh in reply.—Under similar circumstances, the Court has interfered under s. 622—Shri Vishvambhar Pandit v. Shri Vasudev Pandit (5).

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—In this case a third person has established his right to the property as against the auction-purchaser, and the latter has taken execution proceedings against the judgment-creditor under s. 315 to recover his purchase-money. The question is, can he do so, the judgment-debtor having been found to have no saleable interest in the property in a suit to which he was not made a party, and of which he had no notice given him by the auction-purchaser.

Section 313, under which the purchaser at the auction sale moves in the matter for the purpose of setting aside the sale on the ground that the judgment-debtor has no saleable interest, read with s. 315, enables the auction-purchaser to get back his purchase money; but s. 313 expressly provides that the judgment-creditor should have had an opportunity of being heard before the sale is set aside. Section 315 provides for the return of the purchase-money, not only when the sale is set aside under s. 312 or s. 313, but also whenever it is found that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest. It does not say how the finding is to be arrived at; but the conclusion from the language of s. 313, as well as from general principles, is that it must be a finding in some proceedings to which the judgment-creditor was a party or, at any rate, of which he had notice.

There was, therefore, in the present case no finding before the Court on which the Subordinate Judge could base his order for [597] the restoration of the purchase-money, and a proper case has, therefore, we think, been made out for the intervention of the Court in the exercise of its extraordinary jurisdiction. We must, therefore, reverse the order of the Subordinate Judge and send back the case to be disposed of according to law. Costs to follow the result.

GHELA ICHHARAM (Original Defendant), Appellant v. SANKALCHAND JETHA (Original Plaintiff), *Respondent. [26th September, 1893.]

Res judicata—Issue in previous suit—Unnecessary issue—Finding on an unnecessary issue inserted in decree—Appeal—Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882), s. 13.

The plaintiff attached certain property in execution of a decree obtained by him against one Jamna, the widow of one Raichand. The defendant Ghela intervened and claimed the house as having been purchased by him from one Samal Nathu, to whom, he alleged, Jamna had sold it before the date of the decree against her. The plaintiff's attachment was removed, and the plaintiff thereupon brought a suit (No. 670 of 1886) to establish his right to sell the house in execution. The Court found that the house was not Jamna's, and dismissed the suit on that ground, but it also recorded a finding that the sales set up by the defendant were fraudulent and collusive. Subsequently the plaintiff obtained a decree against Mulji, the son of Raichand, and in execution again attached the house. The defendant again intervened, alleging that the house was his, and the attachment was removed. Thereupon the plaintiff filed this suit to establish his right to sell in execution. The defendant again pleaded that he was owner of the house by reason of the sales set up by him in the former suit. It was argued that these sales had been proved to be collusive and fraudulent in an issue raised in that suit, and that the defence in the present suit was, therefore, res judicata.

Held, that the defence was not res judicata. The former suit had been decided on the finding that the property in question was not Jamna's. The finding in that suit on the issue as to the sales to the defendant was not necessary for the determination of the suit.

Where an issue is not necessary for the decision of the suit in which it is raised, the decree couched in general terms does not cover the finding on that issue, nor can the insertion of such finding in the decree give it the force of res judicata. The Civil Procedure Code does not contemplate findings on issues being inserted in it (see ss. 2 and 6 and sch. IV) and there is no section in the Code which makes it necessary to appeal from the decree, because such finding has been inserted in it.

[598] THIS was a second appeal from the decision of Gilmour McCorkell, District Judge of Ahmedabad.

Suit to establish the right to sell a house in execution of a decree.

One Raichand died, leaving behind him a widow Jamna and a son Mulji. After his death the plaintiff brought a suit (No. 1181 of 1880) against Jamna alone as the representative of her deceased husband Raichand to recover a debt due by him. Mulji was not joined as a party to that suit. The suit was compromised, and a decree was passed in the terms of the compromise making Jamna personally liable for the debt. In execution of the decree the plaintiff attached a certain house as the property of Jamna. Thereupon the defendant Ghela Ichharam intervened, claiming the house as his, and praying for the removal of the attachment. He alleged that Jamna as the mother and guardian of Mulji had sold the house to one Samal by a registered deed dated the 11th December, 1879, and that he (the defendant) had purchased the house from Samal under a registered sale-deed dated the 8th August, 1882. The attachment was consequently removed.

The plaintiff then brought a suit (No. 670 of 1886) against the defendant to establish his right to sell the house as the property of Jamna. In that suit the defendant pleaded that he had been in possession of the house as owner, and that he had purchased it from Samal, to whom it had been sold by Jamna before the date of the decree. The suit was dismissed on the ground that Jamna had no interest in the house.

Other issues were, however, raised in the case with reference to the title set up by the defendant, and upon them the Court found that the sale-deeds to the defendant were fraudulent and without consideration.

Subsequently the plaintiff obtained a bond from Mulji in satisfaction of the decree against his mother Jamna, and brought a suit (No. 529 of 1890) upon it, and got a decree against Mulji. In execution of that decree the plaintiff again attached the house in dispute as the property of Mulji. That attachment was also removed on the defendant's application.

[599] The plaintiff then brought the present suit against the defendant to establish his right to sell the house in execution of his decree in suit No. 529 of 1890 against Mulji, alleging that the sales set up by the defendant were colourable and fraudulent transactions.

The First Class Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit, holding that the plaintiff's judgment-debtor Mulji had no saleable interest in the house at the time of the attachment: that the sales relied on by the defendant were not proved by the plaintiff to have been colourable and fraudulent, and that the plaintiff was not entitled to any relief. In his judgment the Subordinate Judge remarked that the finding of the Court in the previous suit (No. 670 of 1886), that the two sales were fraudulent and without consideration, was not necessary for the decision of the suit, and that the question was, therefore, not res judicata, and this finding could not prejudice the defendant who had succeeded in the present suit.

On appeal by the plaintiff the Judge held that the defence based upon the sale deeds set up by the defendant on which he rested his title, was res judicata by reason of the decision on the issues raised in suit No. 670 of 1886, and that the house was liable to be sold in execution of the plaintiff's decree. He, therefore, reversed the decree.

Defendant preferred a second appeal.

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—The question raised by this second appeal is whether the District Judge was right in holding that the issue [600] whether the sale by Bai Jamna to Samal Nathu through whom defendant claims was collusive and fraudulent, was res judicata by the finding on that issue in Suit No. 670 of 1886 between the same parties. In that suit the present plaintiff sought for a declaration that the house in dispute was the property of his judgment-debtor Bai Jamna, against whom he obtained a personal decree, alleging that the sale by Bai Jamna to Samal Nathu, on which defendant relied, was collusive or fraudulent. The Subordinate Judge held that Bai Jamna had no interest in the house, and dismissed the plaint on that ground; but he also recorded a finding that the above sale was collusive and fraudulent.

The question whether a finding on an issue which was not necessary for the decision of the case, and not embodied in the decree, can be regarded as res judicata in a subsequent suit between the same parties, turns upon the language of s. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code and was very fully discussed by the Allahabad High Court on a reference to a Full Bench in Jamaitunnissa v. Lutfunnissa (3), Petheram, C. J., delivering the judgment of himself and Straight and Brodhurst, JJ., says: (pp. 610-11) "The decree, though in general terms, will stand good as finally deciding the issues raised by the pleadings upon which the ultimate determination of the cause and the decree itself actually rested. More than these the decree cannot cover, and we are clearly of opinion that the findings in a judgment upon matters which subsequently turn out to be immaterial to the grounds upon which a suit is finally disposed of as to the plaintiff's right to any portion of the relief sought by him as declared by the decree, amount to no more than obiter dicta and do not constitute a final decision of the kind contemplated by s. 13 of the Code." The question had already been virtually decided in the same sense in Anusuyabai v. Sakharam Pandurang (2) where West, J., says: "A point is not finally decided against any party who is not allowed the opportunity of questioning the decision" and "no appeal lies against a merely incidental decision by one who is not prejudiced by the concluding decision to which the partial ones are but subsidiary," meaning by 'subsidiary' a decision not necessary to the determination of the suit.

[601] Mahmood, J., who differed from the majority of the Court in Jamaitunnissa v. Lutfunnissa (3) as to the final conclusion, admitted that some findings on issues would not be res judicata. He says: (p. 622) "It is of course possible that when more than one issue arises in a suit, the answer to one issue may furnish a full basis for the disposal of the whole suit either by decreeing or dismissing it. In such a case it is perfectly conceivable, that, if the Court went on to record findings upon other issues not essential to the justification of the decree, such findings might be mere obiter dicta not having the force of res judicata. From such obiter dicta no appeal could lie," but he held that such was not the case in the suit before the Court, as the plaintiff sought "not only possession of the property but also the cancellation of the wakfnama" on which the defendant relied, and the pleadings, therefore, as the learned Judge said, gave rise to two issues essential for the disposal of the suit.

The question, therefore, in this view turns upon the state of the pleadings. The case of Krishna Behari Roy v. Brojeswari Chowdrance (1) is a good illustration of this. There the plaintiff claiming to be the adopted son of the last owner sought to recover the land from the putnidars who had obtained leases from the widow, and the reversionary heirs intervened for the purpose of disputing the adoption. Both the Civil Courts of first instance and on appeals found in favour of the putnidars that the putnis could not be set aside, and dismissed the plaintiff's suit; but they also found against the intervener and in favour of the adoption, and the Privy Council held in the subsequent suit by the intervener to set aside the adoption that the issue as to the adoption was res judicata because it was a material issue which had been decided in the former suit. Their Lordships, as shown by the judgment, treated the suit before them as raising not only a question between the plaintiff and putnidars as to the validity of their putnis, but also a distinct question between the plaintiff and intervener as to validity of plaintiff's adoption. Again in Radha Madhub Holdar v. Monohur Mukerji (2), the Privy Council held that the question as to who [602] was the true representative of Matangini was the material issue in both suits, and, therefore, that the finding in the first suit operated as a bar to the second suit. Where, however, the defendant sets up two grounds of defence to the relief sought by the plaintiff and succeeds on one which causes the dismissal of the plaint, the decision on the other issue in the plaintiff's favour cannot be said to be material to the determination of the suit; it is, therefore, not res judicata, and no appeal would lie against it, because, as was remarked by the Privy Council in Rajah Run Bahadoor Singh v. Mussumut Lachoo Koer (3), "the decree was not based on it, but was made in spite of it." It must be admitted that it is impossible to reconcile the above view of the question with the decision of the Calcutta High Court in Niamut Khan v. Phadu Buldia (4) where it was laid down (p. 322) in the broadest terms that upon the proper construction of s. 13 of Act X of 1877, "when a material question," although immaterial for the purposes of the suit and although not embodied in the decree, "has been substantially tried and determined in a former suit, it cannot be tried again in any other suit between the same parties." That Full Bench ruling, however, has since the decision of the Privy Council in Run Bahadur Singh v. Lucho Koer (5) not been followed by the Calcutta High Court, as appears from the decisions in Nundo Lall Bhuttacharjee v. Bidhoo Mookhy Debee (6) and Thakur Magundeo v. Thakur Mahadeo Singh (7).

The right conclusion we think, on the language of s. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882) and the authorities, is that where the issue is not necessary for the decision of the suit, the decree couched in general terms does not cover the finding on that issue—nor indeed can such a finding by being expressly inserted in the decree acquire the force of res judicata which was wanting to it as part of the judgment of the Court. There is no section in the Code which makes it the more necessary to appeal from it, because it has been so inserted—Indeed the Code does not contemplate findings on issues being inserted in [603] it. See ss. 2 and 6, Civil Procedure Code, and the forms of decrees in fourth schedule.

1893 SEP. 26. APPELLATE CIVIL. 18 B. 597.

Applying this view of the law to the present case, we have the defendant setting up two defences to the plaintiff's claim to have the house declared to be the property of his judgment-debtor Bai Jamna; 1st, that the house did not belong to Bai Jamna; 2nd, that it had been already sold to him by Bai Jamna and her son Mulji prior to the plaintiff's decree against Bai Jamna. The Court found that it was not Bai Jamna's property, but belonged to Mulji, and decided the suit on that finding; but it also recorded a finding on the 2nd issue, that the alleged sale to defendant was fraudulent and collusive. This finding was, therefore, not material in the sense of not being necessary for the determination of the suit, or, in other words, it was not covered by the general terms of the decree dismissing the plaintiff's suit.

We must, therefore, reverse the decree of the Court below and send back the case for a fresh decision having regard to the above remarks. Costs to abide the result.

[F., 21 B. 195 (197); Cons., 26 M. 157 (161)=12 M.L.J. 189.]

SECOND appeal from the decision of Arthur H. Unwin, District Judge of Kanara.

[604] The plaintiff sued the defendant to recover possession of certain lands and arrears of rent. The plaintiff alleged that he had let the lands on mulgeni tenure to one Narna Kamti, who on the 12th June, 1873, passed a kabulayat to him agreeing to pay rent every year and undertaking not to alienate the lands and to surrender them to the plaintiff if he himself did not require them. The plaintiff stated that after Narna Kamti's death, defendants Nos. 1 and 2, who were his (Narna's) grandnephews and heirs, sold the lands to defendant No. 3 on the 3rd September, 1889, in violation of the terms of the kabulayat. He contended that the sale was void as against him, and had put an end to the mulgeni tenancy.

The first defendant pleaded that the stipulation in the kabulayat was penal and that plaintiff was not entitled to possession; that the mulgeni tenant right had been sold for a family debt to defendant No. 3, who was in possession of the lands and was liable to pay the arrears of rent.

* Second Appeal No. 394 of 1892.

OCT. 2.
APPELLATE CIVIL.
18 B. 603.

The second defendant, a minor represented by his guardian, pleaded that the sale by the first defendant was not binding on him; that the plaintiff was not entitled to possession, and that the first defendant, who had possession, was the person liable to pay the arrears of rent.

The third defendant alleged that the sale to him was made for the family debts of defendants Nos. 1 and 2, and was, therefore, binding on both these defendants; that the conditions in the kabulayat were penal and could not be enforced; that the restraint on alienation affected only the first lessee and not his heirs, and that, therefore, the plaintiff was not entitled to eject him, and that he was liable to pay one year's rent, of which due notice was given to plaintiff, who had refused to accept it.

The Subordinate Judge held, following the decision in Tamaya v. Timapa (1), that the forfeiture clause in the lease could be relieved against, as it simply prohibited alienation by the lessee, but did not stipulate that the lease should terminate if any such alienation was made, nor did it give the lessor any right to eject [605] the lessee. He, therefore, passed a decree for arrears of rent only against all the defendants.

On appeal by the plaintiff the Judge found that the lease contained a clause of forfeiture or re-entry enforceable by plaintiff, provided he accepted "the position of the lessee's vendee." He, therefore, amended the decree in the following terms :—

"I, therefore, amend the lower Court's decree by awarding plaintiff's claim for possession also, provided that within six months from date he tendered to defendant No. 3 the amount which the latter has paid to defendant No. 1 for the mulgeni right in his property, and which defendant No. 3 must accept. On plaintiff's failure to tender this amount within six months, this part of the decree ceases to be enforceable, and therewith also plaintiff's claim to recover possession. Costs on defendants."

The following is an extract from the Judge's judgment :—

"There is an express stipulation both in the lease, of which Ex. A is a certified copy produced from the District Registrar's office, as well as in the kabulayat, Ex. 13, that if the lessee does not want the mulgeni holding, he must surrender (wappisa) it to the lessor, and then immediately follow words binding the lessee not to sell, mortgage, or alienate, &c., to any one but the lessor. This seems to distinguish the lease from that sued on in the case relied on by the Subordinate Judge. If defendants Nos. 1 and 2 desired to sell, they were clearly bound to treat with plaintiff only.

"Now in these days, when assessment payable by mulgars is liable to be enhanced to an amount exceeding the fixed rents payable to them by their mulgenidars, and when the struggles of mulgars to rid themselves of the damnosa hereditas which these permanent leases have entailed upon them form so large an item of the litigation of these Courts, the present plaintiff could never have expected that this mulgeni holding would be surrendered to him except for valuable consideration; he had secured not merely pre-emption, but sole emption, and was, I take it, bound by a correlative obligation to offer the lessee at any rate market value for this holding."

[606] The third defendant preferred a second appeal.

JAGANNATH BRAKHBHAU (Original Defendant), Applicant v. J. E. SASSOON AND OTHERS (Original Plaintiffs), *Opponents.

[3rd October, 1893.]

Practice—Procedure—Service of summons—Service by post—Return through the post of packet containing the summons endorsed "refused"—Evidence—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 82 and 622—Material irregularity.

A Small Cause Court having forwarded the summons to the defendant in a registered packet through the Post Office, the packet was returned endorsed 'refused,' the Small Cause Court held the service of the summons to be good service and passed an ex parte decree against the defendant.

Held, that the delivery of the summons by the post to a person who was not shown to be the defendant, was not good service.

[R., 29 M. 324 ; D., 21 B. 412 (418) ; 35 B. 213=13 Bom. L R. 323=11 Ind. Cas. 351.]

APPLICATION under the extraordinary jurisdiction against the decision of Khan Bahadur C. M. Cursetji, one of the Judges of the Court of Small Causes at Bombay.

E. D. Sassoon and Company brought a suit (No. 23362 of 1892), in the Bombay Court of Small Causes against the applicant Jagannath Brakhbhau, residing at Kampti and Nagpur in British territory and trading at those places under the name of [607] Brakhbhau Jagannath, to recover the balance of an account. The summons in the suit was sent through the post office in a registered packet, but the packet was returned to the Court by the Post Office endorsed 'refused.'

On the day of hearing, the applicant failed to appear, and an ex parte decree was passed against him. Subsequently the applicant applied for restoration of the suit to the file, but the Court rejected the application, holding that under s. 82 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) the service through the post was sufficient.

The applicant thereupon applied under the extraordinary jurisdiction, and obtained a rule nisi calling upon the opponent to show cause why the ex parte decree should not be set aside.

Macpherson, with Payne, Gilbert and Sayani, appeared for the opponent to show cause.—The summons was originally served upon a person who was said to be the agent of the applicant. On the day of hearing, this person appeared in Court and said that he was not the agent. The hearing was then adjourned, and a summons was sent in a registered packet addressed both to Kampti and Nagpur. The registered packet went to Kampti and came back with an endorsement that it was refused. The refusal to accept the packet was held by the Court to be a good service, and a decree was passed in our favour.

[BAYLEY, J.—There is nothing to show that the defendant himself refused to take the packet. The post peon may have presented the packet at the defendant's residence or place of business, and some one may have declined to take it.]

Section 114 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872) shows what presumption should be drawn in such a case.

Mahadeo Chimnaji Apte, for the applicant, in support of the rule, was not called upon.

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—The Small Cause Court has acted with material irregularity in treating the delivery of the summons by the post to a person, who was not shown to have been the defendant, as good service, and, therefore, in exercise of our extraordinary jurisdiction we must make the rule absolute, and reverse [608] the decree, and direct the Small Cause Court to proceed according to law.

DAVE LILADHAR KASHRIRAM (Original Applicant), Applicant v. BAI PARVATI (Original Opponent), Opponent. * [4th October, 1893.]

Succession Certificate Act (VII of 1889), ss. 1 (4), 6 (a) and 7 (1)—Will, application for a certificate under—Validity of will—Hindu Wills Act (XXI of 1870).

Clause 4 of s. 1 of the Succession Certificate Act (VII of 1889) does not preclude an applicant from obtaining a certificate under the will of the deceased.

A will having been held to be genuine in a contest between the parties, and there being no suggestion that the will was one to which the Hindu Wills Act (XXI of 1870) applied.

Held, that the Court could not refuse to grant the certificate.

APPLICATION against the order of J. J. Heaton, Acting Joint Judge at Ahmedabad.

Applicant applied to the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Dholka for a certificate under Act VII of 1889 in respect of the estate of deceased Bhavanishankar Kurnashankar under a will alleged to have been passed by the deceased.

The opponent, who was the widow of the deceased, opposed the application on the ground that the will under which the applicant claimed the certificate was a forgery, and prayed that as she had preferred an appeal (No. 41 of 1892) against the decision of the Subordinate Judge in the matter of her application (Miscellaneous Application No. 21 of 1891) for a certificate under Act VII of 1889 in respect of the property of her deceased husband, the said Bhavanishankar, the case should be adjourned until the decision of the appeal.

The opponent's application for a certificate had been opposed by the present applicant and refused by the Subordinate Judge on the [609] ground that the two wills produced by the present applicant were proved.

On the present application the Subordinate Judge granted the certificate to the applicant, holding that his decision in Miscellaneous Application No. 21 of 1891 as to the genuineness of the will was binding on the parties.

In appeal No. 41 of 1892 the Acting Joint Judge of Ahmedabad upheld the decision of the Subordinate Judge, but on appeal in the present matter that officer set aside the order of the Subordinate Judge, granting the certificate to the applicant. His reasons are given in the following extract from his judgment:—

"Applicant relies on a will that is found to be legal and valid (see proceedings in appeal No. 41 of 1892 which is decided with this appeal). But certificates under Act VII of 1889 cannot be given with respect to any debt or security to which a right can be established * * * * by letters of administration with a copy of such a will annexed (s. 1 (4) of Act VII of 1889).

"On other grounds also I should refuse a certificate under Act VII of 1889 to any one claiming under a contested will and especially to one who is not the natural heir. The applicant here, Liladhar, is not natural heir of the deceased Bhavanishankar; the natural heir is his widow, the opponent. Liladhar claims under a will to the detriment of the natural heir; ordinary justice requires, therefore, that he should make good his position by legally proving the will and obtaining probate or letters of administration. The law provides a special procedure for this—a procedure that involves a full inquiry into any will that is contested, but which gives the holder of probate or letters of administration full powers in dealing with the property bequeathed.

The result here is that neither party can get a certificate under Act VII of 1889; and Liladhar will be driven to apply under Act V of 1881, as indeed he ought to have done long ago.

"Another objection to granting certificates under Act VII of 1889 to persons claiming under contested wills is that the claimants [610] would so obtain certificates by the payment of smaller stamp duties than would be required for probate or letters of administration."

Against this decision applicant applied to the High Court under s. 622 of the Code of Civil Procedure for the exercise of its extraordinary jurisdiction, and obtained a rule nisi.

Govardhhanram M. Tripathi, for the applicant.—In the Mofussil, Courts are bound to give certificate to collect debts. It is not necessary to obtain a probate—Kalidas v. Bai Mahali (1).

There was no appearance for the opponent.

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—The District Court had no ground for supposing that s. 1, cl. 4 of Act VII of 1889 precluded the applicant from obtaining a certificate under the Act. The petition states, as required by

(1) 16 B. 712.

s. 6 of the Act, that there was no impediment, under the above section, to the grant of the certificate; and there is no suggestion that the will was one to which the Hindu Wills Act applied. As to the validity of the will, i.e., of "the right under which the petitioner claims," that is one of the averments in the petition (see s. 6 (d)) as to which the Court is to satisfy itself as provided by s. 7 (1); and the case of Kalidas v. Bai Mahali (1) shows that the Court cannot decline to do so; indeed, here the Court would appear to have already satisfied itself in appeal No. 41 of 1892.

We must, therefore, make the rule absolute and reverse the order of the Court below and restore that of the Subordinate Judge. Applicant to have his costs in the Court below.

GAVRISHANKAR PARABHURAM AND ANOTHER (Original Defendants), Appellants v. ATMARAM RAJARAM AND ANOTHER (Original Plaintiffs), Respondents.* [5th October, 1893.]

Hindu law—Partition—Property left undivided at the time of partition—Suit to recover share of the produce—Partition—Amendment of suit—Changing character of the suit.

The circumstance that there has been a partition between the members of a joint Hindu family does not, in the absence of any special agreement between them, alter their rights as to the property still undivided. As to this they continue to stand to one another in the relation of members of an undivided Hindu family.

A claim to a share of the produce of the property left undivided at a partition does not lie, because such a claim is based on the right to a particular share in the property itself which has no existence in the case of an undivided family.

A suit for a share of the produce or the property left undivided at a partition cannot be amended by making it a suit for partition without entirely changing its character.

THIS was a second appeal from the decision of J. J. Heaton, Acting Joint Judge of Ahmedabad.

The plaintiffs sued in 1889 the defendants to recover Rs. 122-4-0 as their half-share in the produce, for three years prior to the suit, of a certain filed which they alleged was left undivided at the time of partition which was effected between themselves and the defendants in the year 1876-77.

The defendants admitted that the field was left undivided at the time of partition, but alleged that two days after the partition the plaintiffs had sold their share in it to the defendants. They also pleaded limitation.

In the course of the suit the plaintiffs and their pleader admitted that there was other undivided property besides the field in dispute.

* Second Appeal No. 329 of 1892.

(1) 16 B. 712.

The Subordinate Judge (Rao Saheb Vadilal T. Parekh) found that the plaintiffs had not sold their share in the field to the defendants, and awarded the claim to the extent of Rs. 59-2-4.

[612] The defendants appealed, contending (inter alia) that the suit for a share of the produce would not lie, and that the claim was time-barred. The Judge, however, confirmed the decree.

Defendants preferred a second appeal.

Govardhanram M. Tripathi, for the appellants (defendants).—The plaintiffs' case was that though the other family property was divided, the field in dispute was left joint. The burden of proof ought to have been thrown on them. When once a partition is effected, the presumption is that the whole property is divided.

It is admitted that there is other property still undivided besides that in dispute. That property ought to have been included in the present suit. There cannot be separate suits for partition of separate properties. The suit should be dismissed—Trimbak Dixit v. Narayan Dixit (1); Parbati Churn Deb v. Ain-ud-deen (2); Haridas Sanyal v. Pran Nath Sanyal (3); Jogendra Nath v. Jugobundhu (4); Nanabhai v. Nathabhai (5). The plaintiffs' remedy is to bring a suit for general partition. If they cannot sue for a share of a particular property, much less can they sue for a share of the produce of that property. Here they claim a share of the produce without asking for a partition of the property itself.

Manchabhai K. Choksi, for the respondents (plaintiffs).—There was a partition in the year 1876-77, and our share in the property which was divided and also in that which was left undivided was ascertained; and that being so, we are entitled to recover the produce of our share in the property in dispute. The cases relied on merely show that where there has been no partition, a suit for the recovery of a share in a particular property, or of the income of a particular property, will not lie. In order to constitute partition, it is not necessary to have actual division by metes and bounds. An agreement to divide is sufficient—Anant Balacharya v. Damodhar Makund (6). The property in dispute being left undivided at the time of the partition, an agreement to [613] divide it can be inferred, and then there can be no objection to award us our share in the produce. If our plaint is wrongly framed, it can be amended so as to convert the suit into one for partition—Desai Chhagan v. Desai Parshotam (7).

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—The plaintiffs' case is that the land in question was left undivided at the time of the partition of 1876-77, and they ask for three years' share of the produce of it in the hands of the defendants. The defendants by their written statement contended that the plaintiffs had sold their share to them, but both the Courts found the sale not proved. It was admitted, however, by the plaintiffs and their pleader that there was other undivided property besides that in suit, and the question is, whether under those circumstances, the present suit will lie.

The cases of Trimbak Dixit v. Narayan Dixit (1) and Haridas v. Pran Nath (3) apply. The circumstance that there had been a partition in 1876-77 would not, in the absence of any special agreement between the parties, alter their rights as to the property still undivided, as to which they would continue to stand to one another in the relation of members of an undivided Hindu family, and no such agreement amounting to a partition of the fields in question is alleged by the plaintiffs. As to the claim to share in the produce, that must be based on the right to a particular share in the property itself which has no existence in the case of such a family.

We are of opinion, therefore, that the suit cannot lie to recover a portion of the produce, as the suit was not for partition of the field, but only to obtain a portion of the produce received by the defendant from it. Desai Chhagan v. Desai Parshotam (1) does not apply. The present suit cannot be amended by making it a suit for partition without entirely changing its character. We must, therefore, reverse the decree of the Court below and dismiss the plaint with costs of this appeal on the plaintiffs. Parties to pay their own costs in both the Courts below.

FATECHAND HARCHAND (Original Plaintiff), Applicant v. KISAN (Original Defendant No. 1), *Opponent. [10th October, 1893.]

Limitation— Acknowledgment— Stamp— Unstamped balance of account— Evidence— Stamp Act I of 1879, s. 34.

Though an unstamped acknowledgment cannot be "acted upon" as an acknowledgment of a particular sum being due, still it may be used for the collateral purpose of showing an acknowledgment of an existing liability in respect of goods sold.

[R., 19 M. 255; 11 C.L.J. 426=14 C.W.N 703 (708)=6 Ind. Cas. 549; Doubted, 21 B. 201 (204).]

APPLICATION under the extraordinary jurisdiction of the High Court (s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code, Act XIV of 1882) against the decision of A. Steward, District Judge of Khandesh.

The plaintiff sued the defendant to recover Rs. 226-7 principal and Rs. 59-9-0 interest, alleging that the defendant at different times purchased piece-goods from him; that an account of the transaction had been made, and that the first defendant had taken the account of his khata and struck the balance in his own handwriting.

The defendants admitted the acknowledgment or account alleged by the plaintiffs, but pleaded part-payment to the plaintiffs' gumasta (agent) of Rs 115 and denied their liability to pay interest.

At the hearing a question arose as to whether the acknowledgment or account was admissible, being unstamped. See Stamp Act I of 1879, s. 34.

The Subordinate Judge (Rao Saheb K. S. Risvadkar) found that the part-payment alleged by the defendants was not proved; that out of the amount claimed, the plaintiff was entitled to recover only the amount of the principal, Rs. 226-7-0, and not interest, and that the claim was not time-barred. He, therefore, allowed the claim to that extent. As to the document, the Judge said :—

---

* Application No. 62 of 1893 under extraordinary jurisdiction.

"I do not think that the acknowledgment is intended to supply evidence of the debt in suit; for on an adjustment of [615] accounts between plaintiff and defendants, the latter simply thereby seem to acknowledge their liability in respect of the balance found due. I should think that the acknowledgment is only intended to renew the period of limitation, and hence I hold that it is not required to be stamped.

"The defendants' pleader further contends that the suit is improperly based on an acknowledgment. He argues that as an acknowledgment does not contain any promise, no suit can be based thereon. His argument is correct, but I cannot accede to his contention. I do not think from the recitals in the plaint, that this suit is based on the acknowledgment."

On appeal by defendant No. 1, the Judge reversed the decree and rejected the claim, holding that the acknowledgment was inadmissible in evidence for want of stamp, and that in the absence of the acknowledgment the claim was barred by limitation.

The suit being of the nature of a Small Cause Court suit, in which no second appeal is allowed, the plaintiff applied to the High Court under its extraordinary jurisdiction, and obtained a rule nisi calling upon defendant No. 1 to show cause why the decree of the Judge should not be set aside, contending that the Judge was wrong in excluding the acknowledgment, because it was not stamped.

Ghanasham Nilkant Nadkarni, appeared for the applicant (plaintiff) in support of the rule.—The acknowledgment is admissible although not stamped. It is merely an acknowledgment of the liability and not of the amount of the debt. It, therefore, does not require a stamp. Further, the Judge ought to have gone into the question of part-payment. If part-payment be held to be proved, our claim would be in time independently of the acknowledgment.

Manchubhai N. Choksi, for the opponent (defendant), showed cause :—The acknowledgment being unstamped is inadmissible in evidence—Chenbasapa v. Lakshman (1) ; Act I of 1879, s. 34. No penalty could be paid, because the document requires only one anna stamp. Even supposing that the acknowledgment [616] is admissible to prove liability to pay, still the plaintiff must fail, because he has not proved the amount of the liability.

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C.J.—We agree with the Joint Subordinate Judge that this suit is not brought on the acknowledgment (Ex. 13), but is a suit for goods sold and delivered, the claim in respect of which was not disputed at the trial by the defendants except as regards interest which was not allowed. The case of Chenbasapa v. Lakshman (1), which was a suit on the hundis improperly stamped, does not, therefore, apply.

As regards the question of limitation, Ex. 13, although for want of a proper stamp it could not be "acted upon" as an acknowledgment of a particular sum being due, might, we think, without violating the intention of the Stamp Act, be used for the collateral purpose of showing an acknowledgment of an existing liability in respect of goods sold.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Candy and Mr. Justice Fulton.

CHUNILAL MANCHARAM (Original Defendant), Appellant v. MANISHANKAR ATMARAM (Original Plaintiff), *Respondent.

[16th October, 1893].

Easements—Easements of necessity—Light and air—Severance of tenements by grantor—Implied grant—Implied reservation of easement—Derogation of grant—Reservation of easements of necessity—Injunction—Easement Act V of 1882, s. 13.

One Wallabh was the owner of a certain house behind which was a courtyard or chok, half, of which belonged to him and the other half to one Mancharam (the defendant's father), who owned a house close by. Two of the rear rooms of Wallabh's house abutted upon his portion of the chok, and had two doors opening out into the chok. In 1861, Wallabh sold (inter alia) his half of the chok to Mancharam. The conveyance contained no reservation of any rights over the [617] chok Wallabh having died in 1875-76, his widow Jamna sold his house to the plaintiff and shortly afterwards the defendant (Mancharam's son) put up a boarding on the chok which blocked up the above-mentioned doors of the plaintiff's house, and obstructed the light and air passing through them into the said two rear rooms. The plaintiff sued for an injunction.

Held, that as Wallabh had made an absolute sale to Mancharam of his portion of the chok, expressly reciting that he had reserved no interest in the chok, it would in the circumstances of this case be contrary to equity and good conscience to hold that he impliedly reserved a right of light and air over the chok, so as to prevent B. from building on the chok and thus obstructing the windows and doors in Wallabh's house overlooking the chok.

Held, also, that the case was not governed by s. 13, cl. (c) of the Easements Act (V of 1882), which was not extended to the Bombay Presidency till Act VIII of 1891 was passed.

[R., 16 C.L.J. 417 = 17 Ind. Cas. 966.]

SECOND appeal from the decision of J. B. Alcock, District Judge of Surat, in appeal No. 38 of 1891 of the district file.

Certain land which originally belonged jointly to Wallabh and Brijkuver was in 1839 partitioned equally between them. On the half share allotted to Wallabh stood his house which he had built two years before, viz., in 1837, and immediately behind the house was a chok, or a courtyard, half of which came to him on the partition and the other half went to Brijkuver.

Subsequently Brijkuver sold her half of the land, including her share of the chok, to Mancharam (the defendant's father).

In 1861 Wallabh sold (inter alia) to Mancharam his (i.e., the remaining) half of the chok, so that Mancharam was now owner of the entire chok. Wallabh, however, still retained the rest of the land and his house which he got at the partition. Two rear rooms of his house abutted on the chok and had two doors opening into it. The conveyance of his half of the chok executed by Wallabh to Mancharam did not reserve any rights over the chok. The material part of the conveyance was as follows :—

"I have sold to you half the said chok appertaining to my share together with my interest in the tanka and the well, and put the same into your possession, for Rs. 50. From this day, therefore, you are to take into your possession the whole of the said chok, and use the said chok with the tanka and the well (therein). From this day I have nothing whatever to do with the chok, the tanka, and the well aforesaid."

In 1871 the defendant (Mancharam's son) built a shed on the part of the chok which had been brought from Wallabh in 1861, and subsequently built a loft over this shed.

[618] Wallabh died in 1875-76, and in 1883 his widow Jamna sold his house to the plaintiff.

The defendant subsequently put up a hoarding on the chok which completely barred the two doors of the above-mentioned two rear rooms of the plaintiff's house, which opened upon the chok.

In 1888 the plaintiff brought this suit praying that the defendant should be ordered to remove the hoarding and loft which obstructed the light and air passing to the northern door.

The defendant pleaded (inter alia) that neither the plaintiff nor his predecessors had ever acquired any title to the enjoyment of light and air through the doors and windows, and that the suit was time-barred.

The Subordinate Judge held that the plaintiff had not established a prescriptive right to the easement claimed. and rejected the plaintiff's claim in toto.

On appeal the District Judge found that what was claimed by the plaintiff was really an easement of necessity ; that the use of the doors in question and the enjoyment of light and air through them was necessary for the enjoyment of the plaintiff's house ; that Wallabh had been entitled to the easement claimed although he had sold his portion of the chok without reserving his rights, and that the plaintiff, who now stood in Wallabh's shoes, had the same rights. He, therefore, granted the relief sought by the plaintiff. In his judgment he said :—

"In his plaint plaintiff claimed a right of easement by prescription but in respect of any such right his suit would be barred under s. 26 of the Limitation Act. So at a subsequent stage he set up a claim of easement of necessity, and to that he is clearly entitled under s. 13 of the Easements Act, cl. (c).

"I have visited the place in dispute and found that light now enters the lower rooms of plaintiff's house only from the front door, there being houses on either side, and consequently no side windows. I happened to visit the house on a cloudy morning and found that it was scarcely possible to see at all in the two [619] inner rooms. Of course the opening of the two back doors, which are in dispute, would make a very material difference in the amount of light available, and these two doors are absolutely necessary for the proper use of plaintiff's lower rooms.....

"The two back doors being necessary for the enjoyment of the house after half of the (court) yard was sold, the transferor (Wallabh's widow) was entitled to the easement of light through these doors, and plaintiff, who stands in his shoes, is entitled to the same.

"I, therefore, vary the decree of the lower Court and award the relief asked for in respect of these two doors, viz., injunction and removal of the hoarding only."

APPELLATE CIVIL.
18 B. 616.

Against this decision the defendant appealed to the High Court. The question argued in appeal was whether the right to light and air over the chok was not impliedly reserved to himself by Wallabh in 1861 when he sold his half of the chok to the defendant's father Mancharam.

Govardhan M. Tripathi, for appellant (defendant).—The Easements Act (V of 1882) has no application to the present case. The Act was not extended to this Presidency till 1891, and by s. 2 of the Act it is expressly declared not to be retrospective. Prior to the Easements Act the rule was the same here as it is in England, that a vendor does not reserve easements of necessity by implication. He reserves them only if he does so in express terms—Wheeldon v. Burrows (1). White v. Bass (2); Ellis v. Manchester Carriage Co. (3); Chunilal Nyahalchand v. Husein valad Habibula (4); Goddard on Easements, pp. 258, 260 and 328. In the present case there is no express reservation of the easement claimed.

Motilal M. Munshi, for respondent (plaintiff):—The lower Court has found that the defendant has blocked up our windows and doors, and thereby completely darkened our inner rooms. The two back doors which open into the chok are absolutely necessary for the enjoyment of the house. We are, therefore, entitled to the easement claimed. The cases show that upon a severance of [620] tenements, easements used as of necessity will pass by implication of law—Purshotam Sakharam v. Durgoji Tukaram (5); Ratanji v. Edalji (6); Morgan v. Kirby (7). This being so, it must be held that when our portion of the chok was sold in 1861 to the appellant's father, our right to light and air over the chok was impliedly reserved to our vendor.

JUDGMENT.

CANDY, J.—Respondent not having pressed his cross-objections, the question before us is confined to the rear doors of plaintiff's house.

The land, on which the houses of the parties stand, originally belonged jointly to Brijkuver (defendant's grandmother) and Wallabh (husband of plaintiff's vendor). In June, 1839, Wallabh passed a release to Brijkuver in respect of a partition of the property. The chok or courtyard between the premises allotted to either party was divided half and half, but a small reservoir and well in the half share of the chok falling to Wallabh were kept joint. Brijkuver's son Mancharam (defendant's father) soon after 1839 purchased his mother's share of the property and built a house thereon. Wallabh's house was apparently built in 1837, and the two rear rooms abutting on his share of the chok had two doors opening out into the chok.

On 24th November, 1861, Wallabh sold to Mancharam his half share of the chok together with his interest in the reservoir and well. The conveyance contained no reservation of any rights whatever beyond that Mancharam might allow Wallabh to take water as long as he (Mancharam) pleased. Wallabh and Mancharam lived on amicable terms with each other, and it is not disputed that the latter allowed the former to open his rear doors and come into the chok and draw water.

About 1871 to 1873 (according to plaintiff's deposition in the present case) defendant built a shed over the portion of the chok purchased by him in 1861, and about 1875-76 he cut off the roof over the southern portion of this shed and built thereon a loft. Wallabh died about 1875-76, and his widow Jamna had disputes with defendant. Jamna accordingly in 1878 sued defendant for [621] possession of the half share of the chok next to her house, and for the removal of the shed erected by defendant. She failed in that suit, being met by the sale-deed executed by Wallabh in 1861. She then in 1883 sold her house to plaintiff, who was then sued by defendant claiming a right of pre-emption. Defendant lost that suit, and subsequently appears to have put up a hoarding completely barring the doors of plaintiff's rear rooms. Plaintiff then brought the present suit for an injunction, as regards the doors now in dispute, that defendant should remove the hoarding and the loft which obstruct the light and air passing to the southern door, and should remove the hoarding which obstructs the light and air passing to the northern door.

In the plaint plaintiff claimed to have a prescriptive right to light and air passing through both the doors; and his pleader also argued, in the course of the trial, that the severance of the tenements implied an easement of light and air to the doors.

The Subordinate Judge rejected the plaintiff's claim in toto, holding that no easement by prescription had been proved in respect of both the doors, and that on partition of the open land no equity had arisen in favour of the right of either party to any easement of light and air, the houses then not being in existence. The Subordinate Judge also found that (a) both doors had been effectively darkened by the shed and loft; (b) the hoarding still further darkened to a slight extent the northern door, but made no practical difference as regards the southern door, and that to allow plaintiff to open this southern door would practically give plaintiff ingress to a room of defendant's house; (c) defendant's witnesses were right when they spoke of the doors being chained on defendant's side since a long time; and plaintiff's witnesses were also right when they spoke to the doors having been opened, Wallabh having used the same as means of ingress and egress occasionally merely by the courtesy of his relative the defendant; (d) Wallabh had not claimed any right to light and air through these doors.

On appeal made by plaintiff to the District Court he urged: "My claim is not based on the right of continuous and apparent and necessary easement. Should the appeal Court hold necessary [622] to make an amendment accordingly, I should be allowed to do so, inasmuch as there is an admission of the defendant in the matter."

The District Judge found that "in his plaint plaintiff claimed a right of easement by prescription, but in respect of any such right his suit would be barred under s. 26 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877). So at a subsequent stage he set up a claim of easement of necessity, and to that he is clearly entitled under s. 13 of the Easements Act, cl. (c)." The District Judge on a visit to the house on a cloudy morning found that it was scarcely possible to see at all in the two inner rooms. "Of course (he said) the opening of the two back doors which are in dispute would make a very material difference in the amount of light available, and these two doors are absolutely necessary for the proper use of plaintiff's lower rooms."

The District Judge also found that there was no satisfactory evidence of the two back doors having been closed from defendant's side for a long period, "and, as the Subordinate Judge has remarked, there is no mark on the doors to show for certain that there was ever any fastening on them. Defendant admits in his deposition that the doors were used for years after his father bought up that half of the court-yard which did not fall to his share. The two back doors being necessary for the enjoyment of the house after that half of the yard was sold, the transferor was entitled to the easement of light through these doors, and plaintiff, who stands in his shoes, is entitled to the same." The District Judge, therefore, varied the decree of the lower Court and awarded part of the relief asked for in respect of the two doors, viz., injunction and removal of the hoarding only. It is against this decree that defendant has made second appeal.

I am of opinion that the decree of the Subordinate Judge rejecting the plaintiff's claim was correct, and should be restored.

It seems clear that the District Judge was in error in disposing of the case under the Easements Act (V of 1882) which did not become law in the Bombay Presidency till Act VIII of 1891 was passed. By s. 2 of the Easements Act nothing contained in the Act shall be deemed to derogate from any right acquired, or [623] arising out of a relation created before the Act comes into force. We must, therefore, deal with the case quite apart from the provisions of the Easements Act. If the defendant in this case, before the suit was filed in 1888, had the right to deal as he liked with the portion of the chok purchased by him in 1861, then the plaintiff's case must fail. It is unnecessary to quote authority for the proposition that there being no special custom involved, we must be guided by the law of England. Mr. Whitley Stokes in his Introduction to the Easements Act (the Anglo-Indian Codes, Vol. I, p. 878) states that the law of England, being just, equitable and almost free from local peculiarities, has in many cases been held to regulate the subject in India. Many cases could also be quoted in which the same proposition is laid down.

Now, the law of England as set forth by the Court of appeal in 1879 in Wheeldon v. Burrows (1) must be regarded as settled law (Gale on Easements, 6th ed., p. 133). That law is (p. 49) that on the grant by the owner of a tenement of part of that tenement as it is then used and enjoyed if the grantor intends to reserve any right over the tenement granted, it is his duty to reserve it expressly in the grant. This rule (Thesiger, L.J., said) is subject to certain exceptions. "One of those exceptions is the well-known exception which attaches to cases of what are called ways of necessity; and I do not dispute for a moment there may be, and probably are, certain other exceptions, to which I shall refer before I close my observations upon this case." The Lord Justice showed that the rule in question was founded upon a maxim, which is as well established by authority as it is consonant to reason and common sense, viz., that a grantor shall not derogate from his grant; and that the distinction between what has been called an implied grant and what is attempted to be established under the name of an implied reservation has existed almost as far back as we can trace the law upon the subject. The Lord Justice then showed that, putting aside the case of Pyer v. Carter (2), there has been no decision which in any way affects the principle laid down in clear and distinct terms by Lord Holt in Tenant v. Goldwin (3) that if the owner of a house and ground sells the ground and keeps the house, [624] without reserving the benefit of the lights, the vendee of the ground may build against the house. It was next shown by the Lord Justice that certain observations of the Judges of the Court of appeal in Watts v. Kelson (4) could not be taken as overruling the decision of Lord Westbury in Suffield v. Brown (5) which distinctly re-affirmed the rule as above stated. As illustrations of the exceptions to the rule the Lord Justice quoted Pinnington v. Galland (1) and Davies v. Sear (2), both of which were decided on the basis that the easement impliedly reserved was a way of necessity. It was also suggested that Pyer v. Carter (3) and Richards v. Rose (4), could be supported on a similar basis of exception to the general rule, the easements in those cases being reciprocal and mutual. Swansborough v. Coventry (5) and Compton v. Richards (6) were quoted as illustrating a further exception to the general rule, viz., where the conveyances of the land and houses were made as part and parcel of one transaction.

It is evident from a review of the above case of Wheeldon v. Burrows (7) that the exceptions to the rule, i.e., ways of necessity, and such like easements of necessity can never include an easement of light. In Currier's Company v. Corbett (8) Vice-Chancellor Kindersley said: "It has been determined that if a person having a house on his land, the windows of which have existed for more than twenty years, sells a portion of the land, the purchaser may erect any buildings he pleases upon the lands so sold to him however much they may interfere with the light coming to the windows of the vendor's house. That seems clearly to be the law, though it must be admitted that this law, if carried to an extreme, would in some cases produce great and startling injustice."

The case itself of Wheeldon v. Burrows was one of lights. In the Court of appeal defendant's counsel said: "We claim to protect them (the lights) from a blocking up which will make the defendant's building absolutely useless." And yet the Court of [625] appeal held that it was not one of the exceptions to the general rule that a grantor cannot derogate from his own grant.

Wheeldon v. Burrows being admittedly settled law, it seems unnecessary to quote cases which were decided on the authority of the now overruled case of Pyer v. Carter, or on a mistaken idea of what was really decided in Watts v. Kelson. It is clear that under the circumstances of such a case as Wheeldon v. Burrows, the right to prevent windows being absolutely blocked cannot be treated as an easement of absolute necessity. It clearly was not so in the present case. The District Judge did not express disapproval of the finding of the Subordinate Judge that the shed and loft erected by defendant (according to plaintiff's showing) from 1871 to 1873 "effectively darkened" the two rear doors of Jamna's house. The house was clearly not rendered uninhabitable by the darkness of the two rear rooms. It is evident that if the Easements Act could be applied, the case would have to be tried under cl. (d) of s. 13. It is only the easements mentioned in cls. (a), (c) and (e) of s. 13 which are called "easements of necessity." These are evidently confined to easements of absolute necessity; and the word 'absolutely' is to be found in the drafts of the Bills of 1879 and 1881. In the Statement of Objects and Reasons of the Bill of 1879 it is mentioned that 'easements of necessity' were intended to mean not only the rights which are absolutely necessary for enjoying property, but also apparent and continuous, and easements necessary for enjoying property as it was enjoyed when it was separated by grant. But the Law Commission recommended (Gazette of India, 17th January, 1880) that easements of necessity strictly so called should be separated from those apparent and continuous easements which arise when a transfer is made, which are necessary for enjoying the thing transferred, or other immoveable property of the transferor, as it was enjoyed when the transfer took effect. This was accordingly done in the Bill of 1881, which is practically the same as the Act which is now law. Therefore, if the District Judge was at liberty to refer to the Easements Act, it is clear that he should have decided the case under cl. (d) of s. 13, and then, after considering the facts and evidence noted by the Subordinate Judge, he should [626] have found whether an intention contrary to the reservation was necessarily implied, and whether the easement of light and air over defendant's chok so impliedly reserved in the conveyance of 1861 had been extinguished before the plaintiff's suit was filed in 1888, and if not, whether he could grant an injunction removing the obstruction which prevents plaintiff from enjoying the use of the rear doors as they were enjoyed by Wallabh in 1861. It is apparent that the District Judge did not approach the case from this point of view. But, as shown above, it was not open to the District Judge to rely on the Easements Act at all.

It is no doubt anomalous that the Easements Act should have introduced such a marked variance from the English law. This is apparently due to the fact that Mr. W. Stokes, who drafted and introduced the Easements Bill in 1878, was of opinion that the English law "rests on a doubtful doctrine of Lord Holt's (see 2 Drew and Smale, 360)." The judgment of the Court of appeal in Wheeldon v. Burrows had not then been delivered, showing that the doctrine of Lord Holt was not doubtful, but had been laid down in clear and distinct terms, and was as well established by authority as it is consonant to reason and commonsense. The reference to 2 Drew and Smale, 360, is to the case above quoted of Curriers Co. v. Corbett in which Vice-Chancellor Kindersley, though stating that the law if carried to an extreme would in some cases produce great and startling injustice, yet held the law to be in no way doubtful, but quite clear. Since the decision of Wheeldon v. Burrows there is no room for doubt. In Allen v. Taylor (1) Jessel, M.R., said that it is "settled law that if a man who has a house and land, grants the land first, reserving the house, the purchaser of the land can block up the windows of the house."

It is not difficult to see how the Easements Act, s. 13, cl. (d), has become law. It is apparently based on the judgment of Mr. Justice Field in Charu Surnokar v. Dokouri Chunder Thakur (2). Mr. Whitley Stokes acknowledged the assistance given to him by that learned Judge in drafting the Bill which [627] became the Easements Act. In the judgment in the case just quoted it was said that the right claimed, "though not absolutely necessary to the enjoyment of the defendant's tenement, might be necessary for its enjoyment in the state in which it was at the time of severance; and in this case, if the easement were apparent and continuous, there would be a presumption that it passed with the defendant's tenement. This latter case is discussed in the books under the principle of the disposition of the owner of two tenements (destination du pere de famille). See Gale on Easements, 5th ed., pp. 96, 97 and following pages; and as to right of way, p. 103 note, p. 124 note, and Pyer v. Carter (1. H. and N. 922). This principle is just and fair and accords with commonsense. It is in consonance with the rule of justice, equity, and good conscience, which must guide the Courts in the absence of positive direction by the Legislature."

(1) 16 Ch. D. 355.

(2) 8 C. 956.

But Lord Westbury in Suffield v. Brown (1) showed that this comparison of the disposition of the owner of two tenements to the destination du pere de famille is a mere fanciful analogy from which rules of law ought not to be derived. "And the analogy, if it be worth grave attention, fails in the case to be decided, for when the owner of two tenements sells and conveys one for an absolute estate therein, he puts an end, by contract, to the relation which he had himself created between the tenement sold and the adjoining tenement; and discharges the tenement so sold from any burthen imposed upon it during his joint occupation; and the condition of such tenement is thenceforth determined by the contract of alienation and not by the previous user of the vendor during such joint ownership" The Lord Chancellor then went on to notice the fallacy in the judgment of the Court of Exchequer in the case of Pyer v. Carter (2) which case was finally overruled in Wheeldon v. Burrows (3).

Applying these principles to the present case, it seems clear that since in 1861 Wallabh sold out and out to defendant's father his portion of the chok, expressly reciting that he reserved no interest in the reservoir or well, it would be contrary to equity and good conscience to hold that he impliedly reserved a right [628] of light and air over the chok, which would effectually prevent the purchaser from building on the chok so purchased, and thus obstructing the windows or doors in the vendor's house overlooking the chok. For these reasons, I would reverse the decree of the District Judge and restore that of the Subordinate Judge, with all costs on plaintiffs.

FULTON, J.—As the Easements Act was not in force in 1861 when the severance of tenements took place out of which the easement claimed by the respondent in this appeal is alleged to have arisen, the only principle which can guide this Court in determining whether the right to light and air through the doors in question was by implication reserved by the vendor when he sold the courtyard adjacent to those doors, is, as pointed out by Field, J., in Charu Surnokar v Dokouri Ckunder Thakur (4), that of equity and good conscience. In England it has been finally settled in Wheeldon v. Burrows (3) that on the sale of land adjoining a house, the right to light and air over that land to the windows of the house is not retained by the vendor unless expressly reserved. The law on the subject has been very lucidly explained by Jessel, M. R., in Allen v. Taylor (5) as follows:—"Where a man grants a house in which there are windows, neither he nor any body claiming under him can stop up the windows or destroy the lights. That is based on a principle that a man shall not derogate from his own grant; and it makes no difference whether he grants the house simply as a house or whether he grants the house with the windows or the lights thereto belonging. In both cases he grants with the apparent easements or quasi easements. All that is now I take it settled law. I take it also that it is equally settled law that if a man who has a house and land grants the land first reserving the house, the purchaser of that land can block up the windows of the house." In England thus the agreement under which the sale has taken place is construed more strictly against the vendor than against the vendee, but even there this principle was seriously disputed in Pyer v. Carter(1) and it is, as stated in Wheeldon v. Burrows, subject to an exception in regard to ways [629] of necessity which are always held to be reserved by implication and possibly to other exceptions.

In India, on the other hand, when the Easements Act was passed, the principle on which Pyer v. Carter was decided was adopted, and by cls. (a), (b), (c) and (d) of s. 13 transferors and transferees were placed on exactly the same footing as regard the implied reservation or grant of easements whether of necessity, or apparent continuous and necessary for the enjoyment of the premises as they stood at the time of the transfer; and although this Act cannot affect transfers which took place before its introduction, I think it is hardly safe to hold that all such transfers are on this point governed by English law albeit they were effected in a country in which that law was not in force and in total ignorance of its provisions.

The general principle that a vendor cannot derogate from his own grant, or, in other words, that a party to a contract of sale cannot escape from the express terms to which he has agreed, is, as pointed out by Thesiger, L.J., in Wheeldon v. Burrows, consonant to reason and commonsense, but when once it is admitted that this principle is subject to certain exceptions it becomes, in the absence of any fixed law on the subject by which those exceptions are specified, a question of extreme nicety to decide what are the easements so necessary for the enjoyment of the building reserved that it would be contrary to equity and good conscience to believe that it was not intended to reserve them at the time of the sale. In England the law has been established by a series of decisions subject to which sales take place, but that is not the case in India. Two Indian decisions—those of Charu Surnokar v. Dokouri Chunder Thakur (2) and Chunilal v. Husein (3)—appear to go further than the English cases in this matter. The former of these has, it is true, been recently criticised by the Allahabad High Court in the case of Wutzler v. Sharpe (4), but whether it was rightly or wrongly decided it seems to me to be conceivable that even in regard to light and air a case might arise where to hold that the vendee of an adjacent land was entitled to render unless the vendor's house by building up against his [630] windows might be so obviously contrary to what was contemplated at the time of the sale and be productive, in the language of Kindersley, V. C., (2 Drew and Smale at p. 360), of such "great and startling injustice" that a Court not bound by any positive rule of law on the subject might in the exercise of equity and good conscience think it necessary to hold that an easement had been meant to be reserved.

But while unwilling to decide that prior to the introduction of the Easements Act there were any positive rules in force on this subject, I think that a vendor or his successor in title claiming such a reservation as is claimed in the present case must show either by reference to the urgent necessity of the easement or the conduct of the parties to the sale that it cannot reasonably have been intended by either of them to do otherwise than reserve to the vendor the right which he claims. In the present case the finding of the District Judge does not show that access of light and air through these doors is so indispensable for the use of the house that it must necessarily have been reserved, nor has there been any attempt made to show any conduct of the parties from which the intention to make and allow such reservation can properly be inferred. The most that can be said is that the closing, in 1888, of these two doors makes the back rooms very inconvenient; but it is impossible in the circumstances of the case to say what was the intention of the vendor and vendee in reference to them. Such being the case, I think the plaintiff has failed to establish his claim, and I, therefore, concur with my learned colleague in reversing the decree of the District Judge and restoring that of the Subordinate Judge, with costs on the plaintiff throughout.

SUCCARAM MORARJI SHETAY AND OTHERS (Appellants) v. KALIDAS KALIANJI AND OTHERS, (Respondents).* [29th June and 6th July, 1894.]

Hindu law—Joint family—Manager—Widow—Minor sons—Sale by widow of immoveable property left by husband—Family necessity—Minor sons bound by sale—Deed of sale—Effect of conveyance how ascertained.

Ramji Shiva, a Hindu, died in debt leaving two minor sons. His widow, who after his death was the manager of the family, borrowed money for family purposes, and as security mortgaged some of the immoveable property left by her husband. She subsequently sold it and the Court held that the evidence showed that it was sold to pay off the family debts.

Held, that the minor sons were bound by the sale.

Held, also, that the effect of a conveyance of property sold by the manager of a family depends on the intention of the parties as gathered from the terms of the instrument and from the surrounding circumstances.

[R., 17 Ind. Cas. 609=23 M.L.J. 638=12 M.L.T. 547.]

APPEAL from an order made by Starling, J., on the 19th March, 1893, apportioning among the claimants thereto the sum of Rs. 25,408 8-6, which was the amount assessed as compensation for certain land (7,685 square yards), situate at Byculla in Bombay, taken up under the Land Acquisition Act (X of 1870). The matter had been referred to the Court by the Collector under s. 15 of the Act, in order that the sum to be paid to each claimant should be determined.

One of the points raised in the case, and the only one dealt with in this report, was whether a sale of land by the widow of a deceased owner (a Hindu) bound the interests of his minor son.

Two of the claimants in the case were Tatia Ramji Dhoble and Govind Ramji Dhoble, who were the sons of one Ramji Shivji Dhoble, deceased. They alleged that part of the land in question belonged to them as heirs of their father, and as owners of the land they claimed a share in the compensation awarded by the Collector.

Their claim was, however, contested by one Kalidas Kalianji, who alleged that on 12th December, 1884, by a duly registered deed of that date, Chimnabai (the widow of Ramji Shivji [632] Dhoble and the mother of Tatia and Govind), had sold this particular portion of the land in question to him (Kalidas) and his brother, who was now dead. He stated that Ramji Shivji had died about 1879, and that shortly afterwards he himself had lent money to the widow Chimnabai on mortgage of this land, which was finally sold by her to him and his brother in December, 1884. In his evidence he said :—

"Ramji Dhoble died in Bombay. I first advanced money to his widow in 1881—Rs. 300 in one sum—two years after Ramji's death. When I advanced the money on mortgage to Chimnabai, she wanted it to pay off the claims of a grain-dealer who had brought a suit against her. She told me that the grain-dealer, while her husband was ill, had made advances to her for necessaries, and afterwards for funeral expenses, and Rs. 900 was due to the grain-dealer. At that time she was maintaining the two sons of her husband, and the balance of the purchase-money was to pay a further amount to the grain-dealer, who had issued a writ against her. I afterwards advanced Rs. 250 more at the time of the writing, about three years after the first payment. I made the two advances. I did not trust to the widow alone, as there were decrees against her as representing her husband which she wanted to pay off. She told me there was a decree against her and if she did not pay she would have to go to jail. I was told by her Rs. 950 were due to Puna Assu in respect of the decree. I asked her to join her son in the conveyance, but she said that he was only a child. The Rs. 250 were paid before the Registrar."

The conveyance by Chimnabai to Kalidas and his brother Vasta was as follows :—

"There is my (piece of) land situated at Byculla on the Parel Road, being a part of land (known as that of) Sonabai, standing in the name of my husband, Ramji Shivji Dhoble, and wherein he had a sixteenth share. I had borrowed before Rupees three hundred on mortgaging the said (piece of) land. The same were borrowed on the 28th of February, 1881. I was not able to repay the same. I have, therefore, on receiving Rs. 550, sold this land, (i.e.) the sixteenth share therein, on which there are warehouses for storing hay. With regard to the receipt of this amount, Rs. 300 were received on a former mortgage and Rs. 250 have this day been received. Having received Rs. 550 in all I have sold the same land to you. The four boundaries thereof are as follows:—" (Boundaries stated.) "I have received Rs. 550, on having sold to you this land enclosed within the four boundaries thus particularised. You are to enjoy the said land from generation to generation. Neither have I nor have my heirs any claim whatever thereon. If any one should prefer (a claim) I will answer for the same. This deed of purchase (? sale) I have duly given in writing of my free will and pleasure and in sound mind and consciousness. The handwriting of Apaji Gopal Medhekar, residing in Bombay."

Vicaji (with Anderson), for the sons of Ramji :—The sale by the widow Chimnabai is only binding on her sons, who were then [633] minors, on two conditions: first, if there was a necessity for the sale of the land; secondly, if she purported to sell on their behalf and as representing her deceased husband's estate. As to necessity, it is not shown it existed: West and Buhler (3rd ed.), p. 611. As to the second condition, the deed states that the property belonged to her. She was, therefore, not acting as guardian of her sons or as representative of her husband's estate. She treated the land as her own, and acted adversely to her sons. She, therefore, cannot be held to have conveyed their interests: Mayne's Hindu Law (5th ed.), para. 196, and see cases cited in note (c) ; Bahur Ali v. Sookeea(1). The purchaser knew the sons were interested and asked that they should join in the deed. She refused and dealt with the property as her own. The liabilities which she discharged with the money raised by the mortgage and sale of the land were her own personal liabilities.

Lang, Advocate General, (with Scotf), for the purchasers :— Ramji Dhoble admittedly died indebted. The liability to pay off his debts was no doubt transferred to the widow's personal account. It still remained his debt to be paid off ; and as manager of his estate she had authority to pay it, though for that purpose she gave to her husband's creditors the additional security of her own personal liability. That additional security did not do away with the legal necessity on her part to sell his property. The friends, moreover, who agreed to pay part of the debt, namely, Rs. 150, might be regarded in the position of sureties for her ; and she had to pay them off also. The real question is, whether a guardian or manager is not empowered to indemnify herself out of her husband's property for debts originally contracted by him, and for which she became personally liable? If she is, these purchasers who made inquiries at the time of the sale have acted in good faith, and the property of which they have been in possession since 1884 cannot be followed in their hands. As to the interpretation of the sale-deed, the intention with which it was executed is important. One of the purchasers has sworn that in selling she represented her husband's estate. The cases cited for Dhoble's sons do not apply.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

[634] FARRAN, J. [which on the above point was as follows] :—Kalidas and his brother also claim the plot which originally belonged to Ramji Dhoble, basing their title upon a conveyance by Dhoble's widow Chimnabai bearing date the 12th of December, 1884. Dhoble died in April or May, 1879, leaving his widow Chimnabai and two minor sons . . . . [His Lordship referred to the evidence as to the circumstances under which the conveyance was made, and continued :—]

The substantial questions raised are whether the sale by Chimnabai was binding upon the minor sons of Dhoble ; and whether the deed of sale, having regard to its peculiar terms, operated to convey the minors' interest in the land to Kalidas. The law as to the mother's right to sell the property of her minor sons is laid down in West and Buhler's Work on Hindu Law (3rd ed.), p. 611, in these terms :—"A widow managing for her infant son like any other manager when minors are interested as co-parceners can deal with the property only to meet existing necessities, but the other party is protected by good faith and reasonable inquiry." We have referred to the cases cited in the notes to that passage and to those referred to at p. 367 of the same work. They draw no distinction between the case of a mother acting for her minor sons and that of any other manager of a Hindu united family in which there are minor members. In each case the manager has power to alienate the family estate in cases of strict necessity. We refer especially to C. Colum Comara v. R. Rangasawmy (2) and Dalpatsing v. Nanabhai (3).

In the present instance the pressing necessity for the sale is, we think, sufficiently shown. Dhoble died in debt, and the action of his widow Chimnabai after his death demonstrates with considerable certainty that he left no available assets to satisfy his liabilities. He owed Rs. 725 to the firm of Puna Assu. Chimnabai paid off Rs. 375 of this in small sums, and made herself personally liable for the remaining Rs. 350. In May, 1879, a decree was passed against her in the Small Cause Court for Rs. 351-4-9 in respect of that liability. In February, 1881, that decree being then outstanding, she borrowed Rs. 300 on the [635] security of the plot in question, informing Kalidas that she had this outstanding decree to satisfy and debts incurred by her for the funeral expenses of her husband and other debts left by her husband. This latter statement must have been, on the whole, substantially true, for she was unable to pay off the decree from this loan. Subsequently, in 1884, she was arrested and put in jail for non-payment of it. She was only released on getting two of her friends to satisfy the decree-holder. In December, 1884, she received a further sum of Rs. 250 from Kalidas, and sold the land to him for this sum plus her former debt to him of Rs. 300. We think that we may fairly infer that the Rs. 250 were received by her to pay the friends who satisfied the firm of Puna Assu. The whole sum of Rs. 550 was, therefore, received by Chimnabai to satisfy family liabilities. We do not think that the necessity for the sale is lessened by the fact that Chimnabai had made herself personally liable for the family debt. The liability of the managing member of a family to be sued and put in jail, for a family-debt for which she has made herself personally responsible, satisfies, we think, the requirement of the Hindu law that there must be necessity for the alienation.

It was lastly contended that the terms of the deed of sale to Kalidas show that Chimnabai was selling the plot as her own, and that it does not operate to transfer the minors' interest in the land to Kalidas. The evidence of Kalidas, which we see no reason to distrust, shows that she intended to sell the land as that of her husband, and did not get her sons to join because they were too young: and the terms of the deed, when read as a whole, do not, we think, show any other intention on the part of Chimnabai. What the effect of such a conveyance is, appears to depend upon the intention of the parties to be gathered from the terms of the instrument and from the surrounding circumstances.

In Watson v. Shamlal (1), their Lordships of the Privy Council took both into consideration. Here the lady signs as widow of Dhoble intending to convey his interest in the land. That is clear having regard to the circumstances under which she executed. [636] We think it would be taking too technical a view of the instrument to hold that the whole interest of Dhoble did not pass by it, because he left minor sons, whose interest the deed does not, in terms, purport to convey.

The case of Bahur Ali v. Sookeea Bibee (2) was wholly different. That was the case of a sale by a Muhammadan lady, Shamla. The purchaser set up the case that she sold as owner of the land by reason of a hibbah executed to her by her husband in his lifetime. It was held that that case failing, the purchaser could not set up the contention that the sale was binding as a sale by her as guardian of her minor sons, inasmuch as she sold, and intended to sell, as sole proprietor and in her own right. In the matter of the purchase of Dhoble's share, we must confirm the decision of the Division Court.

ALTER CAUFMAN AND OTHERS, (Appellants) v. THE GOVERNMENT OF BOMBAY (Respondent). [9th August, 1894.]

Habeas corpus—Foreigners—Act III of 1864, validity and application of—Powers of legislation of the Governor General in Council—Indian Councils Act (Stat. 24 and 25 Vict., c. 67), s. 22—Crim. Pro. Code (X of 1882), s. 491*—Warrant to arrest and imprison—Form of warrant—Service of warrant—Procedure.*

On the 3rd July, 1894, certain foreigners resident in Bombay having been arrested by the police and sent to jail under warrants issued under ss. 3 and 4 of Act III of 1864, they applied to the High Court and obtained a rule nisi under s. 491 of the Criminal Procedure Code (X of 1882) and under Stat. 31, Car. II, c. 2 (Habeas Corpus Act), calling on the Superintendent of the Jail to show cause why they should not be set at liberty. In the affidavits filed in showing cause against the rule the only reason suggested for their arrest was that they were connected with loose women residing in a certain district of Bombay. It was contended for the prisoners that their arrest and imprisonment were illegal, (1) inasmuch as Act III of 1864 was ultra vires of the Indian Legislature; (2) that the Act being intended only to secure the "peace and security" of British India was in this case improperly applied.

[637] Held (1) that Act III of 1864 was not ultra vires of the Governor-General of India in Council;

(2) that it was rightly applied in the case of the foreigners in question, although their residing in Bombay may not have been likely to have affected or endangered the peace and security of British India.

Per STARLING, J.—Section 3 of Act III of 1864 gives the fullest power to the Government to order any foreigner to remove himself from British India. The Government is the sole judge of what is necessary for the peace and security of British India, and if it acted in accordance with the letter of the Act the Court could not inquire into the sufficiency of its reasons for so acting.

A separate warrant was issued in the case of each of the foreigners in question; and all were in the same form. The warrant directed the person whose name appeared in it forthwith to "remove himself from British India by sea," and it further contained the following words:—"All officers to whom this order may be communicated are required to see that it is duly obeyed, and in the event of its being infringed to apprehend and detain the said ( ) in safe custody in the jail of Bombay under s. 4 of the said Act, until he shall be lawfully discharged therefrom." Each warrant was signed by the Secretary to Government and was directed to the Commissioner of Police and to the Superintendent of the Jail.

Held that the warrants were not vaild warrants for the following reasons:—

(1) They were irregular in that they contained an order to the person named in them to do a certain thing with a further conditional order for his imprisonment in the event of his not doing it. There ought to have been a separate order to each prisoner to remove himself from British India, which order should have been duly served upon him. Then, in case of his refusal or neglect to comply with its terms, there ought to have been a further order by the Governor in Council authorizing his arrest and detention in jail.

(2) The persons named in them were not indicated with sufficient certainty and particularity. The warrants contained no description of the persons against whom they purported to be directed, and did not give their place of residence.

(3) By reason of the direction contained in them that the persons named in them were to remove themselves from British India by sea to the places mentioned in the warrant. The particular route to be specified under s. 3 of Act III of 1864 is intended to be a route in British India, and not a route beyond the high seas. The Government has no jurisdiction to direct a person's movements at sea beyond the limits of three miles from the shore.

APPEAL from an order made by Farran, J.

The appellants and two others, who were foreigners residing in Bombay, were arrested by the police in Bombay on warrants issued under Act III of 1864, ss. 3 and 4, on the evening of the 3rd [638] July, 1894. On the following day an application was made on their behalf to Farran, J., who issued a rule nisi, under s. 491 of Act X of 1882, and under Stat. 31, Car. II., c. 2 (Habeas Corpus Act) calling on the Superintendent of the Jail to show cause why the prisoners should not be set at liberty. On the 9th July the rule came on for hearing, and after argument Farran, J., as to the five appellants discharged the rule (1). From this order of discharge the present appeal was filed.

From the affidavits it appeared that on the 11th June the Commissioner of Police handed over to an Inspector of Police seven warrants purporting to be issued by the Governor of Bombay in Council, under ss. 3 and 4 of Act III of 1864 and signed by one of the Secretaries to Government and dated the 8th June. Each of the warrants was made out in the name of one of the prisoners. The Inspector was directed to show to each of the said persons the warrant applicable to him, and to have the contents thereof read and explained to him.

The warrant made out in the name of the first appellant was as follows. The warrants for the other prisoners were exactly similar, except that two of them directed removal "by sea to Roumania" and one "to Austria" and one "by sea to Adrianople":—

"Warrant.

"In exercise of the power conferred by s. 3 of Act III of 1864, the Right Honourable the Governor of Bombay in Council is pleased hereby to direct that Alter Caufman alias Alter Goolyk do forthwith remove himself from British India by sea to Odessa.

"And all officers to whom this order may be communicated are requirde to see that it is duly obeyed, and, in the event of its being infringed, to apprehend and detain the said Alter Caufman alias Alter Goolyk in safe custody in the jail of Bombay under s. 4 of the said Act, until he shall be lawfully discharged therefrom.

"By order of His Excellency the Right Hon'ble the Governor in Council,
"(Signed) W. LEE-WARNER.

"Political Department,
"Bombay Castle, 8th June 1894."

[639] On the 17th June the Inspector of Police went to a house in Bombay which was used by the prisoners and others as a club, and there carried out (as he alleged) the above orders.

The following paragraphs of the affidavit of the Inspector of Police state the subsequent proceedings:—

"4. On two or three occasions after that I went to the same club and found the above-named persons there, and I warned them again that they must comply with the orders of Government to depart from British India. They then appeared to understand what the orders were, but said they had no money to enable them to buy their passage. They all speak a little English. Jay Hussel alias Edell Chusel speaks English fairly well.

(1) The case as to the remaining two prisoners was adjourned. They were subsequently discharged on the ground of informality in the warrant with regard to their names.

"5. I reported to the Acting Commissioner of Police that they had failed to leave Bombay, although they had had an opportunity of doing so. I was then ordered by the Acting Commissioner of Police to arrest the above-named persons in pursuance of the said warrant. I accordingly attended with four European constables at the said club on the evening of the 3rd July, at eight o'clock in the evening, and showed the warrants again to and arrested the above-named seven persons. As it was late that evening I detained them in the police lock-up—three of them at Girgaon and four of them at Nesbit Lane, and the next day, in accordance with the terms of the said warrant, I made them over, with the several warrants applicable to them, to Mr. Alfred George Mackenzie, the Superintendent of Her Majesty's Common Jail, at the said jail.

"6. It is true that I declined to give copies of the warrants, and that I referred the parties, who asked me for copies, to the Acting Commissioner of Police.

"7. I have been in the E Division for two years. The above-named seven persons lived within that division. They are all known to me as being connected with the loose women who live about the vicinity of Foras Road and Cursetji Sukhlaji Street."

The passage italicised in the seventh paragraph was the only indication in the affidavits of any cause for the arrests.

The matter came on before Farran, J., who after argument discharged the rule. From that order the present appeal was brought. It was heard on the 3rd August.

The preamble of Act III of 1864 and ss. 3 and 4 of that Act under which the arrests were made are as follows :—

"Whereas it is expedient to make provision to enable the Government to prevent the subjects of foreign states from residing or sojourning in British India, or from passing through or travelling therein, without the consent of the Government; it is enacted as follows :—

"3. The Governor General of India in Council may, by writing, order any foreigner to remove himself from British India or to remove himself therefrom by [640] a particular route to be specified in the order; and any Local Government may, by writing, make the like order with reference to any foreigner within the jurisdiction of such Government.

"4. If any foreigner ordered to remove himself from British India, or ordered to remove himself therefrom by a particular route, shall neglect or refuse so to do; or if any foreigner, having removed himself from British India in consequence of an order issued under any of the provisions of this Act, or having been removed from British India under any of the said provisions, shall wilfully return thereto without a license in writing granted by the Governor General of India in Council or by the Local Government under whose order he shall have removed himself or been removed, such foreigner may be apprehended and detained in safe custody until he shall be discharged therefrom by order of the Governor General of India in Council or of the Local Government within whose jurisdiction he shall be so apprehended or detained, upon such terms or conditions as the said Governor General of India in Council or Local Government shall deem sufficient for the peace and security of British India and of the allies of Her Majesty, and of the neighbouring princes and states."

For the appellants it was contended that their arrest was illegal on the following grounds :—

1st. That Act III of 1864 was invalid, being ultra vires of the Indian Legislature.

2nd. That the Act was in this case improperly applied.

3rd. That the warrants were irregular.

Kirkpatrick, for the appellants.—This Court may consider the validity of an Act of the Indian Legislature—Empress v. Burah(1), and I contend that Act III of 1864 is invalid, being ultra vires, and that orders and arrests made under it are illegal. The Indian Legislature may not exceed its powers (see per Lord Selborne in the Queen v. Burah (2)). It is created by Statute and has no powers except those given to it by Statute. Those powers are prescribed by s. 22 (3) of the Indian Councils Act (Stat. [641] 24 and 25 Vict., c. 67). That section explicitly declares how far the Acts of the Indian Legislature shall operate. They may control or supersede Acts of the Local Legislatures, but the section gives the Indian Legislature no power to control or supersede an Act passed by the English Parliament, and it expressly forbids it to make any law "which shall repeal or in any way affect" (4) any provisions of Stat. 21 and 22 Vict., c. 106. Section 64 of this latter Statute (5) provides that "all Acts and provisions or which may affect the authority of Parliament, or the constitution and rights of the East India Company, or any part of the unwritten laws or constitution of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, whereon may depend in any degree the allegiance of any person to the Crown of the United Kingdom, or the sovereignty or dominion of the Crown over any part of the said territories.

(4) As to the meaning of these words, see per Sargent, J., in the Queen v. Beay (7 B. H. C. R. Cr. Ca. 27).

(5) Stat. 21 and 22 Vict., c. 106, is the Statute passed in 1858 by which the Government of India was transferred from the East India Company to Her Majesty, and is entitled "An Act for the better Government of India."

Section 64.—All Acts and provisions now in force under charter or otherwise concerning India shall, subject to the provisions of this Act, continue in force, and be construed as referring to the Secretary of State in Council in the place of the said Company and the Court of Directors, and Court of Proprietors thereof; &c., &c.

now in force under charter or otherwise concerning India shall . . continue in force." English law was then and is now in force in the Presidency towns (see 6 Beng. L. R. at pp. 438-9 and pp. 446-7 and [642] see 4 Bom. H. C. Rep. 31—39). Magna Charta, the Petition of Rights and the Habeas Corpus Act are essential parts of English law; (see per Norman, J., at p. 451 of 6 Beng. L.R.); therefore, these Statutes as part of that law were in force: they are, therefore, Acts expressly continued in force by that section. But Act III of 1864, which allows arbitrary imprisonment and refuses a trial in open Court and gives no opportunity for defence, supersedes and practically repeals these Acts. Therefore the Indian Legislature by Act III of 1864 assumes to itself without authority the power of superseding English Statutes and also infringes s. 64 of 21 and 22 Vic., c. 106, which it was expressly forbidden to do by s. 22 of the Councils Act. Act III of 1864 is, therefore, ultra vires and invalid.

It is also ultra vires and invalid under the last clause of s. 22 of the Councils Act as it affects "part of the unwritten law and constitution of the United Kingdom, whereon may depend in any degree the allegiance of any person to the Crown." It is true that Act III of 1864 only refers to foreigners. But under this provision an Act may be invalid although it relates to persons who owe no allegiance to the Crown. For the test is, does it affect (not allegiance but) the constitution. Does it affect any part of the constitution on which the allegiance of any person depends in any degree? It will hardly be denied that the allegiance of Englishmen depends largely on the careful observance of the right to personal freedom, except on conviction of an offence after fair and open trial. This is conclusively shown by Norman, J., in his judgment in Ameer Khan's case (1) at p. 451 of the report. That right is an essential part of the constitution. But the constitution does not limit that right only to British subjects, but extends it to all who live within its protection (see pp. 443-4 of the report). Act III of 1864 takes away that right altogether from foreigners. Therefore in its dealings with foreigners it affects a part of the constitution on which the allegiance of Englishmen in some degree at all events depends, and it is, therefore, under the Councils Act, invalid. Further it is clear that under the Councils Act the Indian Legislature's power to legislate for foreigners is precisely the same as its power to [643] legislate for British subjects. Therefore, in order to ascertain if an Act as to foreigners is valid, we have only to see if it could be validly enacted as to British subjects. The test of validity is the same, as the powers of legislation are precisely the same. Act III of 1864, if made applicable to Englishmen, would certainly violate a part of the law and constitution whereon their allegiance in some degree depends. See per Norman, J., in Ameer Khan's case, at p. 451 of the report (1). Therefore, it would be invalid and ultra vires as to them, and, if so, it must also for the same reason be invalid as to foreigners. It is to be remembered that there is no analogy between the position and proceedings of the English Parliament and those of the Indian Legislature. Parliament being paramount has the power to pass any measures it pleases. Being representative it may be presumed that its measures merely express the will of the community and, therefore, can hardly be such as to shake the allegiance of the community. But whatever their nature and effect may be, they are "law," being passed by a competent legislature and can be legally enforced

The Indian Legislature on the other hand is a non-representative and Subordinate body exercising merely delegated and limited powers, and it is expressly forbidden to pass any measures which may have a tendency to affect allegiance. Such measures if passed by it are not "law" and any attempt to enforce them is illegal. The meaning and purpose of this limitation of the powers of a subordinate legislature are obvious.

Ameer Khan's case (1) will be relied on by the other side. It, however, was decided not with reference to the Councils Act, but with reference to Stat. 3 and 4 Will. IV., c. 85, and is no authority in the present case. But in any event I contend that it was wrongly decided, and ought not to be followed. The Judges did not decide that case on a construction of the Act then in force (Stat. 3 and 4, Will. IV, c 85, s. 45), but on political considerations. Norman, J., apparently found it impossible to hold that under the words of that Statute the Legislature had power to pass Act III of 1858, and he, therefore, held that it could do so on the ground of "emergency." He held that any Act which the Indian Legislature could pass in view of an emergency it could also [644] make permanent (see pp. 454-5 of the report). But that is clearly not the intention of the Councils Act, which by s. 23 gives a special power in cases of emergency to make laws which shall only remain in force for six months. If the doctrine laid down by Norman, J., were accepted, the limitations prescribed in s. 22 might be altogether disregarded and the Indian Legislature could permanently assume to itself supreme, uncontrolled and arbitrary power. No rights would be secure, for an emergency abrogates all law and all rights (see Phillips v. Eyre (2); Empress v. Burah (3). Considerations of emergency or expediency or necessity ought not to influence Judges in construing the law—The King v. Wilkes (4); Queen v. Dudley (5). An emergency which makes it necessary for Government to overstep the law does not justify the Courts in misconstruing the law, but calls for an Act of indemnity—Phillips v. Eyre (2).

Phear, J., held (p. 476 of the report) that Act III of 1858 constituted the Governor-General in Council a Court with full discretion to adjudicate and with power to imprison during pleasure. The effect of that decision is that the Indian Legislature might give itself judicial power and assume the power of interpreting and administering its own laws without control, and might thus constitute itself a Court in which there should be no trial granted, and no defence permitted,—in fact, turn itself into a new Star Chamber. I submit that is an unconstitutional doctrine. The Indian Legislature may not disregard what in England is deemed essential, viz., the separation of the legislative from the judicial functions. There is no authority for such a doctrine and no such power is given by the Councils Act.

Markby, J., in his judgment apparently argued thus (p. 482 of the report) :—"The Legislature is only forbidden to pass laws affecting that part of the constitution on which allegiance depends. But the subject's duty of allegiance does not in any way depend on the conduct of the sovereign towards him. He is bound to continue loyal, although all his rights and liberties are taken away. Therefore, Act III of 1858 did not affect allegiance, and, therefore, the Indian Legislature had power to pass it." The [645] conclusion is no doubt correct if the premises are granted. If this Court accepts them as a true statement of English constitutional law, further argument on this point is useless. These doctrines have seldom, if ever, been heard in an English Court of Law since the Revolution.

I submit, therefore, that, having regard to the principles on which Ameer Khan's case was decided, it ought not to be followed.

Next I contend that, even if Act III of 1864 is valid, it has been misapplied. The whole Act was clearly intended to be applied to insure "peace and security," and it is not suggested that the arrest of the appellants is for this purpose. It is now apparently applied to protect and improve the morals of the community. That is quite outside the object of the Act. Sections 3 and 4 cannot be read and construed independently and without regard to the rest of the Act. They are part of an Act the object of which is manifest. A Statute passed for one purpose ought not to be used for another—Maxwell on Statutes (2nd Ed.), 146, 320, &c.; Shidlingapa v. Karisbasapa (1); Stephen's Blackstone, Vol. I, pp. 72-76 (5th Ed.). The Court will bring up the prisoners on habeas corpus or under s. 491 of the Criminal Procedure Code to inquire into the reasons of their imprisonment—Broom's Constitutional Law, pp. 110, 112, 209-10; In re Omirtolall (2); In the matter of Khattija Bibi (3).

The warrants are bad in form. They contain both the orders of removal and the authority to arrest. The orders of removal should have been given in writing and should have been served separately. They exceed the powers given by the Act. The description of parties contained in them is not definite. The warrants to arrest should have been separate from the orders.

Lang (Advocate General), for the Crown:—Magna Charta and the Petition of Rights do not protect from imprisonment according to law. Act III of 1864 is law in British India, and, therefore, the imprisonment of the appellants under it is no infringement of the former Acts. The Indian Legislature has full power to make laws for India, and foreigners are bound to obey these laws. [646] The limitation on the Legislature not to pass laws affecting allegiance, cannot apply to laws affecting foreigners, as they owe no allegiance except so far as they are bound to observe the laws they find in force. The orders and warrants in this case were sufficient in form and did not exceed the power given by Act III of 1864 or infringe its provisions.

Kirkpatrick in reply:—The argument for the Crown is that Act III of 1864 is "the law of the land," and, therefore, Magna Charta, &c., is not infringed. That, however, merely begs the question, which is whether Act III of 1864 is the law of the land. That is the very point at issue, and my contention is that Act III of 1864 is not law, as it was ultra vires of the Indian Legislature. The Advocate General then argues that the validity of an Act affecting foreigners cannot depend on considerations relating to the allegiance of British subjects. But it is quite clear that under the Councils Act it does: 1st, because under the Councils Act any Act which touches a constitutional right on which the allegiance of any person (not necessarily the person against whom the particular Act is directed) depends is invalid, inasmuch as it affects the constitution; and secondly because the power to legislate for foreigners is the same as the power to legislate for Englishmen, and, therefore, any test which shows that a similar Act would be invalid if enacted as to Englishmen is sufficient to show the invalidity of an Act affecting foreigners. The Acts belong to one and the same class, and must stand or fall together.

Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

August 9th. BAYLEY, J.—This is an appeal against so much of an order made by Mr. Justice Farran on the 9th July, 1894, as discharged a rule nisi dated the 4th July, 1894, which called upon Mr. A. G. Mackenzie, the Superintendent of the Common Jail, Bombay, to show cause why Alter Chaufman and four other foreigners, alleged to be illegally or improperly detained by such Superintendent in the said Jail, should not be delivered; and by which rule nisi it had been ordered that the said Superintendent should bring up to the High Court the bodies of the said five persons there to be dealt with according to law.

[647] In the memorandum of appeal filed on behalf of the said five persons it was alleged (1) that the learned Judge was in error in holding that the passing of the Foreigners Act, III of 1864, was within the powers conferred upon the Governor General in Council; (2) that he erred in refusing to inquire whether the presence of the appellants did, in fact, endanger the peace and security of British India; (3) that he erred in refusing to inquire whether the power given by Act III of 1864 was properly exercised in the appellant's case; (4) that he erred in refusing to make an order liberating the appellants from custody; (5) that he was wrong in refusing to admit the appellants to bail and in referring them to the Magistrate; (6) that the order shoud be set aside with costs, and an order made for the appellants' release.

The appeal was argued before us on the 3rd instant by Mr. Kirkpatrick on behalf of the five appellant foreigners, and by the Advocate-General, who, instructed by the Acting Government Solicitor, appeared on behalf of the Government of Bombay.

The learned Advocate-General, when the Court inquired whether the appellants were out on bail, informed us that four of the appellants had on the 2nd instant left by sea for Europe and that the appellant named Solomon Moses alias Waxfigoor was the only one of the five appellants now in Bombay, where he was detained under the warrant against him in Her Majesty's Common Jail.

The warrants under which the appellants were arrested were precisely similar in form, except as to the names of the persons and as to the direction by which route each was to remove himself by sea.

As part of the argument on behalf of the appellants turned upon the alleged insufficiency of the warrants, it will be convenient to give here the one under which Solomon Moses alias Waxfigoor was arrested and is now detained in jail:—

"Warrant.

"In exercise of the power conferred by s. 3 of Act III of 1864 the Right Honourable the Governor of Bombay in Council is pleased hereby to direct that Solomon Moses alias Waxfigoor do forthwith remove himself from British India by sea to Roumania.

[648] "And all officers to whom this order may be communicated are required to see that it is duly obeyed, and, in the event of its being infringed, to apprehend and detain the said Solomon Moses alias Waxfigoor in safe custody in the jail of Bombay under s. 4 of the said Act, until he shall be lawfully discharged therefrom.

Secretary to Government.

" The Commissioner of Police, Bombay.
" The Superintendent, Her Majesty's Common Jail, Bombay."

It was contended on behalf of the appellants—

(i) That Act III of 1864, being " An Act to give the Government certain powers with respect to foreigners," was ultra vires of the Government of India to enact.

(ii) That that Act had been improperly applied.

(iii) That in any event the appellants, who had been arrested under that Act, were entitled to a writ of habeas corpus, or to an order under s. 491 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), the warrants, it was alleged, being absolutely insufficient.

First, as to the argument addressed to us, that Act III of 1864 was ulira vires of the Government of India, and that it infringed the rights conferred by Magna Charta, the Petition of Rights, and the Habeas Corpus Statutes.

The right of arbitrary arrest and detention in prison without assigning any cause therefor, which Act III of 1864 confers upon the Governor General of India in Council and the Local Governments—however contrary such right may be to the ordinary notions of Englishmen—was not conferred upon these authorities for the first time by that Act, and it may be useful to refer briefly to the powers which by legislative enactment were granted during the present century to those who were responsible for the government and the peace and security of British India and of those dwelling in it.

In the last year of the tenure of the office of Governor of Bombay by Mountstuart Elphinstone, that distinguished statesman [649] passed a Code of Regulations, one of which was Reg. XXV of 1827, which is still in force throughout the Presidency of Bombay and is entitled 'a Regulation for the confinement of State-prisoners and for the attachment of the lands of Chieftains and others for reasons of State.' It appears to have been based mainly upon a previous Regulation of the Bengal Government, Reg. III of 1818 of the Bengal Code.

After reciting that 'Reasons of State embracing the due maintenance of the alliances formed by the British Government with Foreign Powers, the preservation of tranquillity in the territories of Native Princes entitled to its protection, and the security of the British dominions from foreign hostility and from internal commotion, occasionally render it necessary to place under personal restraint individuals against whom there may not be sufficient ground to institute any legal judicial proceedings, or when such proceedings may not be adapted to the nature of the case, or may for other reasons be unadvisable or improper, and that it is fit that in every case of the nature therein referred to the measures adopted should emanate immediately from the Governor in Council . . . . the following rules have therefore been enacted' it proceeded to enact first that 'when any of the considerations stated in the preamble of this Regulation may seem to the Governor in Council to require that an individual should be placed under restraint without any immediate view to ulterior proceedings of a judicial nature it shall be lawful for the Governor in Council, provided always that with reference to the individual, the measure shall not be in breach of British law, to cause such individual to be apprehended in such manner as the Governor in Council may deem fit, and when apprehended, to be delivered over to any officer in whose custody it may be deemed expedient that he shall be placed with a warrant of commitment to such officer's address.' The second clause states 'the warrant of commitment shall be in the form specified in Appendix (A), and shall be sufficient authority for the detention of any State-prisoner in any fortress, jail, or other place within the zillas subordinate to Bombay.

So much of the first clause as provided that, with reference to the individual, the apprehension and confinement therein referred [650] to shall not be in breach of British law, was repealed by Act III of 1858 of the Governor General in Council, except so far as the said provision applied to European British subjects.

By Act XXXIV of 1850, 'An Act for the better custody of State-prisoners,' after reciting that doubts had been entertained whether State-prisoners confined under Reg. III of 1818 of the Bengal Code could be lawfully detained in any fortress, jail or other place within the limits of jurisdiction of any of the Supreme Courts of Judicature established by Royal Charter, and it was expedient that such doubts should be removed, and the powers of the said Regulation extended to all the territories under the Government of the East India Company, enacted that the warrant of commitment under Reg. III of 1818 of the Bengal Code might be directed to the Sheriff of the jail of any of the Supreme Courts established by Royal Charter in the said territories, and that such warrant should be sufficient authority for the detention of such State-prisoner in the fortress, jail or other place mentioned in the warrant, and by s. 3 it was enacted that any State-prisoner thus confined under any such warrant within the jurisdiction of any of the said Supreme Courts, under the warrant of the Governor General in Council, should be deemed to have been lawfully committed thereunto.

By Act III of 1858, 'An Act to amend the law relating to the arrest and detention of State-prisoners,' it was enacted by s. 2 that the provisions of Reg. III of 1818 of the Bengal Code, Reg. II of 1819 of the Madras Code, and Reg. XXV of 1827 of the Bombay Code as altered by s. 1 of that Act relating to the arrest and confinement of persons as State-prisoners should be in force within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Supreme Courts at Calcutta, Madras and Bombay respectively, and by s. 3 all powers for the better custody of State-prisoners which by Act XXXIV of 1850 were vested in the Governor General in Council were stated to be possessed and might be exercised by the Governor in Council of Fort St. George and the Governor in Council of Bombay respectively for the better custody of State-prisoners arrested within their respective Presidencies.

[651] I will next consider Act III of 1864, under the authority of which the warrants now under consideration were issued. It is entitled

"An Act to give the Government certain powers with respect to foreigners." It contains 25 sections, but it appeared to be admitted before us that only the first four sections are in force in the Bombay Presidency, the Governor General in Council not having as yet exercised the powers conferred upon him by s. 5, of extending that section and the subsequent sections to this Presidency.

The Act recites that 'it is expedient to make provision to enable the Government to prevent the subjects of foreign States from residing or sojourning in British India, or from passing through or travelling therein without the consent of the Government,' and enacts, by s. 3, that 'The Governor General of India in Council, may, by writing, order any foreigner to remove himself from British India, or to remove himself therefrom by a particular route to be specified in the order; and any Local Government may, by writing, make the like order with reference to any foreigner within the jurisdiction of such Government. And by s. 4 it is enacted that 'If any foreigner ordered to remove himself from British India, or ordered to remove himself therefrom by a particular route, shall neglect or refuse to do so, ... such foreigner may be apprehended and detained in safe custody until he shall be discharged therefrom by order of the Governor General of India in Council, or of the Local Government within whose jurisdiction he shall be so apprehended or detained, upon such terms and conditions as the Governor General of India in Council or Local Government shall deem sufficient for the peace and security of British India, and of the allies of Her Majesty, and of the neighbouring Princes and States.'

Now the points argued before us on behalf of the appellants, viz., that the Government of India had no power to pass Act III of 1864, and that such Act was in violation of Magna Charta, the Bill of Rights and the Habeas Corpus Acts, are the same as were urged on behalf of one Ameer Khan, a European British subject, (who had been arrested and imprisoned under Reg. III of 1818 of the Bengal Code), when he applied in the [652] High Court of Calcutta for a writ of habeas corpus in 1870, and when it was contended that the two Acts I have cited, viz., Act XXXIV of 1850 and Act III of 1858, (the former of which Acts re-enacted the substance of Reg. III of 1818), were beyond the powers conferred on the Indian Legislature by the Statute 3 and 4 Will. IV, c. 85, s. 43. Mr. Justice Norman after a very lengthened argument by Mr. Anstey for Ameer Khan and by the Advocate General for the Crown refused the application for a habeas corpus, and on appeal Mr. Justice Phear and Mr. Justice Markby held that he had rightly done so, and decided that as it appeared that the prisoner was in custody under a warrant in the form prescribed by Reg. III of 1818, the detention was legal, that the detention to be legal need only be covered by an actually existing warrant of the Governor General in Council in the form prescribed, without regard to the lawfulness of the arrest; that by the combined operation of Reg. III of 1818, Act XXXIV of 1850, and Act III of 1858 the detention was legal, and that those Acts were not contrary to the powers conferred on the Indian Legislature by 3 and 4 Will. IV, c. 85, s. 43—In the matter of Ameer Khan (1).

Mr. Kirkpatrick strenuously contended that Act III of 1864 violated the concluding paragraph of s. 22 of "the Indian Councils Act, 1861" (24 and 25 Vict., c. 67) which enacts that the Governor General in Council shall not have the power of making any laws or regulations 'which may affect any part of the unwritten laws or constitution of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland whereon may depend in any degree the allegiance of any person to the Crown of the United Kingdom, or the Sovereignty or Dominion of the Crown over any part of the said territories.' That paragraph is word for word the same as the concluding paragraph of s. 43 of 3 and 4 Will. IV, c. 85. which empowered the Governor General in Council to legislate for India except as to the matters therein mentioned, and such words in 3 and 4 Will. IV, c. 85, s. 43, were much relied on by the counsel for Ameer Khan on the question as to ultra vires then before the High Court at Calcutta. The conclusion arrived at by [653] the learned Judges in Ameer Khan's case, that Act XXXIV of 1850 and Act III of 1858 were not contrary to the powers conferred on the Indian Legislature by 3 and 4 Will, IV, c. 85, s. 43, seems to me a perfectly sound one, and can well be used in support of the contention of the Advocate-General in the present case, that Act III of 1864 is not in violation or excess of the powers conferred on the Indian Legislature by the Statute 24 and 25, Vict., c. 67, s. 22. I may remark that by s. 22 authority is given to 'make laws and regulations for all persons whether British or Native, foreigners and others,' words which are identical with those in s. 43 of 3 and 4 Will. IV, c. 85.

The concluding paragraph of s. 22 of 24 and 25 Vict., c. 67, has, so far as I can see, no application to foreigners like the appellants, who came to Bombay for the purposes of their business, and who owe, save temporarily, no allegiance to the Crown of the United Kingdom. The only duty they owe to the Crown whilst they remain in British India is to obey the laws in force in this country.

The right, the greatly cherished right, which Englishmen possess in their native country, of residing and travelling where they please, was not considered by the Imperial Parliament to be compatible with the political and prudential measures necessary for the safety of the Paramount Power which the British Government exercises in India. This is apparent from the provisions of the 3 and 4 Will. IV, c. 85, for whilst by s. 81 of that Act authority was given for His Majesty's subjects to reside in certain specified parts of India without licence, s. 82 enacted that it shall not be lawful for any subject of His Majesty, except the servants of the Company and others then lawfully authorized to reside in the said territories, to enter the same by land or to proceed to or reside in any place or places in such parts of the said territories as were not therein before mentioned without licence from the Board of Commissioners, the Court of Directors, the Governor General in Council, or a Governor or Governor in Council of any of the Presidencies for that purpose first obtained; and s. 84 contained this important enactment—'That the Governor General in Council shall be and he is hereby required [654] as soon as conveniently may be, to make laws or regulations providing for the prevention or punishment of the illicit entrance into or residence in the said territories of persons not authorized to enter or reside therein.' The provisos in s. 81 and s. 82 were repealed by the Statute Law Revision Act, 1874, (37 and 38 Vict., c. 35), whilst s. 84 appears to be still in force.

By s. 51 of 3 and 4 Will. IV, c. 85, a section which appears to be still in force, it was enacted that that Act was not to affect the right of Parliament to legislate for India, and that a full and constantly existing right and power was intended to be reserved for Parliament to repeal and alter at any time any law or regulation made by the Governor General in Council; and the better to enable Parliament to exercise at all times such right and power, all laws and regulations made by the Governor General in Council shall be transmitted to England and laid before both Houses of Parliament; and by "The Indian Councils Act, 1861," s. 21, it was enacted that whenever any law or regulation made by the Council of the Governor General at a meeting for the purpose of making laws and regulations has been assented to by the Governor General he shall transmit an authentic copy thereof to the Secretary of State for India, and it shall be lawful for Her Majesty to signify through the Secretary of State for India in Council her disallowance of such law, and such disallowance shall make void and annul such law from the day on which the Governor General shall make known by proclamation or by signification to his council that he had received the notification of such disallowance by Her Majesty.

No instance was cited to us in which an Act of the Legislative Council of the Governor General has been disallowed, or repealed by higher authority as being ultra vires. The point was taken in a case which came before the Privy Council in 1878 on appeal from a judgment of the High Court at Calcutta—The Queen v. Burah (1), where it had been contended that Act XXII of 1869 of the Indian Legislature, which excluded the jurisdiction of the High Court within certain specified districts, was not within the legislative power of the Governor General in Council. [655] The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, reversing the judgment of the majority of the Judges of the Full Bench, held that the Act was in its general scope within the legislative power of the Governor General in Council, and in the judgment of their Lordships, delivered by Lord Selbourne, it is said (p. 193) "Their Lordships are of opinion that the doctrine of the majority of the Court is erroneous, and that it rests upon a mistaken view of the powers of the Indian Legislature, and indeed of the nature and principles of legislation. The Indian Legislature has powers expressly limited by the Act of the Imperial Parliament which created it, and it can, of course, do nothing beyond the limits which circumscribe these powers. But when acting within those limits, it is not in any sense an agent or delegate of the Imperial Parliament, but has and was intended to have plenary powers of legislation, as large and of the same nature as those of Parliament itself."

In Abdulla v. Mohan Gir (2), which was decided by a Full Bench of five Judges of the High Court at Allahabad in 1889, where one question was whether the Governor General in Council had power to pass the Jhansi and Morar Act (No. XVII of 1886) by virtue of the provisions of which civil and criminal jurisdiction was given to the High Court over the town and fort of Jhansi, or whether the Act was in excess of the powers conferred on the Indian Legislature by s. 22 of the Indian Councils Act, 1861, the Court held that the Act was not ultra vires of the Governor General in Council; and also held that it must be presumed that the laws and regulations of the Governor General in Council are known to Parliament.

Seeing, therefore, that the Indian Legislature both before and after the passing of the Indian Councils Act, 1861, had express authority from the Imperial Legislature to make laws and regulations for foreigners, and in passing Act III of 1864 violated no express condition or restriction by which that power was limited (see per Lord Selborne in 5 Ind. App. 194).

I am of opinion that Act III of 1864 was not ultra vires of the Governor General of India in Council.

[656] I will next consider whether that Act has been improperly applied with regard to the five appellants.

It was contended that the order to remove themselves from British India was illegal, as it was based upon a cause of alleged immorality and was not necessary for the peace and security of British India. This argument appears to have been founded upon the language of the concluding paragraph of s. 4 of Act III of 1864, which enacts that "such foreigner may be apprehended and detained in safe custody until he shall be discharged therefrom by order . . . of the Local Government within whose jurisdiction he shall be so apprehended or detained upon such terms and conditions as the . . . . Local Government shall deem sufficient for the peace and security of British India, and of the allies of Her Majesty, and of the neighbouring Princes and States."

Such words cannot, in my opinion, be imported into or be taken to control the absolute and unqualified power given by s. 3, which authorizes the Governor General of India in Council or any Local Government, without assigning any cause, by writing, to order any foreigner to remove himself from British India, or to remove himself therefrom by a particular route to be specified in the order. The Government of Bombay, so far as concerns the appellants, who were admittedly foreigners within the meaning of the Act, were constituted the sole Judge as to whether or not the power of expulsion given by s. 3 should be enforced or not, and having come to a decision on the point, issued orders that the appellants should remove themselves from British India, as they were justified in doing. It is to be remarked that in s. 17 of the Act, which relates to the removal of foreigners apprehended for travelling without or contrary to the conditions of a licence and thereby violating s. 14, there is no reference to the peace and security of British India, whilst there is such reference in ss. 18 and 19 in regard to persons apprehended and detained for violating the provisions of those two last mentioned sections. Such sections, as already pointed out, are not in force in the Bombay Presidency. The words relied on in the concluding paragraph of s. 4 appear to be used as a direction or guide to the Government ordering the removal, and it is left to such Government [657] to impose any terms or condition, or not to impose any, as in its judgment it thinks best.

To adopt the construction contended for on behalf of the appellants would tend to limit the powers conferred by the Act with respect to foreigners—powers no doubt summary and arbitrary, but which the Indian Legislature has granted in what appears to me to be reasonably clear language. The object of the Act must be looked to, which in the recital is stated to be to make provisions to enable the Government to prevent the subjects of Foreign States from residing or sojourning in British India, or from passing through or travelling therein without the consent of the Government.

In a case decided by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in 1886 on appeal from the Supreme Court of Natal—Salmon v. Duncombe (1), their Lordships held that where the main object and intention of a Statute are clear, it must not be reduced to a nullity by the draftsman's unskilfulness or ignorance of law, except in the case of necessity or the absolute intractability of the language used. There the clearly expressed intention of the Natal Ordinance No. 1 of 1856 was to give to any subject of the Queen resident in Natal the power of disposing by will, according to English law, of property, both real and personal, which otherwise would devolve according to Natal law. Section 1 was operative for that purpose, except that it concluded with the provision "as if such subject resided in England," the effect of which was to leave both the lex situs and the lex domicilii in operation, thus reducing the section to a nullity. It was held that these words ought not to be construed so as to destroy all that had gone before, and, therefore, should be treated as immaterial. The Act, thererefore, appears to me to be applicable to the five appellants, although their residence in Bombay may not have been likely to have affected or endangered the peace and security of British India.

Lastly, were the appellants entitled to writs of habeas corpus, or to orders under s. 491 of the Criminal Procedure Code of 1882?

It was contended on their behalf that no orders to remove themselves from British India were served upon them, and that [658] the orders were too large, as they professed to operate beyond three miles from the shores of British India.

We have sent for and been furnished with the original warrant under which Solomon Moses, the only one of the five appellants now in India, was arrested on the 3rd July last, and under which he has been detained in jail ever since. It is a printed document, with blanks left to be filled up, and is headed "Warrant" in capital letters and in large type, and it says that the Governor of Bombay in Council is hereby pleased to direct that Solomon Moses alias Waxfigoor do forthwith remove himsalf from British India by sea to Roumania, and that all officers to whom the order may be communicated are required to see that it is duly obeyed, and, in the event of its being infringed, to apprehend and detain the said Solomon Moses alias Waxfigoor in safe custody in the jail of Bombay under s. 4 of the said Act (Act III of 1864) until he shall be lawfully discharged therefrom.

This document appears to me to be wholly irregular, comprising, as it purports to do, two distinct orders—one to remove himself from Bombay, the other to arrest him in case it is not duly obeyed. I think there ought to have been a separate order to remove himself from British India which should have been duly served upon him. Then, in case of his refusal or neglect to comply with its terms, there ought to have been a further order by the Governor in Council authorizing his arrest and detention in jail.

Mr. Inspector Butterfield in paragraphs 5 and 6 of his affidavit says that he reported to the Acting Commissioner of Police that the five appellants had failed to leave Bombay, although they had had an opportunity of doing so, and that he was then ordered by the Acting Commissioner of Police to arrest them in pursurance of the said warrant, and that he accordingly did so on the evening of the 3rd July, and showed the warrant again to them, and that he declined to give copies of the warrants and referred the parties, who asked him for copies, to the Acting Commissioner of Police.

The procedure followed by Courts of Justice in the somewhat analogus case of an injunction ordering a person to do or to abstain from doing a particular act ought, in my opinion, to have been followed, and on failure to comply with the order the matter should have been brought to the notice of the Governor in [659] Council, who would then have had before him materials to justify him in odering the person to be arrested. Instead of which the arrest and detention of the appellants were left to the discretion of 'all officers, to whom this order may be communicated,' a delegation of authority which, in my opinion, the Governor in Council had no power to make.

There is high judicial authority that such a conditional order for imprisonment is illegal. In The Queen v. Joma bin Balu (1) decided in 1867 by Couch, C. J., Newton and Gibbs, JJ., an order of a Magistrate under s. 2 of Act XIII of 1859, "that the prisoner should work for a certain period and in case he failed to do so should suffer imprisonment for one month," was annulled as to the latter part, as the Magistrate had no power to make that order until the failure had occurred and has been proved to his satisfaction. The present case is a stronger one than that one, as here it is left to the officers, to whom the orders may be communicated, to see that they are duly obeyed, and it is left to their discretion whether or not the persons are to be apprehended and detained. The same course, viz., the annulling of the objectionable part of the document, cannot be adopted here as was done by Couch, C. J., and his colleagues in Queen v. Joma bin Balu ; as, if the order for the arrest and detention of the appellants is struck out, or treated as surplusage, the document ceases to be a warrant altogether, and nothing remains but an order to remove themselves from British India.

There is another ground which, though not taken in the argument before us, is, in my opinion, equally fatal to the validity of these five warrants, viz., that the persons named in them are not described with sufficient certainty and particularity. There is also high judicial authority in support of this objection. In two of the warrants the names only of each of the two persons, Osias Melitroff and Miskel Leaff, are mentioned ; in the five other warrants the names are given with one or more aliases ; but there is no place of residence of the individuals mentioned such as is required by the Form 2 in Schedule V of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1882, which is the form of a warrant of arrest issued under s. 75 of that Code.

[660] A similar point was decided by Sir C. Sargent in 1872 in the case of one James Hastings who had been brought up under a writ of habeas corpus granted by Westropp, C.J. The warrant had been issued under s. 76 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act XXV of 1861). Sir C. Sargent held that the prisoner was not in custody under a valid and legal warrant. After dealing with the first objection, which was that the instrument was without a seal, and stating that upon that ground alone he should have had great difficulty in saying that the warrant was a valid one, he proceeded thus:—

"There is, however, another objection put forward to its validity to which I attach even greater force. The warrant authorizes the committal of James Hastings without giving any description whatever as to what James Hastings is indicated thereby." Then, after stating the form of warrant given in the Appendix to the Code, he said : "Under a warrant in this form, if it were held to be a legal and valid warrant, the Commissioner of Police would be justified in arresting any one of that name. In Hood's case (2) the Christian name only of the person arrested was omitted, but a full description was given of him. The warrant there was 'to take the body of—Hood, of the hamlet of Bemerton, in the Parish of Fugglestone, St. Peter, in the same county, by whatsoever name he may be called or

(1) 4 B.H.C.R.Cr.Ca. 37.

(2) Rex v. Hood. 1 Moody's Cr. Cases, 128, known, the son of Samuel Hood, to answer,' &c.; and in that case the Judges were unanimously of opinion that the warrant was bad. That case was decided comparatively recently by Lord Tenterden and all the other Judges with the exception of three, and the Judges who sat were unanimously of opinion that the warrant was bad because it omitted the Christian name. It was said it should have assigned some reason for the omission and have given some distinguishing particular of George Hood. I think I am bound to follow the principle involved in that ruling, which is that a warrant should contain a distinct and unequivocal intimation to the person that he is the individual meant to be apprehended and must surrender to the officers; and this, too the more especially as the form of warrant provided by the Code requires that his residence should be inserted The issuing of general warrants is, it is well known, illegal, and this [661] though not, properly speaking, a general warrant, which means a warrant to apprehend all persons committing a particular offence or class of offences, is, however, of such a general nature as to justify the police in arresting any person of the name of James Hastings, whoever he may be or wherever he may be found, the number of persons liable to be arrested under it, being limited only by the limit to the number of persons bearing that name. The warrant in this case is, in my opinion, far more general than was the warrant in Hood's case, and I am, therefore, of opinion that it is bad"—In re James Hastings (1).

No doubt the names of the five appellants seem to an Englishman somewhat strange; but I apprehend that the same principle must be applied as if the warrants were for the arrest of persons bearing ordinary names, such for instance as John Smith or any other common name.

The warrants in question appear to me to be also objectionable for another reason, viz., they all require the appellants to remove themselves from British India by sea by particular routes. Solomon Moses, the man now in the Bombay Jail, is to remove himself by sea to Roumania, three of the others are to remove themselves by sea to Odessa, one is to remove himself to Austria, another is to remove himself by sea to Roumania, and one is to remove himself by sea to Adrianople, an order which as Adrianople is an inland town, more than fifty miles from the nearest sea, the Black Sea, is as incapable of being strictly complied with as if the order had been that he was to remove himself by sea to Bucharest, Vienna or Moscow. The objection to this part of each order, in my opinion, is that the particular route to be specified in the order referred to in s. 3 of Act III of 1864 is intended to be a route in British India and not a route beyond the high seas.

The Indian Legislature must be taken to have known the extent of its legislative powers. It could confer no power on the Local Government which would be ultra vires of its own legislative powers; and the authority given by s. 3 of Act III of 1864 must be taken to be an authority it could grant, viz., a legal authority. When the foreigner, whose expulsion is [662] considered expedient, resides at Lahore, Allahabad or any other inland town, the Local Government can specify, and may have very good reasons for indicating, in the order the particular route by which the individual is to remove himself, but once beyond the three-mile limit I am not aware that the Local Government has any power over him.

In the case of the wilful destruction by fire of the "Aurora" in June, 1870, at a distance of about fifty miles outside the Harbour of Bombay and on the high seas, it was held by a Full Court, on points reserved for its opinion, that the substantive law applicable to a British-born subject tried in the High Court at Bombay for destroying a British ship, at a distance of more than three miles from the shores of British India was the English law and not the Penal Code, and the question whether the Indian Legislature had power to legislate with reference to offences committed on the high seas was much considered.

In the course of the judgment of the three Judges who heard the case, delivered by Westropp, C.J., it is stated "according to writers on international law the territorial right extends to at least three geographical miles, a sea-league from the coast, that having been supposed to be the range of a cannon shot." This distance of three miles was the limit lately laid down by the Privy Council in Rolet v. The Queen (1) for the operation of the revenue laws of Sierra Leone. Sir Robert Phillimore in his commentaries (Vol. I, plac. 197,) says: "But the rule of law may now be considered as fairly established, namely, that this absolute property and jurisdiction does not extend, unless by the specific provisions of a treaty, or an unquestioned usage, beyond a marine league (being three miles) or the distance of a cannon shot from the shore at low tide." And in a later passage in the judgment Sir Michael Westropp after referring to the Statutes I have already quoted (3 and 4 Will. IV, c. 85, ss. 43, and 24 and 25 Vict., c. 67, s. 22) says that other Statutes which he mentions furnish a very strong reason for supposing that the previous general power of legislation conferred by the same Statutes is limited to the territories of British India—Reg. v. Elmstone Whitwell and others (2).

[663] In Reg. v. Kastya Rama and others (3) it was held by Kemball and West, JJ., that an offence committed on the high seas, but within three miles from the coast of British India, as being committed within the territorial limits of British India, was punishable under the provisions of the Indian Penal Code, and there was an intimation of opinion on the part of three learned Judges that the Governor General of India in Council had no power to legislate for offences committed on the high seas outside the territorial limits of British India, though he had power to legislate in respect of offences committed on the high seas within three miles of its coasts.

I may here mention that in the case of Low v. Routledge (4) Lord Justice Turner after stating that every alien coming into a British colony becomes temporarily a subject of the Crown, bound by, subject to, and entitled to the benefit of the laws which affect all British subjects, said; "As to his rights within the colony he may well be bound by its laws, but as to his rights beyond the colony he cannot be affected by those laws, for the laws of a colony cannot extend beyond its territorial limits"

The directions in the orders (assuming, but not admitting, that the early portion of the warrants in question can be regarded as orders,) that the persons named in them are to remove themselves from British India by sea to the different towns and countries specified, are, in my opinion, ultra vires and illegal. Whether, however, such objectionable words can be considered as surplusage and be disregarded altogether, or whether they do not vitiate the warrants, I think it unnecessary to express an opinion, as on the other points I have mentioned I consider that the warrants are clearly invalid and have no legal effect.

For the reasons I have stated, I think that the warrants under which the five appellants were arrested were not valid warrants, and that the appeal must be allowed; that the order made on the 9th July, 1894, so far as it relates to the five appellants, must be reversed, and that Solomon Moses alias Waxfigoor, who is the only one of the appellants that is now detained in jail, must be discharged.

STARLING, J.—In this case certain foreigners were, ostensibly [664] under the power conferred by Act III of 1864, ordered by the Governor in Council to remove themselves from British India. It being alleged that they had not obeyed that order they were arrested under a warrant signed by Mr. Lee-Warner, Secretary to Government, and sent to jail until discharged therefrom in due course of law. On this, the foreigners applied to Mr. Justice Farran to issue a writ of habeas corpus or an order under s. 491 of Criminal Procedure Code to release them from imprisonment on the ground that their arrest and detention was illegal. A rule nisi was granted which after argument was discharged, and against this discharge the present appeal, has been brought.

The case was argued before us on the 3rd instant when we took time to consider our judgment, for the questions argued are important ones, because while it is necessary on the one hand that Government should not be hampered in the exercise of summary powers entrusted to it by the Legislature, it is also, incumbent on the other, on this Court to see that the liberty of the subject is not restrained, except in due course of law.

The first point argued by Mr. Kirkpatrick was that the Act itself, under which these proceedings have been taken, was ultra vires of the Legislative Council of India, and nearly the whole of the time occupied in argument was spent on this point. I, however, agree with the reasons given by the Judges in the High Court in Calcutta in the case of Ameer Khan (1) for holding that the series of similar, but more stringent, enactments against British subjects, and not against foreigners, therein discussed were intra vires of the Legislative Council, and am of opinion, for similar reasons that Act III of 1864 is a valid Act and one which the Legislative Council had power to pass. To carry Mr. Kirkpatrick's argument to its logical conclusion it would be necessary to hold that any curtailing of the liberty of the subject was pro tanto a repeal of the unwritten laws or constitution and thereby caused a diminution of the allegiance due by the subject to the Crown. A great deal was said by him about Magna Charta and other provisions of a like nature, but when these are looked into it will be seen that they do not guarantee an absolute amount of liberty to each man, but only provide [665] that no man shall be deprived of his liberty except in accordance with law. No man was to be imprisoned by a warrant under the king's sign manual, or under the signature of a Secretary of State, unless that warrant was authorized by law. If Parliament authorizes a Secretary of State under certain circumstances to issue a warrant, in a certain form, for the detention of one of Her Majesty's subjects for an unlimited time, imprisonment under that warrant is imprisonment in due course of law, and none of the bulwarks of the personal liberty of the subject are attacked, nor is any cause given for saying that the duty of allegiance due by any subject is thereby in any way diminished.

It was then argued that the powers given by this Act can only be exercised when " the peace and security of British India," &c., require such exercise. Now the phrase referred to only appears in the 4th section in connection with the eventual discharge of the foreigner from imprisonment. The preamble, however, shows that the intention of the Legislature was to enable Government to prevent foreigners residing, sojourning or travelling in British India without their consent; and s. 3 gives the fullest power to the Government to order any foreigner to remove himself from this country without reference to the probable or possible results of such foreigners residing, sojourning or travelling therein. Consequently on the authority of Salmon v. Duncombe (1), I must refuse to read the words referred to from the fourth section into the third; but even if those words were so read in, it seems to me that the Government would still be the sole judges of what was necessary for the peace and security of British India, and that, if they acted in accordance with the letter of the Act, this Court could not inquire into the sufficiency or otherwise of their reasons for so acting.

(1) 6 B. L. R. 392 (459).

The next point to be considered is whether the Government have acted in accordance with the provisions of this Act. Section 3 provides that any Local Government with respect to foreigners residing within its jurisdiction "may, by writing, order any foreigner to remove himself from British India, or to remove himself therefrom by any particular route to be specified in the order." Now such order must, of course, be communicated [666] to the foreigner, but the section does not say in what way. A verbal order given to a tradesman is given by the customer speaking to him across the counter; a written order would be handed or sent to him, so that instead of having only words, the remembrance of which existed only in his memory, he would have in his possession the same words, in black and white, to which he could refer if necessary. It seems to me that the essence of an order in or by writing is that the person to whom it is given may have it by him, and be able to refer to it if necessary, so that I do not consider that the mere showing, reading and explaining a written order to a foreigner, and then taking it way, is a compliance with the terms of this section. That the order ought to be in the possession of the person ordered, I think is further shown by the fact that the order may contain directions as to the route by which he is to remove himself from British India, and if the foreigner be up-country and it be desirable that he should not pass through certain places while leaving the country, that route might be a complicated one, and the details ought to be in his possession in writing, for if he deviates therefrom, he may be arrested. The Advocate-General suggested that, if the order was left with the foreigner, he might destroy it, and so there would be no record of it, but that is merely a matter of detail which could be provided for by having a duplicate of the order, also signed by the Secretary to Government, which could be kept on record while the other was given to the foreigner.

As the orders, by writing, were not given to the appellants, but, as appears from the affidavits, only shown, read, and translated to them, I do not think the terms of the 3rd section have been complied with, and consequently that they were not bound to leave British India.

Further, looking at the form of the document by which the order is said to have been given, it appears to be a warrant, it is so headed, and nothing else. It is not an order to the foreigner, but an authority to arrest him, addressed to a third person, with what is called the order as a recital at the beginning, and I do not think that any Court should hold that a document in this form is a compliance with s. 3 of the Act.

(1) 11 App. Ca. 627.

[667] There is also a defect in the terms of the orders. The Government may order a foreigner to remove himself from this country by a particular route; therefore it was lawful to order these persons to leave "by sea"; but the Act does not give power to direct where the foreigner is to go when he has left British India. I should be inclined under some circumstances to treat the words following "by sea" as surplusage, but it seems to me that the addition of the ultimate destination might work harshly and be the means of doing injustice. For instance, a foreigner is ordered to go by sea to Trieste. Instead of taking a ticket by the Austrian Lloyd's line he takes one by the P. & O. for Ceylon. He would be quite justified in doing this, because all the Act provides is that he is to remove himself from British India by a particular route, i.e, by sea, which he would do by going to Ceylon, but a police officer might say he had not complied with the order, and arrest him, which, in my opinion, he would not be justified in doing.

Then the document, which is headed "warrant," contains first an order to a person to do a thing, and then an order that, if he does not do it, he is to be arrested. This form of order has constantly been condemned by the Courts. See Reg. v. Jooma (1); 6 Mad. H. C. Rep., App. 24, and two criminal rulings of this High Court—In re Babaji, on the 26th April, 1888, and Empress v. Sakharam on the 3rd May, 1888.

The mischief of the form used is that on the face of it the determination as to whether the person to whom the order is addressed has obeyed it or not, is left to the officer in charge of the warrant; whereas it is the authority which issues the order which ought to determine that point. The mere fact that, after the order is given to a foreigner, he does not remove himself from British India, is not necessarily disobedience. After receiving the order he might slip down and break his leg; he might have a wife so ill that he could not possibly leave her without danger to her life, not having means to provide attendance for her in his absence; he might be absolutely without the means of removing himself. In such cases the mere non-removal of himself could not be said to be a neglect or refusal to remove [668] himself, and the determination as to whether a particular act or omission amounted to a neglect or refusal ought to rest with no authority other than the one which gave the order.

After the order is communicated to the person who is to obey it, the authority issuing it should determine whether he has disobeyed it or not, and if he has disobeyed it, a warrant should be issued for his apprehension and imprisonment. Such a warrant ought to recite that, under the provisions of s. 3 of this Act, A. B. had been ordered by the Governor in Council to remove himself from British India (by sea), that the said A. B. had neglected (or refused as the case may be) to do so, and then go on to order him to be apprehended and conveyed to such and such a jail and there to be kept in custody until discharged therefrom in due course of law. If the warrant in the present case had been in that form, all that would have been required on the return to the rule herein would have been for Mr. Mackenzie to have stated, on affidavit, that he held the prisoner under that warrant, and as it would then have appeared from the warrant itself that it was issued by a competent authority in the exercise of powers

(1) 4 B.H.C.R. Cr. Ca. 37.

AUG. 9.

CROWN SIDE.

granted by the Legislature, the Court would have refused to have made any further inquiries.

By reason of the order appearing at the top of the warrant, it may possibly be inferred that the person named therein has been ordered to leave, but it does not definitely appear on the face of the warrant, because there is nothing to show that it has been communicated to him that he has been ordered; and then it does not appear that he has disobeyed the order, in my opinion a very much more important omission, and one which invalidates the warrant entirely, because unless that has happened there is no power to imprison.

The warrant is also defective in another way. It bears no seal, an addition which is essential to a warrant under ordinary circumstances. Regulation XXV of 1827 gives a form of warrant which is to be sufficient under that Act, and in the form no mention is made of a seal; consequently a warrant under that Act might be valid without one. The present Act provides no form of warrant; consequently, in my opinion, the ordinary form of warrant must be adopted. By common law a warrant without a [669] seal is invalid, and the Criminal Procedure Code has adpoted the provisions of the common law and directs that a warrant should be both signed and sealed. In the absence of statutory provision, the absence of a seal will render a warrant void, which will appear from the case of In re Phipps (1).

Sargent, J., in the case of In re Hastings (2) expresses an opinion that a warrant under the Criminal Procedure Code is invalid without a seal, and I should have great difficulty in coming to the conclusion that there is any reason why a seal should not be necessary for the validity of a warrant authorizing the imprisonment of a foreigner under Act III of 1864.

The last defect in the order and warrant which I will point out is that there is no description or designation of the person to whom it is directed or against whom it is to be executed. The name of the foreigner who is still in jail is Solomon Moses. Now Moses is not an uncommon surname in this city, and I should think that there were probably more than one inhabitant having the name of Solomon Moses. A warrant should not merely bear the full name of the person to be arrested, but also his description, i e., the place where he resides, if not also his occupation, so that there may be no doubt as to the identity of the person in custody with the person named in the warrant. See the judgment of Sargent, J., in Hastings case (2). The order, too, should contain a like description, in order that the person to whom it is given may know that he, and no one else, is the person to whom it is addressed.

I am of opinion, therefore, that all the warrants in this case are bad in law, and that Solomon Moses, the only appellant now in custody, is not in custody in due course of law. Consequently the order made by Farran, J., discharging the rule obtained on the 5th July must be reversed, and the rule must be made absolute, and Solomon Moses discharged from custody.

CRIMINAL REVISION.

18 B. 670.

[670] CRIMINAL REVISION.

Before Mr. Justice Telang and Mr. Justice Fulton.

IN RE ANTAJI KESHAV TAMBE.* [1st February, 1893.]

In 1824 by a proclamation known as Mr. Dunlop's proclamation it was declared that the owners of land in the Ratnagiri District, on which teak and other forest trees were growing or should thereafter be grown, should be the owners of these trees and might dispose of them at their pleasure without any claim on the part of Government. In 1851, however, this proclamation was rescinded by a subsequent proclamation which declared that the "Government resumed, in regard to forest, all the seigniorial rights which it possessed previously to 1823."

The accused was khot of the village of Asgoli in the Ratnagiri District. He was charged under s. 75, cl. (c) of the Indian Forest Act (VII of 1878) with the offence of cutting down two teak trees without obtaining the permission of Government as required by the rules framed by Government under the Forest Act. He contended that he was absolute owner of the trees under Dunlop's proclamation. He was convicted, and applied to the High Court under its revisional jurisdiction.

Held, that the conviction must be reversed. The land on which the trees in question were growing was the khoti khasgi land of the accused, and he was, therefore, entitled to the benefit of Dunlop's proclamation, by virtue of which the trees thereon became his property.

Held, also, that Dunlop's proclamation could not be withdrawn by Government in so far as it related to trees planted after that date.

Collector of Ratnagiri v. Vyankatrav N. Surve (1), followed.

Per FULTON, J.—Khasgi land of which the khot was actually in possession was clearly within Dunlop's proclamation and it granted the right to teak and other trees in khasgi lands held by watandar khots * * * It is clear, too, that the right to trees having once been conceded could not be withdrawn by the proclamation of 1851, and it seems also manifest that the contention is untenable that the benefit of the first proclamation did not extend to the case of trees planted after its cancellation in 1851. Even though the khot may not be the proprietor of the soil in khoti khasgi lands, he is certainly the holder of an interest in it, and that interest having in 1823 been increased by the concession of all trees which he might grow threafter could not subsequently be reduced by the withdrawal of the right to such trees.

THIS was an application under s. 435 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (X of 1882).

The accused was the khot of the village of Asgoli in the Ratnagiri District. He was charged with having committed an [671] offence under ss. 75 and 76 of the Indian Forest Act (VII of 1878) by cutting down two teak trees, growing on his khoti khasgi land, without obtaining the permission of Government, as required by the rules(2) framed by Government under the Forest Act (VII of 1878).

(2) Rule II made under s. 75, cl. (c) of the Forest Act provides as follows:—

"No person who holds land on which trees are growing, which are the property of Government, shall cut, lop or in any way injure any such tree, and knowingly and wilfully permit any other person to cut, lop, or in any way injure the same without having first obtained the permission of the Collector, or in the case of teak, blackwood, or sandalwood trees, of the Conservator of Forests."

The accused pleaded not guilty. He contended (inter alia) that under Mr. Dunlop's proclamation dated 1st March, 1824, he was the absolute owner of the teak trees growing on his khoti khasgi land, and had a right to deal with them as he pleased, and that Government had no claim to such trees.

Mr. Dunlop's proclamation was to the following effect:—

"Whereas the Government has observed that the former Government used to take the teak, blackwood, and other good timber grown on the lands situate in the aforesaid zilla belonging to any person whatever, the people did not take the trouble of raising (such timber trees); and (whereas the Government) thinks that it would be to the advantage of all if from this day forth teak, blackwood and any other kind of good timber (trees) were raised in the country, it is proclaimed to all the people that the Government has no intention (eye) towards the trees that may be growing on the lands of any person whatever situate beyond the frontiers (limits) of the jungles preserved by the Government . . . . that those who may own and may grow hereafter (such trees) may (i.e., have the liberty to deal with them in any manner they like; and that no obstruction whatever will be made by the Government (to their so doing)."

"Dated 1*st March*, 1824."

This proclamation was rescinded by a subsequent proclamation in 1851.

The subsequent proclamation ran thus:—

"Proclamation regarding Teak and Sissu in the Collectorate of Ratnagiri.

"1. Be it known that in 1823 (sic.) Mr. Dunlop, when Collector of the Southern Konkan, put forth a proclamation wherein he conditionally made over, on behalf of Government, the royalty rights heretofore exercised in regard to teak and sissu trees growing in certain places.

"2. The object of the said proclamation, as stated in the first paragraph thereof, was the extension of the growth of useful timber.

[672] "3. As, however, from past experience it is clear that the continuance of the permission to cut teak and sissu trees on such terms throughout the Collectorate will speedily lead to the complete annihilation of such useful timber.

"4. The Right Honourable the Governor in Council is pleased to declare that the proclamation of 1823 is rescinded, and that the Government resumes, in regard to forest, all the seigniorial rights which it possessed previous to 1823.

"5. At the same time, as it is understood that a few persons, taking advantage of the liberal offer made by Government in 1823, did attend to the teak and sissu timber growing in their own grounds (jagih), Government is prepared to grant full benefit, present and prospective, to such persons, provided they establish to the satisfaction of the Collector and Conservator of Forests, within six months from 1st June next, that the wood in their lands had been attended to and nurtured since 1823, such benefit to be contingent on their continuing their care to the trees now in course of growth.

"6. The forest preserves in the taluka of Suvarndurg and in the subha of Malvan to remain, as at present, exclusively Government preserves, subject to such future orders as Government may see fit to issue in regard to them."

The accused was convicted under s. 76 of the Indian Forest Act (VII of 1878) by the Second Class Magistrate of Guhagar and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 3, or in default to suffer four days' simple imprisonment.

This conviction and sentence were upheld, on appeal, by the District Magistrate of Ratnagiri.

Thereupon the accused applied to the High Court under its revisional jurisdiction.

JUDGMENT.

TELANG, J.—In this case the accused was charged with having committed an offence under s. 75 (c) of the Indian Forest Act by cutting down some trees in what is admitted to be his khoti khasgi land in contravention of the rules made by Government under the Indian Forest Act. The section of the Act as well as the rules referred to, relate, in terms, to trees belonging to Government; and in order to convict the accused the Court must be satisfied that the trees cut down by the accused were the property of Government.

It was argued in the first instance by the learned Government Pleader, as we understood him, that if he could [673] show that there was some reasonable ground for the claim made on behalf of Government to the trees in question, that would be sufficient justification for the Government "notification" whereby the trees have been declared to be the property of Government, and that the Magistrate would be justified and even bound to accept such notification as proof of the declared ownership in such a case as the present. We must express our entire dissent from this view. The offence is only committed, as we have seen, under the express terms of the Act and rules, when the trees cut are the property of Government. And, therefore, in this case as in any other, where the same issue arises, the Court before convicting is bound to satisfy itself of Government proprietary right in the usual modes and by means of the usual materials recognized in Courts of Justice. The declared opinion of the Executive Government merely as such can have no more weight with the Court than that of the humblest of Her Majesty's subjects.

On the other side it was similarly argued, that if the accused could show that he had reasonable grounds to believe that he might cut the trees in question, he ought not to be convicted of a criminal offence. The answer to that argument is clear. The law which the Courts have to apply in this case says nothing about belief or reasonable grounds for belief. The act of cutting the trees is itself an offence, whatever the belief of the man who cuts, if the trees are proved to be, in truth, the property of Government.

The question, therefore, which must be determined in this case is whether the trees cut down by the accused were or were not the property of Government. No special evidence has been given in the case bearing on this point, and both sides have rested their respective contentions on the general rules applicable to trees growing on land of the kind to which the land of the accused belongs. The learned Government Pleader has broadly argued that in no case has a khot any right to the soil, or to the trees growing upon it, unless he affirmatively proves such a right. He relies on the decision at I. L. R., 4 Bom. 264 ; P. J., 1875, p. 325 (Nagardas v. The Conservator of Forests) ; I. L. R. 12 Bom. 534 (Collector of Ratnagiri v. Antaji Lakshman). We are very far from being certain that the authorities referred [674] to really lay down such a sweeping proposition, without reference to the onus of proof in each particular case. And in the present case, as will be seen further on, we could not decide against the accused on the strength of any such wide presumption. Nor can we hold that s. 37 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code of 1879 helps the Government ; because on the other side it would be necessary to have regard to the presumption of full ownership arising from actual possession and enjoyment, which in this particular case appears to have extended over a considerable period. We think that we cannot, in this case, give effect to either of these arguments in favour of Government in this case ; because we are of opinion that the land here being admittedly the khoti khasgi land of the accused, must be deemed to be entitled to the benefit of Dunlop's proclamation by vritue of which the trees then growing and thereafter to be planted on the land become the landholder's property free from any right on the part of Government. Such appears to have been the view of the Court in the case of The Collector of Ratnagiri v. Vyankatrav N. Surve (1), and, in the absence of any specific evidence in the present case, we think that view must be followed, notwithstanding the observations referred to by the District Magistrate limiting the effect of that decision which are contained in Sir M. R. Westropp's judgment. We cannot agree with the District Magistrate in his view that Dunlop's proclamation could be withdrawn by Government in so far as it related to trees planted after its date. The contrary was expressly decided in Surve's case, and in that decision we concur, having regard to the express terms of Dunlop's proclamation. That being the conclusion at which we have arrived, it is unnecessary to consider the points raised in reference to Bombay Act I of 1865 and Bombay Act V of 1879. It is not contended that either of those Acts deprived landholders of any rights already conceded to them. Whether those Acts or either of them would have helped the accused in this case, but for the view which we take of the effect of Dunlop's proclamation, we need not in this case determine. On the whole, therefore, we must reverse the conviction had in this case, and order the fine to be refunded.

[675] FULTON, J.—The first question which we have to consider is whether the teak trees in dispute were the property of the defendant by virtue of Mr. Dunlop's proclamation. It is not disputed that the land on which they grew was held by the defendant as khoti khasgi, but it is contended that such land did not come within the terms of the concession. The proclamation as translated on p. 535 of I. L. R., 12 Bom., was as follows :—

" Whereas the Government has observed that as the former Government used to take the teak, blackwood and other good timber grown on the lands situate in the aforesaid zilla belonging to any person whatever, the people did not take the trouble of raising (such timber trees); and (whereas the Government) thinks that it would be to the advantage of all if from this day forth teak, blackwood, and any other kind of good timber trees were raised in the country, it is proclaimed to all the people that the Government has no intention (eye) towards the trees that may be growing on the lands of any person whatever situate beyond the frontiers of the jungles preserved by the Government . . . that those who may own and may grow hereafter (such trees) may (i.e., have the liberty to) deal with them in any manner they like; and that no obstruction whatever will be made by the Government (to their so doing)."

The Government Pleader argued that this proclamation did not apply where the khot was not proprietor of the soil, and referred us to the remark of Melwill, J., in the judgment in The Collector of Ratnagiri v. Raghunathrav (1), in which the khot claimed the trees on land held by him either as khot or as tenant under the khoti co-parceners. "It has been decided in regular appeal No. 15 of 1869 (and in this decision we concur) that a khot has no right to cut timber either as khot or by virtue of Mr. Dunlop's proclamation, unless he can prove the grant of a proprietary title in the land of the village." But as pointed out in The Collector of Ratnagiri v. Antaji Lakshman (2), "it may be a question whether this did not carry the ruling beyond what was the intention of the Court, as Westropp, C. J., distinctly refrained in his judgment from expressing any opinion upon the general rights of khots, and what is even more important, referred without disapproval to his decision in the Collector of Ratnagiri v. Vyankatrav Narayan Surve (3)." Turning to this last decision we find that Westropp, C. J., held that the proclamation did apply to timber grown on khoti khasgi or khoti nisbat [676] lands. He remarked (p. 4): "It also appears that the land on which the timber was cut was either 'khasgi' or 'khoti nisbat' land in the possession of the plaintiff or his sub-tenants, and of such land at all events he would be the proprietor, and not a mere farmer of the revenue, if that be the true position of the khot in respect of ordinary khoti lands."

The learned Government Pleader, while not disputing that the land on which the timber, in the present case, stood, was khoti khasgi land both at the time of the proclamation in 1823, and up to the present date, maintained that the defendant was not the proprietor of the soil, and referred us to the decision of the Privy Council in Nagardas v. The Conservator of Forests (4), as showing that he was, therefore, not entitled under Mr. Dunlop's proclamation to the teak trees growing on it. It seems to me, however, unnecessary to determine whether or not the khot is the owner of the soil of khoti khasgi of which he is in possession. I think that the decisions in regular appeal 15 of 1869 and in The Collector of Ratnagiri v. Antaji Lakshman (2) must not be carried beyond what was actually determined, and, as suggested by Sargent, C. J., in the last-named case, that it is doubtful whether judgments deciding that a khot is not entitled to the timber in the forest and uncultivated lands can be applied to the khoti khasgi lands which were in the actual occupation of the khots at the time of Mr. Dunlop's proclamation and from which they could not be ousted by Government so long as they paid the assessment due on their khoti.

The correct mode of construction of grants by the Crown or Government is stated by Westropp, C. J., at the top of p. 331 of the Printed Judgments for 1875 as follows:—"In respect to Crown grants 'upon a question of the meaning of words the same rules of commonsense and justice must apply, whether the subject-matter of construction be a grant from the Crown or from a subject,' and that 'it is always a question of intention, to be collected from the language used with reference to the surrounding circumstances.' If those guides to a satisfactory construction fail, but not otherwise, the ancient rule is that 'if the king's grant can endure to two intents it shall be taken to [677] the intent that makes most for the king's benefit." Applyng this test we have to decide, not whether khots can be said to be the owners of the soil of their khasgi lands, but whether the language of Mr. Dunlop's proclamation, when read by the light of surrounding circumstances, is such as to make it clear that he intended it to apply to khoti khasgi lands.

The circumstances under which the proclamation was issued are explained in Mr. Dunlop's letter to Government, No. 5 of the 18th October, 1823 (paras. 21 to 28), and of Government's reply thereto, No. 1630 of the 1st November, 1823, to which by the courtesy of the Chief Secretary we have been enabled to refer. Mr. Dunlop's recommendation, which was sanctioned by Government, was stated in the last sentence of his letter as follows:—

"I, therefore, think that the established forests should be retained by Government, and with the hope of encouraging the growth of teak that a proclamation should be issued surrendering all the claims asserted by the former Governments to teak or other valuable woods, and declaring that wherever these may be found beyond the limits of the three forests of Band and Tordil and Vinhiri in the Surambay (Suvarnadurg?) Taluka and of Mhan near Malvan, they shall henceforth be the full and exclusive property of the persons on whose grounds they may grow, who shall be free to or dispose of such trees in any way they choose."

Whether the proclamation issued in pursuance of the recommendation above expressed, gave khots a right to the valuable timber in forests and jungle lands in khoti villages, may well be doubted Mr. Dunlop's report of the 31st December, 1822, referred to in Mr. Candy's compilation on Khoti tenure, shows that he spoke of watandar khots (vide para. 10) as "purely farmers" (of the revenue), and it may, therefore, be improbable that in his proclamation about trees he would, in referring to khots, have intended to include in the category of lands "belonging to" them the uncultivated and jungle lands of the village. Accordingly in appeal No. 15 of 1869 (P. J., 1875, p. 325) the High Court held that the proclamation did not confer on the khot the right to trees growing in a khoti village in respect of which he was unable to prove a proprietorship in the soil, and the decision was confirmed by the Privy Council on appeal (I. L. R., 4 Bom., 264). Similarly in The Collector of Ratnagiri v. Antaji Lakshman (1) it was [678] held that, in the absence of a sanad expressly granting the right to cut timber and the proprietorship in the soil of the village, a khot had no right to cut timber on the uncultivated and forest land, inasmuch as in uncultivated land he had no right of proprietorship which could fall within the contemplation of Dunlop's proclamation. But it seems to me that in regard to khasgi land, of which the khot was actually in possession, it is impossible to say that it was not within the contemplation of the proclamation. The correspondence preceding the issue of this document shows that it was intended to be of wide application, and it is difficult to imagine to what class of lands it was intended to apply, if it did not include those of which the khot was entitled to the permanent occupation so long as he paid the assessment due on the village. It may be said that it would apply to the holdings of dharekaris; but it is not easy to suppose that Mr. Dunlop intended to make the concession to these men and not to other classes of permanent occupants, for in paragraph 52 of his report of 15th August, 1824, he speaks of the lands "belonging to the khots," and in this expression he must certainly have intended to include khoti khasgi lands. The passage which is quoted at the top of p. 14 of Mr. Candy's compilation is as follows:—"In the register of pañanis or surveys that have at different times been made of the districts under the Collectorate, the fields belonging to khasgi or dharekari rayats are entered in their own names, whereas those belonging to the khots and cultivated by ardhelis are entered in the names of the khots." This extract supports the view that when in his proclamation he referred to lands "belonging to any person" he intended to include those occupied by khots as their khasgi, and that he had not in his mind the idea of excluding from its scope all lands excepting those in respect of which valid sanads could be produced, granting to the holders the proprietary right in the soil.

Under these circumstances, while aware that it is difficult to reconcile this judgment with that reported in The Collector of Ratnagiri v. Raghunath (1) I think that we ought to follow the decision in The Collector of Ratnagiri v. Vyankatrav N. Surve (2) in holding that Mr. Dunlop's proclamation did grant the right [679] to teak and other forest trees in the khasgi lands held by watandar khots. It is true that it was the intention of that decision not to prejudice the right of Government, in any similar case that might subsequently arise, to give evidence upon the points on which light had not been shed; but I do not find that in the present case our attention has been called to any facts requiring us to differ from the conclusion arrived at. It is clear, too, that the right to trees having once been conceded could not be withdrawn by the proclamation of 1851, and it seems also manifest that the contention is untenable that the benefit of the first proclamation did not extend to the case of trees planted after its cancellation in 1851. Even though the khot may not be the proprietor of the soil in khoti khasgi lands, he is certainly the holder of an interest in it, and that interest having in 1823 been increased by the concession of all trees which he might grow thereafter could not subsequently be reduced by the withdrawal of the right to such trees.

Such being my opinion on the first question raised, it is unnecessary to consider whether the second contention on behalf of the defendant, viz., that the right to trees had been conferred on him when the survey settlement was introduced, is maintainable. For the foregoing reasons, I concur in setting aside the conviction and directing that the fine, if paid, be refunded.

Conviction quashed.

Before Sir Charles Sargent, Kt., Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Bayley.

RACHAWA AND OTHERS (Original Defendants), Appellants v. SHIVAYOGAPA (Original Plaintiff), *Respondent. [26th September, 1893.]

Maintenance, mother's right to—Right to possession in virtue of claim to maintenance—Mortgagee's right to possession subject to mother's claim to maintenance—Practice—Procedure—Point of law raised for first time in second appeal.

After the death of S., who had mortgaged certain land belonging to him, his widow (defendant No 2) mortgaged it again in consideration of the existing mortgage-debt and a further advance. The mortgage was afterwards assigned to the plaintiff, who sued the widow (defendant No. 2) and the mother (defendant No. 1) of S. for possession. The mother (defendant No. 1) contended that any right the widow (defendant [680] No. 2) had to mortgage the property was subject to her (the first defendant's) right to maintenance out of it, and, as her maintenance, she claimed to remain in possession. The lower Court held that the property should not be given to the plaintiff until a proper arrangement had been made by him for the maintenance of defendant No. 1, but stated that it imposed that condition on the supposition that there was no other family property out of which she could be maintained.

Held, that the decree was wrong in making the right of the first defendant to remain in possession dependent on there being no other property. Further, that as the mortgagees lent their money with full knowledge of the first defendant's possession in virtue of her claim to maintenance, the first defendant ought not to be compelled to accept from the plaintiff maintenance in some other form.

In a suit by a mortgagee for possession of mortgaged land, the mother of the deceased owner claimed to remain in possession of it in virtue of her right to maintenance. At the hearing of the second appeal a claim was made, on her behalf, not merely to maintenance, but to a share in the property as mother of the last owner. The point had not been taken in the lower Courts, nor was it one of the grounds of appeal.

Held, that it could not be taken for the first time in second appeal. It set up a new right differing in kind from that asserted throughout the trial, and not differing merely in degree, as was the case in Nagesh v. Gururao (1).

SECOND APPEAL from the decree of C. G. W. Macpherson, District Judge of Belgaum.

Suit by the assignee of a mortgage for possession of the mortgaged land, and for mesne profits.

The land in question had been mortgaged for Rs. 150 by Solbaya to one Balapa Bhandari. Solbaya afterwards died, leaving his mother (defendant No. 1) and his wife (defendant No. 2) him surviving. After his death his wife (defendant No. 2), in consideration of the mortgage-debt then due (Rs. 150) and of a further advance of Rs. 30, mortgaged the same land to Balapa Bhandari and one Shidapa. They transferred their interest to the plaintiff, who now sued.

The first defendant claimed a right to hold possession of the land for her maintenance unaffected by the second mortgage; she was willing to pay off the first mortgage made by her son.

The second defendant did not defend the suit.

The Subordinate Judge passed a decree for the plaintiff.

---

* Second Appeal No. 319 of 1892.

(1) 17 B. 303.

In appeal, the District Judge was of opinion that the second defendant's right to mortgage the land was subject to the first [681] defendant's right to maintenance, and that in making the second mortgage the second defendant was acting in fraud of the first defendant's right and that the mortgagees had notice of the fraud. He held that the plaintiff was entitled to possession of the land subject to the first defendant's right to maintenance, and he made the following order :—

"I reverse the decree of the lower Court and award plaintiff possession on an arrangement being made to the satisfaction of the Subordinate Judge in regard to the maintenance of defendant No. 1. This of course presupposes that there is not other property from which defendant No. 1 can be maintained. This point should be ascertained by the lower Court in execution proceedings, when also the mesne profits due to the plaintiff after making allowance for defendant No. 1's maintenance should be ascertained. What is a suitable maintenance for defendant No. 1 should be ascertained at the same time."

Defendants preferred a second appeal.

Vasudeo G. Bhandarkar, for the appellants (defendants) :—(States that he is authorized to appear on behalf of both the defendants, but would press the appeal on behalf of defendant No. 1 only.) The first defendant is not only entitled to maintenance, but also has a right to retain possession of the property from which the maintenance is paid. The Judge was wrong in directing that an arrangement should be made in regard to her maintenance. Even if there is some other property, she cannot be compelled to give up the property from which she has been drawing maintenance. The right of a widow to retain property assigned for her maintenance is not dependent upon the existence or otherwise of any other property—Lakshman v. Sarasvatibai (1) ; Imam v. Balamma(2) ; Vrandavandas v. Yemunabai (3).

The maintenance of the defendants should be charged upon the property in dispute. Both the widows were in possession of the property and both of them paid interest to the mortgagee. The mortgagee had notice of our possession and right of maintenance. A Hindu widow cannot be made liable for mesne profits of the property from which she derives her maintenance. The Judge was wrong in making the order for mesne profits. Defendant No. 1 is the mother of the husband of defendant No. 2 [682] and as mother she is entitled to a share in the property—Lakshman Ramchandra v. Satyabhamabai (4) ; Damodardas v. Uttamram (5).

[SARGENT, C. J.—That point was not taken in either of the lower Courts.]

But being a point of law, it can be taken for the first time in second appeal—Nagesh v. Gururao (6).

Balkrishna N. Bhajekar, for the respondent (plaintiff).—The claim of defendant No. 1 to a share should not be allowed. The point is now taken for the first time in second appeal. It is not taken in the memorandum of appeal, but is urged for the first time at the hearing. A mother is entitled to a share only when the sons effect a partition. But here there could be no partition, because there was an only son, and, therefore, there being no partition the appellant has no right to a share. Even if she had been entitled to a share, still as on her son's death the whole property devolved on defendant No. 2 as son's widow and heir, defendant No. 1 has lost her right.

The mortgage by defendant No. 2 was made from necessity,—that is, for maintenance and for payment of her husband's debt, and it was for this reason that the mortgage was held binding on both the defendants. Further, defendant No. 1 acquiesced in the mortgage made by defendant No. 2.

Bhandarkar in reply.

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—The first defendant by her written statement claimed to hold the land unaffected by the mortgage created by the second defendant; and the District Judge has held that the right of the second defendant to dispose of the land was limited by the right of the first defendant to maintenance, and it was not suggested that the mortgagees, through whom plaintiff claims, were not aware of the first defendant being in possession in respect of the maintenance.

It has, however, been argued before us, for the appellants, that the right of the first defendant as the mother of Solbaya, the [683] husband of the second defendant, was not merely to maintenance but to a half share in all the property. In the Courts below this point does not appear to have been taken, the right of the first defendant in both Courts being treated as one of maintenance only; nor is it one of the grounds of appeal to this Court. We do not think, therefore, that we ought to allow it to be taken now for the first time on second appeal. It sets up a new right in favour of the first defendant differing in kind from that asserted throughout the trial, and not merely in degree, as was the case in Nagesh v. Gururao (1).

The only question, therefore, for this Court's consideration is, whether the decree of the Court below can be objected to, assuming the right of the first defendant to the land to rest exclusively upon her right to maintenance. The decree provides for possession not being given to the plaintiff until a proper arrangement to the satisfaction of the Subordinate Judge has been made by plaintiff for her maintenance; but that condition is imposed on the assumption that there is no other family property out of which she can be maintained. Whether, if there was such property available for the purpose, the first defendant ought to be removed, it is not necessary to decide; there is no suggestion that there is any other, still less that the second defendant is ready to appropriate it to the first defendant for her maintenance, and the decree is therefore, in our opinion, wrong in making the first defendant's right to remain in possession dependent on there not being other property. Again, as the mortgagees lent their money with full knowledge of the first defendant's possession in virtue of her claim to maintenance, the first defendant ought not to be compelled to accept from the plaintiff maintenance in some other form in lieu of the land.

We must, therefore, pass the same decree as was passed by the Madras Court in Imam v. Balamma (2), dismissing the suit with the first defendant's costs throughout to be paid by the plaintiff.

Decree reversed and suit dismissed.

PADMANABH BOMBSHENVI (Original Plaintiff), Appellant v. KHEMU KOMAR NAIK AND OTHERS (Original Defendants), *Respondents.

[10th October, 1893.]

Mortgage—Suit on registered mortgage—Execution—Sale—Proceeds of sale how applied—Priority—Unregistered mortgage—Money decree—Priority of holder of unregistered mortgage to holder of money decree—Incumbrances—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 97.

The plaintiff Padmanabh held a mortgage of certain land belonging to the first defendant. The mortgage was not registered. The second defendant, Marpal, was a mortgagee of the same land under a mortgage which was subsequent in date but was duly registered. Marpal obtained a decree upon this latter mortgage and applied in execution for sale of the land. The plaintiff intervened, but his claim was rejected on the ground that Marpal's mortgage was registered and had priority to his mortgage, which was not registered. The land was sold by auction to Ramchandra (defendant No. 4) and the proceeds of the sale were partly applied in satisfaction of Marpal's claim, and a further sum of Rs. 164 was paid to one Santapa (defendant No. 3), who had obtained a money decree against the mortgagor (defendant No. 1). A balance of Rs. 103-8-11 was paid into Court and subsequently returned to defendant No. 1 (the mortgagor). The plaintiff Padmanabh now sued for payment of his mortgage-debt out of the proceeds of sale or from the defendants. The lower Court held that defendant No. 3 (Santapa) could not be called upon to refund the money which had been paid to him out of the proceeds, and that the plaintiff had a cause of action only against the mortgagor (defendant No. 1) not merely for the balance of Rs. 103-8-11, but for the whole of his claim. On appeal to the High Court, Held, that the claim of the plaintiff in virtue of his mortgage although unregistered was prior to that of the third defendant (Santapa) under his money decree. The plaintiff's earlier mortgage was postponed to that of Marpal because it was not registered, but the plaintiff had the right of a second mortgagee over the balance in virtue of his mortgage. The proceeds of the sale after satisfying the first incumbrancer (Marpal) became payable first to the other incumbrancers, if any, and then to the mortgagor (defendant No. 1). The judgment-creditor (defendant No. 3) could only take any balance that remained subject to the equitable right of the plaintiff.

SECOND APPEAL from the decision of A. H. Unwin, District Judge of Kanara.

On 28th October, 1886, defendant No. 1 mortgaged certain land (No. 166) without possession to the plaintiff. The deed was [685] not registered, and it fixed no time for repayment of the mortgage-debt.

Subsequently defendant No. 1 mortgaged the same land together with other land for Rs. 200 without possession to defendant No. 2. This mortgage-deed was registered.

On this latter mortgage defendant No. 2 filed a suit (No. 6 of 1890) against his mortgagor (defendant No. 1) and obtained a decree for the sale of the mortgaged property. When he applied in execution for the sale of the land, the plaintiff intervened and set up his prior mortgage lien upon part of the lands comprised in the mortgage and decree of defendant No. 2. His claim was rejected on 13th September, 1890, on the ground that the mortgage of defendant No. 2 being registered was prior to his which was unregistered.

* Second Appeal No. 402 of 1892.

OCT. 10.
APPELLATE CIVIL.
18 B. 684.

In execution accordingly of the above decree two lots of land were sold, viz., No. 111, which was only included in the second mortgage, and No. 116, which was included both in the first and second, and which had, therefore, been mortgaged both to the plaintiff and the defendant No. 2. At the Court sale, defendant No. 4 purchased the former for Rs. 125 and the latter for Rs. 415. Out of the total proceeds of sale, Rs. 272 6 4 were paid to defendant No. 2 in satisfaction of his decree and Rs. 164-0-9 were paid to defendant No. 3 in satisfaction of a money decree which he had obtained against defendant No. 1, and the balance of Rs. 103-8-11 remained as a deposit in Court.

In 1890 the plaintiff filed this suit to recover Rs. 90 as principal and Rs. 57 as interest, in all Rs. 147, contending that his mortgage being earliest in date, his right was superior, and he had, therefore, a right to the land as well as to the proceeds of the sale. He, therefore, prayed that his claim might be satisfied (1) from the proceeds of the sale lying in deposit in Court, (2) from the defendants who might be liable to pay, or (3) by sale of the mortgaged land. Defendant No. 4 relied on his purchase at the auction held in execution of the decree passed in the duly registered mortgage of defendant No. 2 and denied his liability to the plaintiff.

[686] Defendant No. 3 put in a similar defence, and further contended that the plaintiff's debt, if any, was a charge upon the land and not on the proceeds of the sale, and that he (defendant No. 3) was unnecessarily made a party to the suit.

Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 did not appear.

The Subordinate Judge found that the plaintiff's mortgage was proved, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the money due to him from defendants Nos. 1 and 3, and that though the plaintiff's personal remedy against defendant No. 1 was time-barred, the suit having been filed after the expiration of three years from the date of the deed, still defendant No. 1 was liable to the plaintiff's claim to the extent of Rs. 103-8-11, he having after the institution of the suit taken out of Court that sum which had been deposited there after the sale. He, therefore, made the following order:—

"I order that out of the sum claimed by plaintiff he should, in the first instance, recover Rs. 103-8-11, with costs in proportion, from defendant No. 1. In the event of this being found impossible, he should recover the said amount and costs, or so much thereof as might remain unpaid from defendant No. 3. The plaintiff to recover the rest of the amount claimed from defendant No. 3 alone with costs in proportion. Defendant No. 3 to bear his own costs, and costs of defendants Nos. 2 and 4 to be paid by plaintiff."

On appeal by the plaintiff the District Judge amended the decree and directed the plaintiff to recover the amount claimed and his costs from the property of defendant No. 1 alone, and to bear the costs of the other defendants. His reasons were as follows:—

"Although plaintiff intervened under s. 278 of the Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882) pending the attachment which followed the registered mortgagee defendant No. 2's decree, it appears that he intervened unsuccessfully, and that defendant No. 3's suit (No. 192 of 1890.) against defendant No. 1 on a money bond and decree thereon meantime anticipated plaintiff's suit. And the Court having, after satisfaction of the registered mortgagee's decree for Rs. 272 odd, out of the sale proceeds already paid away to defendant No. 3 Rs. 164-0-9 out of the balance Rs. 267 odd, cannot possibly be justified in cancelling or altering this order by calling upon the payee to refund any portion of this Rs. 164 under any circumstances. Plainly, it is the mortgagor defendant No. 1 alone against whom plaintiff had a cause of action and against whom a decree can be passed here, not merely for the Rs. 103-8-11 [687] which was returned to him as the surplus of the sale proceeds, but also for the whole of plaintiff's claim ; the Subordinate Judge being wrong also in supposing that plaintiff's personal remedy against his mortgagor is barred by limitation. His suit is to 'enforce payment of money charged (under Ex. 21) upon immoveable property'—Art. 132, Sch. II of Act XV of 1877—and he had, therefore, twelve years within which to sue from the date of the bond, 28th October, 1886 ; vide the Full Bench ruling in Lallubhai v. Naran, I.L.R., 6 Bom. 719."

Plaintiff preferred a second appeal.

Narayan Ganesh Chandavarkar, fo rthe appellant (plaintiff) :—Defendant No. 3 was merely the holder of a money decree against defendant No, 1, while the plaintiff holds a mortgage right over the mortgaged property. Defendant No. 3 cannot, therefore, have a preferential right over the plaintiff under ss. 272 and 295 of the Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882,). Compare also s. 97 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882)—Raja Kishendatt v. Raja Mumtaz Ali Khan (1).

Shamrao Vitthal, for respondent No. 3 (defendant No. 3).

Wasudeo Gopal Bhandarkar, for respondent No. 4 (defendant No. 4) the auction-purchaser :—The first Court dismissed the suit as against us. We were not joined as a party to the appeal in the lower Court, and yet we have been joined as a respondent in second appeal. So the appeal as against us must be dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—The District Judge has misconceived the respective rights of the plaintiff and the judgment-creditor, defendant No. 3, in the surplus proceeds of the sale effected in execution of the mortgage-decree obtained by defendant No. 2. Although plaintiff's earlier mortgage was postponed to that of defendant No. 2, by reason of its non-registration, the plaintiff still had the same rights over the balance as if he had been the second mortgagee in point of date. In Raja Kishendait Ram v. Raja Mumtaz Ali Khan (1) the Privy Council say : "The effect of a sale under a power of sale is to destroy the equity of redemption in the land, and to constitute the mortgagee exercising the power a trustee of the surplus proceeds, after satisfying his own charge, first for the subsequent incumbrancers and ultimately for the mortgagor." The same must be the result [688] when the Court sells to satisfiy the first mortgage. The proceeds which are paid into Court after satisfying the first incumbrance become payable first to the other incumbrancers (if any) and then to the mortgagor, and so it is virtually provided by s. 97 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), which directs that "the residue is to be paid to the person proving himself to be interested in the property sold." Such being the right of the plaintiff over the balance in virtue of his mortgage, the attaching creditor could only take the balance subject to that equitable right.

We must, therefore, reverse the decree of the Court below and send back the case for a fresh decision having regard to the above remarks. In dealing with the case it will be necessary to bear in mind that the balance, Rs. 267-9-8, was the result of the sale of two properties Nos. 111 and 166, in the latter of which alone the plaintiff was interested. ABAJI GANGADHAR (Original Plaintiff), Appellant v. MUKTA KOM RAGHU AND ANOTHER (Original Defendants), *Respondents.

[11th October, 1893.]

Gift—Necessity of possession—Attestation of deed, effect of.

In 1873, Ramji, a Hindu, executed a deed of gift of his immoveable property to his daughter Mukta (defendant No. 1). The deed was attested by the plaintiff. In 1878, Ramji mortgaged to the plaintiff some of the land comprised in the deed of gift. Ramji died in that year, and in 1882 his grandson conveyed the equity of redemption to the plaintiff, who was already in possession of the mortgaged land as mortgagee. In the year 1888 the plaintiff being dispossessed by Mukta (defendant No. 1) and the second defendant, to whom she had sold the land, he brought the present suit to recover possession. The defendants relied upon the gift.

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to possession. At the time of the mortgage to him in 1878 Ramji had not completed his gift to Mukta by giving possession. He was, therefore, in a position to give the plaintiff a good title. It had not been shown that Mukta had ever been treated as the owner of the equity of redemption.

[689] Held, also, that the circumstances that the plaintiff attested the deed of gift in 1873 could not affect his title, as the gift had not been completed by delivery of possession.

SECOND APPEAL from this decision of T. Hart-Davies, Acting District Judge of Ahmednagar.

In 1873, by a registered deed of that date Ramji Jaitha made a gift of his immoveable property, including the land in dispute in this suit, to his daughter Mukta (defendant No. 1). The deed was attested by the plaintiff and by one of the donor's sons. Ramji, however, remained in possession, and in 1878 he mortgaged to the plaintiff a part of the lands comprised in the deed of gift and put the plaintiff in possession as mortgagee. Ramji died in the same year. In 1882, Ramji's grandson, Vithal, conveyed the equity of redemption to the plaintiff. In 1888, Mukta and the second defendant, to whom she had sold the land in question, forcibly dispossessed the plaintiff, and he then brought this suit to recover the land. The defendants relied upon the gift to Mukta by her father Ramji.

The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit, holding that the gift to Mukta was valid and had been acted upon by delivery to her of possession of other lands.

* Second Appeal No. 399 of 1892.

1893
OCT. 11.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

18 B. 688.

On appeal by the plaintiff, the Judge confirmed the decree. Plaintiff preferred a second appeal.

Mahadeo Chimnaji Apte for the appellant (plaintiff):—The lands in dispute were Ramji's ancestral property. He could not, therefore, make a gift of them to the prejudice of his heirs, namely, Govinda and his son Vithu. Further, the gift was not completed by delivery of possession to the donee. Ramji continued in possession after the gift, and mortgaged the property with possession to the plaintiff. On both these grounds, the gift to Mukta was invalid, and that being so she could not convey a valid title to the second defendant. The plaintiff is entitled to recover possession—Vasudev Bhat v. Narayan Daji (1).

There was no appearance for the respondents (defendants).

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—Both the Courts below have omitted to consider an important fact in the case, that is, that Ramji had not [690] given possession to his daughter Mukta under the deed, and the gift had, therefore, not been completed when he executed the mortgage in 1878 to the plaintiff—Vasudev Bhat v. Narayan Daji Damle (1)—and he could, therefore, confer a good title on the plaintiff. Nor is there any evidence to show that she was ever treated as the owner of the equity of redemption by Ramji or Vithu so as even to effect the latter's title. The circumstance that plaintiff attested the deed of gift in 1873 could not affect this title, as the gift was never completed by possession. Under these circumstances Mukta could confer no title on defendant No. 2; and as he only purchased in 1882 he could not have acquired title by adverse possession before the present suit was brought.

We must, therefore, reverse the decree of the Court below and order that possession of the land in question be given to the plaintiff. Plaintiff to have his costs in both the Courts below.

Decree reversed.

plaintiff rejoined that, even if it had been paid, the Court could not recognize the payment, as it had not been certified under s. 258 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Held, that, under the circumstances, the rent when paid was to be deemed as paid under the mirasi tenure and not under the decree, and, therefore, s. 258 of the Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882) did not apply, and payment need not be certified.

[691] THIS was a second appeal from the decision of Rao Bahadur R. D. Paranjpe, First Class Subordinate Judge of Satara with appellate powers.

The plaintiff brought a possessory suit, No. 646 of 1884, against the defendants in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Peth (now Islampur) to recover possession of certain land. The defendants set up a mirasi title to it. The suit was compromised, and there was a consent decree, which declared their mirasi tenure, directed them to pay rent as before, and ordered that as long as they did so they should not be dispossessed. The following is the material part of it:—

"The land in dispute belongs to the plaintiffs by (right of) ownership, and they admit that it has been in miras with the defendants from Narayanrao. Only (while) in the miraspatra there is a stipulation for payment of Rs. 11-4-0 every year, the plaintiffs received every year from the defendants Rs. 3-12-0 in addition Accordingly, the defendants should hereafter pay to the plaintiffs, as before, every year Rs. 15 as (if it were) an instalment of Government assessment. And so long as the defendants (continue to) pay the amount as aforesaid, their miras right shall remain intact, and they will not be liable to be dispossessed of the land by the plaintiffs. If the defendants fail to pay by the 31st of July of any year the said amount of Rs. 15, which is payable every year, the land in dispute shall be taken out of the possession of the defendants. The defendants shall then have no miras right remaining on the land."

One the 21st March, 1892, the plaintiffs applied for execution of the decree, and prayed for possession of the land, alleging that the assessment of 1890-91 had not been paid by the defendants.

The defendants pleaded that it had been paid, and contended that they could not, therefore, be dispossessed.

The plaintiffs denied the alleged payments, and argued that (even if it had been) the Court could not recognize any payment which was not certified to the Court under s. 258 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882).

The Subordinate Judge allowed evidence of the alleged payment to be given. On the evidence, he found the payments proved and rejected the plaintiffs' application.

On appeal by the plaintiffs, the First Class Subordinate Judge reversed the order, holding that the Subordinate Judge was not right in admitting evidence of a payment which he could not [692] recognize under s. 258, which section applied to all sums of money payable under a decree. He, therefore, made an order directing execution to proceed by giving the lands in plaintiffs' possession.

The defendants preferred a second appeal.

Macpherson (with Vasudeo R. Joglekar) for the appellants (defendants) :— Section 258 of the Civil Procedure Code has no application to a case like the present. It was not necessary to certify these payments. The rent is payable, and has been paid, not under the decree, but under the original mirasi tenure. The decree merely confirmed the tenure and gave certain directions with regard to the payment. We have paid all the instalments as they fell due.

We further contend that the clause in the decree with respect to the recovery of possession is penal, and should be relieved against—Vaguran v. Rangayyangar (1).

Mahadeo C. Apte, for the respondents (plaintiffs) :—When litigant parties come to an understanding, and a decree is passed on the terms of that undrestanding, anything directed by the decree that is done subsequently to the decree must be considered as done under it. We, therefore, submit that any payments made were made under the decree and not under the old mirasi tenure, and ought to have been certified to the Court in accordance with s. 258. Not having been so certified, they cannot be recognized. When a forfeiture clause comes into operation under a decree, it cannot be avoided, because there has been no change of the relationship of the parties under the decree.

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—The original suit in which the decree was made was a possessory suit brought by the inamdar against the defendants, who set up a right to hold the lands under a mirasi tenure. The decree declares that such was the nature of the tenure and directs that the rent "should be paid as before." We think that under these circumstances the rent when paid is to be deemed as paid under the mirasi tenure and not under the decree, and, therefore, that s. 258, Civil Procedure Code, does not apply.

[693] The decree must, therefore, be reversed and the case sent back for decision on the merits; and we may observe that the defendant will not be precluded by ss. 56 and 64 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act from proving the payment of the instalment in question by any one of the ordinary legal modes of proof.

Decree reversed.

SECOND appeal from the decision of Khan Bahadur N. N. Nanavati, First Class Subordinate Judge with appellate powers at Dhulia, in Cross Appeals Nos. 187 and 191 of 1892.

The plaintiff sued (1) for a declaration of his right to conduct the car and palki of the deity Shri Datatrya Maharaj in procession, accompanied by bodies of worshippers reciting prayers to the sound of music (such as tal, zanj, mirdang and vina) along the public thoroughfares of Raver, and (2) for a perpetual injunction restraining the Mahomedans of the locality from obstructing the passage of the procession and the performance of the ceremony called Gopal Kala at Nagziri, with music playing.

The defendants were made defendants under s. 30 of the Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882) as representing the Mahomedan community.

The Subordinate Judge of Yeola granted the declaration sought, subject, however, to the right of the Mahomedans not to be disturbed [694] while assembled and engaged in public worship during hours in which they usually assemble for public worship, and of which they have informed the authorities in due time.

On appeal, the First Class Subordinate Judge, A. P., confirmed the decree of the Court of first instance, and further ordered that the defendants should inform the authorities responsible for the preservation of the public peace of the hours fixed for public prayer, and that the plaintiff and his processionists should stop all music within 75 feet on either side of a mosque during hours in which the Mahomedans were engaged therein in public worship.

From this decree the defendants appealed to the High Court.

Manekshah Jehangirshah, for appellants:—This case falls under the general rule that no action can be maintained by one person against another for obstruction to a highway, unless special damage is proved: The plaint in this case does not allege special loss or damage to the plaintiff. Nor has he given any proof of special damage sustained by him. This suit cannot, therefore, lie—Satku v. Ibrahim(1); Siddeswara v. Krishna (2).

P. M. Mehta (with Messrs. Dixit and Hiralal) for respondent:—The suit was instituted on the allegation that plaintiff had been obstructed by the defendants. This obstruction constitutes special damage. The suit will, therefore, lie. Refers to Second Appeal No. 527 of 1891. The point now taken on second appeal was not raised in either of the Courts below. It should not, therefore, be allowed.

JUDGMENT.

FULTON, J.—The only question argued in this appeal was, whether without alleging any personal loss or damage the plaintiff could maintain this action. The question has been very fully considered in the learned judgment of Sir M. R. Westropp in Satku v. Ibrahim(1) which does not seem to have been brought to the notice of the Courts below. That decision shows clearly that although "there cannot be any doubt that Her Majesty's subjects, as well in India as in England, have the right to pass and re-pass along a public highway," a civil action to enforce a right to [695] conduct a religious procession along a particular road cannot ordinarily be maintained. Whether, if an order had been passed under s. 44 of Bombay Act IV of 1890, an action could be instituted under cl. 2, it is unnecessary to determine, as no such order has been made.

The decisions of the Madras High Court in Sundram v. The Queen—Ponnusami v. The Queen (1) and Muthialu Chetti v. Bapun Saib (2) are appropriate for the purpose of showing the legal rights of the plaintiff, but do not support the proposition that in case of obstruction his proper remedy is by civil suit. The former of these was the judgment in a criminal case, and the latter in a suit for which the cause of action was not any alleged obstruction to the road, but the procurement of an improper order from a Magistrate. It was admitted that in Second Appeal No. 527 of 1891, in which the point now under consideration might have been raised, it was not taken by the respondents, who were defendants and made no objection to the decree of the Courts below. Consequently that case cannot be relied on as a precedent. The present case seems governed by Satku v. Ibrahim (3). We trust that the parties to this suit will come to some reasonable compromise, and would suggest that they should either accept the First Class Subordinate Judge's opinion, or, if they cannot do so, refer their dispute to the arbitration of the Collector and agree to abide by his award. A prolongation of this quarrel may compel the interference of the Magistrates and lead to much trouble, which can be avoided by the exercise of forbearance on both sides. We reverse the decree and reject the claim. The parties to pay their own costs throughout.

The First Class Subordinate Judge decreed the claim with costs, and ordered that the plaintiffs should recover the amount awarded by the sale of the mortgaged property.

From this decision the plaintiffs appealed to the High Court, contending that they were entitled to recover the amount decreed from the whole or any portion of defendant's property.

The appeal was presented with a Court fee of Rs. 355, valuing the claim at Rs. 7,000, as an appeal in a foreclosure suit, under s. 7, sub-s. 9 of the Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), the principal amount of the mortgage being Rs. 7,000. The Shirastedar being of opinion that the memorandum of appeal was chargeable with a Court fee of Rs. 405 as an appeal in a suit for money [697] under s. 7, sub-s. 1 of the Court Fees Act, required the appellants' pleader to pay the deficient Court fee.

The appellants' pleader (Pandurang Balibhadra) objected to the valuation by the Shirastedar, and contended as follows :—

"No doubt, the plaintiffs do not, in this suit, ask that the defendant's right in the property should be foreclosed in the technical sense of that term, but they ask to have this right extinguished by the sale of the property for the satisfaction of their debt. In effect, the suit is of the same nature as a foreclosure suit. There is no reason why such a suit should be valued differently from a foreclosure suit, or why, as contended by the Shirastedar, the plaintiffs should be asked to pay stamps on the amount of the principal and of interest. In determining the amount of the stamp duty under the Stamp Act, the amount of principal only is taken into consideration, and in the same way the amount of Court fees chargeable in suits coming within the words of s. 7, cl. 9, is calculated on the amount of the principal only. The same principle ought to apply to suits by a mortgagee when he asks the payment of his debt by the sale of the property instead of the property itself. Such a construction would be reasonable, looking to the practice of mortgagees in the Mofussil, who seldom bring what would strictly be a foreclosure suit."

In support of his contention the pleader cited the case of Ganpat Pandurang v. Adarji Dadabhai (1) and the English cases quoted therein with approval at p. 320 of the Report.

The question was referred to the Taxing Officer for decision.

The Taxing Officer referred the point to the Chief Justice under s. 5 of the Court Fees Act (VII of 1870). His reference was as follows :—

"The only question for determination is, whether the suit can be regarded as a foreclosure suit or not for the purposes of the Court Fees Act. If it can, the appellant is right in his contention that the valuation taken in respect to principal only is sufficient. The section of the Court Fees Act which applies to the [698] case is s. 7, cl. 9, and if the suit comes under cl. 9, the principal debt, viz., Rs. 7,000, is to be taken as the basis of valuation. The suit was to realize Rs. 8,236-14-0 by sale of certain mortgaged property, and though the result of a decree ordering such a sale may be of the same effect as a foreclosure decree, still it is not, strictly speaking, the same. I think to arrive at the intention of the Legislature, the whole of cl. 9, which deals with mortgage suits, must be taken and read together. In the third clause of it, express provision is made as regards a conditional sale, in which case valuation is allowed on the same favourable terms as in cases of redemption and foreclosure. The present is not a case of conditional sale, and I think the common maxim of 'expressio unius' must be taken to apply. As the law makes express provision as to redemption, foreclosure, and conditional sale suits, it must be presumed to have intentionally excluded other cases of sale; and although I am not prepared to hold a very positive opinion, still, I think, the Shirastedar is right, and that the appeal should be valued, not at Rs. 7,000, but at Rs. 8,236-14-0. I do not think the appellants' argument on the analogy of the Stamp Act a sound one. That Act is quite distinct from the Court Fees Act, and under the Court Fees Act, when a suit is brought upon a simple money bond for principal and interest, the plaint is always valued at the total amount of principal plus interest."

Pandurang Balibadra, for the appellants.

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—As this suit is instituted against the heir of the original mortgagor, not exclusively for the purpose of having the mortgage-debt realized by sale of the mortgaged property, but also out of all other property, presumably meaning any other property in the hands of such heir which would be liable for the debts of the original mortgagor, it is virtually a suit for money brought against the representative of the original debtor. I am, therefore, of opinion that the appeal should be valued, not at the principal debt, but the entire amount including the interest.

Order accordingly.

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 30—Burial ground—Land belonging in common to all the Mahomedan inhabitants of a village—Encroachment by some of the Mahomedans—Right of suit of some members of a community.

Where certain Mahomedans of a village brought a suit against other Mahomedans of the same village for the removal of a wall built by the defendants upon land which was found to belong in common to all the Mahomedan inhabitants of the village for the purpose of a burial ground, the Judge, in appeal, dismissed the suit on the grounds that all the Mahomedans were not joined as parties to the suit and that the plaintiffs had not obtained the permission of the first Court to file the suit under s. 30 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882). On second appeal, Held, reversing the decree, that s. 30 of the Civil Procedure Code was not applicable to the suit, which must be regarded as one in which the plaintiffs claimed to restrain the defendants from violating the common interest they all had in the land.

Held, further, that the defendants having erected the wall in dispute so as to exclude the plaintiffs from a part of the common land, there was a violation of the plaintiffs' right, and that, therefore, the plaintiffs were entitled to bring the suit for the removal of the wall.

* Second Appeal, No. 241 of 1892.

NOV. 13.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

18 B. 699.

SECOND appeal from the decision of Rao Bahadur Kashinath Balkrishna Marathe, First Class Subordinate Judge of Ratnagiri with appellate powers.

This action was instituted by Tanudin valad Abdul Rajam and thirty-two others against defendants Pandu valad Shekh Yakub and twenty-six others to remove a new compound wall erected by the defendants, alleging that the land in dispute, which was to the east and west of a certain masjid, was the joint burial ground of the parties to the suit, all of whom were Mahomedans and resided in the same village; that the defendants by erecting the wall in dispute included this land in the land appertaining to their masjid, and that the plaintiffs had been thus dispossessed. They, therefore, prayed for the removal of the wall and that the land might be kept in the joint vahivat (management or user) of the parties.

[700] Defendants Nos. 2 to 5, 6, 8, 9, 15, 18, 20, 23 and 25 set up their exclusive ownership of the lands, and contended that the plaintiffs had no right to them.

The heirs of defendant No. 16 answered that the suit was barred by ss. 13 and 43 of the Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882) and also by the Statute of Limitations.

The other defendants were absent.

The Subordinate Judge (Rao Saheb N. G. Phatak) found that the lands in dispute were in the joint possession of the parties, that they had a joint right to them, and that the suit was neither time-barred nor barred by ss. 13 and 43 of the Civil Procedure Code. He, therefore, allowed the claim.

On appeal by the defendants the Judge reversed the decree on the following grounds:—

"Issue 1.—The land in dispute as a burial ground appears to be the joint property of all Mahomedans of the village. The plaintiff-respondents' pleader is not prepared to say that all Mahomedans have been joined as parties to the suit. The lower Court's permission to file the suit according to s. 30 of the Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882) does not appear to have been asked or granted, and the suit is, therefore, informal.

"Issue 2.—Assuming that all persons interested in the subject matter of the suit are parties to the suit, according to the plaintiffs' admission the property in dispute is joint property. If it is joint property, each one of the owners is entitled to make such use of it as will suit his convenience and taste. The defendants as joint owners were entitled to raise the wall sought to be removed until and unless the plaintiffs should manifest an intention to divide the land and stop the defendants from raising a wall by a temporary injunction. The time for an injunction is gone, because the wall is complete. The plaintiffs must now sue for partition of their interest and get the land divided. The present suit for retaining the property joint and for restraining the defendants from exercising an act of admitted ownership cannot lie."

The plaintiffs preferred a second appeal.

[701] Ganesh K. Deshmukh for the appellants (plaintiffs):—Section 30 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) is not applicable; and even supposing that it is applicable, the suit ought not to have been dismissed summarily. It ought to have been remanded, because s. 30 of the Civil Procedure Code was not relied on by the defence, nor was the point taken in the first Court.

Section 30 is not applicable, because the Court has not found that there are other necessary parties. We say that all the persons who were necessary parties have been joined in the suit. Our contention was that the lands in dispute were the joint property of the parties, and that contention has not been traversed. The defendants do not say that there are other persons interested in the lands. Their contention is that they are the exclusive owners. Under these circumstances, s. 30 of the Code can have no application—Hira Lal v. Bhairon (1). When property is joint, one member cannot act in such a manner as would exclude access of the other members to it. The defendants built a wall in the midst of the land, and have appropriated to their use a portion of the common ground.

Manekshah J. Taleyarkhan, for the respondents (defendants) :—The frame of the suit is wrong. The suit as it is brought seems to be one with respect to a common family property. But the Courts below have found that the property is the joint property of the whole Mahomedan community of the village. Therefore, the Judge was right in dismissing the suit under s. 30 of the Civil Procedure Code.

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—The Courts below have found that the property belongs in common to all the Mahomedans of the village for the purpose of a burial ground. Section 30 of the Civil Procedure Code has, therefore, no application to the present suit, which, according to that finding, must be regarded as one in which the plaintiffs claim to restrain the defendants from violating the common interest they all have in the land—Hira Lal v. Bhairon (1).

[702] The suit, therefore, being maintainable, the only question which arises is, whether the wall in question which the defendants have erected so as to exclude the plaintiffs from a part of the common land, is a violation of the plaintiffs' rights. As to this there can be no doubt, on the finding, that as the land is held in common by all, the defendants' conduct amounts to such a violation.

We must, therefore, reverse the decree of the Court below and restore that of the Subordinate Judge. The appellants to have their costs here and in the lower appeal Court.

Decree reversed.

Specific performance—Injunction—Negative agreement—Discretion of Court—Agreement not to work for a rival tradesman—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), ss. 22, 56 and 57.

The plaintiff was a milliner carrying on business in Bombay and the defendant was in his employment up to the year 1890. In that year he left the plaintiff's service, and the plaintiff alleged that at the time he left it he was indebted to the plaintiff for moneys not accounted for and also in respect of loans made to him. The plaintiff instituted criminal proceedings in the Police Court against the defendant for criminal breach of trust, and procured a warrant for his arrest. The defendant surrendered, and at the time of the agreement hereafter mentioned the proceedings in this matter were going on. The defendant was out on bail, and was then in the service of a rival milliner named Bhimji Jivan. On the 1st February, 1893, an agreement in writing was made between the plaintiff and the defendant, whereby the defendant agreed as follows:—(1) to pay the plaintiff Rs. 1,950 in full settlement of the plaintiff's claim; (2) to enter plaintiff's service as cutter and to serve him for ten years from the date of agreement; (3) to serve plaintiff honestly. (4) In case plaintiff was obliged to dismiss him for some "fault," then until the expiration of the said period of ten years the defendant should not carry on the business of a cutter or tailor, either directly or indirectly, on his own account or as partner or servant of another, and in case he should do so, the plaintiff should be at liberty to stop him.

On the 15th February, 1893, the charge of criminal breach of trust against the defendant was dismissed, the plaintiff offering no evidence in support of it. The plaintiff subsequently called upon the defendant to enter his employment in accordance with the agreement, but the defendant refused, and remained in the service of Bhimji [703] Jivan. The plaintiff, therefore, filed this suit praying for an injunction restraining the defendant from carrying on business as a cutter or tailor for ten years from the date of the agreement.

Held, dismissing the suit, that the parties were not really on equal terms, and that in the exercise of the discretion permitted to the Court by s. 22 of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877) the injunction should be refused.

SUIT for an injunction.

The plaintiff carried on business in Bombay as a milliner under the name of Callian Moti & Co. The defendant had been formerly a cutter in the plaintiff's service, but left the plaintiff's employment in 1890. The plaint stated that the defendant was then largely indebted to the plaintiff in respect of moneys not accounted for, and also in respect of loans made by the plaintiff to him.

The plaint further stated that after the defendant had left the plaintiff's employment the plaintiff instituted criminal proceedings against him in the Police Court on a charge of criminal breach of trust, and that in February, 1893, the defendant, who had in the meantime entered the service of one Bhimji Jivan, a milliner in Bombay, came to the plaintiff and requested him to come to a settlement in regard to the claims made against him and also begged that the plaintiff would take him again into his employment. The plaintiff ultimately agreed to this, and an agreement dated 1st February, 1893, was made between them, which was reduced to writing. It contained the following terms:—

(1) The defendant was to pay the plaintiff Rs. 1,950 within eight days in full settlement of all the claims which the plaintiff had against him.

(2) The defendant was to enter into the plaintiff's service as a cutter and tailor and to serve as such for ten years from the date of the agreement, receiving Rs. 37 per month as remuneration.

(3) The defendant was to serve the plaintiff honestly and to be obedient to the plaintiff's order.

(4) Except for some "fault" of the defendant the plaintiff was not to dismiss him within the said period of ten years, and if [704] "by reason of a fault or ungratefulness" the plaintiff should be obliged to dismiss the defendant, "then until the aforesaid fixed period shall expire the defendant is not to do or carry on in Bombay the work or business of a cutter or a tailor, or the sewing business, either directly or indirectly, either on his own account or as a partner or servant of somebody else, and in case he shall carry on the same, then the party of the second part (i. e. the plaintiff) shall be at liberty to stop him."

(5) The defendant bound himself to get a similar agreement executed by his brother Hari Tricum, and the plaintiff was to make a similar agreement and to pay him Rs. 31 per mensem.

On the 15th February, 1893, the charge of criminal breach of trust, which, as stated above, had been brought by the plaintiff against the defendant, was dismissed by the Magistrate, the plaintiff offering no evidence in support of it.

The plaint further stated that after the execution of the above agreement the plaintiff at the defendant's request consented to the latter remaining for a limited time in the service of Bhimji Jivan for the convenience of all parties, but that subsequently the plaintiff had called upon the defendant to enter into his employment in accordance with the said agreement, but the defendant refused to do so, and remained in the service of the said Bhimji Jivan.

The said Bhimji Jivan was a rival in the business of the plaintiff.

The last paragraph of the plaint was as follows:—

"9. The plaintiff says that the said agreement comprises a negative agreement by the defendant not to work as a cutter or tailor on his own account, or to serve any other milliner in either of those capacities, and the plaintiff brings this suit for an injunction ordering the defendant to perform the said negative agreement, the plaintiff having in no respect failed to perform the said agreement on his part."

The plaintiff prayed that the defendant should be restrained by injunction from carrying on business as a cutter or tailor on his own account, or as a servant or partner of any person other than the plaintiff, for a period of ten years from the date of the above agreement.

[705] In his written statement the defendant (inter alia) stated that he had been obliged to leave the plaintiff's service in consequence of the false prosecution which the plaintiff instituted against him in order to bring pressure upon him and thus prevent his entering into the service of a rival establishment, and that the plaintiff having issued a warrant against him compelled him by undue influence to enter into the above agreement. He pleaded that the agreement was, therefore, not binding upon him, and that the plaintiff was not entitled to the injunction prayed for.

At the hearing the following issues were raised:—

(1) Whether the agreement was to any and what extent void?

(2) Whether the plaintiff was entitled to the injunction prayed for?

JUDGMENT.

CANDY, J.—Plaintiff is a milliner in Bombay carrying on business under the name and firm of Callian Moti & Co.

Defendant was formerly in the plaintiff's service, but left that service in 1890, being at that time indebted to the plaintiff. About the time that defendant left plaintiff's service, plaintiff instituted proceedings against him in the Police Court, Bombay; and a warrant was issued for his arrest. Defendant surrendered, and in January, 1893, the proceedings of a criminal case were actually going on between the parties in the Police Court. Defendant was on bail, and was at that time in the service of a rival milliner, Bhimji Jivan, having in November, 1892, taken a contract as cutter in that shop.

Negotiations were then entered into between the plaintiff and defendant. The proceedings in the Police Court were to be dropped, and on 1st February, 1893, an agreement was signed by both plaintiff and defendant, of which the following is a translation :—

[706] (This writing) is made this 1st day of February in the year 1893 between me Darji (i.e., tailor) Narsi Tricum of the one part and Darji (i.e., tailor) Callian Harjivan, trading under the name of Callian Moti, of the other part. The particulars thereof are as follows :—

1. The party of the first part and his father and brother (making in all) three persons have passed in writing under their (own) signatures a "mortgage" deed for Rs. 2,500 and interest in favour of the above-mentioned party of the second part. In respect of the same, and in respect of all other dealings, "Fargati" (a) has been made for Rs. 1,950, in letters one thousand nine hundred and fifty. On the said rupees being paid within eight days from this day, the said party of the second part is truly to make and deliver at the cost (and) in favour of the party of the first part a reconveyance in respect of the said mortgaged property.

2. The said party of the first part has agreed to work as a "cutter" and a tailor at (the shop of) the party of the second part. The particulars of the conditions in respect thereof (are as follows) :—

3. The said party of the first part is to serve as a "cutter" and tailor for ten years from this day's date at (the shop of) the party of the second part. And his pay at the rate of Rs. 37, in letters thirty-seven, per each month is truly to be received and paid as the same shall accrue due.

4. The said party of the first part is to serve the party of the second part with honesty and is not to be partial (i.e., wanting in the discharge of his duties) in any way whatever. And he is not to disregard all (any of) his legitimate work and orders. Also he is always truly to behave himself in obedience to his orders and directions.

5. Within the aforesaid fixed period I, the party of the first part, am never to leave the service of the party of the second part; and without my fault the party of the second part is not to dispense with my services (within that period). And if the party of the second part be obliged to dispense with the services of the above-mentioned party of the first part by reason of a fault or ungratefulness on his part, then until the aforesaid fixed period shall expire the party of the first part is not to do or carry on in Bombay the work (or) business of a "cutter," or a tailor or the sewing business, either directly or indirectly, either on his own account or as a partner or a servant of somebody else. And in case he should carry on (the same), then the party of the second part (shall) be at liberty to stop him from doing so.

6. The party of the first part binds himself to get a writing containing conditions similar to these made (executed) also by Hari Tricum, the brother of the above-mentioned party of the first part. And the party of the second part also binds himself to give a similar instrument in writing and to fix the pay at Rs. 31, in letters thirty-one, per month.

---

(a) "Fargati" literally means release, but here it is used probably to mean a settlement.

In witness hereof, both the parties have executed this writing of their free will and pleasure. The same is agreed to and approved of by them and the respective heirs (and) representatives of each (of them).

DARJI NARSI TRICUM (his signature, his own hand-writing).

CALLIAN MOTI.

[707] Defendant has continued to remain in Bhimji Jivan's service; and, on plaintiff calling on him to carry out the contract and join his (plaintiff's) service, has refused to do so. Hence the plaintiff has brought this suit praying that defendant be restrained by injunction from carrying on business as cutter or tailor on his own account, or as servant or partner of any person other than the plaintiff, for a period of ten years from 1st February, 1893.

Defendant by his written statement pleaded that his indebtedness to the plaintiff was sufficiently secured by the mortgage referred to in the agreement, and that the plaintiff, taking advantage of the fact of having procured a warrant against him, compelled him by undue influence to enter into the agreement of 1st February, 1893, and, therefore, the agreement is void and not binding on him.

At the hearing of the suit defendant appeared in person and stated that he was unwilling to enter plaintiff's service. The Court raised the following issues:—

1. Whether the agreement is to any, and what extent, void?
2. Whether plaintiff is entitled to the injunction prayed for?

Defendant put himself into the witness-box, and admitted that he knew, before he signed the agreement, that the police case against him was to be dismissed. He said: "No one told me that unless I signed A (the agreement), the police case would not be withdrawn. Plaintiff once got a warrant out against me. I am afraid to go into his service again, lest he should again take out a warrant against me." He further admitted that plaintiff had asked him to leave Bhimji Jivan and join his shop according to the agreement, but he had declined, and that Mr. Bhaishankar had told him that in any case the criminal case was withdrawn. Mr. Bhaishankar (plaintiff's solicitor) also deposed that the withdrawal of the proceedings in the Police Court was no part of the consideration of the agreement A. "The abandonment of those proceedings had been determined independently of the agreement, and I told this to defendant before he signed the agreement."

During the course of the argument at the bar it was admitted that the allegation in the 6th paragraph of the plaint, that on the [708] date of the agreement the charge against defendant was dismissed by the Magistrate, was incorrect; and that, as a fact, the proceedings in the Police Court were not closed till 15th February, 1893, when the complaint was dismissed, as complainant did not call his witnesses. It was stated that the object of this delay was in order that Bhimji Jivan should not at that time get an inkling of the agreement between plaintiff and his employee (defendant).

On the above facts I have to decide whether plaintiff is entitled to the injunction prayed for.

In the 9th paragraph of the plaint the claim for the injunction is based on the negative covenant in the agreement by the defendant not to

JULY 19.
ORIGINAL CIVIL.
18 B. 702.

work as a cutter or tailor on his own account, or to serve any other milliner in either of those capacities. But in the argument it was conceded by the learned counsel for the plaintiff that he could not directly rely on the latter portion of the fifth paragraph of the agreement, for the plaintiff had not dismissed the defendant, and, therefore, the state of things contemplated by the parties in that paragraph had not arisen; but he relied on the negative covenant in the fifth paragraph as indirectly showing the intention of the parties, and on illus. (d) of s. 57, Specific Relief Act (I of 1877). He also referred to the remaks of a Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court in the Brahmaputra Tea Co., Limited v. Scarth (1) as showing that the present agreement would not be void under s. 27 of the Contract Act.

I think that this last contention is sound. Whether, in the event of the plaintiff dismissing defendant after taking him into his employ, any question would arise as to the applicability of s. 27 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872) is another question. At present all that we are concerned with is the covenant on the part of the defendant that he would serve plaintiff exclusively for the period of ten years from 1st February, 1893. That is a lawful agreement. Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 57, Illus.(d), shows that if B contracts with A2 that he will serve him faithfully for twelve months as a clerk, A is entitled to an injunction restraining B from serving a rival house as [709] clerk. So here defendant contracted with plaintiff to serve him as cutter for ten years from 1st February, 1893 : why should plaintiff not obtain an injunction restraining defendant from serving a rival milliner as cutter during that period?

It may be doubted whether in England the plaintiff would succeed. Thus to take the case of Whitwood Chemical Co. v. Hardman (2), defendant covenanted to be the plaintiff's manager for a term of years, and during that period to give the whole of his time to the plaintiff's business. Yet he was endeavouring to set up within the district a rival company to work the very same patent the plaintiffs were making, and was devoting part of his time to the business of that rival company. The Court of appeal held that plaintiff's remedy was not by injunction. Lindley, L J., admitted that every agreement to do a particular thing in one sense involves a negative. He said (pp. 426—427) :—

"It involves the negative of doing that which is inconsistent with the thing you are to do.....but it does not at all follow that because a person has agreed to do a particular thing, he is, therefore, to be restrained from doing everything else which is inconsistent with it. The Court has never gone that length, and I do not suppose that it ever will. We are dealing here with a contract of a particular class. It is a contract involving the performance of personal service, and, as a rule, the Court does not decree specific performance of such contracts. That is a general rule. There has been engrafted upon that rule an exception, which is explained more or less definitely in Lumley v. Wagner (3),—that is to say, where a person has engaged not to serve any other master.....the Court can lay hold of that and restrain him from so doing.....and the principle does not depend upon whether you have an actual negative clause, if you can say that the parties were contracting in the sense that one should not do this or the other—some specific thing on which you can put your finger.

"But there is this to be considered. What are we to say in this particular case? What injunction can be granted in this [710] particular case which will not be, in substance and effect, a decree for specific performance of this agreement? It appears to me the difficulty of the plaintiffs is this, that they cannot suggest anything which, when examined, does not amount to this, that the man must either be idle, or specifically perform the agreement into which he has entered. Now there, it appears to me, the case goes beyond Lumley v. Wagner.....The principle is that the Court does not decree specific performance of contracts for personal service, and the question is, whether there is anything in this case which takes it out of that principle."

(1) 11 C. 545 (550). (2) L.R. (1891), 2 Ch. 416. (3) 1 DeG. M. and G. 604.

The Lord Justice held that plaintiffs failed to show that there was some recognised exception in the particular case, and after expressing agreement with Jessel, M.R., about there being no very definite line, and with Fry, L.J., that cases of this kind are not to be extended, he proceeded (p. 428):—

"I confess I look upon Lumley v. Wagner rather as an anomaly to be followed in cases like it, but an anomaly which it would be very dangerous to extend. I make that observation for this reason that I think the Court, looking at the matter broadly, will generally do much more harm by attempting to decree specific performance in cases of personal service than by leaving them alone; and whether it is attempted to enforce these contracts directly by a decree for specific performance, or indirectly by an injunction, appears to me to be immaterial. It is on the ground that mischief will be done to one at all events of the parties that the Court declines in cases of this kind to grant an injunction, and leaves the aggrieved party to such remedy as he may have apart from the extraordinary remedy of an injunction."

Now in the present case before me the object of the agreement was to detach the defendant from the rival shop of Bhimji Jivan and to engage his services for the plaintiff's shop for ten years. Plaintiff asks for an injunction which will amount to this, either defendant must be idle for the remaining period of ten years, or else he must specifically perform his agreement to serve the plaintiff at a fixed salary till 1st February, 1903. I [711] think I have said enough to show that, according to the principle guiding the Courts in England, plaintiff would not be entitled to the extraordinary remedy of an injunction.

But in India we must follow the words of the Statute. No doubt under s. 56, cl. (f), of the Specific Relief Act an injunction cannot be granted to prevent the breach of a contract the performance of which would not be specifically enforced; and under s. 21 (b) and (g) a contract of personal service cannot be specifically enforced, nor can a contract the performance of which involves the performance of a continuous duty, extending over a longer period than three years from its date. But s. 57 specifically provides for this difficulty. It runs:—"Notwithstanding s. 56, cl. (f), where a contract comprises an affirmative agreement to do a certain act, coupled with a negative agreement, express or implied, not to do a certain act, the circumstance that the Court is unable to compel specific performance of the affirmative agreement shall not preclude it from granting an injunction to perform the negative agreement; provided that the applicant has not failed to perform the contract so far as it is binding on him." Here the plaintiff can say, "I was quite willing to receive the Rs. 1,950, and to reconvey to defendant the mortgaged property. I have always been willing to receive defendant into my service and give him the salary agreed upon. The circumstance that the Court is unable to directly compel specific performance of the affirmative agreement by defendant that he shall serve me as cutter for ten years from 1st February, 1893, does not preclude it from indirectly compelling specific performance of that agreement by granting an injunction to defendant to perform the implied negative agreement that he will not during that period serve any body else as cutter."

The contention seems sound. I agree with Handley, J., (Madras Railway Company v. Rust (1)) that to hold the contrary would make s. 57 of the Act a nullity. The Court, therefore, is not on account of the above considerations precluded from granting the injunction prayed for. But the question still remains whether the Court is bound to grant the injunction.

[712] Now Doherty v. Allman(2) was the case of a lessee for a long term of years who had covenanted to maintain certain store-houses. It became necessary to repair them, and he thought it would be beneficial to convert them into dwelling-houses, which would much increase their value, and was proceeding to do so, when the lessor filed a bill to restrain him alleging waste. The Vice-Chancellor of Ireland granted the perpetual injunction. This was reversed on appeal, and the House of Lords sustained the decision of reversal. Lord Cairns, after assuming in the lesssor's favour that the covenant ought to be read literally as a covenant to maintain the stores as stores, proceeded to show the distinction between the case in which there is a negative covenant and the Court has no discretion to exercise, and the case in which there is only an affirmative covenant of such a character that a Court of Equity, although it could not enforce affirmatively the performance of the covenant, may in special cases interpose to prevent that being done which would be a departure from, and violation of, the covenant. But he showed that in that case there come in considerations which do not occur in the case of a negative covenant, and there are different matters which the Court of Equity will, under these circumstances, take into its view. "It will consider, for example, whether the injury which it is asked to restrain, is an injury which if done cannot be remedied. It will consider whether, if done, it can or cannot be sufficiently atoned for by the payment of a sum of money in damages. It will ask also this question,—Suppose the act to be done, would the right to damages for it to be decided exhaustively, once and for all, by one action, or would there necessarily be a repetition of actions for the purpose of recovering damages from time to time? Those are matters which a Court of Equity would well look to, and on the other hand a Court of Equity would look to this: If we interfere and say, in aid of this affirmative covenant, that something shall not be done which would be a departure from it, no doubt we shall succour and help the plaintiff who comes for our assistance. But shall we do that? Will the effect of our doing that be to cause possible damage to the defendant very much greater than any possible advantage we can give to the plaintiff? [713] Now in a case of that kind, where there is an amount of discretion which the Court must exercise, those are all considerations which the Court will carefully entertain before it decides how it will exercise its discretion" (p. 720—1).

Of course the circumstances of the above case are not on all fours with the circumstances of the present case, but the principles laid down show how very careful the Court should be in the special case of an injunction to prevent the violation of an affirmative contract by restraining the breach of an implied negative covenant. This was brought out by Sir W. Page-Wood, V. C., in Peto v. Brighton and Uckfield, &c., Railway Company(1). He said (p. 486): "If there was a distinct negative contract in this agreement.....the Court might fasten upon that, and separating that from the rest of the agreement, might enforce specific performance of that contract; but when a plaintiff comes into this Court upon an agreement, which does not contain any such direct negative clause, and where you must infer the negative from the necessity of the case, the instances in which the Court has found it possible to act are very few and special." As was said by Wilson, J., in The Shamnugger Jute Factory Company v. Ram Narain (2) "the granting of injunctions is now regulated by ss. 54 and 55 of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877). But those sections have never been understood as inroducing new principles of law into India, but rather as an attempt to express in general terms the rules acted upon by Courts of Equity in England, and long since introduced in this country, not because they were English law, but because they were in accordance with equity and good conscience. It is necessary, therefore, to enquire on what principle the Courts have acted in England and in India.....The principle is well settled that in granting or withholding an injunction. the Courts exercise a judicial discretion, and weigh the amount of substantial mischief done or threatened to the plaintiff and compare it with that which the injunction, if granted, would inflict upon the defendant. The doctrine is very clearly explained in Doherty v. Allman (3)."

(1) 14 M. 18.

(2) 3 Ap. Ca. 709.

[714] As I have already shown, s. 57 of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877) does in some respects apparently depart from principles which guide Courts of Equity in England. But the general principle remains that in granting an injunction the Court must exercise its discretion. Section 22 of the Specific Relief Act provides that "the jurisdiction to decree specific performance is discretionary, and the Court is not bound to grant such relief merely because it is lawful to do so; but the discretion of the Court is not arbitrary, but sound and reasonable, guided by judicial principles and capable of correction by a Court of appeal." The same holds good for injunctions (s. 52); and this is particularly so in the special case where specific performance is indirectly sought by the enforcement of an implied negative covenant. Even in Lumley v. Wagner (4), where there was held to be a direct negative covenant, the plaintiff was only held to be entitled to the benefit of the principle of law, because looking at the merits and the circumstances of the case he was in the right.

Now what are the circumstances here? These have to be considered independently of the legal considerations. In Nusserwanji Merwanji Panday v. Gordon(5), Sargent, J., doubted much whether the merits of the case would not preclude the interference of the Court on behalf of the plaintiffs. "This contract" (he said) "is certainly not one which, to use the language of Lord Cairns in Eley v. Positive Government Security Life Assurance Company(6), ought to receive any special favour from the Court." In the present case the contract was an arrangement made to deprive Bhimji Jivan of defendant's services and transfer them to plaintiff for ten years at a salary of Rs. 37 a month, no provision being made for any increase of salary during all those years. It was a dodge of Callian Moti to injure a rival milliner, and to keep that rival in the dark as long as possible. The proceedings in the Police Court were not formally withdrawn when the complainant had fully determined to withdraw them. I doubt, to use the language of Lord Eldon in Smith v. Fromont(1), whether I would not be degrading the dignity of this Court by interfering in the way that plaintiff asks, and [715] by compelling defendant to leave Bhimji Jivan and sit idle or else work in plaintiff's shop. I see no reason why the plaintiff should not have had resort to the ordinary remedy of damages. The assessment thereof would not be impossible. Defendant had previously served in plaintiff's shop. Plaintiff can calculate the difference in his profits owing to defendant's absence, and there would be no difficulty with regard to the damages for future years up to 1903 (see judgment of Kay, L. J., in Ryan v. Mutual Tontine Westminster Chambers Association (2).

Again, I take it that though s. 57 includes the words "notwithstanding s. 56, cl. (f), (that is "an injunction cannot be granted to prevent the breach of a contract the performance of which would not be specifically enforced") still the disrection of the Court, which must always be exercised before granting an injunction (s. 52), must be the discretion set forth in s. 22, which recites cases in which the Court may properly exercise a discretion not to decree specific performance. It is true that s. 56, cl. (f), speaks of contracts the performance of which would not be specifically enforced, but s. 57 says that "the circumstance that the Court is unable to compel specific performance of the affirmative agreement, &c." This apparently relates to s. 21, which treats of contracts which "cannot be specifically enforced." Section 57 can hardly mean that though the Court would not in the proper exercise of its discretion (as explained in s. 22) decree specific performance of a contract, though it would be lawful to do so (as explained in s. 21), yet when indirectly decreeing specific performance by granting an injunction under s. 57, and exercising its discretion as provided by s. 52, the Court must not be guided by the rules laid down in s. 22 as to the exercise of its discretion.

Now the very first case given in s. 22 as one in which the Court may properly exercise a discretion not to decree specific performance is "where the circumstances under which the contract is made are such as to give the plaintiff an [716] unfair advantage over the defendant, though there may be no fraud or misrepresentation on the plaintiff's part." Here no doubt defendant was informed, before he signed the agreement, that the proceedings in the Police Court were to be withdrawn. But as a fact they were not withdrawn till at least fifteen days afterwards. The parties were not really on equal terms. Defendant was heavily in debt to the plaintiff and he was also on bail under a serious criminal charge. He was told that it had been determined to withdraw the criminal charge (which as a fact was kept pending for fifteen days), and that this would be no part of the consideration of the proposed agreement, which was that if he within eight days paid Rs. 1,950 for his mortgage-debt of Rs. 2,500, the mortgaged property would be reconveyed to him, and he on his part was to covenant to serve plaintiff as a cutter for ten years on a fixed salary of Rs. 37 a month. It is not asserted that defendant was provided with funds, or that there was any likelihood of his producing Rs. 1,950 within eight days. It is admitted that defendant has not paid the money, and plaintiff is thus relegated to his original remedy under the mortgage bond. Plaintiff is thus not damnified. It is not a case in which the Court, while refusing to take any action, is unable to leave the parties in their original position. I should be doing more mischief by forcing defendant to remain idle till 1st February, 1903, or to join plaintiff's shop, than by leaving the parties alone.

For these reasons, I hold that the contract is not void; and though the Court is not precluded from granting the injunction prayed for, still in the exercise of a sound discretion I should refuse to grant it; and I accordingly do so refuse, and dismiss the suit with costs.

ROULET (Plaintiff) v. FETTERLE. (Defendant)* [21st July, 1894.]

Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882), s. 491—Claim made by defendant for compensation for arrest—Claim for compensation made by defendant in a summary suit when defendant has not got leave to appear and defend—Cross claim when allowed—Set-off - Practice—Procedure—Summary suit—Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882), ss. 532, 533.

In a summary suit, if a defendant has been arrested before judgment and claim compensation for such arrest under s. 491, he is entitled on that ground to apply for leave to defend the suit, and, if a prima facie case is made out, leave to defend should be given.

Under the Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882) a cross claim made by a defendant against a plaintiff cannot, in ordinary cases, be set up as a defence, except when it arises out of the very transaction sued upon and is in the nature of a set-off, but the special cross claim provided for by s. 491 of the Code, viz., a claim for compensation for arrest on insufficient grounds, may under that section be taken into account in any suit, and the amount awarded as compensation be awarded in the decree and thus pro tanto be a defence to the plaintiff's claim in the suit.

SUMMARY suit under chap. XXXIX of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882).

The plaintiff sued the defendant to recover Rs. 5,874-5 6 due upon a promissory note passed by him on the 2nd October, 1893. The plaint was filed on the 30th May, 1894, and on the same day the plaintiff applied for arrest before judgment against the defendant. The application was granted, and the defendant was arrested on the 31st May, 1894. He remained in jail for ten days, and on the 11th June he showed cause against the arrest, and was set at liberty.

On the 13th June the summons in this suit was served upon the defendant requiring him to obtain leave to appear and defend within ten days from the summons. On the 23rd instant he applied in chambers for leave to appear and defend, but it was refused. His counsel then applied that the defendant might be allowed in the suit to claim compensation for his arrest under s. 491 of the Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882). The Judge ordered that this application should be made at the hearing.

[718] The suit came on for hearing on 25th June.

Inverarity, for the defendant, applied under s. 491 of the Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882) that the Court should award against plaintiff in its decree the sum of Rs. 1,000 as compensation to the defendant for his arrest before the decree on insufficient grounds.

Scott, for plaintiff, objected:—The defendant has no right to appear. This is a summary suit and defendant has got no leave to defend: see ss. 532 and 533 of the Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882). Section 491 does not imply that in such a case he may appear without leave. A defendant cannot appear unless he has leave to appear and defend. He cited the Annual Practice, 1890-91, p. 298; Sheppards & Co. v. Wilkinson (1); Zœdone Co. v. Barret (2); Newman v. Lever (3); Jackson v. Murphy (4); Mersey Steamship Co. v. Shuttleworth & Co. (5); Bacon v. Turner (6).

Inverarity, for the defendant:—Section 491 of the Code gives the defendant the right to apply for compensation "in any suit;" and s. 532 only prohibits the defendant from appearing for the purpose of defending the suit: see also s. 533. The application here is not an independent cross claim, but is an application for compensation for something done in the suit: so the English cases are no guide. The Code permits this application.

Scott, for the plaintiff, contra.

JUDGMENT.

21*st July*, 1894. STARLING, J.—This is a summary suit brought upon two promissory notes signed by, and one bill of exchange accepted by, the defendant. When the plaint was presented, an application was made for the arrest of defendant before judgment, on the ground that he was disposing of his property with intent to defeat and delay the execution of any decree which might be passed against him, which was granted, and the defendant was arrested and remained in jail for some days.

On the 21st June last, Mr. Inverarity, for the defendant, applied for leave to defend the suit on various grounds. Some of the [719] grounds of defence set up appeared, on inspection of the documents, not to be sustained by the documents themselves. Another ground was that the defendant wished to make a claim under s. 491 of the Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882) for compensation for arrest before judgment on insufficient grounds, which in my then opinion was not a defence within the meaning of chap. 39 of the Code, and the remaining ground was that the defendant at the time of suit brought was not a resident in Bombay. I thought there was a bare possibility of his showing that, but so slight that I did not consider the defence was a bona fide one, as he apparently had no substantial defence to the claim for the payment of the bills; consequently, I only gave him leave to defend on payment of Rs. 3,000 into Court.

The payment was not made, and on the 25th June the case came on for hearing as a summary suit. On that occasion Mr. Inverarity, for the defendant, applied to be heard to advance his claim under s. 491. I heard his argument and reserved my decision, but allowed the plaintiff in the meantime to prove his case, and passed judgment for him for the amount claimed, but directed that the decree should not be drawn up until further orders.

After reading the English cases referred to on that occasion I came to the conclusion that I ought to have some materials before me from which I could judge whether there was any prima facie case made for compensation under s. 491, and not merely decide the point whether a defendant in a summary suit who was not allowed to appear and defend was competent to make such an application. Accordingly the whole matter was so argued on the 20th July, when I reserved my judgment.

In England, cross claims advanced in summary suits on negotiable instruments and in cases of specially endorsed writs, in which a plaintiff can sign judgment as a matter of course, are treated as a defence to the action; but then it must be remembered that, under the English practice, cross demands are allowed to be set up as a defence to any suit. In this country the case is different. The Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882) does not provide in general terms for a cross demand being set up by a [720] defendant as a defence to a suit filed against him, and the only case in which a cross demand can be so relied upon by a defendant is where it arises out of the very transaction sued upon, and is in the nature of a set-off. See Kishorchand v. Madhowji (1).

In ordinary cases, therefore, cross demands would not be a defence to a summary suit; but s. 491 provides that the special cross demand set up in this case may be taken into account in any suit, and any amount awarded as compensation be provided for in the decree, and thus pro tanto be a defence to the plaintiff's claim in the suit. Consequently I think I was not right in refusing the claim of defendant to defend this summary suit on the ground of his having this cross demand to urge, but I ought to have proceeded on the 21st June, as I have eventually done, and heard the application for leave to defend on that ground on its merits.

Has, then, the defendant shown that there is a prima facie case against the plaintiff of an application for an arrest "on insufficient grounds"? This wording of s. 491 is not, to my mind, satisfactory. How can I say that the plaintiff has applied on "insufficient grounds" when a Judge of this Court on hearing the plaintiff has been satisfied that the grounds he alleged were sufficient, and has issued a warrant of arrest? The fact that the defendant was subsequently released from custody does not affect the question. What I have to look to is, whether the plaintiff, or rather his agent, had a knowledge of facts sufficient to justify him in applying to a Judge for the arrest of the defendant before judgment? I think, therefore, I must interpret the words "on insufficient grounds" as being equivalent to "without reasonable and probable cause." Has the defendant, then, made out a prima facie case that the plaintiff had no reasonable and probable cause for the defendant's arrest? [His Lordship then referred to the evidence at length and continued :—]

Taking all these facts into consideration, I find it difficult to come to the conclusion that there is a prima facie case of want of reasonable and probable cause.

SHRI DHUNDIRAJ GANESH DEV AND OTHERS (Original Plaintiffs), Appellants v. GANESH (Original Defendant), *Respondent.

[13th November, 1893.]

Compromise—Set-off—Equitable defence—Suit by trustees to eject a trespasser from trust property—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 539.

Dharnidhar was the manager of a religious endowment called the Chinchvad Sansthan. On his death in 1852, disputes arose betwen Chinto and Ganesh regarding the management of the sansthan, each claiming to be the heir and successor of Dharnidhar. After a long litigation they entered into a compromise in 1881, by which a portion of the sansthan property, consisting of certain inam villages, lands, and varshasans, were assigned to Ganesh, and Chinto was left in charge of the rest of the sansthan property, together with all the rights, privileges, and manpans enjoyed by the hereditary trustee of the endowment. In 1886 by a decree made in a suit called the "Charity suit," Chinto was removed from his office, and the plaintiffs were appointed trustees in his place. In 1889 the plaintiffs filed the present suit to set aside the compromise of 1881, and recover back the sansthan property assigned to Ganesh under that compromise. Ganesh pleaded, by way of set-off or equitable defence, that if the plaintiffs were at liberty to set aside the compromise, they were bound to restore to him in lieu of the trust property assigned to him under the compromise certain private property belonging to his adoptive father which he had given up.

Held, that Ganesh could not claim—as a set-off or as an equitable defence—to recover from the plaintiffs the private property in question, there being nothing in the compromise to show that there was any exchange of private property for trust property.

Held, also, that the suit did not fall under s. 539 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882).

[722] APPEAL from the decision of Rao Bahadur Chunilal Maneklal, First Class Subordinate Judge of Poona, in suit No. 417 of 1889.

This suit was filed by the trustees of a religious and charitable endowment, called the Chinchvad Sansthan, to recover certain property belonging to the sansthan.

The circumstances out of which it arose were as follows:—

In 1852 Shri Dharnidhar Dev, the manager of the Chinchvad Sansthan, died, leaving behind him three widows, Bayabai, Laxmibai, and Bahinabai.

On his death disputes arose regarding the management of the sansthan. There were two claimants to the management: (1) Ganesh, the defendant, who alleged himself to be the adopted son of the deceased, and (2) Bajaji Govind, who disputed the alleged adoption, and claimed to succeed as the senior male representative of the eldest branch of the deceased's family.

---

* Appeal, No. 88 of 1891.

In 1863 Bajaji filed a suit against Laxmibai, one of the widows of the deceased Shri Dharnidhar Dev, to recover possession of the sansthan property. Pending the suit Bajaji died, and the suit was continued by his son Chinto, who on July, 1874, obtained a decree in his favour. In execution of this decree Chinto took possession of nearly all the property belonging to the sansthan.

Meanwhile in 1871, and during the pendency of the litigation between Chinto and Laxmibai, Ganesh (the present defendant) filed a suit against Chinto (No. 957 of 1871) to establish his status as the adopted son of Shri Dharnidhar Dev. This suit was decided in 1874 by the First Class Subordinate Judge of Poona in favour of Ganesh. Chinto appealed against this decision, and thereupon on the 20th July, 1874, Ganesh withdrew his suit under s. 97 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act VIII of 1859).

In 1879, Ganesh filed a suit in forma pauperis against Chinto to recover possession of the sansthan property. His application for leave to sue as a pauper having been rejected by the Court of first instance, he appealed to the High Court.

In 1881, while this appeal was pending, both Ganesh and Chinto entered into a compromise under which certain sansthan [723] properties were to be made over to Ganesh, and in return Ganesh was to abandon all claim whatever in respect of the Chinchvad Sansthan. In pursuance of this compromise, Chinto assigned the specified properties to Ganesh.

In 1883 a suit was brought with the sanction of the Advocate-General, under s. 539 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), for the removal of Chinto from the management of the sansthan on account of his misconduct as a trustee. In this suit the High Court ultimately passed a decree (1) ordering his removal from the office, and appointing a receiver to take charge of the property belonging to the sansthan.

In 1889 the receiver filed the present suit against Ganesh to recover possession of certain sansthan property, particularly the property which had been assigned to him by Chinto under the compromise of 1881. This suit was continued by the trustees of the sansthan who were appointed by the Court in 1890.

The defendant Ganesh pleaded (inter alia) that he was the adopted son of Shri Dharnidhar Dev and as such had a right to manage the property in dispute in accordance with the past practice of the sansthan. He further pleaded, by way of set-off or equitable defence, that the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover the trust property unless and until they restored to him the private property which had belonged to his deceased adoptive father.

The First Class Subordinate Judge held that the defendant was entitled to the set-off claimed. He was of opinion that the plaintiffs had improperly disputed the defendant's adoption and his right to the private property of Dharnidhar Dev. He ordered that the plaintiffs should recover from the defendant certain specified properties on condition that they relinquished certain other property to him.

The decree was as follows:—

"I, therefore, award the plaintiffs' claim for Khar Narangi and Chinchavli, the fad at Narangi and the Alibag treasury allowance and a portion of Charholi, on condition that they (plaintiffs) do relinquish the sansthan's claim to Rs. 582-12-0 out of Banere and 2 chahurs and 9 bighas of land as described in the second farkhat, and to one-half of the self-acquisitions of Dharnidhar Dev, which consist of the villages [724] of Tandli, Gozegaon, Dewas, Baroda allowance, Chandrapur, Dasak, and the Nizam's grant, and on the further condition that they do deliver possession of so much of the said properties as might be in their hands or might hereafter fall into their hands. . . . . The plaintiffs have wrongly disputed the defendant's adoption and his right to the private property of Dharnidhar Dev. The defendant in his turn has wrongly contended that the sansthan is not a public charitable institution. I, therefore, order that parties do bear their own costs."

From this decision the plaintiffs preferred an appeal to the High Court.

Ganpat Sadashiv Rao, for appellants (plaintiffs).—The lower Court was wrong in passing a conditional decree. The defendant is not entitled to claim in this suit the private property belonging to his alleged adoptive father. His cross claim is in the nature of a set-off. The Court had no jurisdiction to entertain it. Under s. 111 of the Code of Civil Procedure (XIV of 1882) a set-off is allowed in those cases only in which there are cross claims for money. This is not a case of that kind. If it does not fall under s. 111 there is no other provision in the Code allowing a set-off of the kind claimed by the defendant.

[FULTON, J.—What is the effect of s. 216 of the Code of Civil Procedure? Its provisions apply whether a set-off is admissible under s. 111 or otherwise.]

I admit that s. 111 is not exhaustive. It does not take away any right of set-off, whether legal or equitable, which parties would have independently of its provisions. But even then, in the case of a set-off not falling within s. 111 of the Code, the cross claims must both be for money. Section 216 is clear on the point. It shows that where a set-off is allowed, the decree shall state what amount is due to the plaintiff and what amount is due to the defendant, and shall be for the recovery of any sum that may appear to be due to either party. It is, therefore, perfectly clear that a set-off is admissible only when both the original claim and the counter-claim are for money and for money only. Here the claim is not for money. It may be urged that the defendant has what may be called an equitable right of set-off. But before an equitable set-off can be allowed, it must be shown that the claim of the plaintiff as well as that of the defendant arises out of one and the same transaction [725] or are so connected together as to make it inequitable that one party should succeed and the other be driven to a separate suit. This is the principle laid down by a series of decisions of all the Courts in India—Kishorchand v. Madhowji (1); Bhagbat v. Bamdeb (2); G. Chisholm v. Gopal Chunder (3); Pragji Lal v. Maxwell (4); Niaz Gul Khan v. Durga Prasad (5); Brojendra Nath Das v. The Budge-Budge Jute Mill Company (6); Stephen Clark v. Ruthnavaloo (7). Here there is no connection whatever between the plaintiffs' claim to the trust property in dispute and the defendant's claim to his private property. The defendant's counter claim is, therefore, unsustainable in the present suit. He should be referred to a separate suit. The conditional decree passed by the lower Court is, therefore, bad.

Macpherson (with him Mahadev Bhaskar Choubal), for the respondent (defendant).—Our claim is not in the nature of a set-off. It is a claim to an equitable restitution of property. We say, he who seeks equity must do equity. If the present trustees of the sansthan are at liberty to repudiate the compromise between Chinto and Ganesh, and treat it as a nullity, the parties must be restored to the status quo ante. The trustees cannot recover the trust property without restoring to the defendant his private property and all the rights that he gave up at the time of the compromise. Under s. 64 of the Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872) a party to a voidable contract may rescind it; but he is bound to restore any benefit that he may have received thereunder to the person from whom it was received. So, too, under the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) a transferor under a voidable contract of sale is bound to restore the purchase-money on the rescision of the contract. See also Story's Equity Jurisprudence, s. 709. The defendant gave up considerable private property at the compromise; he is, in equity, entitled to get it back if the compromise is set aside. The compromise was in the nature of a family arrangement between two rival claimants to the management of the Chinchvad [726] sansthan. Both were engaged in litigation for a long series of years. That litigation was ultimately brought to an end by this compromise. It was, therefore, valid and binding on both. The compromise of a doubtful claim, if made bona fide, will be upheld even though the claim may not be well founded—Trigge v. Lavallee (1); Miles v. New Zealand Alford Estate Co. (2) Chinto could not have repudiated this compromise without restoring all the benefits he received under it. His successors in the trust have no better right than he had. We say, therefore, that the condition attached to the award of the plaintiffs' claim is perfectly just and equitable. We say further that the plaintiffs cannot sue to recover the trust property without the sanction of the Advocate-General, as provided under s. 539 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The suit should, therefore, be dismissed.

Ganpat Sadashiv Rao in reply.—The compromise between Chinto and Ganesh does not show that there was an exchange of sansthan property for private property belonging to Ganesh's family. The compromise relates solely and entirely to sansthan property. It purports to divide the sansthan property between the two claimants. But it makes no mention whatever of any private property belonging to Ganesh. What he gave up was his righs to the bulk of the sansthan property, and to all the rights and manpans of the chief ministrant at the shrine of Shri Mangal Murti. There was no dispute, at the time of the compromise, about the private property of Ganesh. That being so, there can be no restitution of private property. If Ganesh has any claim to it, he must be referred to a separate suit. But he cannot claim it in this suit by way of set-off. Then, as to the applicability of s. 539 of the Code of Civil Procedure, I submit that this case does not fall within its provisions. This is not a suit to remove a defaulting trustee from the management of a public charity. It is a suit brought by the trustees of a charity to recover trust property from the possession of a trespasser. In such a case the consent of the Advocate-General is not necessary—Vishvanath Govind v. Rambhat (3).

APPELLATE CIVIL.

JUDGMENT.

[727] CANDY, J.—This suit was commenced in December, 1889, by the manager and receiver of the Chinchvad Devasthan appointed under the decree of the District Judge, Poona, in suit No. 2 of 1883 (known commonly as the Charity suit), and was continued by the trustees of the said devasthan appointed under the scheme drawn up by the High Court on 19th February, 1890, in appeal from and confirming the said decision of the District Judge (I. L. R., 15 Bom., 612). By cls. 18 and 19 of the said scheme the trustees are to institute suits and other proceedings and to continue and carry on such as have already been initiated by the present receiver on behalf of the devasthan for the purpose of recovering possession of the properties belonging to the devasthan, which have improperly gone into the possession and enjoyment of strangers, and the revenues of which are not applied for the purposes of the devasthan.

The circumstances under which the present suit was commenced are as follows:—Chinto Bajaji was the manager of the devasthan, and had succeeded in obtaining possession of nearly all the property appertaining thereto. One Genesh or Ganpat was a rival claimant to the gadi. He asserted that he had been adopted by a late manager, Dharnidhar, on his death-bed. This alleged adoption was, however, disputed. Suit No. 957 of 1871 had been filed by Ganesh against Chinto (and Venubai, widow of a son of Dharnidhar who had predeceased his father) for a declaration of his title as adopted son of Dharnidhar. On 3rd January, 1874, the Subordinate Judge decreed in his favour; but on Chinto appealing to the District Court, Ganesh on 20th July, 1874, withdrew his suit under s. 97 of Act VIII of 1859 without obtaining leave to bring a fresh suit. On 6th November, 1874, Ganesh applied to the District Court for permission to withdraw his previous withdrawal; but this was refused (28th November, 1874); and the High Court on 7th December, 1874, refused to interfere with this order.

In the meanwhile, Ganesh had brought a suit (No. 16 of 1873) in the Court of the Agent for Sardars against Laxmibai, widow of his alleged adoptive father, and on 10th January, 1874, he obtained a consent decree awarding him possession of the devasthan [728] property. On 31st July, 1874, Chinto also obtained a decree in the Court of the Agent for Sardars (No. 12 of 1873) against Laxmibai, awarding him possession of the devasthan property, and Chinto at once in August, 1874, executed that decree. So when Ganesh attemped execution of his decree, No. 16 of 1873, he was obstructed by Chinto. In June, 1878, Ganesh applied to the District Court for permission to bring a suit, in forma pauperis, against Chinto, on the ground that Chinto obstructed him in executing his decree, No. 16 of 1873. But he withdrew that application on Government reversing the decree of the Agent of Sardars (No. 12 of 1873). Subsequently, on Government restoring the decree of the Agent, Ganesh renewed his application (May, 1879), which was rejected by the District Court on 13th February, 1880.

Ganesh then appealed to the High Court, but subsequently withdrew his appeal, Chinto and he having made an amicable settlement dated 23rd July, 1881. This document No. 157 (73 in the Charity suit), after reciting the disputes between the parties, goes on to state that the following property "belonging to the sansthan" should be given to Ganesh:—

1. The whole of the village of Khar Naranji and half the village of Chinchavli. 2. The wada at Khar Narangi. 3. The nawa wada at Chinchvad. 4. In order to pay off a mortgage on Khar Narangi and Chinchavli, Chinto was to pay Rs. 16,000 to Ganesh, and for that purpose was to pay him Rs. 500 annually, with interest, from the revenues of the village of Charholi. 5. Ganesh was to perform the worship of the deity of the temple of Moroya at Chinchvad; but all other rights of worship and manpan at Chinchvad, Moreshvar and Theur were to belong to Chinto. 6. Ganesh was within three months to give up peaceable possession to Chinto of the five shares in Tulapur belonging to the sansthan, which Ganesh had got entered in his name, and till this was done Ganesh was to pay Rs. 160 annually to Chinto, the same being deducted from the payments out of the revenues of Charholi above mentioned. 7. The dasak allowance, Rs. 20, received annually from the Haveli kacheri, was to be entered in Chinto's name, and received by him. 8. Ganesh on recovering [729] the village of Tandli, for which he had filed a suit, was to give the same into the possession of Chinto.

Except as regards the properties above mentioned, Ganesh was to abandon all claim whatever in respect of the Chinchvad sansthan.

Chinto thus remained manager unmolested; but in 1883 the "Charity suit" was commenced under s. 539 of the Civil Procedure Code, and Chinto was eventually removed from his office.

The receiver of the sansthan then brought the present suit against Ganesh to recover the following properties as belonging to the sansthan, and, therefore, wrongfully in possession of any one other than the manager, viz.:—

1. The villages of Khar Narangi, and, 2, Chinchavli; 3, the wada at Khar Narangi; 4, an allowance paid from the Alibag treasury; 5, the portion of the revenues of Charholi, as shown in the settlement above noted; 6, the new wada at Chinchvad; 7, the five shares of Tulapur; 8, the wadi (garden or irrigated land) at Naigaum.

The Subordinate Judge awarded the claims numbered 1 to 5, and as defendant made no appeal and paid no stamps on cross-objections, it was impossible for us to hear any arguments of counsel against the award of item No. 5. He did not dispute the award of items Nos. 1 to 4.

It remains then to consider the items 6, 7 and 8 which the Subordinate Judge did not award to plaintiffs, and against the rejection of which items plaintiffs have filed this appeal, No. 88 of 1891. During the course of the argument, Mr. Rav for plaintiffs abandoned the claim as regards the item No. 8. Therefore the only items remaining for consideration are Nos. 6 and 7. The Subordinate Judge would have awarded these to the plaintiffs, had he considered them to be sansthan property; but he held that they were the private property of the late manager, Dharnidhar, and, therefore, the trustees could not claim to recover possession of the same. No doubt, if they are not sansthan property, the trustees have no concern with them: [730] but we think that it is clear that one at least of these items has for many years been treated as sansthan property.

[The Court then examined the evidence and found that property No. 6 above mentioned was not private property, but belonged to the devasthan, and that the plaintiffs (trustees) should recover it. As to No. 7, the Court found that it was private property and that the plaintiffs were not entitled to it. The Court then continued:—]

So far we have treated of the items disallowed by the Subordinate Judge. Leaving aside for the present the question of mesne profits, which the plaintiffs also claimed, but which the Subordinate Judge disallowed, and against the rejection of which plaintiffs have appealed, we come now to the condition attached by the Subordinate Judge to his award of the various items of devasthan property to the plaintiffs. That condition is that the plaintiffs do relinquish the sansthan's claim to the private property of Dharnidhar II, viz:—(a) Half share of the village of Banere ; (b) two chahurs, nine bighas of land as described in Ex. 288 [it was admitted in argument that this should be half a chahur nine bighas] ; (c) half the self-acquisitions of Dharnidhar II, viz. :—(1) The village of Tandli ; (2) the Gozegaon allowance ; (3) the Dewas allowance ; (4) the Baroda allowance ; (5) the Chandrapur allowance ; (6) the Dassak allowance; (7) the Nizam's grant.

[The Court then stated the evidence and held as to items (c), (1) to (7) inclusive that they belonged to the devasthan. As to items (a) and (b), there was a difficulty arising from the fact that the manager of the devasthan had never made any distinction between the portion which he enjoyed as private property and those managed by him for the devasthan. The Court then continued :—

But it is unnecessary to consider this difficulty further. For, we are of opinion that plaintiffs have rightly appealed against the condition attached by the Subordinate Judge to his award. It is not such an equitable defence as can be raised by the defendant in the present suit. This is apparent when we consider the position of the parties. Chinto was the manager of the [731] sansthan ; he had succeeded in obtaining recognition from Government and possession of all or nearly all the sansthan property. Ganesh was a rival claimant, who had indeed obtained a decree against Chinto establishing his position as adopted son of Dharnidhar, but who on appeal made by Chinto was persuaded to entirely withdraw his claim. Under the compromise or settlement of July, 1881, Ganesh relinquished all claim to be manager of the sansthan in favour of Chinto, and was content to take in satisfaction of all claims certain items of "sansthan property." For the sake of argument it may be assumed that Chinto, were he still the manager of the sansthan, would be unable to repudiate the compromise, and would be bound to act up to its terms. Possibly the compromise would raise an equity between Chinto and Ganesh. But here the plaintiffs are the trustees appointed by the Court after ordering the removal of Chinto, the defaulting trustee. Chinto must be regarded as dead. His successors in the trust claim to recover part of the trust property. Chinto's act in buying of a rival claimant cannot be regarded as a proper and reasonable exercise of his office as trustee. His proceeding was not for the benefit of the trust. On the contrary, if Ganesh was really Dharnidhar's adopted son, Chinto had no authority to act ; and if Ganesh was not Dharnidhar's adopted son, then Chinto had no right to alienate trust property to him. We adopt with full concurrence the language of the late Mr. Justice Telang, who, when referring to this compromise wrote (I. L. R., 15 Bom., 637) :— "When Chintaman Bajaji parted with these two villages (Khar Narangi and Chinchavli) in favour of Ganesh Dharnidhar Dev, he was apparently acting as full owner of the villages, and not as trustee of them on behalf of the Chinchvad sansthan. He was certainly not professing to act as trustee, and at least impliedly he was repudiating the trust. Any estoppel, then, binding upon him in consequence of that act, would be binding, not on the succeeding trustee, who says Chintaman Bajaji was not full owner, but on Chintaman Bajaji's legal representatives in his personal capacity." Accordingly the High Court upheld the objections of the trustee-respondents in that case, and refused to consider the settlement of 1881 as binding upon Chinto's successors in office. How, then, [732] can Ganesh in a suit for ejectment from trust properties plead that the trustees must relinquish all claim of the sansthan to the half share of Banere and the ½ chahur 9 bighas, and deliver the same into his (Ganesh's) possession ?

It was contended by the learned counsel for Ganesh that this was not a counter-claim or set-off, but an equitable defence ; and this apparently was the view taken by the Subordinate Judge, who seems to have regarded the settlement of 1881 as an exchange of properties, Ganesh giving up the private property of Dharnidhar, to which he was entitled as Dharnidhar's adopted son, and in exchange receiving part of the sansthan property. But we are of opinion that this view is directly contradicted by the language of the compromise, in which, the adoption not being admitted, there is not a word about the private estate of the late Dharnidhar, or about any exchange being effected. If Ganesh is really the legally adopted son of the late Dharnidhar, and if it is open to him now to establish that status, he must do so in a separate suit against the trustees. But he cannot raise this plea as an equitable defence in this suit, in which the trustees seek to eject him from the properties of which he obtained possession under the compromise with the late manager, the very basis of that compromise being that he abandoned his claim to be manager on the strength of his alleged adoption by Dharnidhar, Chinto's action was ultra vires in putting Ganesh in possession of sansthan property. Chinto's successors are bound to contest that action, and to recover for the benefit of the sansthan property belonging to the trust. If plaintiffs are entitled to eject defendant from sansthan property, then it is difficult to understand how defendant can claim, as a set-off or as an equitable defence, to recover possession from the plaintiffs of those portions of property which the plaintiffs hold as sansthan property, but which defendant says are Dharnidhar's private property, and to which defendant says he is entitled as Dharnidhar's son. For, as shown above, the trustees are not Chinto's representatives, but hold by an entirely independent title, Chinto having been removed from his office. For these reasons we are of opinion that the conditions attached by the Subordinate Judge to his award of the properties to the plaintiffs must be set aside.

[733] As to the further arguments urged by the learned counsel for defendant-respondent, that the devasthan properties are private and not public devasthan, and that the present suit should have been brought under s. 539, Civil Procedure Code, we are of opinion that the arguments are invalid. It is idle now, in the face of the decisions of this Court reported at I.L.R., 15 Bom., 612 and 625, to contend that the Chinchvad sansthan is not a public devasthan. It is true that Ganesh is not in one sense a "stranger," as he is apart from his alleged adoption a member of the Dev family, and by the compromise with Chinto he was permitted to perform the worship at Moroya's temple at Chinchvad ; but as a person who is not manager, he is a stranger and trespasser in possession of sansthan properties. The trustees, therefore, are clearly entitled to eject him.

It only remains to consider the question of mesne profits. Though, as just remarked, defendant must be regarded as a trespasser, due regard must be paid to the fact that the compromise by which defendant obtained possession of the sansthan properties was sanctioned, if not brought about, by Mr. Kanitkar and Mr. Gadgil, the former being one of the present trustees, the latter being the gentleman who was subsequently the manager and receiver appointed by the District Court. There can be no doubt that at the time the arrangement was thought to be the best for all concerned. Under these circumstances we do not think it would be right to interfere with the Subordinate Judge's decision refusing to award mesne profits.

We amend the decree of the Subordinate Judge by awarding to the plaintiffs the new wada at Chinchvad, and by striking out the conditions attached by the Subordinate Judge to his award of the properties, possession of which he gave to plaintiffs.

Under the circumstances under which this litigation was commenced, we think that the most equitable order will be to let the plaintiffs recover their costs from the estate, and direct that defendant bear his own costs throughout.

[734] APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Sir Charles Sargent, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Bayley.

NAVALCHAND NEMCHAND (Original Plaintiff), Applicant v. AMICHAND TALAKCHAND AND ANOTHER (Original Defendants), *Opponents. [14th November, 1893.]

Mamlatdar—Jurisdiction—Decree in possessory suit in Mamlatdar's Court—Execution of decree stayed by proceedings in Subordinate Judge's Court—Suit in Subordinate Judge's Court ultimately dismissed—Subsequent application to Mamlatdar for execution of decree in possessory suit—Jurisdiction of Mamlatdar to grant order for execution—Limitation—Deduction of time spent on proceedings in second suit—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), s. 14.

A Mamlatdar having in a possessory suit passed a decree awarding possession of certain land to the applicant, the opponents instituted a suit in the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge for a declaration that the land in question was their property, and for an injunction to restrain the applicant from obstructing them in the enjoyment of their rights. Owing to this suit, the Subordinate Judge stayed execution of the Mamlatdar's decree. The opponents' suit was subsequently dismissed by the Subordinate Judge, whose decree was ultimately confirmed by the High Court in second appeal. The applicant then applied to the Mamlatdar for the execution of his decree in the possessory suit. The Mamlatdar rejected the application, on the ground that the decree of the High Court in the civil suit prevented him from executing his decree.

Held, that the applicant was entitled to obtain from the Mamlatdar an order for the execution of his decree unless it was barred by limitation. It was not barred, inasmuch as in computing the period of limitation allowance was to be made for the time during which the decree remained in abeyance by reason of the proceedings in the other suit. Section 14 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) applies to proceedings in execution (Hira Lall v. Budri Dass) (1).

APPLICATION made under the extraordinary jurisdiction of the High Court (s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code, XIV of 1882) to set aside the order of the Mamlatdar of Chorasi in possessory suit No. 57 of 1884 dated 17th December, 1892.

* Application No. 57 of 1893 under extraordinary jurisdiction.

(1) 7 I.A. 167.

In possessary suit No. 57 of 1884 in the Court of the Mamlatdar of Chorasi the applicant obtained a decree for possession of the land in dispute against the defendants.

The opponents then sued him in the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge at Suart to obtain a declaration that [735] the land was theirs, and an injunction restraining him from obstructing him in the enjoyment of their rights, and on the 17th January, 1885, the First Class Subordinate Judge, on their application, stayed the execution of the decree obtained by the applicant in the Mamlatdar's Court.

On 26th January, 1886, the opponents' said suit was dismissed by the Subordinate Judge, but in appeal the District Judge on 22nd December, 1887, partially awarded their claim, Against this decree the applicant (i.e. the defendants in that case) appealed to the High Court, which remanded the case to the District Judge. The District Judge, however, adhered to his previous decision, and on 23rd December, 1889, passed a decree similar to that which he had passed on the 22nd December, 1887. The applicant again appealed to the High Court, which on the 22nd April, 1891, reversed the decree of the District Judge and restored the decree of the Subordinate Judge dismissing the suit.

The applicant then on the 15th March, 1892, applied to the Mamlatdar for execution of the decree passed in his favour in possessory suit No. 57 of 1884, but the Mamlatdar on 17th December, 1892, made the following order :—

"You are informed that the decree of the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge having been confirmed by the Honourable the High Court, the said decree cannot be (ordered to be) executed by this Court. If you like, you may take steps for the same in the Civil Court."

The applicant thereupon applied to the High Court under its extraordinary jurisdiction, and obtained a rule nisi calling upon the opponents to show cause why the order of the Mamlatdar should not be set aside on the ground that he had illegally refused to exercise jurisdiction vested in him by law.

Manekshah J. Taleyarkhan appeared for the applicant in support of the rule.—The Mamlatdar was wrong in rejecting our application for execution. In the suit before the Mamlatdar we claimed possession, and by his decree possession was awarded to us. In the civil suit the opponents had merely claimed a declaration of their right, and their suit was dismissed. The [736] civil suit, therefore, did not affect the previous decree in the possessory suit. That decree remained to be executed, and the Mamlatdar had full jurisdiction to execute it—Shankar v. Martandrav (1) Baji Dev v. Sadashiv (2). The time spent in the proceedings in the civil suit should be deducted in computing the period of limitation for the present application—Article 14 of the Limitation Act ; Hira Lall v. Budri Dass (3).

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C, J.—The Mamlatdar was wrong in holding that the decree of the High Court confirming that of the Subordinate Judge prevented his executing the order passed by him in the possessory suit on the 17th December, 1884. That decree had the effect of dismissing the opponents' suit, by which they asked for a declaration that the land in question was their property, and for an injunction to restrain the present applicant from obstructing them, and left matters altogether as they were under the Mamlatdar's order. That order, therefore, remains to be executed, unless barred by art. 179 of the Limitation Act. If the periods during which the interlocutory judgment of the Subordinate Judge passed on 17th January, 1885, and the decree of the District Court on 22nd December, 1887, were in force be omitted, the order would have been in force for less than three years when the application to the Mamlatdar to enforce his order for possession was actually made. See s. 14 of the Statute of Limitation and Hira Lall v. Budri Dass (1) which makes it applicable to proceedings in execution.

We must, therefore, in the exercise of our extraordinary jurisdiction, discharge the order of the Mamlatdar and direct him to execute his order of 17th December, 1884, by putting the applicant in possession.

Order discharged.

APPLICATION under the extraordinary jurisdiction of the High Court (s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code, Act XIV of 1882) against the decision of J. L. Johnston, District Judge of Dharwar, Suit for damages for breach of contract.

The plaintiff alleged that under a written contract he lent Rs. 350 to the defendant, and the latter in return agreed to supply him with wheat, at eighteen seers per rupee. The defendant failed to supply the wheat, and the plaintiff brought this suit.

At the hearing the contract was put in evidence. It bore a one-anna stamp and was attested by witnesses.

The Subordinate Judge found the execution of the contract proved, and ordered the defendants to give to the plaintiff 4,200 seers of wheat, or Rs. 350 with costs.

In appeal by defendant No. 2 the Judge held that the contract was inadmissible in evidence, on the ground that it was insufficiently stamped (s. 4, cl. (c) of the Stamp Act I of 1879), and as the plaintiff declined to pay the stamp penalty, he reversed the decree and dismissed the suit.

The suit being of a small cause nature, in which no second appeal is allowed, the plaintiff applied to the High Court under its extraordinary [738] Shivram V. Bhandarkar appeared for the applicant in support of the rule :—The point as to the sufficiency of the stamp was not in any way raised in the first Court. The document was there admitted in evidence, and the Judge allowed the claim based upon it. Nor in appeal was the point taken by the defendant. Nevertheless the Judge refused to go into the merits of the case on the ground that the document was inadmissible not being properly stamped. It has been held that when a document is once admitted in evidence without any objection as to the stamp in the first Court, the appellate Court cannot exclude it—Devachand v. Hirachand (1); Gurpadapa v. Naro (2); Bhaskar v. Prabhakar (3), and The Secretary of State for India in Council v. Byramji (4).

Vishnu K. Bhatavdekar, for the opponents (defendants), showed cause :—On the merits the Judge has expressed an opinion adverse to the plaintiff. He framed two issues, viz. (1) whether the contract was made by defendants Nos. 1 and 2, and (2) what amount should be awarded to the plaintiff, and from which of the defendants ? On both these issues the Judge found in the negative. The finding of the Judge that the document sued upon was not proved, is a finding on the merits. The Full Bench ruling in Devachand v. Hirachand (1) is not applicable.

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—The District Judge, in holding that he could refuse to admit the document sued on in evidence as being improperly stamped, has omitted to notice cl. 3 of s. 34 of the Stamp Act and the decisions in Devachand v. Hirachand (1), Gurpadapa v. Naro (2), also Bhaskar v. Prabhakar (3) and The Secretary of State for India in Council v. Byramji (4) to the effect that the Subordinate Judge having admitted the document in evidence, the Court of appeal cannot question its admissibility.

We must, therefore, reverse the decree and send back the case for decision on the merits, as we cannot accept the mere opinion expressed by the District Judge on the first issue as a valid finding. Costs to abide the result.

Decree reversed and case sent back.

[739] APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Sir Charles Sargent, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Bayley.

MAHALAVU (Original Plaintiff), Appellant v. KUSAJI (Original Defendant), *Respondent. [21st November, 1893.]

Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879), s. 225—Amending Act (XXII of 1882), s. 9—Mortgage by agriculturist—Subsequent money decree against mortgagor—Sale of his equity of redemption in execution—Such sale invalid—Equity of redemption is immoveable property—Suit for redemption.

Raghoji, an agriculturist, mortgaged the land in dispute to the defendant in 1872. In 1875 one Dagdu obtained a decree against Raghoji (the mortgagor), who was then represented by his widow, the plaintiff. In execution of this decree Raghoji's equity of redemption was sold on the 10th February, 1883, and was bought by the son of the defendant (the mortgagee). On the 12th April, 1883, the sale was confirmed, and on the 10th November, 1883, the purchaser took formal possession of the land. In 1891 the plaintiff (widow and heir of the mortgagor Raghoji) brought this suit to redeem the mortgage and to recover possession of the land, contending that under s. 22 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879) the sale of the equity of redemption was a nullity. The lower Court dismissed the suit, holding that although the sale might be illegal, so long as the certificate of sale remained in force it was a bar to the plaintiff's right to redeem.

Held, that the plaintiff, being found to be an agriculturist, the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Acts (XVII of 1879 and XXII of 1882) applied. The provisions of that Act applied, although the decree and order for sale under which the sale took place [740] were made before the Act was passed. The Act expressly forbids the immoveable property of an agriculturist to be sold in execution, and an equity of redemption is immoveable property within the contemplation of the Act. The sale, therefore, on the 10th February, 1883, of the equity of redemption in the mortgaged lands was illegal and a nullity, and was no defence to the plaintiff's suit to redeem the mortgage.

THIS was a second appeal from the decision of A. D. Pollen, District Judge of Poona.

Suit for redemption.

On the 28th June, 1872, one Raghoji mortgaged the lands in question to the defendant Kusaji for Rs. 400 with possession.

In 1875 one Dagdu obtained a decree against the mortgagor Raghoji, who was then dead, but was represented by his widow the plaintiff

* Second Appeal No. 343 of 1892.

† Section 22 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act as amended by s. 9 of the Amending Act of 1882:—

2. No agriculturist's immoveable property shall be attached or sold in execution of any decree or order passed whether before or after this Act comes into force unless it has been specifically mortgaged for the repayment of the debt to which such decree or order relates, and the security still subsists.

But the Court, on application or of its own motion, may, when passing a decree against an agriculturist or in the course of any proceedings under a decree against an agriculturist passed whether before or after this Act comes into force, direct the Collector to take possession, for any period not exceeding seven years, of any such property of the judgment-debtor to the possession of which he is entitled, and which, in the opinion of the Collector, is not required for his support and the support of the members of his family dependent on him, and the Collector shall thereupon take possession of such property and deal with the same for the benefit of the decree-holder in manner provided by section twenty-nine.

The provisions of section thirty-one shall, mutatis mutandis, apply to any property so dealt with.

Mahalavu. In execution of this decree the lands were sold on the 10th February, 1883, and were purchased by the defendant's son. On the 12th April, 1883, the sale was confirmed, and on the 10th November, 1883, the auction-purchaser took formal possession.

In 1891 the plaintiff (widow of the mortgagor Raghoji) filed the present suit claiming to redeem the mortgage and recover possession of the land.

She alleged that she and her husband (the mortgagor) were agriculturists, and that the auction sale was void, inasmuch as the equity of redemption was immoveable property, and could not be legally sold under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879), and, further, that the sale was fraudulent. She prayed that an account might be taken, and the balance of the debt, if any, should be made payable by annual instalments of Rs. 50 each.

The defendant denied that the plaintiff or her husband was an agriculturist, and contended that the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act did not apply; and that the suit not being one to set aside the sale could not be maintained.

The Subordinate Judge found (1) that the plaintiff was an agriculturist, and (2) that the plaintiff was not entitled to question the validity of the sale. He, therefore, dismissed the suit.

On appeal by the plaintiff the Judge confirmed the decree, holding that, as long as the certificate of sale remained in force, [741] it was necessarily a bar to the plaintiff's suit for redemption, and the sale could not be regarded as a nullity, and that in a suit to set it aside, the former decree-holder and the auction-purchaser were necessary parties.

The plaintiff preferred a second appeal.

Mahadeo Chimnaji Apte for the appellant (plaintiff) :—The sale of the land was a nullity, and the plaintiff is entitled to redeem the mortgage and to recover possession. The point involved is whether the equity of redemption held by an agriculturist can be sold. Under s. 22 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879) no immoveable property of an agriculturist is liable to sale. The equity of redemption of an agriculturist is immoveable property, and it, therefore, cannot be sold. Immoveable property of an agriculturist is not even liable to attachment—Chatur Khushalchand v. Mahadu (1); Shivram Udaram v. Kondiba Muktaji (2). The sale is a nullity. Further, the proviso to s. 22 added by the Amending Act (Act XXII of 1882) lays down that the immoveable property of an agriculturist shall not be sold even under decrees passed before the Amending Act came into force on the 1st February, 1883. The decree under which the property was sold, was passed before the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act came into force; still the order under which the property was sold was passed after that Act came into operation, and that being so, the sale is governed by the original Act and the Amending Act which is part and parcel of the original Act.

Ganesh Krishna Deshmukh for the defendant (respondent) :—We object to the finding that the appellant is an agriculturist. Her husband may have been an agriculturist at the time of the mortgage in 1872, but it is not shown that the appellant was an agriculturist in the year 1891 when she filed this suit. That fact should be shown in order that the plaintiff may get the benefit of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act—Tulsidas v. Virbussapa (1).

[742] Next, we contend that the auction sale was not void. If the order for sale and the proceedings under which the sale was ordered took place before the Amending Act (XXII of 1882, s. 9) came into force, then the sale would not be void. There is nothing in the case to indicate the time when the attachment was levied; but it is probable that the attachment was made before, and the sale and confirmation of sale after, the coming into operation of the Amending Act, which was on the 1st February 1883, and the sale took place on the 10th February of the same year.

The language of s. 312 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) shows that if objections contemplated by s. 311 be not raised, then the Court is bound to confirm the sale. The objections under s. 311 relate only to the publishing and conducting the sale. The confirmation of sale is a necessary step which the Court must take in the absence of objections under s. 311. The proceedings with respect to the confirmation follow as a natural consequence of the proceedings of sale. The plaintiff does not allege that the sale is invalid on the grounds mentioned in s. 311; and the Court cannot set aside the sale on any other ground; and that being so, the suit must fail.

The plaintiff was a party to the former suit and, therefore, she could have made an application to set aside the sale. She did not do so, and she cannot now contend that the sale is a nullity under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act.

Immoveable property contemplated by s. 22 of the Act means tangible property. An equity of redemption is not of that class. No doubt the Registration Act (III of 1877) lays down that an equity of redemption is immoveable property. But as that Act deals with interests in immoveable property, it includes the equity of redemption in that kind of property. Further, the definition given in the Registration Act cannot be accepted for the purposes of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, because under the former Act a standing crop is moveable property, while under the latter it is immoveable property.

[743] We urge that it was necessary for appellant to join the decree-holder and auction-purchaser as parties to the suit. The Judge was right in holding that the suit was not properly framed.

Further, the decree in execution of which the property was sold, was satisfied by the purchaser's son. Therefore, if the sale be set aside, the amount which was paid in satisfaction of the decree should be refunded to us in justice and equity.

Mahadeo Chimnaji Apte, in reply:—According to s. 2 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, it is not necessary for a party to be an agriculturist at the time of the suit. It is sufficient if he is an agriculturist at the time of the accrual of the liability. Therefore, the question to be considered is whether the mortgagor was an agriculturist at the time of the mortgage, and the Subordinate Judge found, on the evidence, that he was. The finding of the lower Court is, therefore, correct—Banu v. Krishnambhat (2). The provisions of the Civil Procedure Code do not apply in their entirety to proceedings in execution of a decree under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act. The amending Act clearly lays down that the immoveable property of an agriculturist cannot be attached or sold.

(1) 4 B. 624.

(2) P.J. (1886), 159.

Though the property was purchased by the mortgagee's son, he had purchased it out of the family funds. Therefore, the purchase was for the mortgagee himself. The mortgagee is now dead, and, therefore, the question of his being a necessary party cannot arise.

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—This is a suit by the appellant, who was found by the Subordinate Judge to be an agriculturist, to redeem certain land mortgaged by her late husband to the defendant.

It appears that subsequently to the mortgage the equity of redemption was on the 10th February, 1883, sold in execution of a money decree obtained by a third party against plaintiff's husband (represented in the suit by the plaintiff). The defendant's son became the purchaser, and the sale was confirmed on 12th April, 1883.

The plaintiff contends that the sale of the equity of redemption in execution of the above decree was void under s. 22 [744] of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act of 1879. The lower appeal Court dismissed the suit on the ground that, whatever invalidity there might be in the sale, as long as the certificate of sale remained in force, it was necessariiy a bar to plaintiff's right to redeem, and that it could not be set aside without making the decree-holder and auction-purchaser parties.

A preliminary objection was taken for the respondent (defendant) that the Subordinate Judge's finding that plaintiff was an agriculturist was contrary to law. But this objection is not, in our opinion, well founded. The Court properly made use of the fact that plaintiff's husband and son were agriculturists as showing that she gained her livelihood wholly or mainly by agriculture, which was the test when the suit was brought—Banu v. Krishnambhat(1).

The appellant's contention is that in virtue of s. 22 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act she is entitled to treat the sale of the equity of redemption as a nullity although uncancelled. In Tuffazal Hossein Khan v. Raghunath Prasad(2), their Lordships of the Privy Council had to consider the effect of the attachment and sale of a particular description of property with reference to s. 205 of Act VIII of 1859, and speaking of the sale of such property (which they ultimately held not to fall within the several descriptions of property mentioned in the above section) they say: "The real objection, however, to this sale, if sustainable in law, is not one of irregularity; it is one which, from its nature, as founded on a want of power in the Court, affects equally, if it be valid in law, the title of a purchaser under a strictly regular sale.

"Assuming the decision under appeal to be correct, the sale would be simply inoperative, though uncancelled."

If, then, this sale was invalid under s. 22 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879), it was simply inoperative, and the defendant cannot set it up in this suit as a defence to the right of the plaintiff (who is the original mortgagor's heir) to redeem the mortgage.

[745] We proceed, therefore, to consider whether the sale in question falls under that section. We cannot doubt that an equity of redemption being an estate in the land, as it has always been considered in England and in this country, is immoveable property within the contemplation of that section. The decree, in execution of which the equity of redemption was sold, was passed prior to the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act of 1879; but the Amending Act, XXII of 1882, came into force on 1st February, 1883, before the sale took place on 10th February, 1883, by s. 9 of which the words "passed whether before or after this Act comes into force" were introduced into s. 22 of the Act of 1879 after the words "decree or order." It was suggested that the order of sale was made before the Amending Act came into force. Whether this was so or not, does not appear on the evidence in the case. But it is, in our opinion, immaterial, as s. 9 of the Amending Act of 1882 expressly provides for the case of a sale in execution of an "order" made prior to that Act.

We must, therefore, reverse the decree of the Court below and send back the case for a decree on the merits. The plaintiff to have his costs of this appeal and in both the Courts below.

GURUNATH SHRINIVAS DESAI (Original Defendant), Applicant v. CHENBASAPPA (Original Plaintiff), *Opponent. [21st November, 1893.]

Registration—Evidence—Lease—Agreement to indemnify contained in lease—Suit for indemnity.

A lease of land for nine years contained a clause by which the lessor agreed to indemnify the lessee in case he should incur any loss in consequence of disputes which might arise as to the land between the lessor and his kinsmen. The lease was not registered. After the lessee had held the land under the lease for two years, a suit for possession was brought against him, and the lessor and he were dispossessed and obliged to pay mesne profits. He then brought this suit against the lessor under the above clause in the lease.

[746] Held, that the lease being unregistered was not admissible in evidence and could not be looked at. The clause on which the plaintiff sued could not be separated from the lease itself, and the plaintiff's claim must, therefore, be rejected.

THIS was an application under the extraordinary jurisdiction of the High Court (s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code, Act XIV of 1882) against the decision of J. L. Johnston, District Judge of Dharwar.

In December, 1881, the applicant Gurunath (the defendant) granted a lease of certain land for nine years to the opponent Chenbasappa (the plaintiff) which contained a clause by which Gurunath agreed to indemnify Chenbasappa for any loss which the latter might incur by reason of any dispute which might arise between Gurunath and his kinsmen with reference to the land. The lease was not registered.

Chenbasappa held the land under the lease for about two years, but in 1883 one Venkaji Krishnaji sued both him and Gurunath for possession and obtained a decree and dispossessed Chenbasappa. The decree also awarded Venkaji mesne profits which Chenbasappa had to pay and which he did pay in November, 1888.

In February, 1891, Chenbasappa brought this suit against Gurunath to recover Rs. 360 under the above stipulation in his lease.

Gurunath admitted the lease, but contended that the suit was barred by limitation.

The Subordinate Judge held that the lease was not admissible in evidence being unregistered, and accordingly dismissed the suit.

In appeal the Judge held that the lease was admissible in evidence to prove the agreement to indemnify the plaintiff. He further held that the suit was not time-barred, being brought within three years from the date of the above-mentioned payment by plaintiff to Venkaji. He, therefore, reversed the decree and allowed the claim with interest at 9 per cent. per annum on Rs. 288, the amount of mesne profits paid to Venkaji from the date of the institution of the suit till payment.

The defendant applied to the High Court under its extraordinary jurisdiction, and obtained a rule nisi calling upon the plaintiff [747] to show cause why the decree should not be set aside on the ground (inter alia) that the Judge was wrong in holding that the lease was admissible in evidence though unregistered.

Shivram V. Bhandarkar appeared for the applicant (defendant) in support of the rule.—The lease being unregistered could not be looked at even for the purpose of determining whether the plaintiff was entitled to recover damages. The clause of indemnity being incorporated in the lease cannot be separated from it—Raju Balu v. Krishnarav (1); Venkatrayudu v. Papi Reddi (2); Martin v. Sheo Ram Lal (3). The Judge has exercised his jurisdiction illegally, and we are entitled to apply to this Court under its extraordinary jurisdiction—Chenbasapa v. Lakshman (4); Shri Vishvambhar Pandit v. Shri Vasudev Pandit (5).

Narayan Ganesh Chandavarkar appeared for the opponent (plaintiff) to show cause:—Even if the Judge's decision be wrong in law, it cannot be disturbed under the extraordinary jurisdiction—Amritrav v. Balakrishna (6); Sakharam v. Parvati (7).

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—The District Judge was wrong in holding that the term in the lease on which the plaintiff sued could be looked at although the lease itself required registration. That term cannot be separated from the lease itself, as the lease must necessarily be looked at to determine whether the defendant had incurred liability under it. See Raju v. Krishnarav(1) and Martin v. Sheo Ram Lal(3).

The District Court has, therefore, exercised its jurisdiction illegally, as was held in Chenbasapa v. Lakshman (4), and we must, therefore, make the rule absolute and reverse the decree and reject the plaintiff's claim, with costs on plaintiff throughout.

Rule made absolute. Decree reversed.

[21st November, 1893.]

Appeal—Reg. VIII of 1827*—Order refusing certificate of heirship appealable—Succession Certificate Act* (VII of 1889), s. 28*—Practice.*

An appeal lies from the order of a District Judge refusing to grant a certificate of heirship under Reg. VIII of 1827 by virtue of the provisions of s. 28 of the Succession Certificate Act (VII of 1889).

[F., 19 B. 399 (400).]

APPEAL from the decision of W. H. Crowe, District Judge of Poona, in Miscellaneous Application No. 132 of 1892.

The appellant Javermal Bahiravdas applied under Reg. VIII of 1827 for a certificate of heirship to one Hakamchand Parashram, deceased, alleging that he was the sole heir and legal representative of the deceased.

This application was opposed by Dhondai, who contended that the applicant was not the heir of the deceased.

The District Judge refused the application and passed the following order :—

"Read proceedings in Miscellaneous Application No. 269 of 1869. The certificate prayed for is refused."

Against this order the applicant appealed to the High Court.

Mahadeo Chimnaji Apte, for the respondent:—There is a preliminary objection to the hearing of the appeal. The lower Court's order refusing to grant a certificate of heirship is not appealable under Reg. VIII of 1827.

Daji Abaji Khare (with him B. N. Bhajekar), for the appellant:—Under s. 19 of the Act VII of 1889, an appeal lies from an order of the District Judge refusing a certificate under the Act. The provisions of s. 19 of the Act are expressly made applicable by s. 28 to applications for certificates under Reg. VIII of 1827. An appeal, therefore, lies from the lower Court's order in the present case. The lower Court has not given any reasons for refusing the certificate applied for. Its judgment is not, therefore, according to law. Moreover, the [749] evidence recorded in a different proceeding, to which the lower Court refers, is inadmissible in the present case.

JUDGMENT.

PARSONS, J.—We think that an appeal lies from the order of the District Court refusing to grant a certificate of heirship under Reg. VIII of 1827 by virtue of the provisions of s. 28 of the Succession Certificate Act, 1889—Pitamber v. Ishvar (1).

We are unable to accept the decision of the District Judge, as he has given no reason whatever for his refusal to grant the certificate applied for.

He records that he has read the proceedings in Miscellaneous Application No. 269 of 1869. These proceedings were not sent up with the record to this Court, but we have been supplied by the pleaders with certified copies of them, and with reference thereto we think it right to remark that the evidence there recorded cannot properly be used as evidence in this case.

APPEAL from the order of G. McCorkell, Esquire, District Judge of Ahmedabad, in Miscellaneous Case No. 18 of 1893.

One Bai Amba, widow of Barot Bhagwan Jetha, made a will, disposing of all the property, moveable as well as immoveable, which she had inherited from her deceased husband.

[750] On Bai Amba's death, the appellants, who were appointed executors under her will, applied for probate under Act V of 1881.

This application was opposed by the respondent, a sister of the deceased's husband, on the ground (1) that the will was a forgery; (2) that it was invalid, as the deceased was not competent to dispose by will of property inherited by her from her husband.

The District Judge on the authority of Gadadhar Bhat v. Chandrabhagabai (1) held that the will was invalid. He, therefore, rejected the application, and refused probate.

Against this order the present appeal was preferred to the High Court.

Goverdhanram M. Tripathi, for appellant.—The District Judge was wrong in refusing to grant probate. The bequests in the will may be invalid, but that is not a reason why the will should not be admitted to probate—Hormusji v. Bai Dhanbaiji (1).

THIS was an application under s. 435 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882) under the revisional jurisdiction of the High Court.

The accused Dansang Dada and six others were convicted by the First Class Magistrate of Dhandhuka of the offence of voluntarily causing hurt under s. 323 of the Indian Penal Code (XLV of 1860). They were sentenced each to pay a fine of Rs. 51, or in default to suffer rigorous imprisonment for one month and fifteen days. They were also ordered to execute a bond for Rs. 100 for keeping the peace for a period of two years under s. 106 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882).

On appeal the Sessions Judge upheld the convictions, but with respect to the sentences he passed the following order :—

"The offence is not one which, in my opinion, can be properly punished by a pecuniary fine. I, therefore, alter the sentence in each case from a fine of Rs. 51 to rigorous imprisonment for one month, leaving the order as to surety bonds unaltered."

Against this order the accused made the present application under the revisional jurisdiction of the High Court, contending that the Sessions Judge's order for alteration of the sentence in appeal was illegal, as it amounted to an enhancement of the sentence.

Watandar and deputy—Agreement for payment by deputy to the watandar out of the cash allowance for procuring the deputy's nomination—Watandar's Act (Bombay Act III of 1874), ss. 7† and 23‡.

An agreement between the watandar and a deputy nominated by him for the payment by the latter to the former, in consideration of procuring such nomination, of a sum of money out of the cash allowance received by the deputy as remuneration assigned to his office is not legal, being contrary to the spirit of s. 7 read with s. 23 of the Watandars' Act (Bombay Act III of 1874).

REFERENCE from Rav Saheb Bhau Yeshwant Gupte, Subordinate Judge of Kada, under s. 617 of the Code of Civil Procedure (XIV of 1882).

The Subordinate Judge referred the following question for the decision of the High Court :—

Whether an agreement between a watandar and the deputy nominated by him for the payment by the latter to the former of a sum of money out of the cash allowance, received by the deputy as remuneration assigned under s. 23 of the Bombay Watandars' Act (III of 1874), as consideration for procuring such nomination, is opposed to law?

With respect to the question referred, the Subordinate Judge made the following remarks :—

[753] "The language of s. 7 of Bombay Act III of 1874, which forbids alienation or assignment of the watan property assigned under s. 23 of the Act as remuneration to an officiator, is also sufficiently wide to include every species of alienation or assignment within the prohibition, and, unless there is any reason to place a restricted construction on these

† Section 7 of the Watandars' Act (Bombay Act III of 1874) :—7. Watan property assigned under s. 23 of this Act as remuneration of an officiator, and the profits of watan-property so assigned, shall not be alienated or assigned to any person whatever without the sanction of Government.

‡ 23. Subject to the provisions of this Act and of any other law for the time being in force regarding service-inams, cash allowances and pensions, it shall be the duty of the Collector to fix the annual emoluments of officiators, appointed under the provisions of this Act, and to direct the payment thereof to the officiators for the time being.

It shall be lawful for the Collector for this purpose to assign the watan property, or the profits thereof, towards the emoluments of officiators. The existing assignments shall, until altered by competent authority, be taken to have been made under this section. With the sanction of Government the Collector may, as occasion arises, alter the assignment and may increase or diminish it in value, such increase or diminution being made rateably among the holders in proportion to the profits derived by such holders respectively from the watan.

words, an agreement of the nature under notice must also be admitted to be opposed to the spirit of that section.

"However, the evident object which the Legislature must have had immediately in view in enacting the last mentioned section was probably this, viz., that the allowance in the hands of Government should not be liable to be attached by a Civil Court or claimed by a stranger, and this view derives confirmation when we find that the Legislature have advisedly legalized the appointment of deputies by watandars under certain restrictions. All that is wanted in the case of a deputy appointed by a watandar is that the man proposed to be appointed should not be of known bad character, that he should be a fit and proper person capable of discharging the duties of the office to which it is proposed to appoint him, and that he should also be a watandar himself; and, if a candidate fulfils all these conditions, there does not seem to be any special reason why a watandar who has to nominate a deputy should not be at perfect liberty to engage the services of that deputy on the best terms on which he can manage to secure them. It is inconceivable why a watandar should be given the empty honour of nominating a deputy and invited to exercise that right if he is not allowed to secure any gain for himself. The possibility of the watandar and his deputy making some such arrangement for securing some advantage or fee to the principal must of course have been foreseen, and the absence, therefore, of any express provision in the Watan Act forbidding all such arrangements leads me to doubt if it was intended to make them altogether unlawful. If an agreement on the part of a deputy to pay a sum of money to his principal as consideration for his nomination to the deputyship would not be invalid, it is a question whether the mere addition of the words 'out of the amount of the cash allowance received by the deputy' ought to invalidate such an agreement when it is obvious that the parties could not have [754] intended that the sum agreed to be paid should come out of the identical money drawn from the treasury. Such an agreement is, when fairly analysed, nothing more than an agreement to pay a certain sum of money, and it is immaterial, as far as the legality of that agreement is concerned, to see if the promisor has pointed out the source from which he expects to procure the needful funds to discharge his obligation. But the prohibition is enacted in very general terms both in the Transfer of Property Act and also in s. 7 of the Watandars' Act, and I, therefore, doubt if it can be ignored when the terms of an agreement expressly contravene it.

"The case of Naro v. Mahadav reported at I.L.R., 12 Bom., 614, may be distinguished on the ground that the agreement set aside in that case was open to the objection that it did not leave the watandars free agents in their selection of a deputy, but the case is nevertheless important as showing that a previous concert among watandars for the appointment of a particular member of their own body to an office is not allowed by law."

The opinion of the subordinate Judge on the point was in the affirmative.

Vishnu K. Bhatavdekar (amicus curiæ), appeared for the plaintiff. This was a suit brought by the watandar against his deputy to recover a certain sum which was due to the watandar under an oral agreement which was to the effect that if the watandar plaintiff appointed the defendant as his deputy, the defendant would pay to the plaintiff half the money out of the cash allowance which the deputy would recover from the Government treasury. We submit that such an agreement would not be against public policy—Sitaram Vinayak v. Ramchandra Babaji (1).

Mahadev B. Chaubal (amicus curiæ), for the defendant was not called upon.

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—We think that the agreement must be held to be contrary to the spirit of s. 7 read with s. 23 of Bombay Act III of 1874 and to be, therefore, not legal.

SUNDAR MALHAR PATEL (Original Defendant), Appellant v. BAPUJI SHRIDHAR AND ANOTHER (Original Plaintiffs), *Respondents.

[4th December, 1893.]

Mortgage—Redemption—Right to redeem made conditional on payment by mortgagor of another debt as well as mortgage debt—Effect of that other debt becoming barred by limitation—Right to redeem mortgage still subject to condition.

A mortgage bond contained a clause stipulating that the mortgagors were not to redeem the mortgaged property without paying not merely the amount of the mortgage debt and interest, but also the amount due on a certain bond executed at the same time as the mortgage in respect of money due under a decree, and that "unless the whole was paid off, neither the mortgagor nor any one else should have a claim."

The mortgagee subsequently obtained a decree on the instalment bond and made several attempts to execute it, but failed, his darkhast being eventually rejected as time-barred.

Held that the right of redemption was made conditional on the payment of what was due on the instalment bond—a condition which was unsatisfied as long as such sum remained unpaid, although in contemplation of law there might be no longer a bond debt still in existence owing to a decree having been passed on the bond, and that decree having become barred by limitation.

THIS was a second appeal from the decision of S. Tagore, District Judge of Sholapur-Bijapur.

In January, 1868, the defendant was the holder of a decree against the plaintiff for Rs. 566. The plaintiff being desirous of buying certain land from the defendant, and being unable to pay the purchase-money, the defendant agreed to sell him the land in the following terms:—1st, that the plaintiff should execute to the defendant a mortgage of the land for the 700; 2nd, that the plaintiff should execute to the defendant an instalment bond for Rs. 500 in respect of the amount due under the decree. These terms were accepted by the plaintiff, who on 11th January, 1868, executed both documents, viz., the mortgage-deed and the instalment bond. The mortgage-deed contained a stipulation to the effect that the mortgagor should not redeem the property without also paying the amount of the instalment bond, and that unless the whole amount of Rs. 1,200 was paid, neither mortgagor nor any [756] one should have a claim. The mortgage bond was engrossed upon a paper the stamp of which would have been sufficient to cover the amount of Rs. 1,200.

In 1873 the defendant sued the plaintiffs on the instalment bond and obtained a decree which he made several attempts to execute, but failed, his last application being dismissed as barred by limitation.

In the year 1888, plaintiffs brought the present suit to redeem the mortgage of the 11th January, 1868, and to recover possession of the lands, alleging that the mortgage-debt had been liquidated from the profits of the land, and praying that an account of the profits should be taken, and if any surplus be found to be due to the defendants, the same might be made payable by instalments of Rs. 50 a year, as the plaintiffs were agriculturists.

The defendant contended that as there was a stipulation in the mortgage bond that the property should not be redeemed without paying the amount of the instalment bond, the plaintiff could not redeem on payment only of the mortgage-debt. He claimed Rs. 2,924-14-0 as due to him on the whole transaction.

The Subordinate Judge disallowed the defendant's contention with respect to the payment of the instalment bond, and held that Rs. 1,424-8-2 (Rs. 700 principal, Rs. 700 interest, and Rs. 24-8-2 on account of the local found cess paid by the defendant) were due by the plaintiffs to the defendant. He made the amount payable by annual instalments of Rs. 200, and directed that on failure of the plaintiffs to pay any of the instalments at the stipulated time, defendant should realize the whole amount due by the sale of the mortgaged property.

Both parties appealed, and the Judge amended the decree by reducing the amount of each instalment to Rs. 150.

The defendant preferred a second appeal.

Ghanasham N. Nadkarni, for the appellant (defendant).

There was no appearance for respondents (plaintiffs).

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—The question in this case is as to the right of the defendant to insist on the payment of an instalment bond as [757] well as the mortgage-debt as a condition of the plaintiffs' redeeming the lands mortgaged by Ex. 11.

The mortgage bond commences by reciting that "it was given for the reason as follows":—That Rs. 1,200 were due to the defendant by the mortgagors, for part of which a bond for Rs. 500 had been given; that for the Rs. 700, the balance of the Rs. 1,200, the mortgagors say they will pay interest at 1¼ Re. per cent. per month. "As security for this, they say they have mortgaged the land, and direct the mortgagees to give credit for the annual produce in the interest account on the Rs. 700." In the proviso for redemption the principal Rs. 700 is spoken of as being the consideration of the mortgage-bond; but it also provides that the plaintiffs are not to take back the land until the Rs. 700 and interest and the amount of the instalment-bond for Rs. 500 are paid, and that "unless the whole is paid off, neither the mortgagor nor any one else should have a claim." It is further to be remarked that the mortgage bears the stamp required by a mortgage-debt of Rs. 1,200.

It was contended by Mr. Ghanasham for the defendant that upon the proper construction of this instrument it must be taken that it was the intention of the parties to make the amount due upon the instalment bond a charge on the lands mortgaged. We do not think it necessary to express a decided opinion on this contention of the defendant, as we think that in any case the right of redemption was made conditional on whatever was due at the time on this instalment bond being paid—a condition which remained none the less unsatisfied, as long as such sum remained "unpaid"—although there might be no longer a bond debt in contemplation of law still in existence owing to a decree having been passed on the bond and although that decree had become barred.

We must, therefore, reverse the decree and send back the case for a fresh decision having regard to the above remarks.

Defendant's costs here and in the Courts below to be paid by plaintiffs.

Decree reversed and case sent back.

[758] APPELLATE CRIMINAL.

Before Mr. Justice Jardine and Mr. Justice Ranade.

QUEEN-EMPRESS v. KAHANJI.* [11th December, 1893.]

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 153, 117—Wantonly giving provocation with intent to cause riot—Abetment of riot by the public—Construction.

In August, 1893, a riot took place in Bombay between Hindus and Mussalmans. The excitement caused by the riot had not entirely subsided, when the accused composed and published a poem, giving an account of the outbreak, and incidentally extolling certain classes of the Hindu community, namely the Ghatis and Kamatis, for the brave resistance which they had offered to the Mahomedan rioters. The poem extolled the Ghatis and Kamatis and then followed these lines:—

"May God give glory to you, confer joy on you night and day,
Fight again for your country's good.
Brave, brave are the Kamatis.
Why fear for dying, brother, why fear for dying?
Sooner or later, but only once, a man has to die."

The poem was written in Gujarati, a language not ordinarily spoken by the Ghatis and Kamatis or even by the Mahomedans. It did not appear that any copies of the work were distributed among the people who had taken part in the riot. Nor did any fresh riot take place subsequently to the publication of the work.

The accused were prosecuted and convicted under ss. 117 and 153 of the Indian Penal Code (XLV of 1860) on the ground that the lines quoted above, especially the words "Fight again," were a direct instigation to the Ghatis and Kamatis to renew the disturbances.

Held, that the meaning of the passages complained of was to be gathered from the whole poem. The general spirit of the poem was clearly in favour of peace and reconciliation. It consisted from beginning to end of a lamentation over the riots, and the destruction and death they had caused, and of repeated counsel to peace and harmony between Hindus and Mahomedans. And there was nothing to indicate that the author's intention was to instigate the Hindus or provoke the Mahomedans to renew the disturbances. The words "Fight again" were, no doubt, objectionable, but it would not be a proper construction of the words to allow them to override the whole context of the work.

[R., 26 M. 554 (568) (F.B.) = 1 Weir 270.]

APPEAL from the judgment of C P. Cooper, Chief Presidency Magistrate, in the case of Queen-Empress v. Kahanji Dharamsingh and others.

[759] The material facts of this case were as follow :—

On the 11th August, 1893, a riot took place in Bombay between Hindus and Mussalmans. Within a fortnight after the suppression of the riot, but before the excitement caused by the outbreak had subsided, the accused wrote and published a poem, in Gujarati, entitled " The Bombay Dreadful Riot," containing a narrative of the causes and progress of the riot. In the course of this narrative the author incidentally extolled certain classes of the Hindu community, namely the Ghatis and the Kamatis, for the brave resistance which they had offered to the Mahomedan marauders. After much praise of the courage of the Ghatis and Kamatis the poem continued :—

" You are not women, but men. Brave, brave are the Kamatis.
May God give glory to you, confer joy on you day and night.
Fight again for country's good ; brave, brave are the Kamati people."

(8th stanza)

" Why fear for dying, brother, why fear for dying ?
Sooner or later, but only once, the man has to die ;
Either by disease, by destiny, or in the field of battle, there is no living, no,—
To be subject to ignominy, to be counted coward, to take steps backwards,
Than such living death is better, or going to heaven.
To the valiant warrior there is always victory,
Before courage the enemies fly, by suffering salvation is achieved.
By hiding to be counted panic stricken, and to make the hostile army the bolder."

It did not appear that copies of this poem were distributed among the Ghatis and Kamatis, or that they read the work or heard it read. Nor did any fresh riot occur subsequently to the publication of this pamphlet.

On the 17th September, 1893 a complaint was filed against the accused in the Court of the Chief Presidency Magistrate charging them with offences under ss. 153 and 117 of the Indian Penal Code.

The information filed by the Inspector of Police complained that portions of the paragraph were a direct instigation to the Kamatis and Ghatis to riot. The following paragraphs are material :—

" 4. I am informed that over hundred copies of the pamphlet were printed, when the words " Fight again, " which appear on the last line of the translation [760] from pp. 8 and 9, were altered to the words " Don't be daunted," and several thousand copies of the work were printed as so altered.

" 5. I am informed that the work was published on or about the 24th August last when the excitement caused by the riots at Bombay still existed, and large numbers of the work were published, sold, or distributed, and caused, I am informed, considerable irritation amongst Mahomedans."

The Magistrate convicted the accused under ss. 153 and 117 of the Indian Penal Code, and sentenced accused No. 1 to three months' simple imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 201, and accused Nos. 2 and 3 each to pay a fine of Rs. 201.

The Magistrate gave the following reasons for the conviction:—

"The three accused stand charged, firstly, under s. 117 of the Indian Penal Code with abetting the commission of the offence of rioting by more than 10 persons; secondly, under s. 153 of the same Code with wantonly giving provocation, knowing it to be likely that such provocation would cause the offence of rioting to be committed. They all pleaded they had a defence to make. They declined to make any explanation, and left their defences in the hands of their advocates. Those advocates contended that all that the accused had done had been done openly. Their names appeared upon the pamphlet, and the pamphlet contained an account of the riots, with many precepts advocating the restoration of amity and good feeling amongst the two communities; that as to the two stanzas of the poem complained of, they were written at a time of poetic excitement in praise of the Ghatis, and Kamatis, who had shown a bold front at a critical time, but that there was no intention to incite those communities to riot.

"The first stanza exhibits certain acts of the Ghatis and Kamatis during the riots, and states that they overcame or got the better of their enemies, &c. These enemies must, I think, allude to the Mahomedans.

"The second stanza is in praise of a disregard to death: 'To the valiant warrior there is always victory. Before courage the enemies fly. By concealing themselves the enemy grows bolder, &c.' At the time when the pamphlets containing these stanzas were publicly being sold in this city, the excitement caused by the riots had not subsided, and there were still strong feelings existing between the two communities of Hindus and Mahomedans. At such a time to have publicly extolled the acts of either of those communities in respect to the part they had taken in these disturbances and riots would most probably have been likely to incite the one community to fresh acts of disturbance or riot, or to provoke the other community to similar acts. It is the duty of every loyal citizen at such a time to be most careful as to what he writes and distributes or causes to be distributed amongst the public or these communities. In this case the accused have gone further than circulating pamphlets containing writings that merely extol the acts of one of these communities taking part in these disturbances, but they have in the last line of the first stanza circulated the line 'Fight again for your country's good, bravo, bravo, oh Kamatis,' and after that line there is the second [761] stanza written in disregard to death,' that the enemies fly before brave warriors, and concealment encourages the enemy to be bold.'

"I think, looking at these lines, that they do call upon the Kamatis and Ghatis to renew the disturbances or riots.

"The accused must be assumed to have known that the probable result of such publication at such a time would be to incite or instigate the one community to renew the riots or provoke the other community to do so. Coming to that conclusion I must convict all three accused of the offences under both charges. I consider the first accused to be the principal offender. Considering the facts proved in this case I may consider, in inflicting punishment that is provided for the second offence, I am inclined to think the lines were written wantonly. I have also to consider that though no riot or disturbance did take place, still it was a serious offence at the time."

The accused appealed to the High Court.

Jardine, for the accused.—The pamphlet, which is the subject-matter of the present prosecution, is a history, in verse, of the recent riots in Bombay between Hindus and Mahomedans. Exception is taken to only two lines in the whole poem It is alleged that the words "Fight again for your country's good; brave, brave, are the Kamatis" are a direct instigation to the Kamatis to commit a fresh riot. The meaning of this passage is to be gathered from the context. The whole poem must be read, and not merely isolated passages. One would not read from the Bible the expression "There is no God" and construe it by itself. You ought to read it in connection with the context; otherwise you would put a most absurd and unnatural construction upon it. In the present case the general spirit of the poem is distinctly in favour of peace and harmony between Hindus and Mussalmans. It condemns the riots from beginning to end. It speaks of the riots as "unprecedented and lamentable." The praise of the Ghatis and Kamatis for withstanding the rioters cannot be construed as an instigation to them to renew the disturbances. It would be far-fetched to suppose that by praising the Kamatis, the Mahomedans were provoked to commit acts of violence. The poem praises everybody. It praises the Police, the Military, the Magistracy, the Government,—in short, all who had exerted themselves in putting down the riots. The poem is indeed a panegyric on peace. It is a fair and impartial narrative of the outbreak. It is written in a language not commonly understood by the Ghatis or Kamatis. There is no evidence that [762] any Ghati or Kamati read this book or heard it read. Nor is it alleged that any fresh disturbances took place in consequence of the publication of this poem. The case, therefore, does not fall within s. 153 of the Indian Penal Code.

Lang (Advocate-General), for the Crown :—The contents of the pamphlet, as well as the time and circumstances under which it was published, justify the conviction. The work was published about a fortnight after the riots had occurred. The excitement caused by the riots had not then subsided. Public tranquillity had not been fully restored. The two factions still regarded each other with feelings of distrust and suspicion. It was, therefore, highly dangerous to publish a pamphlet like this at such a time. It was calculated to excite the Mahomedans against the Hindus and the Hindus against the Mahomedans. The greater part of the poem is, no doubt, harmless, but there are certain passages which cannot be excused, particularly the lines beginning with "Fight again for your country's good." These words are clearly intended to incite the Kamatis to a fresh riot. They are addressed to the Ghatis and Kamatis; and the way in which they are extolled is calculated to provoke the Mahomedans. The evidence shows that some Mahomedans did get angry on hearing the contents of this pamphlet. The trying Magistrate is, therefore, right in convicting the accused under s. 153 of the Indian Penal Code.

JUDGMENT.

JARDINE, J.—The illegal act with which the prisoner was charged is the instigation of Hindus to attack or fight Mahomedans found in the Gujarati poem, the subject-matter of this case. The defence is that Kahanji had no intention to instigate rioting, and that the words, read with the context, ought not to be construed as instigation, and that, although they may excite Mussalmans to anger, they contain no illegal matter and thus do not bring the case within the words or the mischief of s. 153 of the Penal Code, which section only punishes when the provocation, maliguantly or wantonly caused, arises out of doing something which is illegal. The Chief Magistrate convicted Kahanji on both heads of charge, holding that the last line of the 7th song, which line begins "Fight again," and the 8th [763] song, which immediately follows, and exhorts men to dare to die, "do call upon the Kamatis and Ghatis to renew the disturbances or riots." The Magistrate was also inclined to think that the lines were written wantonly. He found that at the time of publication of the poem there were still strong feelings existing between the Hindus and Mussalmans, and that no riot and disturbance did take place in consequence of the poem. The accused does not dispute that he is the author of the poem, nor that he published it by letting the publishers and printers have his manuscript. The Crown takes no objection to any parts of the poem except the songs numbered 7 and 8, which Mr. Balaji Pandurang translates as follows :—

(7TH SONG)—BANJARA.

"The Banjara leaves me behind and goes away."
(To be sung in this manner.)

Brave, brave (are) the Kamati people,
Praiseworthy truly are the Ghatis—(To be repeated.)
They bathed (their) valiant bodies with blood, never did (they) turn back to see,
(They) broke the riotous tata (i.e., wall).
Brave, brave (are) the Kamati people.
Valiants, you were not afraid, you foiled ths enemies.

(Original page 9.)

Forthwith you obtained glory ; brave, brave (are) the Kamati people.
Strong (are) you, very brave in firmness not deficient.
(You) have buried the enemies ; brave, brave (are) the Kamati people.
(You) besmeared yourselves with saffron, with manly zeal ;
Forthwith the rioter's spirit was broken ; brave, brave (are) the Kamati people.
(You) have blood in you of the Peshwa's times, good descendants of Shri Shivaji.
You are not women, but men ; brave, brave (are) the Kamati people.
May God give glory to you, confer joy (on you) night and day.
Don't be afraid for country's good ; brave, brave (are) the Kamati people.

(8TH SONG)—PAD.

"When will (you) remember Ram, now."
(This is the mode of singing.)

Why fear for dying, brother, why fear for dying ?—(To be repeated.)
Sooner (or) later, but only once, the man has to die ;
(Either) by disease, by destiny (or) in the field of battle, there is no living, no.—Brother, &c.

To be subject to ignominy, to be counted coward, to take steps backwards,
Than such living death is better, or going to heaven.—Brother, &c.
[764] To the valiant warrior there is always, victory, such everlasting position (renown) be taken up ;

Before courage the enemies fly, by suffering salvation is achieved.—Brother, &c.
By hiding to be counted panic-stricken, and to make the enemies' army the bolder. It being so, as to the body and mind, Kan (the author) says the same are to be sacrificed for others.—Brother, &c.

The Police Court translator gives a few variations from the above, mostly of no importance. He admitted at the trial that his rendering of the third line of song 7 as "Ye broke through files of rifles" was incorrect. As this translation would seem to imply that the Kamatis and Ghatis came into conflict with the troops who during the riots aided the civil authorities in preserving the public order, it is important to notice that the translation now admitted to be correct makes no allusion to rifle-men, and asserts only that the Kamatis and Ghatis broke through the wall, i.e., I suppose, the serried ranks of the rioters. A police witness examined to show the seditious nature of the poems charged, says the words mean, "You have broken through the row of people who were going to create a disturbance. So the line cannot be treated now as a praise of men audacious enough to attack the Queen's military forces engaged in the support of the Magistracy and Peace Officers.

The only question on which we have to decide is, whether the language used in the passages on which the Magistrate bases the conviction, does in the sense which fairly belongs to it—the sense that is most natural and obvious—bear the meaning put on it by the Magistrate. We have to look at the circumstances of the case and the occasion and the time. We have to consider the whole poem, giving its proper weight to every part—Dean of St. Asaph's case (1) and the Trial of Mr. Moxon for blasphemy in publishing Shelley's Works, 2, Townsend's Modern State Trials, at p. 388. Some evidence of police officers has been given about the passages complained of by the Crown to bring the case within the ruling of the Rex. v. Harvey (2), by showing that the lines were calculated to stir up the Kamatis and Ghatis to open violence against the Mussalmans in this city. These witnesses admit, as also does the Advocate-General, that much of [765] the poem is unexceptionable. No literary witness, accustomed to deal with poetical productions, has been called; although in such matters poets have no privilege, it is obvious that the construing of a long poem presents greater necessity for care than an ordinary prose publication. Even prose works often present difficulty in ascertaining the real meaning of the writer, as is shown in some of the cases about doctrine in the Church of England decided by the Privy Council (e.g., Heath v. Burder (3)). A literary work is seen in different lights by different minds, even minds of culture, as we know by conspicuous instances. See how Erskine (arguendo) gives an entirely innocent meaning to the Dialogue between the Gentleman and the Farmer written by Sir William Jones, afterwards the distinguished Orientalist and Judge of the Supreme Court in Bengal—I mean to the suggestions that voters should get arms and learn drill, so as to be able to stand up for law and liberty—suggestions which the Government treated as seditious and prosecuted the Dean of St. Asaph for publishing. Take, again, another matter of public notoriety nearer home: the letter which a former Government of Bombay sent to the learned regents of the University of Bombay, taking exception to Bishop Butler's Analogy of Religion as in some way dangerous to native students. Take likewise Lord Chancellor Eldon's remarks on Lawrence's Lectures on Physiology at the College of Surgeons—Lawrence v. Smith (4). These are all prose compositions, and I suppose prose is more readily understood than poetry. No decided cases have been cited; and when we grope through the old reports, we fail to find any which show the process of literary criticism whereby the Judge (it was Lord Eldon) reached the conclusion that a certain poem, such as Southey's Wat Tyler, or Byron's Don Juan and Cain—Southey v. Sherwood(5), Murray v. Benbow(6)—was so immoral, seditious or blasphemous, that the Court had to refuse to protect the copyright. We, too, might imitate those Judges and simply state our own conclusions; but we have had to examine the drift of the whole of the poem, the subject of the present State trial; and as our estimate is different [766] to that of the Court below, we determine to express in detail the view we take of the work. The whole poem has been read and commented upon by the learned counsel for the appellant, and it becomes our duty to consider its words and spirit with careful judgment in order to see what the exhortation is and whether it is baneful, and if the other parts of the poem constitute an antidote. For this purpose we have read through the pamphlet, which is in the Gujarati language and is entitled "The Terrible Riot which took place at Bombay." (This poem begins with a statement of the horrors of the riots' dreadful deeds done in spite of the presence of police and troops. This part does not say which community is to blame. Then in the first song, to the tune of 'Lord, now you released the elephant from jeopardy,)' the poet takes refuge, as many a psalmist had done, in the mercy of God, and prays for peace, and that the two communities may be reconciled. In the second song the disturbances of the 11th August last are related with spirit and power. The poet tells how from the Jumma Masjid—

"Striking the bell issued forth the rioters uttering by mouth 'Din, Din.'
They gave beatings with clubs, saying many low words.
The Police became utterly unable, they also received beating; from the Fort the great Magistrate camp up; there came many officers."

The singer then tells how in spite of the presence of these officers the work of destruction went on, fifteen beautiful temples being made desolate and many people injured and shops looted. The triumphant rioters went on unchecked:—

"A madam was struck down—horses and carriages were stopped.
They outraged the modesty of Kamati women
So vengeance took hold of Kamatis; their hate was immeasurable."

This is the climax and crisis of the riots. These outrages caused the Kamatis to rise with big clubs, and the riots increased, and even when the troops used their arms, the riots broke out again somewhere else. The poet here shows the police and military at their wits' end in the dreadful storm, and mentions many appalling incidents and the suffering and fear which ensued when the arm of authority was weakened. He tells us how Her Majesty the Empress telegraphed next day, Saturday: "Resort to best measures to restore peace without making delay;" and how at last "the mighty riot began to subside" when Mr. Brewin, of the [767] police, had secured the Bandora butchers and taken their knives away. The poet uses many images to show how on that Friday and Friday night and Saturday, Bombay became desolate like a cremation ground overrun by the raging streams and proud swelling waves of riot and plunder, lust and murder.

In the third song the scene changes: the pious poet begins by thanking God for the mercy vouchsafed. Like the Rakshasas in the Ramayana of old, the wicked have been struck down. "The storm went on infinitely; it looked exceedingly fearful. They came to an untimely end the great wicked thereby. The world heartily hooted." Then after considering the causes of these outbreaks the mournful muse bewails the widows and children of the men murdered in the riots.

In song 5, to the air "A great calamity has happened in the Kali age," the writer in more warlike language appears to me to treat the Ghatis as restoring order by resisting the marauders while the other Hindus sat trembling and afraid. Mosques and durgas were burnt in retaliation: and,

"People like cats who were very timid,
Killed the enemy without restraint."

The sixth song describes the flight to Hindus out of Bombay and the levelling of ranks in the general fear. Braggart fellows became meek and hid in corners, and the Mahajans put their pride on one side and said humble words. Then, in contrast to these faint-hearted castes, —men of Gujarati castes,—song 7 begins to extol the courage of the humbler Kamatis and Ghatis. The gist of the ode is that these people by standing up and fighting the victorious marauders checked the rioting which had defied the police and the Magistrates. The eighth song expresses the philosophic and poetical view of death. The ninth is set to the tune "Let all march to conquer, the bugles sound," but one is surprised to find that this trumpet call is a signal for peace. The song begins "Instantly make union." The brave are repeatedly warned that there is no benefit in fighting; and it is pointed out that the oppressive and unjust will be punished by the criminal law. Mussalmans and Hindus being but two halves of the same seed, the poet, turning slightly metaphysical, [768] condemns fighting altogether. Kindness and love seem to him, as they did to Shelley, the cure for the fearful evils of the world. By a natural transition the poet in the tenth song, to the air "It is light, remember thou the deity Shri Ganesh," triumphs in the victory of the Crown and the law over the miscreants—

> Silly foolish people, those great sinful rioters;
> By infliction of punishment they were suppressed by the valiant British."

So the faces of people bloom again like the lotus flower, and the darkness of quarrel having ceased, and the sun of union arisen, Bombay shines again in undimmed glory. In the eleventh song the poet, seemingly discouraged, implores the Lord of the Universe, the supporter of life, to save the people by creating peace and amity; and in the twelfth and last song the poem ends with a eulogy of the worthy Lakhmidas, the wise son of Khimji.

The Court cannot safely deal with a production like this without remembering the rhetorical forms used by the writer. Poetry often has more meaning than prose; read how Addison's Cato was applauded by both Whig and Troy. The transitions remind one of those of Dryden in Alexander's Feast; of Schiller in the Song of the Bell; of some of the Psalms; the attempt is to move by pity and terror; and the prosecution urge that the lines beginning "Fight again" and what follows are calculated to move to rage and violence, to incite the Ghatis and Kamatis to fire another Troy. Not every poet is as cautious as Addison, of whom Johnson says "When Pope brought him the prologue (to the tragedy of Cato), which is properly accommodated to the play, there were these words: 'Britons arise, be worth like this approved,'" meaning nothing more than Britons exert and exalt yourselves to the approbation of public virtue. Addison was frightened lest he should be thought a promoter of insurrection, and the line was altered to "Britons attend." It may be conceded that the words "Fight again" are incautious; and this appears to have been felt by the publishers, who apparently, without reference to the poet, struck these words out after 300 copies (many of which were hawked about and sold) had been printed, and substituted the words "Be not afraid." But, then, we find the poem from beginning to end consists of a lamentation [769] over the riots, and the destruction and death they cause, and of repeated prayers for and counsel to peace and harmony between Hindus and Mussalmans. The actual words "Fight again" are qualified by "for your country's good." Judged by the context and the whole spirit of the poem, as well as by ordinary meaning, these qualifying words do not necessarily imply wanton outbreak and fighting. The poet represents the Kamatis and Ghatis as men who when other Hindus, like the Gujarati-speaking castes, were cowering in concealment and confusion after the marauders had caused great loss of life and property, after they had got even so far as the Kamati quarter of the town and even gone so far as to knock down a European lady and outrage the Kamati women, as stated in song 5—as men, I say, who took up their clubs and retaliated vigorously on the hitherto successful invaders. To put the poet's view of this stage of the disturbances in the language of the law, the Kamatis were brave enough to use the right of private defence of the body and of property expressly given by ss. 100 and 103 of the Indian Penal Code: so that the people who had begun the lawless proceedings received a check. Although, as the poet seems to admit, the immediate result of the check was a series of fights, hardly to be controlled by police and troops combined, his sympathies are with the injured, and his expressed desire is the establishment of peace and the enforcement of the law. Supposing the words had been "Fight again, oh Light Horse, oh Police," or "Fight again, oh Magistrates and Justices of the Peace," we could not construe them to mean, fight without lawful orders, or fight without regard to the law at all. The criticism of Mr. Brewin, who thinks that the more amiable sentiments are put in merely to conceal a wicked design to excite bloody tumults again, does not appear justified by the general tenor of the work. Literature furnishes examples of poems wholly written for one object, e.g., Swinburne's Ode on the Insurrection in Crete; and the Gujarati poem, translated in Kinloch Forbes' Ras Mala, on the Sutti-burning of the Queens and Concubines at Edur in 1836 on the death of the Maharaja Gambheer Singh. The one is a praise of the insurrection; the other of suttis. But the poem before us is far more a history than a praise of valour; the songs 7 and 8 arise [770] incidentally only out of an episode in the story. The latter song about contempt of death expresses sentiments adopted by many poets and religious moralisers in all ages and countries. They are found in the Bhagavatgita, and the Shakesperian remark that brave men die but once, and cowards often. That song by itself is not to be condemned, though such sentiments combined at the same moment with a call to fight may conceivably lead to a breach of the public order. Looking at the size of the poem and to the fact that the matter complained of is really contained in only one line thereof, it is right that the accused should have the benefit of such doubt as to the effect as may fairly exist. The improper matter does not, like the obscenity in the Confessional Unmasked—Reg v. Hicklin (1)—take up half the book. He appears to have done nothing except write his poem and send it to the press. He is no Tyrtæus singing in front of his men. Nor is the poem written in the tongue of either Kamatis or Ghatis, some only of whom understand Gujarati. It does not appear to have been written for, or read by, these classes of people; the heroism of these humbler castes, who resisting force with force checked the high advancing tide of murder and plunder, is used by the poet as a scornful contrast to the timid Mahajans and others who hid in corners of the house, and sought refuge by flight to Kathiawar, Gujarat and Marwar.

We entirely agree with the Magistrate that in the excited state of Hindu and Mahomedan feeling at the time it was the duty of the accused not to publish anything that had even a remote tendency to stir up ill-feeling. We mean a moral duty; not that he has transgressed the law. Even while acquitting him we do not look upon him as an object of public sympathy; he ought to have been more cautious. We have to add that there is evidence that the lines complained of made some Mahomedans angry, those to whom one of the witnesses read them. But this fact is hardly relevant to the question whether the accused in publishing the poem did what was illegal. Many sermons and comments on the acts or opinions of others, eulogies to and elegies on prominent leaders or the mighty dead may be delivered in a legal and peaceable way, and yet, especially in factious [771] times, raise much ill-feeling in the ranks of the opposite party. Yet this is not generally a reason for interference with the liberty of speech or of the press; such interference with legal rights would only cause oppression and give increased power to faction. People may be angry; but, if they allow themselves through anger to commit assaults, they expose themselves to criminal punishment. This is the answer of the law to people like the Mussalman witnesses, who sat down to hear this poem read, and then thought they did well to be angry. Milton shall not be silenced because Salmasius seeks to break his head; the peaceful lists of literature have long been open to Whig and Tory, Catholic and Protestant, Platonist and Materialist, Roundhead and Cavalier, Hindu and Mussalman. On the other hand, to prevent misconception, I must say that the Magistracy may, under s. 144 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, in circumstances where the public tranquillity is in danger, interdict for the occasion the exercise of legal right, and disobedience to the order is punishable under s. 188 of the Indian Penal Code. We reverse the conviction and sentence and discharge the appellant.

RANADE, J.—The appellant Kahanji with two others was convicted under ss. 117 and 153 of the Indian Penal Code by the Chief Presidency Magistrate, and sentenced to three months' imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 201. The offences with which he stood charged were (1) that of abetting the commission of the offence of rioting, in that he composed and caused to be published and sold a certain pamphlet extolling certain acts committed by Hindu Ghatis and Kamatis, and instigating them to fight with the Mahomedans again; and (2) that of wantonly abetting the commission of the offence of rioting, in that he composed and caused to be published and sold same pamphlet which contained lines instigating certain classes of Hindus to attack the Mahomedans, knowing that such a provocation would cause the offence of rioting to be committed. The Magistrate was satisfied that the lines on pages 7 and 8 of the collection of poems, on which special stress was laid by the prosecution called upon the Ghatis and Kamatis to renew the disturbances, and that the accused acted wantonly, and that he must be assumed to have known that the probable result of the publication at the time would be to instigate [772] one community to renew the disturbances, or provoke the other to do so. The appellant contends before us that the Magistrate was in error in the construction he put upon the lines, and that the pamphlet contained nothing which was calculated to instigate a renewal of the riots.

It thus becomes necessary to examine carefully the contents of the pamphlet. The prose preface gives a summary of the loses sustained in life and property both by the Hindu and Mahomedan communities, who are linked together in this place. The first stanza opens with a prayer to god Shiva, whose mercy is invoked, and concludes with a wish that venom and rage may be put out, and union and peace increase, so that Hindus and Mahomedans may be reconciled in mind, and entertain love and friendship to one another. In the second stanza, the author professes that his intention is to write a history of the rise and progress of the riots. In this stanza it is no doubt stated that the riots were commenced by the Mahomedans. This was, however, admitted to be a fact by the chief police officer examined on behalf of the prosecution. In the first half of this stanza, allusion is made to the defilement of Hindu temples, and the fear and trembling which paralyzed the Hindus on Friday afternoon. About the middle of the stanza, it is stated that the modesty of Kamati women was outraged, and this circumstance roused the vengeance of the Kamatis. The latter portion of this stanza makes no distinctive mention of either community, but narrates how the rioters (scoundrels and budmashes) proved too much for the police, and were not brought under control till the military force arrived. In the third stanza, the history of the riots is continued, and the allusions show that the writer had chiefly in view the events of Saturday, when the Hindus successfully outnumbered their Mussalman assailants of the previous day. After mentioning the several causes assigned for the riots, the writer attributes them to mutual animosity of heart. The words apply to both communities, who are told that by "cherishing hatred, no benefit accrues, and that by friendship good happened to each other." The poet expresses a hope that, notwithstanding all that has happened, there is no cause for anxiety if people act prudently and cautiously. The police witnesses admitted that this was good advice. In the 4th [773] stanza there is an appeal made to the rich to give charity, and relieve the poor. No distinctive allusion is made to either community. In the 5th stanza, allusion is specially made to the scenes of plunder and looting, and individual murders which took place after Saturday till the riots ceased. Mention is here made for the first time of the Ghatis who saved their honour by fighting. Mosques and durgas are mentioned as having been burnt down by the rioters. The Mahomedans are by implication described as still fighting like desperadoes though outnumbered, while the ere while timid Hindus are stated to have killed the enemy without restraint. In the 6th stanza allusion is made to the help rendered by the rich Hindus to the poor people of their community. Next comes the 7th stanza in which occur the lines to which exception is taken. This stanza was no doubt intended to praise the Ghatis and Kamatis. The translation of one of the lines made by the Police Court translator as stating that the Ghatis and Kamatis broke through the serried array of the rifles was admitted by him to be a mistake in his evidence in Court. This stanza begins with the words "Brave, brave are the Kamati people, praiseworthy truly are the Ghatis," and concludes with the words "Fight again for country's good" in a few hundreds of the first issue or the pamphlet. These last words were altered into "Don't be afraid for country's sake" in the second and larger issue of the same pamphlet. The 8th stanza attempts to give reasons why no fear should be entertained. The reason is that death comes to all men only once, but to them who die in battle there is always victory. In the 9th stanza the chief verse inculcates that "there is no benefit in fighting, brothers reflect." "The law will punish the criminal and the oppressor, and people should not resort to a contrary course of action." "In reconciliation there is superior enjoyment and peace." The exhortation is intended for both communities, who are stated in one couplet to be the two halves of one seed, and the split between them is condemned by the poet, and both are asked "to make one affirmation of union and peace." In the 9th stanza there is again an invocation of God's mercy, and it is stated that "quiet was restored, and temples were reopened, and men's faces began to beam with joy, thanks to the efforts of Government." In the 11th stanza God's aid is invoked [774] for the restoration of peace, and the 12th stanza concludes with the praise of Mr. Lakhmidas Khimji, who, it appears from the evidence, purchased a certain number of copies from the publisher. From this summary of the poem it appears to us clear that the general spirit of the poem, taking all the stanzas together, was clearly in favour of peace and reconciliation. The riots passed through several stages, and the narrative describes the stages separately in the several stanzas. The dominant idea was that Hindus and Mahomedans should not fight with one another, and there is no indication that the intention was to instigate the Hindus, or provoke the Mahomedans to renew the disturbances. The praise of the Ghatis and Kamatis was a rhapsody suggested by the course of events as they took place, and as the writer was a Hindu and a Gujarati, and the Mahomedans were admittedly aggressors in the first instance, such digression was not at all beyond the license allowed to ballad writers and rhapsodists. It appears to us that when the information was first laid before the Magistrate, a translation of the whole pamphlet should have been put in. This was not done, and only translations (subsequently admitted in part to be mistaken) of stanzas 7 and 8 were filed, and the Magistrate's attention was thus not sufficiently drawn to the whole poem. The words "Fight again" used in the first issues were, no doubt, very objectionable, but the mistake was admitted and corrected. When the whole spirit of the poem was decidedly in favour of peace and concord, it would not be a proper construction of the words so incautiously used to allow them to override the whole context of the work. It is also to be noted that the pamphlet was in Gujarati, which was not the spoken language of either Ghatis or Kamatis, nor of the lower classes of Mussalmans either. There is absolutely no evidence to show that the pamphlet was distributed among or read to or by the Ghatis or Kamatis, and the evidence about its distribution among the Mahomedans is also confined to the statements made by Mr. Brewin and one Mussalman charcoal dealer.

We do not think that, taking all these circumstances together, the publication can properly be regarded to be an illegal act as contemplated in s. 153. That section, moreover, requires that the provocation given by the commission of an illegal act must [775] be given malignantly and wantonly. The word wantonly occurs only in this section of the Code, while the word malignantly occurs once again in s. 270, which refers to the wicked spread of infectious poison. "Malignantly" implies certainly a sort of general malice, and very strong evidence must certainly be given to prove this malignity or wantonness in the publication of this pamphlet. In the first draft of the Indian Law Commission's Report, s. 136 stood in place of s. 153 of the present Code, and it only made the offence punishable as such in case a riot occurred in consequence. Admittedly no riot or disturbance took place, or was apprehended by the police in this case. The composition was not, taking the whole of it, an illegal act, and its publication was not malignant or wanton. We do not think the mere chance of a provocation was, under the circumstances, sufficient to justify the conviction under s. 153. The same remark applies to the charge under s. 117. There was no evidence of an abetment of any offence by the public generally, or by more than 10 persons which is necessary to justify a conviction under that section. We accordingly reverse the conviction and sentence passed on the accused Kahanji Dharamsi.

Ss. 75, 76—Ratnagiri District—Khot—Khoti Khasgi land—Trees—Right to cut trees—Dunlop's proclamation—Right of Government to rescind proclamation—Crown grant, construction of.—In 1824 by a proclamation, known as Mr. Dunlop's proclamation, it was declared that the owners of land in the Ratnagiri District, on which teak and other forest trees were growing or should thereafter be grown, should be the owners of these trees and might dispose of them at their pleasure without any claim on the part of Government. In 1851, however, this proclamation was rescinded by a subsequent proclamation which declared that the "Government resumed, in regard to forest, all the seignorial rights which it possessed previously to 1823."

The accused was khot of the village of Asgoli in the Ratnagiri District. He was charged under s. 75, cl. (c) of the Indian Forest Act (VII of 1878) with the offence of cutting down two teak trees without obtaining the permission of Government as required by the rules framed by Government under the Forest Act. He contended that he was absolute owner of the trees under Dunlop's proclamation. He was convicted, and applied to the High Court under its revisional jurisdiction.

Held, that the conviction must be reversed. The land on which the trees in question were growing was the khoti khasgi land of the accused, and he was, therefore, entitled to the benefit of Dunlop's proclamation, by virtue of which the trees thereon became his property.

Held, also, that Dunlop's proclamation could not be withdrawn by Government in so far as it related to trees planted after that date.

Per FULTON, J.—Khasgi land of which the khot was actually in possession was clearly within Dunlop's proclamation and it granted the right to teak and other trees in khasgi lands held by watandar khots . . . . It is clear, too, that the right to trees having once been conceded could not be withdrawn by the proclamation of 1851, and it seems also manifest that the contention is untenable that the benefit of the first proclamation did not extend to the case of trees planted after its cancellation in 1851. Even though the khot may not be the proprietor of the soil in khoti khasgi lands, he is certainly the holder of an interest in it, and that interest having in 1823 been increased by the concession of all trees which he might grow thereafter, could not subsequently be reduced by the withdrawal of the right to such trees. In re ANTAJI KESHAV, 18 B. 670 ... 955

(4) S. 22—Amending Act (XXII of 1882), s. 9—Mortgage by agriculturist—Subsequent money decree against mortgagor—Sale of his equity of redemption in execution—Such sale invalid—Equity of redemption is immoveable property—Suit for redemption.—Raghoji, and agriculturist, mortgaged the land in dispute to the defendant in 1872. In 1875 one Dagdu obtained a decree against Raghoji (the mortgagor), who was then represented by his widow, the plaintiff. In execution of this decree Raghoji's equity of redemption was sold on the 10th February, 1883, and was brought by the son of the defendant (the mortgagee). On the 12th April, 1883, the sale was confirmed, and on the 10th November, 1883, the purchaser took formal possession of the land. In 1891 the plaintiff (widow and heir of the mortgagor Raghoji) brought this suit to redeem the mortgage and to recover possession of the land, contending that under s. 22 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879) the sale of the equity of redemption was a nullity. The lower Court dismissed the suit, holding that although the sale might be illegal, so long as the certificate of sale remained in force it was a bar to the plaintiff's right to redeem.

Held that the plaintiff, being found to be an agriculturist, the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879 and XXII of 1882) applied. The provisions of that Act applied, although the decree and order for sale under which the sale took place were made before the Act was passed. The Act expressly forbids the immoveable property of an agriculturist to be sold in execution, and an equity of redemption is immoveable property within the contemplation of the Act. The sale, therefore, on the 10th February, 1883, of the equity of redemption in the mortgaged lands was illegal and a nullity, and was no defence to the plaintiff's suit to redeem the mortgage. (1) S. 18—Jurisdiction—Foreigner—Non-resident foreigner carrying on business by his munim in Bombay—Small Cause Court.—Where a foreigner who did not reside in Bombay carried on business there by his munim.

Held, that under s. 18 of the Small Cause Courts Act (XV of 1882) the Small Cause Court in Bombay had jurisdiction to try a suit brought against him in that Court.

Per SARGENT, C. J.—Prima facie the word "defendants" in cl. (b) of s. 18 has the same meaning in each of the three cases in which that clause gives jurisdiction to the Court; and as the word clearly includes non-British subjects among the defendants over whom the clause gives jurisdiction if they are "resident," or "personally work for gain," within the territorial limits of the Small Cause Court, it would be a strained construction to hold that it did not include them among the defendants over whom the clause gives jurisdiction, on the ground that they are "carrying on business" within the limits.

Although it is true that a non-British subject who does not personally carry on business within the territorial limits of the Court does not make himself personally subject to the municipal law of British India, still, by establishing his business in British India, from which business he expects to derive profit, he accepts the protection of the territorial authority for his business, and his property resulting from it, and may be fully regarded as submitting to the Courts of the country. The word 'guardian' in s. 51 of the Act means a guardian who was such at the time the Act came into force.

A. was appointed a guardian of B.'s property under the Bombay Minors Act, XX of 1864. B. attained majority in 1886. In 1892 B. applied to the District Judge for an order directing A. to deliver to B. his property together with the accounts relating thereto. The District Judge made the order, as asked for, under s. 41, cl. 3 of Act VIII of 1890.

Held, that the District Judge had no jurisdiction under Act VIII of 1890 to make the order in question, as A. had ceased to be guardian before the Act came into force. VALLABDAS HIRACHAND v. KRISHNABAI, 17 B. 566 ... 370

II of the Limitation Act* (XV of 1877)—Six years' limitation.—A survey settlement officer decided in the year 1882 that certain lands situate at the khoti village of Tadil, in the Ratnagiri District, were dhara lands of S. and another, but the entry in the survey register that they were dhara lands was not made till 1889.

In the meanwhile, F. and others, who were the khots of the village, made an application to the special survey officer to revise the decision of the settlement officer of the year 1882, and the special settlement officer having rejected this application in 1885, they brought the present suit in 1887 against S. and others for a declaration that the lands were their khoti.

The Judge dismissed the suit on the ground that the settlement officer's decision being final under ss. 20 and 21 of the Khoti Settlement Act (Bombay Act I of 1880), and it having not been set aside within one year from its date, the suit was time-barred under art. 14, sch. II of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877).

Held, reversing the decree, that the claim was not time-barred. Under ss. 20 and 21 of the Khoti Settlement Act, it is the "decision" on the rival claims of the parties which is open to reversal by the Civil Court and not the consequences of that decision, which as provided by s. 22 are left to the Collector himself to undo or modify in accordance with the decision of the Civil Court.

Held, further, that s. 21 does not contemplate any "Order" being made by the survey officer between the parties; and even if framing the register be regarded as an "act" of the survey officer, s. 22 provides for its being amended by the Collector, himself, in accordance with the decision of the Civil Court.

Held, further, that although the defendants might have paid only the assessment before 1878-79, their adverse possession of the lands as dhara did not begin to run against the plaintiffs until 1878-79, when such a claim was actively advanced by the defendants. The plaintiff's cause of action arose in 1882, when the survey officer determined that the lands were dhara, and the present suit, which was brought within six years to reverse that decision, was, therefore, in time. (1) S. 158—Tax—Drawbacks — General conditions prescribed by Standing Committee limiting right to drawback under s. 158, ultra vires.—Under s. 158 of the City of Bombay Municipal Act (Bombay Act III of 1888) the following general conditions were prescribed by the Standing Committee with reference to claims for drawback of the general property tax leviable in Bombay :—

"(1) Except with the special sanction of the Commissioner, no claim for drawback shall be entertained unless submitted to the Commissioner not less than 30 days before the commencement of the half year to which such claim relates.

(2) Drawback of the one-fifth part of the general tax shall be sanctioned by the Commissioner in cases falling within either of the following classes and in no others :

(a) Chawls or buildings let out for hire in single rooms either as lodging or godowns for the storage of goods.

(b) Properties which, in the opinion of the Commissioner, are usually or frequently vacant either wholly or partially.

(3) No sanction for drawback shall extend or apply to any floor on which trade or manufacture is carried on, or any goods are sold."

The Commissioner having refused to sanction a drawback of the tax leviable on certain properties of the plaintiff on the ground that they did not fall within the terms of the above conditions, the plaintiff filed this suit. It was contended in his behalf that the second and third of the above conditions were bad, and that the Standing Committee could not by so-called general conditions limit or curtail the right given to tax-payers by s. 158.

Held, that the conditions prescribed by the Standing Committee were not ultra vires, and that the Commissioner was justified in refusing the drawback. GOVARDHANDAS GOCULDAS TEJPAL v. THE MUNICIPAL COMMISSIONER, 17 B. 394 = Chitty's S.C.C.R. 363 ... 256

The property was sold on the 5th August 1889, but the Collector refused to confirm the sale, as the sanction of the Governor in Council under cl. 2, s. 31 of the Talukdars Act (Bombay Act VI of 1888), which came into force on the 25th March, 1889, had not been obtained.

Act VI of 1880 (Bombay, Gujrat Talukdar's)—(Concluded). PAGE

Held, that the section was not retrospective in its operation, and that the sale should be confirmed, although no sanction had been obtained. When the Act passed, the plaintiff had already acquired a vested right by the decree to have the property sold, and the presumption was that the Legislature did not intend to interfere with that vested right. That presumption was not rebutted by any intention to interfere appearing in the Act itself. KALIAN MOTI v. PATHUBHAI FALJIBHAI, 17 B. 289 ... 188

Act of State.

(1) Idol—Property bequeathed to an idol—Owner of shrine—Deposition of owner from his position by an act of State of foreign power—Effect of deposition on right to property in Bombay—Trustee—Will—Power of appointment.—Under a power given to her by the will of her husband, one Custur had the right to bequeath a certain house situate in Bombay. She died in 1873, and by her will she bequeathed the house in question to trustees, their heirs, &c., in trust to pay and apply the rents thereof to the shrine or gadi of Shri Nathji for ever, and she gave the trustees and their heirs, &c., the right to reside for life in the first storey of the said house free of rent. The Shri Nathji is situate at Nathdwara in the territory of High Highness the Maharana Oodeypore. It is held in great veneration by the Vaishnava sect of Hindus and is extremely wealthy. The plaintiff held the position of Maharaja of Nathdwara (Tikait Maharaja) up to the year 1876, and as such sat on the gadi and managed the property of the said shrine. In that year, however, he was deposed from his position by the principal authorities of Oodeypore and deported from Nathdwara, and his son, the second defendant, was raised to the gadi in his place. Since that time the plaintiff had never been permitted to go back, nor had he had anything to do with the shrine. The second defendant (his son) had since his elevation performed the worship and managed the property belonging to the shrine. The plaintiff, however, claimed in this suit to be still the legal owner and representative of the shrine, and as such entitled to the house in question and to the rents and profits thereof since the death of Custur. The first defendant was one of the trustees named in the will of Custur to whom the house was bequeathed in trust. The plaintiff in his plaint also contended that the clause in Custur's will giving the said trustees a right to reside in the house free of rent was ultra vires of the power of appointment given to her by the will of her husband.

The defendants denied that since his deposition the plaintiff was the legal owner and representative of the shrine of Shri Nathji. They contended that having been deposed and reported from Nathdwara he could no longer apply the rents to the support of the shrine, and that if the house were given to him, the trusts of Custur's will would be defeated. They contended that the second defendant in virtue of his position was entitled to receive the rents, and that this suit should be dismissed.

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to the said house. The house was validly bequeathed to the gadi. At the date of the bequest the plaintiff was de facto as well as de jure in possession of the shrine and of its property. His deposition from the gadi was an act of a foreign State and did not affect his right to property in Bombay. If he was regarded as owner of that property he had not lost his right as such to the said property in consequence of his deposition, and if he was merely a trustee he had not been removed from his office by any competent tribunal.

Held, also, that under the will of Custur the first defendant was entitled to reside rent free in the first storey of the house in question during his lifetime. GOSWAMI SHRI GIRDHARJI v. MADHOWDAS PREMJI, 17 B. 600. 393 of high-priest by act of State—Appointment of new high-priest—Suit by latter for property belonging to shrine.—For thirty years prior to 1876 the defendant had been the high-priest of the shrine of Shri Nathji at Nathdwara in the territory of His Highness the Maharana of Oodeypore and as such was manager of the property of the shrine. The shrine is held in great veneration by the Vaishnava sect of Hindus, and large bequests and offerings of money, land, &c., are made to it by members of that sect. To facilitate the collection of such offerings and the employment of the funds belonging to the shrine, pedhis or firms are established in various parts of India, including Bombay. The firm in Bombay was carried on under the name of Navnitdas Purshottam, and the house in which it was carried on was built with monies belonging to the shrine. On the 8th May, 1876, by order of the Political Agent of Meywar and the Maharana of Oodeypore he was deposed from that office for alleged misconduct and deported from Nathdwara. In his place his son, the plaintiff, was placed on the gadi as high-priest. In 1878 the plaintiff brought this suit praying for a declaration that as high-priest of the shrine he was entitled to the property in Bombay belonging thereto, and for delivery of the same to him, and for an injunction against the defendant, and for a receiver, &c. He obtained a rule nisi calling on the defendant to show cause why he should not be restrained from receiving or dealing with the monies of the said firm of Navnitdas Purshottam and from tampering with the books, &c.

Held, discharging the rule, that the plaintiff had shown no title to the property in question. The defendant was in possession and had been for many years in possession of the property. His deposition by a foreign power and the election of the plaintiff to the gadi in the place of the defendant did not transfer the title to property in Bombay from the defendant to the plaintiff. As an act of State, it could not be made the basis of an action, and it could not be regarded as a foreign judgment. SHRIMAN GOSWAMI v. GOSWAMI SHRI GIRDHARLALJI, 17 B. 620-N. 406

Administrator.

Liability of, for loss to estate—Compromise of claim by administrator—Subsequent suit by a creditor of estate to set aside the compromise and for damages for negligence of administrator—Indian Succession Act (X of 1865), Ss. 280 and 328—Administrator's liability for neglect to get in any part of the deceased's property.—One Phirozsha Shapurji mortgaged certain property to Homjibhai Jamasji for Rs. 2,667. Homjibhai sued Phirozsha to recover the mortgage debt. Pending the suit Phirozsha died in 1878. Thereupon Hormajsha, the son of Phirozsha, took out letters of administration to the deceased's estate and contested Homjibhai's claim. Homjibhai obtained a decree in the Court of first instance for the sale of the mortgaged property, and in execution of this decree the property was sold for Rs. 810 and purchased by Homjibhai. The decree was afterwards—viz., on 2nd August, 1883—reversed, on appeal, by the Assistant Judge. Thereupon Homjibhai entered into a compromise with Hormajsha by which it was arranged that Hormajsha should give up his claim under the appellate decree of the Assistant Judge, to be repaid by Homjibhai the sum of Rs. 810 which he had realized by sale of the mortgaged property, and that Homjibhai should pay to Hormajsha Rs. 240 on account of his costs incurred in the suit and in taking out letters of administration. This compromise was effected on 16th November, 1883.

In the meantime on 4th September, 1883, the plaintiff had purchased from one Bai Bhikaiji an old decree which was outstanding against the estate of the deceased Phirozsha. On 10th September, 1883, the plaintiff sought to execute this decree against the mortgaged property. Having failed in this attempt, the plaintiff filed a suit against Hormajsha for a declaration that the compromise of the 16th November, 1883, had been fraudulently effected with the object of defeating his (the plaintiff's) claim, and to recover Rs. 1,000 as damages from the defendant on account of his fraudulent and negligent conduct as administrator of his deceased father's estate. This suit was dismissed by both the Lower Courts, on the ground that as there were other creditors who had claims against the estate, the plaintiff's proper remedy was an administration suit, which would enable the Court to assess the claims of all the creditors.

Held, reversing the lower Court's decree, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover. By the compromise of the 16th November, 1883, the defendant had given up his right under the appellate Court's decree of the 2nd August, 1883, to be repaid by Homjibhai the sum of Rs. 810 and had thereby occasioned a loss to the estate of that amount. He was, therefore, liable to the plaintiff to make good the amount under s. 328 of the Indian Succession Act (X of 1865), subject, however, to a deduction, under s 280 of that Act, of the expenses incurred by him in obtaining letters of administration, and the costs of any judicial proceeding that might be necessary for administering the estate. (1) Burden of proof—Evidence—Limitation—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), sch. II, arts. 127, 144—Suit for possession of land alleging a previous partition—Partition—Co-sharers.—The defendant had purchased the land in question at a sale in execution of a decree obtained by him against cousins of the plaintiff. The plaintiff claimed to recover the land, alleging that it was his share of ancestral property which had been allotted to him on partition four or five years before suit, and of which he had actually been in separate possession. The lower Court upon these allegations rejected the plaintiff's claim, holding that the suit was not one for partition and did not fall within art. 127 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), but that art. 144, applied, and that the plaintiff had failed to show that the defendant's adverse possession had begun within twelve years preceding the suit. On appeal to the High Court,

Held, reversing the decree and sending back the case, that under art. 144 it was for the defendant to prove adverse possession for twelve years before suit. HANMANTA KOLAJI v. MAHADEV KONDAJI, 18 B. 513 ... 851

(3) Limitation Act (XV of 1877), sch. II, art. 141—Reversioner.—Nathu, a Hindu, died in 1863, leaving two widows (Tulsa and Gama) and a daughter Mukta him surviving. In 1874 the widows divided the property left by Nathu between them, and one of them (Tulsa), in 1876, sold her share to one Ganpatrav who again sold it to the plaintiff. Gama died in 1887, Tulsa having died previously. After the death of the two widows, Mukta, the daughter of Nathu, was heir to the property, but the plaintiff in this suit alleged a title by adverse possession.

Held, that the plaintiff had no title as against the defendant Mukta. Under art. 141 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) the possession of Tulsa's vendee and of the plaintiff was not adverse to the defendant Mukta, who took as Nathu's heir, until the death of Gama, the surviving widow of Nathu. Gama did not die until 1887. MUKTA v. DADA, 18 B. 216 ... 652

(4) Manager during minority—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), sch. II, arts. 91 and 144.—The plaintiffs sued to recover lands which they claimed as their own and of which they alleged the defendant to have had the management during their minority, he having been appointed a manager of all their (the plaintiffs') property by their mother and grandmother, who were dead at the date of suit. The defendant alleged that the land in question had been sold to him, and produced a deed of sale, dated 3rd October, 1876, purporting to have been executed by the deceased ladies and by the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs denied all knowledge of the deed, and prayed that it might be cancelled. The defendant (inter alia) contended that the suit was barred by limitation and pleaded adverse possession.

Held, that the suit was not barred, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover: (1) supposing the deed not to have been executed at all, the possession of the manager would not become adverse until he distinctly repudiated the management; (2) if the deed were executed by the ladies only, then art. 144 and not art. 91 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) would apply: (3) even if the minors whose names appeared in the deed, did actually execute it, nevertheless as the defendant did not get into possession under it, but only used it to defend his position, art. 91 would not apply. (4) Award—Setting aside award—Arbitrator receiving evidence from one side in absence of other side—Misconduct—Civ. Pro. Code (XIV of 1882), s. 521—Contract—Contract to sell from 2,500 to 3,500 tons of coal—Breach of contract—Non-delivery of coal—Damages—Number of tons on which damages to be calculated.—An arbitrator ought not to hear or receive evidence from one side in the absence of the other side, without (if he does) giving the other side affected by such evidence the opportunity of meeting and answering it. This proposition is, however, subject to the qualification that the parties may agree that a reference may be conducted in any particular way, and such an agreement may be either express or implied from their conduct during the arbitration, and they may also expressly or by their conduct waive their objection to an irregular course of conduct on the part of the arbitrator.

Where an arbitrator received certain papers and documents from the defendants in a suit referred to his arbitration, together with a letter from the defendants containing certain comments on the documents sent to him and made his award without giving the plaintiffs an opportunity of seeing the said papers and documents, and of meeting the inference deducible from them.

Held, that there was such a breach of duty on the part of the arbitrator as entitled the plaintiffs to have the award set aside.

On the 18th May, 1893, the defendants sold to the plaintiffs "the entire cargo of coal per steam-ship——May shipment, via canal, amounting to 2,500 to 3,500 tons or thereabouts." The defendants intended a certain steam-ship called the "Ethelaida," which carried a cargo of 3,395 tons of coal, to satisfy this contract. This ship, however, did not load in May, and consequently her cargo did not fulfil the conditions of the contract. From the day of making the contract the plaintiffs had been urging the defendants to declare the name of the vessel in which the coal contracted for was to be shipped. On the 14th June the defendants by letter informed the plaintiff that the "vessel chartered for their May shipment" had not loaded in May, and they offered to cancel the contract. On the same day, however, and about an hour after the plaintiff had received this letter, and before they had replied to it, the defendants sent them another letter as follows:—"We have now been informed that the boat our coals have been loaded in is the 'Ethelaida,' and we now beg to declare it." Correspondence subsequently passed between the parties. On the 15th June the plaintiff wrote to the defendants as follows:—"Please inform us finally what you intend. In case the 'Ethelaida' is declared as bringing coals sold to us under contract of 18th May, please let us know the date of her sailing, landing and the particular date of her arrival in Bombay, and also how much coals she has on board." On the following day the defendants replied: "The 'Ethelaida' is the boat chartered for the cargo we sold you .....We do not positively know whether she commenced to load in May or June. She was expected to load about 3,300 tons." On the 28th June the defendants wrote definitely stating that the "'Ethelaida' did not load in May." The plaintiffs refused her cargo, and sent in a statement of their alleged loss calculated upon 3,300 tons, the amount stated to be the cargo of the "Ethelaida" in the defendants' letter of the 14th June.

Held, that the damages must be calculated upon a cargo of 2,500 tons only. The "Ethelaida" was never incorporated into the contract. The defendants declared her against the contract; but after they had informed the plaintiffs that she had not loaded in May, the plaintiffs refused her cargo. The contract which the defendants failed to fulfil was a contract to deliver a cargo of 2,500—3,500 tons, and not a contract to deliver the "Ethelaida" cargo, which they were always ready and willing to deliver. The option rested with the defendants whether they would deliver 2,500 or 3,500 tons, or any intermediate quantity, and upon no principle could the Court exercise that option for them and daclare that they were liable to deliver more than a cargo of 2,500 tons. (2) Professional communication—Privilege—Extent of the privilege—Solicitor bound to give the name of the client on whose behalf the privilege is claimed, but not the nature of his employment—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 126—Evidence.—The law relating to professional communications between a solicitor and a client is the same in India as in England.

It is not every communication made by a client to an attorney that is privileged from disclosure. The privilege extends only to communications made to him confidentially, and with a view to obtaining professional advice.

Where a solicitor claims privilege under s. 126 of the Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872), he is bound to disclose the name of his client, on whose behalf he claims the privilege. The mere fact that the client's name had been communicated to him in the course and for the purpose of his employment as solicitor by another client, affords no excuse, unless it was communicated to him confidentially, on the express understanding that it was not to be disclosed.

But a solicitor is not at liberty, without his client's express consent, to disclose the nature of his professional employment. Section 126 of the Indian Evidence Act protects from publicity not merely the details of the business, but also its general purport, unless it be known aliunde that such business falls within proviso I or II to the section.

At an interview between a solicitor and a client, the solicitor took down a certain statement made by a person named A.B. who was in his client's company, and whose name was communicated to him in the course and for the purpose of his professional employment. A. B. was afterwards tried

Held, that the bequest to charity was good, and an enquiry was directed as to the place at which such sadavarat should, at the proper time, be established, and a scheme for its administration was ordered to be prepared.

A testator by his will directed that, if his daughters died without issue, the property of his daughters should be used by his executors for dhurm and for sadavarat.

Held, following Hoare v. Osborne (L. R. 1 Eq. 585), that the bequest was good to the extent of one-half in favour of the sadavarat. The gift to dhurm being invalid, the other half was undisposed of.

A testator by his will directed that his wife should enjoy for life the interest of Rs. 4,000 which were deposited with a certain firm, and that after her death the interest should be given to dhurm. There was no residuary clause in the will.

Held, that the gift to dhurm being clearly bad, and there being no residuary clause in the will, the corpus of the Rs. 4.000 was undisposed of and went to the testator's widow. MORARJI CULLIANJI v. NENBAI, 17 B. 351 ... 228

Code* (XIV of 1882), s. 43.—One Bhimsi Ruttonsi, a Jain, died in February, 1863, leaving a will. His widow Bai Punjabai (defendant No. 1) obtained letters of administration with the will annexed. The testator died possessed (inter alia) of a half share of certain property in Bombay known as the "Bhimpura property." The remaining half share belonged to two other persons, viz., Hirji Dossa and Muddon Tejsi. By his will the testator directed that a moiety of the rental of his half share should be spent on the sadharm (charitable or religious) endowment of a temple at Jackhoo in Cutch, and the other moiety thereof in establishing two sadavarats, one at Jackhoo and the other in Palitana. He also set apart a sum of Rs. 1,26,000, of which Rs. 1,01,000 were to be expended in building a temple at Jackhoo, and the balance of Rs. 25,000 in erecting a market near the temple at Jackhoo, or, if that was impossible, it was to be spent in Palitana. The plaint complained that of the Rs. 1,26,000 about Rs. 60,000 had been spent in buying a property in Bombay, called the "school property," for the purpose of establishing a school there, and about Rs. 50,000 had been expended in erecting a temple at Jackhoo, but that nothing had been done with the balance, nor had a market been established at Jackhoo. All that had been done there was to erect three shops which cost about Rs. 2,000. The plaintiff further stated that in 1868 Bai Punjabai (defendant No. 1) had made over the "school property" and the "Bhimpura property" to three trustees on trusts, not strictly in accordance with the testator's will as above set forth. Under this deed the trustees were to apply one moiety of the net rents (1) in sadavarat or alms-giving at Jackhoo and Palitana; (2) in feasting the caste people in Bombay and Jackhoo annually; (3) in the worship called satarbhadi at the derasar (temple) in Bombay and Jackhoo; and (4) in entertaining and clothing the gorip (poor) in Bombay and Jackhoo Of the remaining moiety of the rents (5) one-half was to go to sadharm (charities) of the derasar (temple) at Jackhoo, and (6) the other half to charities at such places as the trustees should think fit.

In the following year, viz., on 17th April, 1869, Bai Punjabai (defendant No. 1) and the owners of the other moiety of the "Bhimpura property" conveyed the whole of that property to trustees, who were to apply a moiety of the rents (which was to be considered as rent from Punjabai's share of the property) (1) in sadavarat and alms-giving at Jackhoo and Palitana; (2) in feasting the caste people in Bombay and Jackhoo annually on the anniversary of Bhimsi Ruttonsi's death; (3) in the worship of the derasar called satarbhadi, and in the entertainment and clothing of the gorip (poor) in Bombay and Jackhoo. The deed also directed the application of the rents of the other moiety of the "Bhimpura property," part of which was to go to a temple at Tera in Cutch and part to another temple at Jackhoo. This later deed, it will be observed, omitted altogether trusts (5) and (6) of the earlier one of 1868 in favour of sadharm for the temple of Jackhoo and for sadharm generally. The trustees appointed by the two deeds were not the same, though some of the trustees of the first were also the trustees of the second. The second deed did not recite or in any way refer to the first. At the date of suit all the trustees named in the deeds were dead except the second defendant. By subsequent deeds, however, new trustees had been appointed, and they were all parties to the present suit. Defendants Nos. 2, 3, 4, 5, 6 and 7 were trustees of the Bhimapura property, and defendants Nos. 8, 9, 10 and 11 of the school property. The plaint filed on the 10th March, 1892, at the relation of two members of the Jain community of Cutch prayed that the charitable trusts of the testator's will might be carried out, and sought for accounts against the widow of the testator and the trustees of both the deeds, and for a scheme, &c.

Held, that the High Court of Bombay had jurisdiction to make a decree declaring the trusts upon which the trustees of the deed of October, 1868, held the property comprised in that deed and for rectifying the deed in accordance with such declaration, but that the Court could not go further in settling a scheme.

Semble when money is bequeathed for the purpose of founding a charity outside the jurisdiction, the Court hands the money to the trustees named by the testator, leaving it to the Courts of the country in which the charity is to be established to settle the scheme.

Held, also, that the suit was not barred by limitation. It was not one for rectification of the deed of 1868, but rather one against Punjabai (defendant No. 1) and her assigns the trustees of the deed of 1868 and 1869 for the purpose of following the trust property in their hands and having it applied to the proper purposes of the trust, and, therefore, came within s. 10 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877).

Charges of fraud and dishonesty made against trustees of a charity must be established at the hearing of the case, and cannot be allowed to be reserved and proved subsequently in the course of taking accounts.

Charity—(Concluded).

PAGE

Where the trust deed of a charity executed subsequently to the death of a testator under whose will the charity was established, does not strictly conform to the provisions of the will, it is not the practice of the Court, when the discrepancy has been made by mistake, to visit the past consequences of the mistake upon the trustees.

The plaintiff in this suit demanded an account from Bai Punjabai of the Bhimpura property from the testator's death to the execution of the deed of 13th October, 1868, and of the school-house property from the date of its purchase to the same time, and also an account against the trustees of the deed of 17th April, 1869, of the income of the Bhimpura property, and of its application.

Held, that accounts ought not to be required from Bai Punjabai. She had made over the property in question to trustees in 1868. There was no evidence that she had ever used any of the income for her own purposes, and the presumption was that she had faithfully discharged her duty. The account was probably barred by art. 120 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877). The trustees of the deed of 1869 had paid over the income received by them to the trustees of the earlier deed of 1868, who were entitled to receive it; and, therefore, no account would be decreed against them.

The plaintiff further prayed for an account against the representatives of Rupsi Bharmal, who had been trustee of the deed of 1868 from the date of its execution to his death in 1889. Under a decree passed in a previous suit (No. 113 of 1889), dated 10th August, 1893, brought by the trustees, they had received from Rupsi's estate the balance which in that suit they had claimed to be due from him to the charity. In that suit the trustees had not asked for an account against him.

Held, that the Advocate General as plaintiff in the present suit was barred by the decree in that suit under s. 43 of the Civ. Pro. Code (XIV of 1882). The trustees having then omitted to ask for an account could not sue again. The Advocate General represented the same interests as they did, and was, therefore, equally bound. Even, however, if that were not the case, the Court in the exercise of its discretion would not direct the account asked for. ADVOCATE GENERAL OF BOMBAY v. BAI PUNJABAI, 18 B. 551 ... 876

The plaintiff had claimed the value of standing crop or damages for the same. The Court found that the plaintiff had paid the purchase-money, but had not got possession, and ordered defendant to execute a deed of sale. On failure of the defendant to do so, the Court executed a deed of sale in plaintiff's favour under s. 262 of the Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882). The plaintiff thereupon brought the present suit to recover possession on the strength of the deed of sale. Defendant pleaded that this second suit was barred under ss. 13 and 43 of the Civ. Pro. Code.

Held, that s. 43 was not applicable and did not bar the present suit, because the alleged cause of action was not the breach of the contract, but a new and distinct one arising from the deed of sale which the defendant had contracted to pass.

Held, also, that s. 13, expl. II, was not applicable, because the object of that explanation would seem to be to compel the plaintiff to rely on all grounds which were open to him in support of the claim made by his plaint, which in the first suit was confined to obtaining a regular deed of sale. Code (XIV of 1882), or under that section read with s. 647, to transfer execution proceedings in a Small Cause Court to the Court of a Subordinate Judge. The ruling in the case of 5 B. 680, that these sections apply to execution proceedings in Small Cause Courts, is not affected by the explanation to s. 4 of Act VI of 1892.

Execution proceedings under a decree against A in a Small Cause Court were transferred by a District Judge to a Subordinate Judge's Court where execution was proceeding against A under another decree, and it was objected that, as by the concluding paragraph of s. 25 of the Civ. Pro. Code (XIV of 1882), the attachments under the two decrees would be in different Courts, s. 295 of the Code would not apply, and rateable distribution could not be granted.

Held, that the last paragraph of s. 25 did not convert the Subordinate Judge's Court into a Small Cause Court, but only provided for the trial of the suit, which had been transferred, being conducted by the Subordinate Judge's Court as a Small Cause suit.

The High Court will not in its extraordinary jurisdiction interfere, except under circumstances of a very special nature, with the discretion of a Judge who has transferred execution proceedings under a decree from one Subordinate Court to another.

Held, reversing the decree, that s. 30 of the Civ. Pro. Code was not applicable to the suit, which must be regarded as one in which the plaintiffs claimed to restrain the defendants from violating the common interest they all had in the land.

Held, further, that the defendants having erected the wall in dispute so as to exclude the plaintiffs from a part of the common land, there was a violation of the plaintiffs' right, and that, therefore, the plaintiffs were entitled to bring the suit for the removal of the wall. (21) S. 244—Decree—Execution—Questions arising in execution between the parties—Decree incapable of execution by reason of events subsequent to decree—Decree giving an option to the parties—Practice—Procedure.—A partition suit brought by a son against his father was referred to arbitration. On the 9th January, 1890, the award was published, and on the 27th March, 1890, the defendants moved for and obtained a decree in terms of the award. By this decree it was ordered that in satisfaction of the plaintiff's claim the defendant should pay to him Rs. 1,05,000 in the manner therein stated, viz., Rs. 40,000 to be paid forthwith and the balance of Rs. 65,000, to be paid "upon the plaintiff's delivering to the defendant certain specified property, which included two vessels or buglows, called respectively the 'Nasri' and 'Sambuk'." In no event was defendant to be required to pay the Rs. 65,000 before the 15th November, 1890. At the date of the decree the vessel "Sambuk" was at sea on a voyage, and on the 18th June, 1890, while still on the voyage, she was lost. On the 15th November, 1890, the plaintiff's attorneys demanded payment of the balance of Rs. 65,000. They offered to deliver the other properties specified in the decree, but stated that the vessel "Sambuk" had been lost. They offered to pay its value, which they estimated at Rs. 1,000. The defendants, however, demanded the delivery of the buglow, which they stated to be worth a very large sum. The defendant having, under the circumstances, refused to pay the Rs. 65,000, the plaintiff applied for execution of the decree, which was refused. He then obtained a rule calling on the defendant to show cause why the decree of the 27th March should not be amended or rectified by stating therein the amount of money to be paid to the defendant as an alternative of, if delivery of the vessel "Sambuk" could not be made, such delivery having become impossible.

That rule was discharged. The plaintiffs then took out a summons calling on the defendant to show cause why an order should not be made, under s. 244 of the Civ. Pro. Code, directing the plaintiffs to pay to the first defendant, in lieu of the delivery of the vessel "Sambuk," such sum of money as might be fixed by the Court as the value of or compensation for the loss of the vessel "Sambuk" in the decree mentioned, and why an order should not be made that on payment of such sum and delivery of the other properties mentioned in the decree which the plaintiffs were to deliver under the decree to the first defendant on payment by the latter to them of Rs. 65,000, the first defendant should pay to the plaintiffs Rs. 65,000 and interest thereon from the 15th day of November, 1890, mentioned in the said decree, and in the event of its being held that the first defendant was not bound to pay the said sum of Rs. 65,000, then why an order should not be made that the property mentioned in the decree which the plaintiffs were to hand over to the first defendant on payment of Rs. 65,000 should not be retained, used and appropriated absolutely by the plaintiffs for their own use and benefit, freed and discharged of all claims on the part of the first defendant, and why the first defendant should not be directed to withdraw the claims made by him to the said debt of Rs. 22,000, or thereabouts mentioned in the said affidavit of Ahmed bin Essa Khaliffa, and why such further or other order as to the Court might seem fit and the justice of the case may require should not be made in the premises and in relation to the properties mentioned in the decree which were to be delivered over by the plaintiffs to the first defendant on receiving from him Rs. 65,000, and why, in the alternative, this suit should not be restored on the board for trial.

It was contended by the plaintiff that the questions raised in the summons were questions arising in execution to be dealt with by a Judge in chambers under s. 244 of the Civ. Pro. Code (XIV of 1882), and that a fresh suit was not necessary.

Held, (dismissing the summons) that the application was not one in execution of a decree, nor was the question one arising in the course of execution, but that the decree having become incapable of execution, the summons asked the Judge to decide what were the rights of the parties in consequence of its non-execution.

Held, also (as to the part of the summons asking for restoration of the suit) that the matters in issue in the suit had been fully heard and determined and the rights of all parties had been settled by the decree, and consequently there was nothing further to be tried. The Court could not in this suit after passing a decree proceed to ascertain the rights of the parties under a state of facts quite different from those which appeared in the pleadings and arising subsequently to the decree. The defendant, who was 80 years of age, claimed the house as her absolute property, alleging that her son by a deed had given it to her as a provision of her maintenance. The deed stated that she had been made the owner of the house; that the donor had no right to it, and that it wholly belonged to her.

Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882)—(Continued).

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to the declaration prayed for. The surrounding circumstances showed that the house was revertible to the donor on the defendant's death. He had what in English law would be termed a vested remainder on her death, and he had, therefore, a saleable interest during her life. He had an interest which could be attached and sold under s. 266 of the Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882).

Pro. Code (XIV of* 1882) to review such order.—An order obtained from a Judge in chambers by an attorney against his client for the payment of costs, is a decree or order to the execution of which the provisions of Chap. XIX of the Civ. Pro. Code (XIV of 1882) apply. ... 327

S. 267 of the Civ. Pro. Code is applicable to all the property of the judgment-debtor out of which the decree can be satisfied either by delivery in obedience to the decree or by sale.

The words "liable to be seized" contained in s. 267 of the Civ. Pro. Code are words of description pointing out the kind of property in respect of which an enquiry can be held, viz., any property which is attachable under the decree.

Property of a judgment-debtor which he has mortgaged is prima facie liable to be seized in execution of a decree against him, and the fact that he has mortgaged it will not prevent its being attached and sold in execution of the decree subject to the mortgage-debt.

A person may be examined, under s. 267, in respect of property which is prima facie the property of the judgment-debtor, even although such person may allege that he is a mortgagee in possession of the attached property.

S. 622 of the Civ. Pro. Code (XIV of 1882) does not apply to a case where the order, of which review is sought, is made by the High Court. The Court referred to in s. 622 is a Court other than the High Court. In re PREMJI TRIKUMDAS, 17 B. 514

In 1888 he attached the mortgaged property in execution of the decree, whereupon the defendant intervened and applied to have the attachment removed, on the ground that prior to the attachment she had purchased the land under a registered deed of sale, dated the 23rd June, 1888. Her application was rejected on the 27th September, 1888. Subsequently the judgment-debtors applied and obtained the Court's permission to sell the land by private contract, and on the 1st November, 1888, the plaintiff purchased it and withdrew his application for execution on the 20th November, 1888. In 1889 the plaintiff brought this suit against the defendant to obtain the removal of certain portions of a culvert erected by her on the land. The defendant pleaded that she was the owner of the property, having purchased it on the 23rd June, 1888.

The Subordinate Judge passed a decree for the plaintiff, on the ground that though the plaintiff's sale-deed was not entitled to preference over the defendant's, still as she had taken no steps to establish her right to the property in a regular suit after her application for the removal of the plaintiff's attachment had been rejected, effect could not be given to her purchase. On appeal by the defendant the decree was reversed, and the plaintiff preferred a second appeal.

Held, confirming the appellate decree, that when the plaintiff withdrew his attachment on the 20th November, 1888, the parties were restored to the status quo ante. The object of the claim which was preferred by the defendant was, as contemplated by s. 278 of the Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), to obtain the removal of the attachment, and when that attachment was removed by the judgment-creditor's own act, there was no longer an attachment or any proceeding in execution on which the order could operate to the prejudice of the claimant, and, therefore, there was no necessity for her to bring a suit to set aside the order. The defendant's title to the property having been acquired on the 23rd June, 1888, was superior to the plaintiff's, which was not acquired before November, 1888. GOPAL PURSHOTAM v. On the proclamation of the sale being issued, Khushal intervened, alleging that the property had been sold to him by Dewji in 1883 at a private sale. The Subordinate Judge allowed his claim, and stopped the sale, being of opinion that he had power, under s. 287 of the Civ. Pro. Code, to make this order

Held, that the order was made without jurisdiction and must be discharged. Proceedings by way of claim as provided by s. 278 of the Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882) are not applicable where the property is directed to be sold under a mortgage decree, and s. 287 had no application. HIMATRAM v. KHUSHAL JETHIRAM GUJAR, 18 B. 98 ... 574

(32) S. 282—Order in attachment proceeding, effect of—Judgment debtor not necessarily a party to the investigation under an attachment proceeding.—The plaintiff obtained a decree. The defendants appealed. At the hearing of the appeal in the District Court a question was raised as to whether the defendants were not barred by limitation from denying the genuineness and validity of the lease and mortgage, they having failed to do so in certain execution proceedings which had taken place in 1890. It appeared that in execution of a decree against the father and the uncle of the defendants these lands had been attached. The plaintiff on that occasion had intervened, and set up his mortgage and lease which he produced. They were then held to be proved, and the lands were ordered to be sold subject to the plaintiff's mortgage. Upon these facts the District Judge held that by the attachment of their lands in these execution proceedings the defendants had been subrogated either to the cause of the decree-holder or to that of the plaintiff who intervened, and, therefore, they were parties "against whom the order was made." That order became conclusive against them within one year from its date, as they did not bring a suit to establish their right (art. 11, sch. II, Limitation Act, 1877). He, therefore, confirmed the decree of the Court of first instance.

On second appeal to the High Court,

Held, reversing the lower Court's decree, that the defendants were not necessarily to be regarded as parties against whom the order in the execution proceedings was made. Whether they were or not, depended on the facts of the case. The Court accordingly remanded the case that the District Judge might investigate the facts and pass a decree accordingly. On the 21st August, 1882, he was adjudged a bankrupt by the Supreme Court of the Straits Settlements, within whose jurisdiction he was then carrying on business as a merchant. On the 20th February, 1884, he executed a conveyance of the house to Mr. Carew, the trustee in bankruptcy, for the benefit of his scheduled creditors, of whom the defendant was one The defendant held a mortgage on the house for advances made by him to Faizulla. Mr. Carew had an agent in India, one Nazar Mahomed, with whom the defendant was a partner in business. On the 20th November, 1884, the plaintiffs obtained a decree for Rs. 78,000 against Faizulla and another person, and in execution of this decree they attached the house in question as the property of Faizulla. Prior to the attachment the defendant, in consideration of the mortgage-debt due to him, had obtained a transfer of the house from Carew with possession. No further consideration was paid by him at the time of the transfer. On the attachment being levied by the plaintiffs, the defendant claimed the house as purchaser from Carew, and the attachment was raised. The plaintiffs then filed this suit under s. 283 of the Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882) to establish their right to attach the house as the property of their judgment-debtor. The plaintiffs (the respondents) contended that the transfer of the house by Carew to the defendant was fraudulent, the defendant being a partner of Carew's agent, and no consideration having been paid for the transfer. The defendant (appellant) contended that it was sufficient for him to show that Carew's title was good, and that, if the house had validly passed to Carew, it could not afterwards be attached for Faizulla's debt. The plaintiffs (respondents) on the other hand argued that the defendant ought not to be allowed to set up Carew's title; that the transfer by Carew to him was fraudulent, and that he ought not to be allowed to benefit by his own fraud.

Held, that the defendant was entitled to set up Carew's title as a defence, although he might have been guilty of fraud in his subsequent dealings with Carew. If Carew's title neither originated in, nor was upheld by, any fraud of the defendant, and if the plaintiff's claim failed on proof of Carew's title alone, the defendant would not benefit by his own fraud, but by the proof of a title paramount to that of both plaintiffs and defendant.

In a suit brought under s. 283 of the Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882) to establish the right to attach property, it is for the plaintiff to prove that the property in question is the property of the judgment-debtors. The onus of proof is upon him. He can have no right to attach property which is proved either never to have belonged to his judgment-debtor, or having been his, to have passed out of his possession and ownership, and become, in law, the property of others prior to the time at which attachment is sought. The defendant in defending such a suit may, therefore, rely on the title of a third person.

A conveyance of immoveable property did not contain in the body of the deed, a description of it sufficient to identify it. In a foot-note, however, such a description was given, and it was signed by the assignee only. The deed was accepted by the Registrar, and was registered, and a certificate to that effect was given under s. 60 of the Registration Act (III of 1877). The deed being tendered in evidence was objected to on the ground that it ought to be treated as unregistered, since it had been improperly accepted for registration by the Registrar.

Held, that the error in accepting it, if error there was, did not invalidate the registration; see 2 I. A. 210. SHEKH ADAM ISUFBHAI v. JAMNADAS RANCHORDAS, 17 B. 94 ... 62

Subsequently the land was claimed by one Bhowani, who sued Bapu, the judgment-debtor, and Esat, the auction-purchaser, to set aside the sale and establish his title to the land. He succeeded in his suit, and in execution got possession of the land. Thereupon Esat (the auction-purchaser) applied under s. 315 of the Civ. Pro. Code (XIV of 1882), for a refund of his purchase-money, and the Subordinate Judge made an order directing Vithoba, the decree-holder, to repay it. Vithoba contended that he ought not to have been ordered to refund the money without having an opportunity of proving that the property had been properly sold in execution of his decree against Bapu, and that as he had not been made a party to Bhowani's suit he had had no opportunity of doing this. On application to the High Court, Held, that the order of the Subordinate Judge for the restitution of the purchase-money was wrong. S. 315 provides that the purchase-money paid at an execution sale is to be returned when it is found that the judgment-debtor has no saleable interest in the property sold. It does not prescribe how the fact is to be ascertained, but the conclusion from s. 313 as well as from general principles is that it must be a finding on some proceedings to which the judgment-creditor was a party or at any rate of which he had notice. In the present case there was no finding on which the Subordinate Judge could base his order for the restitution of purchase-money.

On the 10th March, 1886, the same property was put up for sale in execution of another decree, and purchased by the defendant. The sale to the defendant was confirmed on 3rd July 1886, and the sale to the plaintiff not until the 21st July, 1886. Certificates of sale were issued to both plaintiff and defendant on the same day, viz., on the 22nd September, 1886, and on the 14th February, 1887, the defendant was put in possession. In 1889, the plaintiff brought this suit to recover possession.

The defendant relied on s. 316 of the Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882). He contended that as under the section the title of a purchaser at a Court sale vests at the date of the confirmation of the sale to him, his (the defendant's) right was superior to that of the plaintiff, inasmuch as the sale to him was confirmed on the 3rd July, 1886, while the sale to the plaintiff was not confirmed until afterwards, viz., on the 21st July.

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover. By his prior purchase he had acquired an equitable or inchoate title to the property which was subsequently perfected by the certificate of sale. Nothing, therefore, passed to the defendant under his second sale.

The words "the title to the property sold" in s. 316 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882) mean the full perfected title arising on the sale becoming absolute. It is that title which under the section does not vest in the purchaser until confirmation. That provision, however, need not necessarily be construed as destroying any lesser interest which arises by reason of general equitable principles.

Quære.—Whether the provision in s. 316 as to the date at which the title of the purchaser is to vest does not apply only to as between the parties to the suit and persons claiming through or under them.

Held, that the mortgagee Kamalchand got no title to the property by his mortgage from Gajanan against the real owner Kushambhat; and Govind, who was in actual possession as his manager (whether or not there were others equally entitled to share in the management), was entitled to prevent the purchaser Lakshman taking possession, and having been dispossessed had a claim to be restored to possession under s. 335 of the Civ. Pending the appeal the parties entered into a compromise, under which it was agreed (inter alia) that the appeal should be withdrawn, and that the respondent should pay to Government the Court fees which the plaintiffs were liable to pay both in the first Court and in the Court of appeal. When the appeal came on for hearing, the appellants informed the Court of their intention to withdraw from the appeal. Thereupon the Government Pleader intervened, and applied for an order directing the respondent to pay; in accordance with the terms of the compromise, all the costs payable to Government on account of institution fees, &c., in the first Court as well as in the appellate Court. This application was opposed by both parties. The Government Pleader then moved the Court to dispauper the appellants under s. 414 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882).

Held, that the appeal having been withdrawn, no order could be made either under s. 412 or under s. 414 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Held, also, that it was not open to the Court to order the respondent to pay any fees on the strength of any agreement between the parties. BAI CHANDABA v. KUVER SAHEB BAPU SAHEB, 18 B. 464 ... 819

The plaintiffs alleged that their dealings, which were duly set forth in their plaint, had resulted in a heavy loss to the company, and they now sought to recover from the defendant the sum of Rs.e3,37,700-13-5. There had been originally five directors of the company, but at the date of suit two of them were dead and two had become insolvent. The plaint was filed in April, 1890.

Held (affirming the decision of Parsons, J.) (1) that the memorandum of association did not justify the directors of the company in dealing in shares of other companies, and that the transactions complained of by the plaintiffs were ultra vires.

(2) That the directors were liable to replace the moneys of the company which they had misapplied by applying them to a purpose which was ultra vires.

(3) That s. 10 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) does not apply to directors of companies, the directors not being persons in whom the property of the company is vested as contemplated by that section.

(4) That in any case the staleness of the demand was a valid defence to the action, the liquidators of the company having had full knowledge of the facts since the company went into liquidation, but no suit was filed until the expiration of twenty-three years. (2) Indian Companies Act (VI of 1882), s. 13—Contributory—Increase of capital—Illegal issue of shares—Reduction of capital.—The Nawab of Beyla Spinning, Weaving and Manufacturing Company, Limited, was registered under the Indian Companies Act (X of 1866). The original capital of the company consisted of Rs. 4,00,000 divided into 1,600 shares of Rs. 250 each. In 1882 the capital of the company was increased by Rs. 1,00,000 divided into 1,600 shares of Rs. 62-8. The resolution to increase the capital was not passed in accordance with the articles of association, i. e., "with the sanction of a special resolution of the company passed at a general meeting." On the 5th November, 1884, a resolution was passed at a general meeting of the company that the shareholders should take up the 459 shares of the original capital and 1,027 shares of the increased capital, which were then in the hands of the company in the proportion of one share to every two shares already held by them. In pursuance of this resolution the appellants took up several shares of the original capital as well as of the new capital. On 19th October, 1885, a general meeting of the company was held at which it was resolved that the resolution of the 5th November, 1884, and all acts done in connection with it should be set aside, that the shares taken by the shareholders in pursuance of that resolution should be taken back by the company, and such amounts as had been paid by them on those shares should be credited to their names in the company's books. This was accordingly done, and the shares were transferred to the name of the company. In October, 1886, the company was wound up by order of the Court. In settling the list of contributories the District Judge of Surat held that the appellants were liable, as contributories, in respect of all the shares which they had taken up in pursuance of the resolution of 5th November, 1884. On appeal from this decision,

Held, that with respect to the shares of the original capital, the resolution of the 19th October, 1885, was illegal and invalid. It operated, not as an investment by the company of its funds in its own shares, but as an extinguishment of the shares, and such extinguishment was virtually a reduction of the capital, which could not be done without complying with the provisions of s. 13 of the Indian Companies Act (VI of 1882). The holders of such shares were, therefore, properly placed on the list of contributories.

Held, also, that the issue of the shares of the new capital was illegal, as the resolution to increase the capital had not been come to in accordance with the articles of association. It was, therefore, open to company to set aside the resolution of 5th November, 1884. When it was set aside, the persons who held the new shares ceased to be shareholders, and could not, therefore, be held liable as contributories. BHIMBHAI v. ISHWARDAS JUGJIWANDAS, 18 B. 152

(3) Indian Companies Act (VI of 1882), s. 28—Shares issued as fully paid up—Rights of a purchaser with notice taking from a purchaser without notice—Notice—Contributory.—Twenty shares of the Bella Spinning, Weaving and Manufacturing Company, Limited, were originally allotted to A as fully paid up shares partly for work done and partly for work to be done for the company. The agreement under which the shares were so allotted was not registered as required by s. 28 of Act VI of 1882. ... 610

A sold three of these shares to D, who had no notice that they were not fully paid up. D sold the three shares to G, who was the managing director of the company. The company was wound up by the Court. At the date of the winding up, G was holder of the three shares. In settling the list of contributories, the Court ordered G's name to be placed on the list in respect of the three shares.

Held, that G was not liable as a contributory. Though G was a managing director of the company, and as such must have known that the shares had been issued as fully paid up shares without complying with S. 28 of Act VI of 1882, he was not on that account estopped from taking advantage of the equitable rule which protects a purchaser with notice taking from a purchaser without notice. In re GULABDAS BHAIDAS, 17 B. 672 ... 440

This petition was pending when the suit came on for hearing, but no order to stay proceedings had been obtained by the defendants and the plaintiff contended that under the circumstances he was entitled to obtain a decree, having regard to the fact that no such order had been made, and that by the rules of the Court such order could only be made in chambers.

Held, on application by the defendants at the hearing, that the proceedings must be stayed. VIRBAIJI v. THE WADIA MILLS COMPANY, 18 B. 65... 552

(5) Share-holder—Executor, or administrator of a shareholder, rights of—"Holding a share," meaning of—Agreement—Construction—Declaratory decree—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 42—Objection taken for first time in appeal—Practice—Procedure.--Prior to the year 1863 W. Wallace carried on an extensive timber trade in Burmah. In that year the defendant company was formed for the purpose of taking over the business from him together with the capital and assets engaged therein. The nominal capital of the company was Rs. 25,00,000 divided into one thousand shares of Rs. 2,500 each. On the 22nd July, 1864, an agreement carrying out the above object was executed between W. Wallace and the defendant company. This agreement set forth the assets and property to be transferred, and classified them as (a) "fixed assets," which consisted of immoveable property, buildings, &c., valued at Rs. 2,76,000 or thereabouts; and (b) assets other than fixed assets which consisted of what were called "forest operations," and of valuable contracts, rights and concessions from the King of Burmah, &c The agreement further specified the consideration to be paid to W. Wallace for each of these classes of assets. For the "fixed assets" he was (under the 12th clause of the agreement) to receive one hundred fully paid up shares of the company. That clause contained certain provisions as to the payment of the ordinary dividend upon those shares, and concluded with the provision that the directors of the company should not be bound to consent to or to recognize as valid any assignment made by W. Wallace, his executors or administrators of the shares, or any of them, within five years from the date of the registration of the company.

For the remaining assets it was provided by the 13th clause of the agreement that W. Wallace, his executors, or administrators should be entitled, so long as he or they should hold the hundred shares, to an extra or preferential dividend payable out of such surplus net profits as might remain in any year after paying a dividend of twelve per cent. on all the shares of the company including the said hundred shares and after setting apart an amount (left to the discretion of the directors) for the reserve fund. The said extra or preferential dividend was to be one-third of such surplus net profits. The said 13th clause also provided that if W. Wallace died within the above stated period of five years, his executors or administrators should not be entitled to the said extra or preferential dividend after the expiration of the said period notwithstanding they might continue to hold the said shares.

Subsequently to the execution of this agreement the business and assets were transferred to the company by W. Wallace, and one hundred fully paid up shares were duly allotted to him under cl. 12, and his name was entered on the register of shareholders. In 1888, W. Wallace, then domiciled in England, died. By his will he appointed his three brothers--R. Wallace, L. A. Wallace and A. F. Wallace—his executors, and he directed that his executors should hold the said shares and all his interest therein and attached to the holding thereof upon trust for such of his said brothers as might survive him, if more than one, as joint tenants. R. Wallace died in the testator's lifetime and only A. F. Wallace proved the will. On the 27th September, 1888, letters of administration, with the will annexed, were granted by the High Court of Bombay to the plaintiff in this suit (F. Yorke Smith) as attorney for the said executor A. F. Wallace. On the 29th September, 1889, the said letters of administration were produced to and registered with the defendant company. The hundred shares continued to stand in the testator's name in the register of shareholders. In a parallel column in the register, under the heading "remarks," the following entry was made:—"Administration in India to the estate of W. Wallace has been granted to Mr. Frederick Yorke Smith as attorney for W. A F. Wallace." Save for this entry the register remained unaltered after the testator's death.

The plaintiff now sued to have it declared that cl. 13 of the agreement was still in operation, and that as such administrator as aforesaid he was entitled to the extra or preferential dividend payable on the said hundred shares if and when there should be sufficient net profits to allow payments thereof under the said clause. The company disputed the plaintiff's claim. They contended that A. F. Wallace, the proving executor of the testator's will, had ceased to hold the shares as executor, and was holding them as trustee under the specific bequest in the will, and that he was only entitled to the preferential dividends, if, at the time when such dividends were declared, he was holding the shares in the capacity of executor and as an undistributed part of the testator's estate. They insisted that the plaintiff should prove that he so held the shares before he could be entitled to the declaration sought for. The executor was examined in England on commission. He deposed that the estate had been got in, and the debts paid; that the estate had not been divided, because it would not be in accordance with the private wishes of the testator, which they (i.e., he and his brother L. A. Wallace) were aware of; that, apart from these private wishes, there was no reason why the estate should not be divided between his brother and himself.

Held, by Farran, J., and by the Court of appeal, that the plaintiff was entitled to the declaration sought for. The executor or his attorney (the plaintiff) was still the registered holder of the shares, and under cl. 13 of the agreement it was intended that W. Wallace, his executors or administrators, should be entitled to the extra dividend so long as he or they should be the registered holder or holders of the shares, without reference to the beneficial interest therein. There was nothing to be found in the agreement, express or implied, showing the intention of the parties to regard anything but the legal holding, and to go beyond that holding would virtually be to add a new term to the agreement.

In appeal, the defendants contended that the Court would not make a declaratory decree with regard to a right which (as in the present case) was future and contingent, there being no fund actually in existence, when the suit was brought, from which a preferential dividend could be claimed, and no certainty that there ever would be such a fund.

Company—(Concluded).

Held, by the Court of appeal, that the present case was one in which in the interests of both parties the Court, in the exercise of a sound discretion, should make a declaration as to the right in question. The right was existent, and although the exercise of it was undoubtedly contingent on there being a balance of profits as contemplated by cl. 13 of the agreement, the very nature of the agreement assumed that there might and probably would be such a balance, and a large sum had been already applied towards the dividend in question. Further, it was intended that the directors should exercise their discretion as to the amount to be carried to the reserve fund upon which the balance of profit available for the preferential dividend depended. It was, therefore, from the very nature of the case, important that the directors should know for certain whether the right to a preferential dividend was still in existence as contended by the plaintiff, or had come to an end. The circumstance, moreover, that the objection had been taken for the first time on appeal would by itself be fatal to it. BOMBAY BURMAH TRADING CORPORATION, LIMITED v. F. (7) Suit by liquidator—Limitation—Allotment of shares—Commencement of shareholder's liability—Indian Companies Act (VI of 1882), s. 125.—The liquidator of the Gujrat Company in September, 1889, sued the defendant as a registered shareholder of the company to recover a sum of Rs. 2,483 due from him in respect of his shares. The plaint set forth the particulars of demand, one of which was Rs. 250, being the amount of deposit payable before allotment on 15th July, 1886, and another a sum of Rs. 250 payable on allotment on 15th July, 1886. This suit was brought on 10th September, 1889, and the defendant contended that the above two items of claim were barred by limitation. The lower Courts, notwithstanding the statement in the plaint found, as a fact, that the allotment of the shares was really made in November, 1886.

Held, therefore, assuming three years to be the period of limitation, that the claim was not barred. The debt due from the defendant did not become recoverable until he was registered as shareholder. MALICHAND DHARAMCHAND v. DALSUKHRAM HARGOVINDAS, 17 B. 469 ... 305

On his death in 1852, disputes arose between Chinto and Ganesh regarding the management of the sansthan, each claiming to be the heir and successor of Dharnidhar. After a long litigation they entered into a compromise in 1881, by which a portion of the sansthan property, consisting of certain inam villages, lands, and varshasans, were assigned to Ganesh, and Chinto was left in charge of the rest of the sansthan property, together with all the rights, privileges, and manpans enjoyed by the hereditary trustee of the endowment. In 1886 by a decree made in a suit called the "Charity suit," Chinto was removed from his office, and the plaintiffs were appointed trustees in his place. In 1889 the plaintiffs filed the present suit to set aside the compromise of 1881, and recover back the sansthan property assigned to Ganesh under that compromise. Ganesh pleaded, by way of set-off or equitable defence, that if the plaintiffs were at liberty to set aside the compromise, they were bound to restore to him in lieu of the trust property assigned to him under the compromise certain private property belonging to his adoptive father which he had given up.

Held, that Ganesh could not claim as a set-off or as an equitable defence to recover from the plaintiffs the private property, in question there being nothing in the compromise to show that there was any exchange of private property for trust property.

Held, also, that the suit did not fall under s. 539 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882). SHRI DHUNDIRAJ GANESH DEV v. GANESH, 18 B. 721 ... 990

(1) Consideration—Compromise of a bona fide claim a good consideration—Agreement to lend money on mortgage—Delay in completion of agreement—Subsequent agreement to pay interest from a certain date—Consideration for such agreement—Right to rescind—Time of essence of contract—Suit by lender against borrower.—On 31st August, 1891, the plaintiff agreed to lend the defendant Rs. 30,000 on a mortgagee. By the agreement the mortgagor (defendant) was to clear the title, and the time fixed for completion of the agreement was 8 days from its date. The mortgage was not completed within the stipulated time, in consequence of the non-production of the title-deeds by prior mortgagees, who were to be paid off out of the money to be advanced by the plaintiff. On the 9th September, 1891, the plaintiff's solicitors wrote to the defendant reminding him that the time for completion had expired, and stating that the plaintiff would require interest to be paid on the money which he had with him lying idle on the defendant's account. On the 24th September, 1891, the plaintiff formally tendered the Rs. 30,000 to the defendant, but as no mortgage-deed was then ready for execution, the money was not then paid. The plaintiff was always ready and willing to advance the money, but in consequence of the defendant's delay he insisted on interest being paid from the 24th September, 1891. The title-deeds were ultimately produced at the end of November or the beginning of December, and on 7th December, 1891, the draft mortgage was sent to the defendant for approval. It contained a clause stipulating for payment of interest from 24th September, 1891. On the 9th December, 1891, the plaintiff had an interview with the defendant. The two points then discussed were (1) what time after due date should be allowed to the defendant (mortgagor) for payment of interest; (2) whether interest on the principal sum should run from the 24th September, 1891. On the first point the plaintiff gave way, allowing defendant fifteen days instead of eight as originally provided. As to the second point, he declined to advance the money unless interest was paid from the 24th September, 1891. The defendant ultimately agreed to this. The mortgage-deed was duly engrossed with a stipulation for payment of interest from the 24th September, 1891, and the 26th January, 1892, was fixed as the day for execution. On that day, however, one of the defendant's daughters who had to execute the deed was absent, and the plaintiff refused to advance the money until her signature was obtained. Subsequently the defendant refused to sign the deed on the ground that it contained the clause for payment of interest from 24th September, 1891. He contended that he was not liable to pay interest from that date. The plaintiff brought this suit claiming Rs. 1,865-12 as damages for the defendant's breach of agreement. The lower Court held that although the original agreement of 31st August, 1891, mentioned no date from which interest should run, the defendant on the 9th December, 1891, had agreed to pay it from 24th September, 1891, and had made no objection on the point until February, 1892. The defendant contended that, if such an agreement was made on the 9th December, 1891, it was without consideration, but the Court held that the plaintiff was at that date at liberty to rescind the agreement altogether, and that he had consented not to rescind in consideration of being paid interest from the 24th December, 1891. The lower Court accordingly passed a decree for the plaintiff.

Semble that time was not of the essense of the contract, but

Held that, in any case, under the circumstances there was consideration for the agreement made by the defendant to pay interest from the 24th September. The plaintiff clearly regarded himself as entitled to rescind, and at the defendant's request agreed to forbear to do so if the defendant would consent to pay interest from 24th September, 1891. The claim of the right to rescind was undoubtedly a real one and made in good faith, and the forbearance to enforce it might well be an inducement to the defendant to agree to the plaintiff's terms, and the principle laid down in Miles v. New Zealand Alford Estate Co., (32 Ch. April, 1890, the defendant signed a contract (No. 3053) to buy from the plaintiffs 25 bales grey dhoties "June shipment, in four lots, with an interval of four weeks." These goods were not supplied, as they could not be obtained at the price limited. On 24th September, 1890, the defendant gave the plaintiffs an order at an increased limit of price in the following terms:—"Please telegraph your Manchester friends to purchase on my account 25 bales grey dhoties relating to No. 3053 at an all-round advance of 1*d*. per pair on original limits for November, December, January shipments, in three monthly lots, about 8 bales to be shipped in each month." This order was accepted and the goods were shipped as follows:—6 bales were handed to the carriers (the S. & N. W. Railway Co.) in Manchester on the 28th November, 1890, and were shipped at Birkenhead on the 9th December, 1890; 6 bales were handed to the same carriers on the 4th December, 1890, and were shipped on the 13th December, 1890; 10 bales were handed to the same carriers on the 23rd December and 1 bale on the 24th December, and these 11 bales were shipped on the 6th January, 1891. The defendant refused to accept the goods. He contended that the documents of 18th April and 24th September should be read together, and that the final contract was for November, December, January shipments, in three monthly lots at intervals of four weeks. He also contended that the shipment on the 9th December, 1890, was a late shipment, and that he was not, therefore, bound to accept the goods under the contract. As to this last contention the plaintiffs alleged that by the custom of Bombay in the case of contracts made with members of the Native Piece-goods Association, the date of the carrier's weight note was to be regarded as the date of shipment, and that, under such a contract as the one in question, delivery to the Railway Company or other inland carrier was equivalent to shipment. This custom, it was alleged, originated in consequence of the above Association having agreed, that all piece-goods ordered out by its members should be conveyed to Bombay by certain lines of steamers only and by no others. It was stated that, unless some such custom existed, it would in many instances be impossible for Bombay merchants to carry out their contracts, as no steamers of the selected lines might be available. The Judge of the Court of Small Causes at the hearing found that the alleged custom existed, and was generally accepted and understood by merchants and dealers in Bombay.

On reference to the High Court,

Held, (1) that the contract finally agreed on was that 25 bales relating to No. 3053 (i e., the document of the 18th April) should be purchased on defendant's account at an all-round advance of 1*d*. per pair on the original limits. Such bales to be shipped in the manner and at the times mentioned in the document of the 24th September, 1890;

(2) that evidence of the alleged custom or usage of trade was not admissible under s. 92, proviso (5), of the Evidence Act (I of 1872) to explain or vary the natural and ordinary meaning of the words in the contract. The parties contracted for a shipment on board of a ship or steamer, and to allow evidence of a usage that delivery to a Railway Company at an inland town should be regarded as equivalent to shipment on board a vessel at a seaport town would be to allow evidence of a usage repugnant to, or inconsistent with, the express terms of the contract.

The contract in question provided that disputes between the parties were to be referred to the arbitration of two merchants, and that should the arbitrators be unable to agree, they should appoint an umpire. The plaintiffs and defendant referred their dispute to two arbitrators. These arbitrators disagreed in their report, and referred the case to the Bombay Chamber of Commerce for the appointment of an umpire. The Chamber of Commerce appointed an umpire, who made his award.

Held, that the appointment of the umpire was invalid. The arbitrators could not delegate the power of appointment conferred on them by the contract. SMITH (J. C.) v. LUDHA GHELLA DAMODAR, 17 B. 129 = Chitty's S.C.C.R. 320 ... 84

(2) Taxation—Attorney and client—Trustees—Bills of costs paid by majority of trustees—Right of dissenting trustee to have bills taxed even after payment.—In a suit relating to a charitable trust the decree directed that the costs of all parties thereto, when taxed, should be paid out of the trust fund. Certain bills of costs were subsequently furnished to the trustees by the attorneys. Two of the trustees thought the bills reasonable, and agreed that they should be paid. The third trustee objected to the amount of the bills as exorbitant, and desired that they should be taxed. Notwithstanding his protest, however, the other trustees paid the bills without taxation. He, thereupon, took out a summons calling upon his co-trustees and the attorneys to show cause why the bills should not be taxed and why they should not refund any sum which had been overpaid.

Held, that the dissenting trustee was entitled to have the bills taxed, although they had been paid, and that the High Court had jurisdiction to order taxation to be made. JIJIBHOY MUNCHERJI JIJIBHOY v. BYRAMJI JIJIBHOY, 18 B. 189 ... 634

Held, that the suit was one for a declaration and consequential relief under s. 7, cl. 4 (c) of the Court Fees Act, and that as the claim was valued at Rs. 230 only, the appeal lay under Act VII of 1837, s. 8, to the District Court. (5) S. 7. cl. 4, sub-cls. (c) and (d)—Valuation of suit - Valuation of a suit for injunction—Injunction—Appeal—Order rejecting plaint as insufficiently stamped.—A suit for declaration of right and for an injunction falls under s. 7, cl. 4, sub-cls. (c) and (d) of the Court Fees Act VII of 1870. The valuation of the relief sought in such a suit rests with the plaintiff, and not with the Court.

A. sued B. and C. (1) for a declaration of his title to certain property, and (2) for an injunction restraining C. from paying, and B from receiving, an allowance of Rs. 2,400 a year out of the income of the property in dispute. A. valued each of the reliefs sought at Rs. 130, and affixed a Court-fee stamp of Rs. 20 to the plaint.

The Court of first instance rejected the plaint as insufficiently stamped, holding that the claim for the injunction sought should have been valued at ten times the annual allowance paid by C. to B., as provided by s. 7, cl. 2 of Act VII of 1870.

On appeal to the High Court,

Held, that the suit fell under s. 7, cl. 4, sub-cls. (c) and (d) of the Court Fees Act, and the plaintiff had a right to put his own valuation on the relief sought.

Held, also, that the order rejecting the plaint as insufficiently stamped was appealable. SARDARSINGJI v. GANPATSINGJI, 17 B. 56 ...

Pro. Code (Act X of 1882), for the removal of a certain otta standing in front of the plaintiff's shop as an obstruction to the public way. The plaintiff, thereupon, brought this suit against the Secretary of State for India in Council for a declaration that the land on which the otta stood was his property and not that of the Government.

Held, that the public roads being vested by s. 37 of the Land Revenue Code (Bombay Act V of 1879) in the Government of Bombay, they were "interested to deny" the plaintiff's title to the land, and, therefore, under s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), the plaintiff (subject to the discretion of the Court) was entitled to a declaration as against the Government of his right to the land, and the plaintiff was not called upon to wait until the Government had taken possession of the land.

It was contended that the jurisdiction of the Court to make the declaration prayed for was taken away by the last clause of s. 133, which provides that "no order made by a Magistrate under this section shall be called in question in any Civil Court."

Held, that the Magistrate's order under this section is not a conclusive determination of the question of title. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL v. JETHABHAI KALIDAS, 17 B. 293. ... 191

They are extradited for committing dacoity in British India. The Magistrate, who held a preliminary inquiry into the matter, committed the accused to the Sessions Court on a charge under s. 393 of the Indian Penal Code (XLV of 1860). The Sessions Judge amended the charge to one under s. 395, on the ground that, as the accused had been extradited on a charge under s. 395, they could be tried and convicted only under that section, and no other. At the end of the trial, the Sessions Judge finding that the accused were guilty of theft, but not of dacoity, acquitted them.

Held, reversing the order of acquittal, that it was competent to the Sessions Judge to alter the charge under s. 227 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882) and under s. 238 to convict the accused of the minor offence, which the evidence established.

Certain property was attached in execution of a decree. Thereupon accused No. 1 applied to have the attachment raised, on the ground that he had purchased the property from the judgment-debtor under a sale-deed executed long before the date of the attachment. In the summary inquiry, which was made under s. 278 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), he produced the sale-deed, and accused No. 2 was called as his witness and supported his claim. The Subordinate Judge found that the deed was forgery, and rejected the claim. Proceeding then under s. 478 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882), he held the inquiry directed by that section, and committed both the accused to the Sessions Court on charges of perjury and forgery. During the pendency of the inquiry under s. 478, the accused No. 1 filed a civil suit to establish the genuineness of the sale-deed and set aside the attachment. He also applied to the High Court to quash the commitment or stay the criminal proceedings pending the disposal of the civil suit.

Held, refusing the application, that the mere fact that a regular suit was filed to establish the genuineness of the sale-deed was not a sufficient ground for quashing the commitment, or for adjourning the trial pending the hearing of the civil suit.

Held, also, that the power given to a Civil Court under Chap. XXXV of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882) to take action regarding "any offence referred to in s. 195" is not ordinarily restricted, in regard to offences relating to documents, to such offences only when committed by a party to the proceeding in which the document was given in evidence. (1) Easement of necessity—Light and air—Severance of tenements by grantor—Implied grant—Implied reservation of easement—Derogation of grant—Reservation of easements of necessity—Injunction—Easements Act V of 1882, s. 13.—One Wallabh was the owner of a certain house behind which was a courtyard or chok, half of which belonged to him and the other half to one Mancharam, (the defendant's father), who owned a house close by. Two of the rear rooms of Wallabh's house abutted upon his portion of the chok, and had two doors opening out into the chok. In 1861, Wallabh sold (inter alia) his half of the chok to Mancharam. The conveyance contained no reservation of any rights over the chok. Wallabh having died in 1875-76, his widow Jamna sold his house to the plaintiff, and shortly afterwards the defendant (Mancharam's son) put up a hoarding on the chok which blocked up the above mentioned doors of the plaintiff's house, and obstructed the light and air passing through them into the said two rear rooms. The plaintiff sued for an injunction.

Held, that as Wallabh had made an absolute sale to Mancharam of his portion of the chok, expressly reciting that he had reserved no interest in the chok, it would in the circumstances of this case be contrary to equity and good conscience to hold that he impliedly reserved a right of light and air over the chok, so as to prevent B, from building on the chok and thus obstructing the windows and doors in Wallabh's house overlooking the chok.

Held, also, that the case was not governed by s. 13, clause (c) of the Easements Act (V of 1882), which was not extended to the Bombay Presidency till Act VIII of 1891 was passed. CHUNILAL MANCHARAM v. MANISHANKAR ATMARAM, 18 B. 616 ... 920

(2) Light and air—Obstruction—Injunction or damages—Specific Relief Act I of 1877—Costs—Costs where lower Court grants an injunction and appeal Court refuses injunction, but awards damages.—The plaintiff was the owner of a house in Jambulwadi Street in Bombay. The defendant owned a house to the east of it, and between the two houses was a gully three feet seven inches wide the part of which next the defendant's house was a gutter. On the ground floor of the plaintiff's house were four windows and on the first floor two windows all looking out into the gully and all of them ancient windows. The defendant's house originally was a little higher than the plaintiff's house and consisted of a ground floor, a first floor and a loft. Shortly before suit, the defendant pulled down this house and on the same site began to build a new four-storied house with a loft.

The plaintiff sued for an injunction, alleging that this new house, which would be of much greater height than the old one, would completely block up his ancient windows and cause him material damage, there being no other windows in his house on the side next the defendant. The defendant in his written statement denied that his new house would cause material damage to the plaintiff. He alleged that his old house, which was higher than the plaintiff's, had a projecting cornice, so that hardly any direct light came to the plaintiff's windows, which were almost, if not entirely, lighted by the light that came from each end of the gully. He further stated that his new house would have no cornice and that he had widened the gully, so that light to the plaintiff's windows would not be appreciably diminished, but that even if the passage had not been widened there would have been little diminution of light. He also alleged that the plaintiff had other windows and sources of light than the said six windows. While denying all damage, the defendant, however, to avoid litigation and without prejudice paid into Court Rs. 200, which he said was more than sufficient to compensate the plaintiff.

After filing the suit the plaintiff obtained a rule for an injunction at the date of which the walls of the defendant's house had been built up as far as the second floor. The rule was subsequently discharged, the defendant consenting that the case should be argued at the hearing as if the new house was then in the same condition. The defendant, however, subsequently continued to build, and at the date of hearing it was practically complete.

The lower Court (STARLING, J.) found that prior to the building of the new house direct light came to the plaintiff's windows to the extent at all events of 5°, and in addition to this a considerable amount of lateral light came to the windows over the defendant's roof. The Court held that, as the plaintiff had a right to this light by prescription, he was absolutely entitled to the whole of it: that the defendant had by his new building cut off all the direct light, and that practically all the light left to the plaintiff was reflected light, the amount of which depended on the condition in which the defendant might choose to keep the walls of his house. Under these circumstances the lower Court, looking at the house as if it was still in the condition in which it was at the time the injunction was discharged, held that the plaintiff was entitled to a mandatory injunction, and directed the defendant to remove the upper portion of the house which had been built since that time. On appeal:—

Held, that although the plaintiff's light had been sensibly diminished by the defendant's new building, there had not been such a large, material and substantial damage as to require interference by injunction, or that the plaintiff's room had been rendered unfit for the purpose for which it might reasonably be expected to be used.

The appeal Court, therefore, varied the decree of Starling, J., and refused an injunction, but ordered the defendant to pay the plaintiff Rs. 500 as damages.

On the question of costs it was argued for the defendant (appellant) that he should be given his costs of appeal, as he had succeeded in setting aside the injunction granted by the lower Court and should also get his costs of hearing in the lower Court, as the whole contest there had been as to the right to an injunction, which in appeal had been refused. The defendant had paid Rs. 200 into Court when he filed his written statement, and would have paid more if he could have obtained any indication from the plaintiff of the amount that would satisfy him. Nothing, however, would satisfy the plaintiff but an injunction, and he had failed to get it.

Held, that the plaintiff should have his costs of hearing in the lower Court and that each party should pay his costs of the appeal and of the proceedings on the rule for an injunction before the trial. The ordinary rule should be observed, and the costs should follow the event. The event in this case was that the plaintiff had proved his case against the defendant, although he had not got the precise form of relief which he wanted. If a party substantially succeeds, he is entitled to his costs. GHANASHAM N. NADKARNI v. MOROBA RAMCHANDRA PAI, 18 B. 474 ... 825

(4) Right of way—Prescription—Prescriptive right of the defendant to have branches of his trees overhanging the plaintiff's land—Right of the defendant to go on to the plaintiff's land to collect the fruit of the trees distinct from and not necessary to the right to have the branches overhanging. —The defendant having acquired a prescriptive right to have the branches of his trees overhanging the plaintiff's land, the lower Courts held that he had a right to go on to the plaintiff's land for the purpose of gathering the fruit of trees, on the ground that the prescriptive right to have the branches of his trees overhanging the plaintiff's land carried with it an "accessory" right to enjoy the profits of the branches in the best way possible.

Held, (reversing the lower Court's decree), that the right to go on the plaintiff's land to pick the fruit off the branches was perfectly distinct from the prescriptive right to have the branches overhanging the land, and could not be said to be accessory to the latter right in the sense of being within the limits of that right. (5) Right of way—Right of drainage—Mortgage—Mortgage of part of a house—Easement over the other part granted to the mortgage by the mortgage-deed —Subsequent sale of parts of the house to different owners—Sale of mortgaged part subject to the mortgage—Mortgage paid off by purchaser—Purchaser's right to easement—License—Grant of right of way in a mortgage of part of property of mortgagor—Reservation by mortgagor of similar right in respect of other property not mortgaged by him—Vendor and purchaser —Sale of land subject to a mortgage giving a right of way—Mortgage paid off by purchaser—Mortgagee not a party to conveyance—Receipt for mortgage money endorsed on conveyance.—V., the owner of a house, mortgaged the east portion of it to M. in 1878. The mortgage-deed gave to the mortgagee the use of a certain privy situated in another part of the house and the right of way to it through a certain bol or passage. V, subsequently sold the whole house to C., and C., in 1880, mortgaged the western part of it to R., who got a decree, and in execution the part mortgaged to him (i.e., the west) was sold in 1885, and the defendant became the purchaser. In 1887 C. sold the east part to the plaintiff, who paid off the mortgage to M., and obtained M.'s endorsement of payment on his deed of conveyance. The plaintiff subsequently sued to restrain the defendant from interfering with his use of the passage and of the privy. The defendant alleged that both were comprised in the property purchased by him at the Court sale in 1885, and that the right given by the mortgage of 1878 was merely a license to the mortgagee and not an easement. ... 489

Held, that the use of the passage and of the privy was a privilege granted by the very instrument which created the mortgage, and should be regarded as a privilege ancillary to the use of the part of the house mortgaged to M. in 1879. The defendant's purchase in 1885 was subject to the easement acquired by M. (the mortgagee), and the plaintiff had purchased the mortgagee's interest in the house, which included her right by way of easement. The plaintiff was, therefore, entitled to the use of the privy and the passage.

In the mortgage-deed of 1880, by which the west part of the house was mortgaged by C. to R., the following clause was contained:—"You are to have the use of the drain for passing water as it has continued from old times."

Held, that these words should be understood as intended to reserve to C. (the mortgagor), in respect of the part of the house not included in the mortgage, a right to use the drain similar to the right given to the mortgagee. The right so reserved by C. was afterwards sold by C. to the plaintiff along with the east part of the house in 1887, and the plaintiff was, therefore, entitled to the use of the drain.

The plaintfff purchased a part of the house which the vendor had previously mortgaged to M. The mortgage-deed gave to the mortgagee the use of a certain privy and the right of going to it through a passage situated at the rear of the mortgaged part of the house. M. was not a party to the conveyance to the plaintiff, but at the time of the purchase the plaintiff paid off M.'s mortgage, and M. signed a receipt for the mortgage money endorsed on the conveyance.

Held, that the plaintiff must be taken to have purchased the mortgagee's interest in the house including the right by way of easement over the passage. VISHNU v. RANGO GANESH, 18 B. 382 ... 763

(1) Injunction—Highway—Place dedicated by owner of land for convenience of occupiers of adjoining houses—User of such open space—Covenant or grant presumed—Easement—Right of way—Landlord and tenant—Variance between pleading and evidence—Practice—Procedure.—The plaintiff and defendant occupied houses situated in the same lane and opposite each other. Close to both houses was an open space in which a cross had stood. The plaintiff alleged that the said vacant space was originally intended for and had always been used by the occupants of his house and the residents in the lane in common for the purposes of recreation, save where the cross stood. The cross had been for many years visited by Christian worshippers who prayed and worshipped there. The plaintiff also alleged that, in addition to the general use of the open space, he and his predecessors in title and the occupants of his said house had for more than twenty years used the open space as a footway and a way for carriages and other vehicles to approach the said house and to stand and be able to turn there. He complained that the defendant had wrongfully removed the cross, and enclosed the greater portion of the said open space, and he prayed for a declaration that he and the occupants of his house were entitled to the use of the said space for purposes of recreation and as a footway and carriage way and for an injunction. The defendant pleaded that the whole of the open space formerly belonged to a Portuguese religious confraternity who were the fazendars of both of his property and the plaintiff's; that this confraternity had permitted the cross to be erected on the land, at which the residents of the houses of the plaintiff and defendant and other adjacent houses who were then Portuguese used to assemble and worship; that the Portuguese having left the locality the cross was removed, and the part of the open space which had been enclosed by the defendant had been sold to him by the confraternity in 1887. He denied the use of the space alleged by the plaintiff.

Held, that the evidence was not sufficient to establish that the land in dispute had been dedicated to the public, but that, on the evidence, the Court was justified in presuming and ought to presume a covenant on the part of the fazendari owners of the oart to keep the lane, including the upper end of it, open for the use of the owners of the houses abutting upon it. Such a covenant should be presumed equally in the case of a landowner giving land for building purposes to fazendari tenants on a perpetual tenure at a fixed rent and in the case of a owner selling land out and out for building purposes.

Where the plaintiff suing to prevent an encroachment on certain land alleged that the land was set apart for recreation, but the evidence established that it was set apart generally for the more convenient occupation of the houses surrounding it (which would include recreation puoposes).

Held that the plaintiff ought not on that account to fail altogether and be left to a fresh action. The defendant had not been misled or induced to refrain from calling evidence to rebut the plaintiff's case. RANCHORDASS AMTHABAI v. MANEKLAL GORDHANDASS, 17 B. 648 ... 425

(2) On land—Injunction—Damages—Legal rights of owner of land—Owner not compellable to accept compensation instead of removal of encroachment.—In a suit to recover land adjacent to a temple belonging to the defendants, on which land the defendants had encroached by building verandahs, the lower Courts found that the land sued for was the property of the plaintiff subject to the defendants' right of access to the temple, and directed the defendants to pay compensation to the plaintiff for the encroachment. The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Held, that the land being found to be the plaintiff's, the Courts could not compel him to part with his legal rights, and accept compensation against his will however reasonable it might appear to be. The defendants were accordingly ordered to remove the verandahs complained of. GOVIND VENKAJI v. SADASHIV BHARMA SHET, 17 B. 771 ... 506

(3) Tax—Payment of a tax for one year without protest—Payment of the tax in a subsequent year under protest—Suit to recover money so paid—Cause of action.—The plaintiff paid a house tax, at the rate of Rs.5, for the year 1890 without any protest. When the tax was sought to be levied from the plaintiff at the same rate for the year 1891, he objected to the levy as illegal and excessive, and paid the tax under protest. He then sued to recover what he alleged was an excess charge of Rs. 5 in respect of the tax for 1891. His claim was rejected on the ground that he was estopped from recovering the alleged excess by reason of his having paid the tax for 1890 without protest.

Held, that the suit was not barred. The levy of a tax in each year gives a new and distinct cause of action, and the payment of the tax without protest for one year does not bar a suit to recover a sum paid in a subsequent year under protest on account of a tax which was not legally chargeable for that year. (1) Agreement not to execute a decree—Suit to restrain execution—Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 244—Res judicata—Agreement not to execute regarded as satisfaction of decree—Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 257*a*, 258 373.—Mukund and Antaji were partners, and as such were indebted to Haridas. Antaji died, and subsequently the debt was settled between Haridas on one side and Mukund and Antaji's widow, as guardian of her minor sons, on the other. For a moiety of the debt a bond was passed by Mukund to Haridas, and for the other moiety by the widow Antaji. Haridas filed a suit against Mukund and got a decree, which was satisfied.

Haridas then sued the widow on her bond. The Court allowed her objection that she was not competent to give a bond binding her sons personally, and of its own accord made Mukund a defendant, and passed a decree against Mukund and Antaji's estate. Haridas assigned this decree to Ramchandra, who applied for execution against Mukund, Mukund thereupon filed this suit against Haridas and Ramchandra praying for an injunction against the execution of the said decree and for damages against Haridas. He alleged that during the pendency of the suit in which the said decree had been passed, Haridas had agreed that he would not obtain a decree against him, and that, if such a decree were passed, he would not execute it. The lower appeal Court rejected the plaint, holding (1) that as between the plaintiff Mukund and the defendant Ramchandra the question in issue was res judicata, (2) that there was no cause of action against the defendant Haridas. On appeal to the High Court, Held, that, as between Mukund and Ramchandra, the suit was not res judicata. The alleged agreement by its very terms provided for the event of the decree being passed, and was only intended to prevent its being executed.

It having been urged that the question was one which could be decided in execution, and that under s. 244 of the Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), the present suit would not lie, Held, that the words "relation to execution" in s. 244 must be restricted to "the contents of the order made, or to how far it has been carried out," and do not, therefore, include an agreement not to execute the decree.

It being further contended that the agreement raised a question as to the "satisfaction" of the decree, and was, therefore, void without the sanction of the Court,

Held, that the satisfaction contemplated by s. 244 must have arisen out of some transaction between the parties subsequent to the decree. MUKUND HARSHET v. HARIDAS KHEMJI, 17 B. 23 ... 15

(2) Alteration of decree—Decree in terms of an award ordering (inter alia) delivery of moveable property—Loss of part of such moveable property and consequent failure to deliver—Application to insert in decree an order to pay value of such moveable property in event of failure to deliver—Civ. Pro. Code (XIV of 1882), ss. 206-8—Practice.—A partition suit brought by a son against his father was referred to arbitration. On the 9th January, 1890, the award was published, and on the 27th March, 1890, the defendant moved for and obtained a decree in terms of the award. By this decree it was ordered that in satisfaction of the plaintiff's claim the defendant should pay to him Rs. 1,05,000 in the manner therein stated, viz., Rs. 40,000 to be paid forthwith and the balance of Rs. 65,000 to be paid "upon the plaintiff's delivering to the defendant certain specified property, which included two vessels or buglows, called respectively the 'Nasri' and 'Sambuk'." In no event was defendant to be required to pay the Rs. 65,000 before the 15th November, 1890. At the date of the decree the vessel 'Sambuk' was at sea on a voyage, and on the 18th June, 1890, while still on the voyage, she was lost. On the 15th November, 1890, the plaintiff's attorneys demanded payment of the balance of Rs. 65,000. They offered to deliver the other properties specified in the decree, but stated that the vessel 'Sambuk' had been lost. They offered to pay its value, which they estimated at Rs. 1,000. The defendant, however, demanded the delivery of the buglow, which they stated to be worth a very large sum. The defendant having, under the circumstances, refused to pay the Rs. 65,000, the plaintiff applied for execution of the decree, which was refused. He then obtained a rule calling on the defendant to show cause why the decree of the 27th March should not be amended or rectified by stating therein the amount of money to be paid to the defendant as an alternative if delivery of the vessel 'Sambuk' could not be made, such delivery having become impossible.

Held, that the rule must be discharged. The objection was an objection to an award, not to a decree. Possibly it might have been open to the parties to object to the award before it was filed, on the ground that it ought to have stated a sum to be paid to the defendant in case some of the property could not be delivered to him. If such an objection had been made, the Court might possibly had remitted the award, or refused to file it. No such objection, however, was taken, and the award was filed, and a decree obtained, in accordance with the award. The award could not be modified by the Court, nor could the decree, which must be in accordance with the award. AHMED BIN SHAIK ESSA KHALIFFA v. SHAIK ESSA BIN KHALIFFA, 17 B. 657 ... 431

Pro. Code (Act VIII of 1859), s. 283 of the Civ Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882)—Art. 15, sch. II of the Limitation Act (IX of 1871)—Art. 11, sch. II of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877)* —The plaintiff obtained a decree against one Ishvar, and in execution attached the property in dispute. The defendants intervened, and obtained an order for the removal of the attachment on the 11th August, 1888. On the 13th August, 1889, the plaintiff instituted this suit for a declaration that the property belonged to his judgment-debtor (Ishvar) and as such was liable to attachment and sale. The defendants pleaded that they had been in possession of the property for more than twelve years prior to the institution of the suit, and that the suit was, therefore, barred. The Judge rejected the plaintiff's claim.

Held, reversing the decree, that the suit being brought under s. 283 of the Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882) it was a suit to set aside the order of 11th August, 1888, directing the removal of the attachment, and should be determined by ascertaining the rights of the parties at the date of that order. As the defendants had not at that date acquired a title to the property by adverse possession for twelve years, the plaintiff was entitled to a decree.

A suit brought under s. 283 of the Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882) is a suit to set aside an order within the meaning of art. 11 of sch. II of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877). HARISHANKAR JEBHAI v. NARAN KARSAN, 18 B. 260 ... 681

Code (XIV of 1882), ss. 328, 329, 331.*—The plaintiff purchased the property in dispute at an auction sale in execution of a decree, and on the 14th August, 1877, he took formal possession, but the judgment-debtors remained in actual possession. On 18th September, 1889, the plaintiff proceeded to take possession, but was obstructed by the defendant, who alleged that he had purchased the property from the judgment-debtors in 1888. The plaintiff then applied for the removal of the defendant's obstruction, and his application was registered as a suit under s. 331 of the Civ. Pro. Code (XIV of 1882).

Held, that the plaintiff's claim was barred by limitation. When his application was converted into a suit under s. 331, the rights of the parties had to be determined as if an ordinary suit for possession had been instituted against the defendant, and either art. 138 or art. 144 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) applied. In either case the defendant could avail himself of the judgment-debtors' possession, which was adverse to the plaintiff. NAMDEV v. RAMCHANDRA GOMAJI MARWADI, 18 B. 37 ... 533

On the 13th October, 1891, C. also obtained a decree against B. in the Court of the Second Class Subordinate Judge at Surat and immediately, viz., on the 16th October, 1891, applied for execution. B's property was consequently attached on the 18th October, 1891. On the 7th July, 1892, an order for sale was made, and the proclamation of sale was issued on the 9th July, 1892. The 17th August was fixed as the date of the auction sale.

On the 23rd July, 1892, A. applied to the First Class Subordinate Judge for execution of his decree of the 9th October, 1891, and B's property (with respect to which the proclamation of sale had been already issued by the Second Class Subordinate Judge) was attached on the 14th August, 1892. Three days later, however, viz., on the 17th August, 1892, the property was sold under the decree of the Second Class Subordinate Judge.

A. then applied to the Second Class Subordinate Judge to set aside the sale on the ground that it was invalid under s. 285 of the Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), having been made while the attachment levied by the first Class Subordinate Judge was pending, and on the Second Class Subordinate Judge's refusal to do so, A. applied to the High Court under its extraordinary jurisdiction.

Held, that the sale was good. PATEL NARANJI MORARJI v. HARIDAS NAVALRAM, 18 B. 458 ... 815

(10) Decree—Mesne profits, ascertainment of—Duty of the Court—Deduction claimed—Res judicata.—Where a decree awarded mesne profits of the lands claimed in the suit, and the Court declined, in execution of the decree, to investigate questions relating to the deductions claimed by the defendant, on the ground that to do so would be "to go behind the decree," and that it was not competent to the Court to do that in executing the decree.

Held, that the mesne profits could only be ascertained after making deductions from the gross earnings for all such payments made by the defendant as the plaintiff would have been bound to make if he had been in possession. It was, therefore, the duty of the Court executing the decree to enquire into the payments which the defendant alleged he had made, and also to determine the question whether, as alleged by the plaintiff, the lands forming the subject-matter of the suit were rent-free.

The Court having awarded a particular sum as annual mesne profits without setting forth in the judgment the details thereof, and it having, therefore, become impossible to say that the right to a particular deduction therefrom claimed by the defendant was adjudicated on by the Court.

Held, that the rule of res judicata did not apply to the question as to the payment by the defendant. KACHAR ALA CHELA v. SHA OGHADBHAI THAKERSHI 17 B. 35 ... 23

The plaintiffs appealed against the latter part of the decree. The decree was confirmed in appeal. The plaintiffs applied for execution of the decree after the expiration of three years from the date of the original decree, but within three years from the date of the appellate decree. The lower Court rejected the application as time-barred, being of opinion that the original decree still existed, there having been no appeal against that part of the decree which allowed the claim.

Held, discharging the order of rejection, that when the appellate Court confirms the decree of the Court below, the latter becomes incorporated in the decree of the Appellate Court, which is thenceforth the only decree to be executed. SAKHALCHAND RIKHAWDAS v. VELCHAND GUJAR, 18 B. 203 ... 643

In execution of that decree A's property was attached by the Second Class Subordinate Judge of Bijapur, and an order for sale was made. D. obtained a decree against A. alone in the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge of Sholapur and obtained from that Court an order for the attachment and sale of A.'s property which was already attached by the Second Class Subordinate Judge of Bijapur. He then applied to the Second Class Subordinate Judge of Bijapur for rateable distribution of the assets realized under s. 295 of the Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882). The Second Class Subordinate Judge of Bijapur rejected the application, and, D. thereupon applied to the High Court.

Held, following 4 B. 472 and 5 B. 198, that D. was not entitled to share in the assets. DATTATRAYA v. RAHIMTULLA NURMAHOMED KHOJA, 18 B. 456 ... 813

The plaintiff sued to recover damages caused by the defendant's fraud during his management of the plaintiff's estate from 1870 to 1884. The plaint disclosed no specific instances of the fraud imputed to the defendant. The Court of first instance, without going into evidence, rejected the plaintiff's claim on the preliminary ground that the plaintiff had no right to sue during the lifetime of his adoptive mother. In second appeal, the respondent objected that the plaint was defective. The plaintiff's pleader asked for leave to amend it by specifying certain instances of the alleged fraud.

Held, that the amendment could not then be allowed, and the suit must fail. When fraud is charged, the evidence must be confined to the allegations. KRISHNAJI v. WAMNAJI, 18 B. 144 ... 604

The defendant pleaded that the deed was a sham deed and without consideration and had been executed by him merely to save the land from his creditors.

Held, that the plea was good, and that it was open to the defendant to defend his possession by showing that the real transaction between himself and the plaintiff was to defraud, whether a third party or his creditors generally. BABAJI v. KRISHNA, 18 B. 372 ... 756

Gambling.

Gambling Acts (IV, Bombay of 1887 and I of 1890), s. 3—"Common gaming house"—"Instrument of gaming"—"Used,"—Meaning of these words in s. 3 of the Act.—The accused rented a place near a public road at Bombay, at Rs. 250 a month. There they erected a shed containing eleven pedhis or stalls. In the centre of the shed they put up, in a prominent position, a clock for keeping accurate time. The stalls were let out to certain persons, each at the rate of Rs. 100 a month.

The roofs of several adjoining houses surrounded this place. From one of these roofs rain fell into the place.

Gambling—(Concluded).

Numbers of people resorted to this place for the purpose of rain-betting.

The rain-betters staked certain sums of money on the chance whether the rain would fall or would not fall within a certain time. After making the bets, the parties betting would go to one of the stall-keepers, and get him to register the particulars of the debt in a book kept for the purpose, and each deposited with the stall-keeper the amount staked.

The bets as to rain falling were determined by persons at the place seeing the rain falling in a stream from such of the roofs of the adjoining houses as had been chosen by the betters on making the bets, and seeing also the time, by the clock, if there was any doubt as to the time.

After the bet was determined, the winner received from the stalkeeper the amount of the stake.

Under these circumstances, the accused were charged before the Chief Presidency Magistrate with committing the offence of keeping a "common gaming house" under s. 4, cls. (a), (b) and (c), of the Bombay Gambling Act IV of 1887, as amended by Act I of 1890.

On a reference by the Magistrate under s. 432 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882):

Held, that to bring the place in question within the definition of a "common gaming house" in s. 3 of the Bombay Gambling Act (IV of 1887) as amended by Bombay Act I of 1890, the instrument of gaming or wagering must be in the place itself, either kept there, or brought there and used there, for profit and gain. It is not sufficient that wagers are made in the place upon or by means of some article or other which is outside the place. The roofs of the houses surrounding the place in question could not, therefore, be regarded "as instruments of gaming" either kept or used therein, within the meaning of s. 3 of the Act.

Held, also, that the word "used" in s. 3 of the Act, as amended by Act I of 1890, must be taken in its ordinary sense, as meaning actually used. Any article which is in fact used as a means of wagering, comes within the definition of "an instrument of gaming," even though it may not have been specially devised or intended for that purpose.

Held, per TELANG, J., that neither the stalls, nor the books in which the bets were registered, nor the money staked and deposited with the stall keeper, were instruments of gaming or wagering. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. KANJI BHIMJI, 17 B. 184 ... 120

Foreigners—Act III of 1864, validity and application of—Powers of legislation of the Governor General in Council—Indian Councils Act (Stat 24 and 25 Vict., c. 67), s. 22—Crim. Pro. Code (X of 1882), s. 491—Warrant to arrest and imprison—Form of warrant—Service of warrant—Procedure.—On the 3rd July 1894, certain foreigners resident in Bombay having been arrested by the police and sent to jail under warrants issued under ss. 3 and 4 of Act III of 1864, they applied to the High Court and obtained a rule nisi under s. 491 of the Crim. Pro. Code (X of 1882) and under Stat. 31, Car. II, c. 2 (Habeas Corpus Act) calling on the Superintendent of the Jail to show cause why they should not be set at liberty. In the affidavits filed in showing cause against the rule the only reason suggested for their arrest was that they were connected with loose women residing in a certain district of Bombay. It was contended for the prisoners that their arrest and imprisonment were illegal (1) inasmuch as Act III of 1864 was ultra vires of the Indian Legislature; (2) that the Act being intended only to secure the "peace and security" of British India was in this case improperly applied.

Held, (1) that Act III of 1864 was not ultra vires of the Governor-General of India in Council;

(2) that it was rightly applied in the case of the foreigners in question, although their residing in Bombay may not have been likely to have affected or endangered the peace and security of British India.

Per STARLING, J.—S. 3 of Act III of 1864 gives the fullest power to the Government to order any foreigner to remove himself from British India. The Government is the sole judge of what is necessary for the peace and security of British India, and, if it acted in accordance with the letter of the Act, the Court could not inquire into the sufficiency of its reasons for so acting.

A separate warrant was issued in the case of each of the foreigners in question; and all were in the same form. The warrant directed the person whose name appeared in it forthwith to "remove himself from British India by sea," and it further contained the following words:—"All officers to whom this order may be communicated are required to see that it is duly obeyed, and, in the event of its being infringed, to apprehend and detain the said ( ) in safe custody in the jail of Bombay under s. 4 of the said Act, until he shall be lawfully discharged therefrom." Each warrant was signed by the Secretary to Government and was directed to the Commissioner of Police and to the Superintendent of the Jail.

Held, that the warrants were not valid warrants for the following reasons:—

(1) They were irregular in that they contained an order to the person named in them to do a certain thing with a further conditional order for his imprisonment in the event of his not doing it. There ought to have been a separate order to each prisoner to remove himself from British India, which order should have been duly served upon him. Then, in case of his refusal or neglect to comply with its terms, there ought to have been a further order by the Governor in Council authorising his arrest and detention in jail.

(2) The persons named in them were not indicated with sufficient certainty and particularity. The warrants contained no description of the persons against whom they purported to be directed, and did not give their place of residence.

(3 By reason of the direction contained in them that the persons named in them were to remove themselves from British India by sea to the places mentioned in the warrant. The particular route to be specified under s. 3 of Act III of 1864 is intended to be a route in British India, and not a route beyond the high seas. The Government has no jurisdiction to direct a person's movements at sea beyond the limits of three miles from the shore.

Of this sum Rs. 6,500 were the principal and the remainder (Rs. 11,019) was for interest. The plaintiff contended that the defendant being a Hindu was bound by the rule of damdupat, and could not claim as interest more than the amount of the principal.

Held, that the rule of damdupat did not apply; and that the plaintiff was liable to the defendant for the whole amount. The rule of damdupat only applies when the debtor is a Hindu. DAWOOD DURVESH v. VULLUBHDAS PURSHOTAM, 18 B. 227 ... 659

(2) Necessity of possession—Attestation of deed, effect of.—In 1873, Ramji, a Hindu, executed a deed of gift of his immoveable property to his daughter Mukta (defendant No. 1). The deed was attested by the plaintiff. In 1878, Ramji mortgaged to the plaintiff some of the land comprised in the deed of gift. Ramji died in that year, and in 1882 his grandson conveyed the equity of redemption to the plaintiff, who was already in possession of the mortgaged land as mortgagee. In the year 1888 the plaintiff being dispossessed by Mukta (defendant No. 1) and the second defendant to whom she had sold the land, he brought the present suit to recover possession. The defendants relied upon the gift.

Hindu Law—7.—Gift—(Concluded).

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled tc possession. At the time of the mortgage to him in 1878 Ramji had not completed his gift to Mukta by giving possession. He was therefore in a position to give the plaintiff a good title. It had not been shown that Mukta had ever been treated as the owner of the equity of redemption.

Held, also, that the circumstance that the plaintiff attested the deed of gift in 1873 could not affect his title, as the gift had not been completed by delivery of possession. ABAJI GANGADHAR v. MUKTA, 18 B. 688 ... 968

(3) Verbal gift of immoveable property—Death of the donor—Possession given to the donee by the son of the donor.—One Ganesh Vithal, being possessed of certain lands which were his self-acquired property, died in 1878. On his death-bed he told his son, Purshotam Ganesh (the plaintiff's father), to give these lands to his (Ganesh Vithal's) daughter, the defendant. In the following year (1879) Purshotam by a registered deed of gift gave the lands to the defendant. The deed contained the following recital :—"Our vadil (father) Ganesh Vithal has made a gift to you of his self-acquired lands Nos. 101 and 102 of mauze Vadgaon for your own and your children's maintenance, and has directed me (Purshotam Ganesh) to execute an instrument according to law. I (Purshotam Ganesh) hereby execute a deed of gift to you." Shortly after the execution of this document, the defendant was put into possession of the lands, and she admittedly continued in possession down to the commencement of this suit in 1888. The plaintiffs, who were the minor children of Purshotam Ganesh, now sought to recover these lands from the defendant, alleging that on the death of their grandfather, Ganesh Vithal, the lands had devolved by inheritance upon his son, Purshotam (their father), and contending that the latter had no power to make a gift of these to the defendant. The lower Court found that the question of Purshotam's competency to give the lands did not arise, as they had already been given to the defendant by his father, Ganesh Vithal, and that Purshotam was simply an instrument in carrying out the wishes of his father, and in executing the deed of gift to the defendant. On appeal, the District Judge considered that the point for determination was whether the gift by Ganesh Vithal to the defendant was valid by Hindu law, not having been accompanied by possession. He held the gift to be valid. On special appeal to the High Court, Held, dismissing the appeal, that whether the gift by Ganesh Vithal to the defendant was to be regarded as a gift, possession being afterwards given to the defendant, or whether Ganesh Vithal was to be regarded as having constituted himself a trustee and having made Purshotam a trustee to carry out his wishes, the defendant was in lawful possession of the lands, and that the plaintiffs have neither by Hindu law nor otherwise any legal or equitable claim to have the deed of gift to the defendant cancelled. (1) Moveable property—Daughter-in-law inheriting moveable property from father-in-law—Estate taken by her in such property—Widow—Widow's estate in moveables—No power to dispose by will of moveables.—Where a son predeceased his father and the son's widow subsequently succeeds to her father-in-law's property as his heir, she takes the same estate in it as she does in property inherited by her from her husband.

Under the law of Mitakshara a widow has no power to bequeath moveable property inherited by her from her husband.

In the Presidency of Bombay, moveable property inherited by a widow from her husband devolves on her death to her husband's heirs.

If the decision of 7 B. 155 is to be regarded as necessarily giving to the heir of a widow on her death such moveable property inherited from her husband as remains undisposed of by her, it must be treated as of no authority, GADADHARBHAT v. CHANDARBHAGABAI, 17 B. 690 (F.B.) ... 453

Hindu Law—9.—Inheritance—(Continued). PAGE

(2) Share of adopted son where a son is subsequently born—Western India—Mitakshara—Vyavahar Mayukha—Point taken by appellant on second appeal not raised by him in his first appeal—Practice.—In Western India, both in the districts governed by the Mitakshara, and those specially under the authority of the Vyavahar Mayukha, the right of the adopted son, where there is a "legitimate son" born after the adoption, extends only to a fifth share of the father's estate.

In a suit by an adopted son to recover his share in his adoptive father's estate, a son having been born to the adoptive father subsequently to the plaintiff's adoption, the Court of first instance awarded the plaintiff a fourth share of the property in dispute. The defendant appealed to the District Court, but in appeal raised no question as to the extent of the share awarded to the plaintiff. On second appeal to the High Court it was contended that, in any event, the plaintiff was only entitled to a fifth share.

Held that, under the circumstances and having regard to the nature of the question, the point might be taken in second appeal on behalf of the defendant, and the High Court varied the decree by awarding the plaintiff a fifth share instead of a fourth share, but ordered the appellant (defendant) to bear his own costs of the appeal. She left her surviving (1) a co-widow; (2) the plaintiff, who was grandson of another co-widow; and (3) a nephew (i.e., brother's son) of her husband. She had been married in one of the approved forms.

Held, that the plaintiff was a nearer sapinda of the deceased than neither her co-widow or her husband's nephew, and, as such, excluded both from inheriting the deceased's stridhan. GOJABAI v. SHRIMANT SHAHAJIRAO MALOJI RAJE BHOSLE, 17 B. 114 ... 75

IV, s. 10. pl. 26—"Sons and the rest," meaning of—Decree for maintenance obtained by wife against her husband—Appeal by husband against decree—Death of wife pending appeal—Daughter to be legal representative of the deceased for the purpose of the appeal—Practice—Procedure.*—In cases to which the Vyavahar Mayukha is applicable, a woman's daughter and not her husband is the heir to her property, although not of the kind belonging to the class of 'stridhan' proper.

The doctrine that property which has been inherited by a woman should revert on her death to the heirs of the last male owner is not to be extended to the devolution of stridhan. The heirs to succeed are the heirs to the woman herself, though her heirs in the husband's family.

The phrase "sons and the rest" in ch. IV. s. 10, pl. 26 of the Mayukha means merely "sons, grandsons and great-grandsons," and the phrase "daughters and the rest" in pl. 14, 23 and 24 means "daughters and their issue" as contrasted with "sons, graudsons and great-grandsons."

As regards property which does not class as woman's property in the technical sense, the "sons and the rest" take precedence over the "daughters and the rest." Failing both sons and daughters the heirs to "stridhan proper" and "stridhan improper" are identical, save that as between male and female offspring the latter have a preferential right as regards "stridhan proper," while the former have a similar right as "stridhan improper."

The author of the Mayukha, like the author of the Mitakshara, does not regard the enumeration of specific kinds of stridhan in the old Smriti texts as exhaustive. He includes under the name all that by law becomes the property of the woman, only (unlike the author of the Mitakshara) he distinguishes the specific kinds enumerated in the texts from those which are not so enumerated for purposes of inheritance. In doing this it seems quite reasonable to lay down that, as regards that class of property which is emphatically woman's property, being expressly so named by the old sages, the female offspring should take precedence over the male; while as regards that which is not such, the general preference given to male offspring over female by Hindu law should have effect. On the other hand, there is no obvious reason why in the case of collateral relations any similar distinction should be maintained between the two classes.

Under the rule of succession above stated, the woman is recognized as a fresh source of devolution. It is to be remembered that the property with which the rule in question deals, is not merely that which the woman obtains by inheritance, but may include that which has never belonged to her husband or any other relation, either on the husband's or the father's side, but is her own original acquisition. Such property is the woman's property; it is not the husband's property. Why, then, should it go on her death to any one except to those who are the woman's heirs, and how can the rule about the last male owner be made applicable to such property at all?

A Hindu wife obtained a decree against her husband for maintenance. He appealed, and while the appeal was pending the wife died, leaving two daughters. The question then arose whether her husband or his daughters should represent the deceased in the appeal.

Held, that the daughters of the deceased were the legal representatives for the purposes of the appeal. MANILAL REWADAT v. BAI REWA, 17 B 758... 498

(1) Ancestral property—Father's debt—Decree against father—Execution—Liability of family property—Purchaser—Civ. Pro. Code (XIV of 1882), ss. 318, 332, 333.—In a suit for specific performance of a certain contract for the sale of land which the defendant had failed to complete, the plaintiff obtained a decree against the defendant for the repayment of the earnest-money and his costs of suit. In execution of this decree the plaintiff attached the whole of the property, which the defendant had agreed to sell. A warrant for sale was duly issued, and claims were advertised for. The sons of the defendant thereupon appeared before the Commissioner and claimed to be entitled to three-fourths of the property, which they alleged was ancestral. Their claim was not investigated, but to save time it was agreed that a note should be made in the proclamation of sale, that the sons claimed to be interested in the said lands and premises, on the ground that they were ancestral, and that the one-fourth share of the defendant only could be sold by the attaching creditor. Under this proclamation the right, title and interest of the defendant in the property were sold. At the sale the sons gave notice of their claim. The property was duly sold and the purchaser was put into possession, the claimants being dispossessed. The claimants then took out a summons under s 332 of the Civ. Pro. Code (XIV of 1882) calling upon the purchaser to show cause why they should not be restored to possession.

Held—(1) that the judgment-debt due by the defendant was one which the plaintiff could enforce, if necessary, against ancestral property in the hands of the defendant to the extent of the whole interest therein of the defendant and his sons, as it was not an immoral or illegal debt;

(2) that, assuming that the property in question was ancestral, what the purchaser bought was the whole property, and not merely the right which the defendant might have as the father of the family to a share of it on partition. The plaintiff evidently did not acknowledge any right in the claimants, but intended to sell the very largest right the defendant might have in the property, which, as the judgment-debt was one for which the family property was liable, was the whole estate of the joint family ;

(3) that the purchaser who had bought the whole of the rights of the family in the property, was entitled to the possession of what he bought, and was not required to file a suit for partition, because the shares of all the co-parceners had passed to him ;

(4) assuming that the property was ancestral, the claimants were not in possession on their own account, and were, therefore, not entitled to be restored under s. 332 of the Civ Pro. Code (XIV of 1882). A member of a joint Hindu family cannot say that he is in possession of any particular portion of the joint property on his own account. His possession is the possession of the family ;

(5) what all the sons were entitled to, was to try the fact or nature of the debt due to the plaintiff in a suit of their own. In such suit they would have to prove that the debt was not such as to justify the sale. COOVERJI HIRJI v. DEWSEY BHOJA, 17 B. 718 ... 471

(2) Gift by manager of part of family property—Illegitimate daughters—Maintenance—Gift—Alienation of family property—"Dasiputra" (son of a slave) —Hindu law—Joint family.—Ramchandra, the manager of an undivided Hindu family, gave certain shares in a spinning and weaving company, which had been purchased out of family funds, to Ganesh for and on behalf of the plaintiffs, who were Ramchandra's illegitimate daughters. After the death of Ramchandra and Ganesh, Ramchandra's illegitimate daughters sued the surviving members of the family for a declaration that the shares belonged to them, and that they had right to have them transferred to their names in the company's books.

Held, without deciding whether illegitimate daughters are entitled to simple maintenance from the family property, in any case, Ramchandra, as manager, could not alienate the shares for that purpose, as there were no emergent circumstances requiring it. (3) Joint ownership—Decree against joint owner—Execution sale—Right of purchaser—Co-sharers made parties after period of limitation—Limitation.—The interest of Vithu, as co-sharer in certain land, was sold in execution of a decree against him. It was purchased by one Sakharam, who sold it to the plaintiff. The plaintiff sued for possession, and the other co-sharers were made party defendants to the suit, which, however, was held, as against them, to be barred by limitation.

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to be put into joint possession of the land with them, although the suit as against them was barred. KRISHNAJI BIN MALJI v. VITHU, 18 B. 505 ... 845

(5) Manager—Family debt—Liability of family property—Decree against manager —Execution sale—Questions for Court to decide in determining the quantum of interest which passes to the auction-purchaser—Hindu law.—Where the manager of a joint Hindu family is sued for the recovery of a debt, and his right, title and interest in the family property are sold in execution, the questions which the Court has to decide in determining the quantum of interest which has passed to the auction-purchaser are : (1) whether the debt was one for which the entirety might, by proper procedure, have been brought to sale, and (2) whether, as a matter of fact, the purchaser bargained and paid for the entirety.

A. and his three younger brothers B., C. and D. were members of a joint Hindu family. A. was the manager of the family. After A.'s death, B., C. and D. were sued as his legal representatives in respect of a debt which A. had contracted for the benefit of the family. A decree was passed against them as A.'s representatives, directing the recovery of the debt by sale of A.'s estate. In execution of this decree, A.'s right, title and interest in certain family property was put up to sale.

Held, that the sale affected the rights of all the members of the joint family. Under the circumstance what was meant to be brought to sale was the

(2) Mother's right to—Right to possession in virtue of claim to maintenance—Mortgagee's right to possession subject to mother's claim to maintenance—Practice—Procedure—Point of law raised for first time in second appeal.—After the death of S.. who had mortgaged certain land belonging to him, his widow (defendant No. 2) mortgaged it again in consideration of the existing mortgage-debt and a further advance. The mortgage was afterwards assigned to the plaintiff, who sued the widow (defendant No. 2) and the mother (defendant No. 1) of S. for possession. The mother (defendant No. 1) contended that any right the widow (defendant No. 2) had to mortgage the property was subject to her (the first defendant's) right to maintenance out of it, and, as her maintenance, she claimed to remain in possession. The lower Court held that the property should not be given to the plaintiff until a proper arrangement had been made by him for the maintenance of defendant No. 1, but stated that it imposed that condition on the supposition that there was no other family property out of which she could be maintained.

Held, that the decree was wrong in making the right of the first defendant to remain in possession dependent on there being no other property. Further, that as the mortgagees lent their money with full knowledge of the first defendant's possession in virtue of her claim to maintenance, the first defendant ought not to be compelled to accept from the plaintiff maintenance in some other form.

In suit by a mortgagee for possession of mortgaged land, the mother of the deceased owner claimed to ramain in possession of it in virtue of her right to maintenance. At the hearing of the second appeal a claim was made, on her behalf, not merely to maintenance, but to a share in the property as mother of the last owner. The point had not been taken in the lower Courts, nor was it one of the grounds of appeal.

Hindu Law—11.—Maintenance—(Concluded). PAGE

Held, that it could not be taken for the first time in second appeal. It set up a new right differing in kind from that asserted throughout the trial, and not differing merely in degree, as was the case in 17 B. 303 RACHAWA v. SHIVAYOGAPA, 18 B. 679 ... 962

(3) Widow's maintenance—Withholding of maintenance—Demand and refusal—Arrears of maintenance—Limitation Decree providing for reduction of tenance in event of altered circumstances of persons paying it—Hindu law. —K., a Hindu widow, sued the undivided brothers of her deceased husband for maintenance. She also claimed arrears of maintenance for six years prior to the institution of the suit. The Court of first instance passed a decree in her favour awarding her maintenance at the rate of Rs. 52 a year during her lifetime, but "subject to variation according to the change in defendants' circumstances for the worse." The Court also awarded her arrears of maintenance for three years only (not six as claimed) on the ground she was only twenty years old, and had always lived with her father and been maintained by him, and that a formal demand had only been made on the defendants three years previously. On appeal the District Court increased the rate of maintenance to Rs. 65 per annum, and awarded the plaintiff arrears for six years, holding that the fact of the demand having been made only three years before suit did not prevent her from recovering arrears for six years.

Held by the High Court that although the withholding of maintenance, which constituted the cause of action, might be proved otherwise than by a demand and refusal, yet in this case it had not been shown that there were any circumstances which would amount to a refusal of maintenance. The decree of the lower appeal Court was, therefore, confirmed, except so far as it gave the plaintiff arrears of maintenance for six years, which period was altered to three years. The clause as to the reduction of maintenance in the event of altered circumstances was also struck out. MOTILAL v. BAI KASHI, 17 B. 45 ... 30

What that account should be so as to discharge him from his liability to account as manager, and what objections the other members of the family can take to it, must depend on the conduct of the manager and the other members of the family, the nature of the property, and the circumstances of the family, and cannot be stated in definite terms. Members who were minors during the management cannot be taken to have consented to the management, and are entitled, when they attain their majority, to hold the manager liable, not only for acts amounting to fraud, but also where the management has been grossly negligent and prejudicial to their interests; the presumption, however, being that, in the absence of evidence, the property for partition is such as it exists at the time of the suit for partition.

A brother sued his three brothers for partition of their father's estate, which consisted of moveables and immoveables and a banking business. As senior member of the family he also claimed the rajseva (family idol) and the property appertaining to it. The mother (Kashi) of the first three defendants and Manchha, the widow of a deceased brother of the plaintiff, and Nandkore, his aunt, the widow of his father's brother, were also defendants to the suit. The three brothers (defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3) alleged that their father, Maneklal, had died in 1864 at which time they were minors; that the plaintiff had managed the estate ever since, and had, in 1865, obtained a certificate of guardianship and administration to their estate under Act XX of 1864; that the plaintiff's management had been fraudulent, improper and wasteful and prejudicial to their interests as minors, and they contended that they were entitled to an account from him of the property at the date of their father's death and of the proceeds, income and profits from that date to the date of suit. They contended that as the plaintiff had been appointed administrator of their estate under Act XX of 1864, he was liable to account to them as a trustee, and was bound to show that all sales, purchases and other transactions entered into by him were necessary and for their benefit. The lower Court held that the family being united, the Minors Act did not apply, and that the fact that the plaintiff had obtained a certificate of guardianship did not enlarge his liability to account, and that, on the authorities, the manager of a Hindu family was not bound to account for past transactions, nor for mesne profits, unless in cases of fraud or gross extravagance, and that the estate of the family property as it existed at the time of partition was to be the basis of the distribution.

On appeal to the High Court,

Held, that the defendants were entitled to an account from the plaintiff, and that it was open to them to raise objections with regard to the plaintiff's management.

Held, also, as to the nature of the account which the plaintiff should render of past transactions, that, having regard to the circumstances of the family and the nature of the family property, the plaintiff, in producing the books of the firm since the father's death, which contained an account of all transactions relating to the firm's property and of the moveable and immoveable property, had done all that he could be expected to do, whether as the family manager or as certificated administrator of the defendants' interests in the family property.

Held, also, that the circumstance that the plaintiff had obtained a certificate of administration of the estate of the minors, and sold their interests in certain houses, without the consent of the Court, could not give them a counter claim against the plaintiff unless they proved that they had been prejudiced by the sale. As to ornaments purchased since the death of the father, it was directed that they should be brought into hotchpot by all the parties in making the partition. As to remission of tenant's rent and compromises of suits, although a considerable loss was shown to have resulted from them, it was held that the defendants had failed to show that they were improper or uncalled for, and there was no evidence to make the plaintiff himself liable for them, or to forbid their being transferred to the general account. The losses in trade also were properly debited to the general business of the firm, and the plaintiff was not personally liable for them.

Held, also, that the plaintiff was entitled to take the rajseva (family idol) and keep it with the property appertaining thereto as the family idol and the property thereof, with liberty to such members of the family as are or shall become marjadas to have access to it for the purpose of worship.

Held, also, that Kashi, the mother of the first three defendants (step-mother of the plaintiff), was entitled on this partition to a one-fifth share in the estate. DAMODARDAS MANEKLAL v. UTTAMRAM MANEKLAL, 17 B. 271 ... 177

(2) Minor—Partition effected without taking into account a minor co-parcener—Such partition invalid—Limitation—Hindu Law.—A partition effected without reserving any share for a minor member of the family, and without the consent of some one authorized to act on his behalf, is invalid as against the minor.

Hindu Law—13.—Partition—(Concluded). PAGE

Three brothers, S., L. and K., were members of a joint Hindu family. In 1862, S and L. divided the whole of the family property between them without reserving any share for their brother K., who was then a minor. K. lived with L. as a member of his family. L. died in 1867, leaving a childless widow, with whom K. continued to live till his death in 1876. K. left an infant son (the plaintiff), only a year old. Subsequently S. died in 1887, leaving two widows without issue. In 1889, the plaintiff, being still a minor, sued by his next friend to recover either the whole or one-third of the family property in the possession of the widows of L. and S. The principal defences to this suit were (1) that it was time-barred, and (2) that the plaintiff was not entitled to claim more than one-third of the property in suit.

Held, that the partition made by S. and L. in 1862 was invalid, as it was made without reserving any share for their minor brother K. and without taking him into account. K.'s son was, therefore, entitled to recover the whole of the ancestral property as the sole surviving male member of the family.

Held, also, that the suit was not barred by limitation either under Act IX of 1871 or Act XV of 1877 in the absence of any evidence showing that K. ever demanded partition and was refused, or that he was excluded to his knowledge from all participation in the family property. (4) Property left undivided at the time of partition—Suit to recover share of the produce—Amendment of suit—Changing character of the suit.—The circumstance that there has been a partition between the members of a joint Hindu family does not, in the absence of any special agreement between them, alter their rights as to the property still undivided. As to this they continue to stand to one another in the relation of members of an undivided Hindu family.

A claim to a share of the produce of the property left undivided at a partition does not lie, because such a claim is based on the right to a particular share in the property itself which has no existence in the case of an undivided family.

A suit for a share of the produce of the property left undivided at a partition cannot be amended by making it a suit for partition without entirely changing its character. GAVRISHANKAR v. ATMARAM RAJARAM, 18 B. 611 ... 916

His widow, who after his death was the manager of the family, borrowed money for family purposes, and as security mortgaged some of the immoveable property left by her husband. She subsequently sold it, and the Court held that the evidence showed that it was sold to pay off the family debts.

Held, that the minor sons were bound by the sale.

Held, also, that the effect of a conveyance of property sold by the manager of a family depends on the intention of the parties as gathered from the terms of the instrument and from the surrounding circumstances. SUCCARAM MORARJI SHETAY v. KALIDAS KALIANJI, 18 B. 631 ... 929

The reversioners sued to set aside the sale.

Held, that although there might have been no absolute necessity for the widow to sell the property to provide herself with maintenance, still as there was no other family property, the property in question must necessarily have been sold at the expiration of the time fixed by the mortgage, and the sale by the widow ought to be supported.

(7) Widow's right of residence in her husband's house after his death—House mortgaged by plaintiff's husband in his lifetime and sold in execution—Auction-purchaser—Notice of widow's claim to reside.—In execution of a decree upon a mortgage effected by the plaintiff's husband in his lifetime, the house in dispute was put up to auction, and purchased by the defendant. The defendant was aware that the plaintiff (the mortgagor's widow) was residing in the house at the time of the Court sale. In a suit brought by the plaintiff to establish her right to reside in the house in question.

Held, that in the absence of any allegation that the mortgage effected by the plaintiff's husband was not for the benefit of the family, or was in any way in fraud of the plaintiff's rights, the defendant as auction-purchaser took the house free from her right of residence as a Hindu widow, notwithstanding the fact that he had notice of her claim. (1) Shah jog hundi—Shah jog hundi endorsed to a particular person—Stolen hundi—Payment by drawee without inquiry to wrong person—Liability of drawee to lawful owner of hundi.—On the 8th December, 1893, the plaintiff at Sholapur having bought a shah jog hundi there drawn upon the defendants in Bombay endorsed it to Ramrukh Ramkisson and sent it by post to him for collection. In course of its transmission it was stolen, and the name of Ramrukh Ramkisson was expunged, another name viz., that of Dwarkadas Lalji, was substituted. On the 9th December, 1893, the hundi was presented for payment to the defendants in Bombay by a person giving his name as Dwarkadas Lalji, and the defendants paid it without inquiry as to the responsibility or position of the person to whom they paid it. The plaintiff sued the defendants for value of the hundi.

Held, (1) that the defendants were guilty of conversion of the hundi and were liable to the plaintiff, the lawful owner thereof, in trover;

(4) Marriage—Restitution of conjugal rights—Conditional marriage—Kudwa Kunbi caste—Custom—Public policy.—The plaintiff, a member of the Kudwa Kunbi caste, sued in 1890 for restitution of conjugal rights, alleging that he had been married to the first defendant in 1927. The defendant alleged that at the date of the marriage the parties were only a month old; that the marriage was a sata (exchange) marriage, and that by the contract the plaintiff's father was bound, as a condition of his obtaining the second defendant's daughter for his son, to provide a girl to be married to the second defendant's son. They alleged that such conditional marriages were a custom of the caste, and they denied that the condition had been performed by the plaintiff's father. They further alleged that in 1936 the plaintiff's father, finding that he could not perform the condition, had passed a release (the plaintiff himself then being a minor) to defendant No. 2 (the father of defendant No. 1) giving up all claims to defendant No. 1; that a dispute having subsequently arisen after the plaintiff had attained his majority the matter was referred to the members of the caste, who decided that within a certain fixed time the plaintiff should provide a girl for the son of defendant No. 2, and that on the plaintiff failing to do so the marriage was dissolved. The Court found that by the custom of the caste the marriage in 1927 between the plaintiff and defendant No. 1 was only a conditional marriage; that the release of 1936 operated to cancel the marriage, and that in any case the plaintiff's failure to find a girl for the second defendant's son, in accordance with the decision of the caste, dissolved the marriage.

Held, that the plaintiff had not established his right to the restitution of defendant No. 1 as his wife. The alleged custom was not contrary to public policy. According to the custom relied on, there was no complete and binding marriage within the intention of the parents of the parties, although the ordinary religious ceremonies were performed. Such a transaction could not be regarded as immoral from any point of view.

The Hindu law leaves it entirely to the parents to marry their daughters, and although, according to the strict Brahmanical law, a marriage is complete when the religious ceremony has been performed, there would seem to be no sufficient reason for refusing to recognise a custom, at any rate, among the lower caste, by which such transactions, rendered necessary by the paucity of women in the caste, although performed with religious ceremonies, are still regarded by the parents on both sides as incomplete and conditional marriages. (5) Parsi Matrimonial Court—Act XV of 1865—Suit by wife for judicial separation—Alimony—Alimony after decree dismissing wife's suit and pending appeal—Alimony pending petition for review of judgment—Practice in allotment of alimony.—A wife sued her husband for judicial separation in the Parsi Matrimonial Court. Alimony was granted to be by an order dated 11th July, 1891, which directed the defendant to pay alimony to her from the 15th April, 1891, "until the final decree herein be passed." On the 18th July, 1891, the suit was dismissed, and after that date the defendant ceased to pay alimony. The plaintiff obtained a rule for review of judgment, which was discharged on the 27th January, 1892, and on the 18th March, 1892, she filed an appeal against the decree dismissing the suit and against the order refusing a review. She now applied for an order directing the defendant to pay her all the arrears of alimony "pendente lite" from the date of filing the suit, or so much as had not been paid, and that he should pay her further alimony until the final disposal of the appeal.

Held, dismissing the application, that the words "final decree herein," contained in the order of the 11th July, 1891, by which alimony was granted, meant the decree in the suit and not in the appeal.

(2) That the Parsi Matrimonial Court, constituted under Act XV of 1865, had no power to award alimony "pendente lite" after decree and pending appeal,

(3) An unsuccessful wife is not entitled to claim alimony after final decree and pending appeal, nor for the period during which she is seeking review of judgment.

In 1887, however, she returned to his house, and stayed with him for two months. She afterwards deserted him again. Thereupon the plaintiff filed a second suit for restitution of conjugal rights.

Held, that the suit was not barred either under s. 13 or 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882). A second withdrawal from cohabitation constitutes a fresh cause of action. KESHAVLAL GIRDHARLAL v. BAI PARVAT, 18 B. 327 ... 726

(7) Suit for restitution of conjugal rights—Cause of action—Jurisdiction.—The plaintiff sued his wife for restitution of conjugal rights in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Borsad, within whose local jurisdiction the plaintiff resided. The defendant contended (inter alia) that the Subordinate Judge of Borsad had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit, on the ground that she was living outside his jurisdiction. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit for want of jurisdiction. On appeal by the plaintiff, the decree was confirmed. On second appeal, Held, reversing the decree, that the Court of Borsad had jurisdiction. The cause of action, in a suit by a husband for restitution of conjugal rights, consists in the wife's absenting herself from her husband's house without his consent, and it must, therefore, be deemed to arise at his house. (1) Service inam land—Suit for a declaration of title to trees thereon and for damages—Jurisdiction of Civil Courts—S. 4, cl. (a) of the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act (Bombay Act X of 1876)—Hereditary Offices Act (Bombay Act III of 1874)—Hereditary office—Hereditary officer—Officiator.—Section 4, cl. (a) of the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act (Bombay Act X of 1876) is not intended to apply only to the property appropriated to the payment of the officiating member of a vatandar family, the expression used being "hereditary officer" and not the person performing the duties of the "hereditary office" to which by the Hereditary Office Act (Bombay Act III of 1874) the distinct denomination of "Officiator" is given.

The plaintiff complained that he was prevented from cutting the trees growing on land situate in the village of Tungarli, belonging to certain persons who had sold the trees to him. He claimed damages and an injunction restraining the Collector from interfering with him. The defendant pleaded that the trees did not belong to the plaintiff's vendors, being on service inam land. The lower Court dismissed the plaintiff's claim, holding that the land, on which the trees were growing, was service inam land, and that the plaintiff's vendors had no title to them. On appeal, the High Court, on the evidence, upheld the lower Court's decision that the land was inam service land, but held that it did not necessarily follow that the trees upon it were the property of Government and not of the vatandars. The latter might be the owners of the trees subject to a condition. The case was, therefore, remanded to the District Court for a finding on an issue as to whether the holders of service inam lands had a title to the trees on the lands, and if so, whether they had the right to cut down trees without the permission of the Collector. On this finding the District Judge found in the affirmative. The case then came again before the High Court, when a preliminary objection was taken that under s. 4 of Act X of 1876 the Court had no jurisdiction.

Held, that it having been decided that the land in question was service inam land, the Court under s. 4, cl. (a) of Bombay Act X of 1876, ceased to have jurisdiction over the plaintiff's claim against Government in respect of the trees growing thereon, as such claims related to property appertaining to the office of a village officer. (a), (b) and (c)—Village partially alienated.*—In a suit by an inamdar of a village against a khot to recover rent in kind (according to the market rate at the time of payment), the defendant (khot) contended

Inamdar—(Concluded). PAGE

(1) that he was only liable to pay cash assessment as fixed by the survey made by the British Government, which was at a lower rate than he had previously paid; (2) that the suit was barred for want of Collector's certificate under s. 4 of the Pensions Act (XXIII of 1871); and (3) that the Civil Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit under the Revenue Jurisdiction Act (Bom. Act X of 1876), s. 4, sub-cl. (b), and the Land Revenue Code (Bom. Act V of 1879), s. 216, sub-cl. (b).

Held, that as there was no objection by either party to the amount or incidence of assessment of land revenue fixed by Government, and the question being whether the khot was liable to pay to the inamdar maktas or assessment, the suit was not taken away from the cognizance of Civil Courts by the Revenue Jurisdiction Act (Bom. Act X of 1876), s. 4, sub-cl. (b).

Held, further, that the Court was not precluded from entertaining the suit for want of Collector's certificate under the Pensions Act (XXIII of 1871), s. 4, because the original grant passed the lands, and because it is the original grant which determines whether the Pensions Act is applicable, and not the actual rights which the grantee, as a matter of fact, may have enjoyed by it.

Held, further, that the payment which the khot had been making to the inamdar before the time of the British survey was in the nature of assessment or rating by Government, but held also that the plaintiffs were entitled to the old assessment as claimed by them. It was plain that in cases falling within sub-cls (a) and (e) of s. 216 of the Land Revenue Code, Bombay Act V of 1879, the inamdar's interest in the assessment would not be affected by the application of Chapters VIII to X of that Act. He would still get the old assessment in the alienated lands in the village in the former case and the same amount of assessment in the latter, and the same must have been the intention in cases contemplated by sub-cl. (b).

The "holder of the village" in the concluding para. of s. 216 must be read as meaning the "holder of the assessment or any part thereof of an alienated village." GANGADHAR HARI KARKARE v. MORHAT PUROHIT, 18 B. 525 ... 859

Insolvency.

(1) Indian Insolvent Act (Stat. 11 and 12 Vic., c. 21), ss. 50 and 51—Conduct of insolvent amounting to offences within those sections—Conduct of insolvent considered with reference to the following charges filed against him by opposing creditors, viz., reckless speculation; contracting debts without reasonable expectation of paying them; misconduct in contracting debts; concealment of property; obtaining forbearance by false representations; contracting debts by false pretences; undue preference.—The insolvent had for many years carried on business in Bombay as a merchant. His firm (Messrs. B. and A. Hormarji) had been established in 1830 by his uncle and father. On the death of the latter in 1882 the insolvent was left the sole surviving partner, and from that time until his failure he carried on the business alone. The failure took place in April, 1891, and on the 1st May, 1891, he was adjudicated an insolvent. His liabilities were stated to be Rs. 47,98,591; his good assets Rs 5,13,903 and his doubtful assets Rs. 60 014. His discharge was opposed by six banks in Bombay with which he had had dealings. The grounds of opposition were as follows:—

(1) Reckless speculation; (2) contracting debts without any reasonable expectation, at the time when the same was contracted, of paying the same; (3) gross misconduct in contracting debts; (4) concealment of property; (5) obtaining forbearances from the opposing creditors by making false representations to them; (6) contracting debts by means of false pretences; (7) fraudulently and with intent of diminishing the sum to be divided among his creditors, or of giving an undue preference to creditors, having discharged a debt due by the insolvent.

It appeared that down to the end of 1889 there was nothing in the dealings of the firm to which objection could be taken. In the first half of the year 1890 he must have sustained heavy loss, as his mercantile assets over liabilities, which on 31st December, 1889, were Rs. 5,50,794, were on the 30th June, 1890, reduced to Rs. 2,29,612. The charges, however, against the insolvent were based upon his conduct subsequently to the latter date. On that day (30th June, 1890,) the insolvent nominally possessed four lakhs of rupees, the saleable value of which was about 2½ lakhs. With his finances in this state the insolvent speculated in exchange, and in six months viz., before the 31st December, 1890) he had lost his four lakhs of nominal capital, and 19 or 23 lakhs of rupees besides. The Court held

(1) As to the first ground of opposition, that the insolvent was guilty of rash and reckless speculation. This, however, was not an offence within the meaning of s. 51 of the Indian Insolvent Act (11 and 12 Vic., c. 21). When the insolvent entered into the contracts which had resulted in the loss, he had a fair capital, and though his speculations were excessive in amount he had a fairly reasonable expectation that there would not be such a fall in exchange as would more than absorb his assets.

(2) As to the second and third grounds of opposition, that they were proved in respect of the insolvent's transaction subsequently to December, 1890, and that the insolvent was guilty of gross misconduct in contracting debts having no reasonable or probable expectation, at the time when they were contracted, of paying them, and that this conduct fell within the purview of s. 51 of the Indian Insolvent Act. In December, 1890, the insolvent was bankrupt to the extent (at all events) of over 16 lakhs, and had on hand large forward contracts which then showed a further probable loss. In that position he entered into further large speculative sales of exchange. He had then no assets with which to meet any loss.

(3) As to the fourth ground of opposition, that it was proved.

(4) As to the fifth ground of opposition, that it was not established. On 18th April, 1891, the insolvent called a meeting of creditors and laid a not very candid or truthful statement of his affairs before them. Nothing was then arranged, and the meeting was adjourned for a week, in order that a committee should examine the insolvent's position, &c. It was understood and arranged that in the meantime no step should be taken against the insolvent and that he should keep his affairs in statu quo. The insolvent, however, swore that he understood he was to make no large payments, but that he was to keep the firm going. During that week the insolvent paid Rs. 3,193 due on a bill to one of the banks and Rs. 472 on re-draft account, a few insignificant current expenses and Rs. 1,000 to his solicitors, who were preparing a trust-deed to be carried before the creditors. The Court was of opinion that the conduct of the insolvent in making these payments did not amount to the offences charged in the fifth ground of oppostion, viz., obtaining forbearance from the opposing creditors by making false representations to them.

(5) As to the sixth ground, that it was not established. On the 14th March the insolvent in answers to enquiries had assured the manager of the Chartered Bank that his firm was quite sound and solvent, it being then to his knowledge hopelessly insolvent. On that day the manager accepted the insolvent's bills for £20,000 for which security was given, and subsequently the insolvent sold one of his own bills for £10,000 to the Bank. This, however, was in pursuance of a previous contract. The evidence of the manager showed that it was because of this contract, and not because of the false representation of the insolvent, that he purchased the draft for £10,000. The Court was of opinion that the transaction did not come within s. 50.

(6) As to the seventh ground (undue preference), that it was not proved. On the 16th April, 1891, the day but one before the insolvent held a meeting of his creditors, he sent £5,000 to Messrs. Elliott & Sons in England. That firm had accepted bills of the insolvent which he was bound to take up, but the earliest did not fall due untill the 20th May, 1891. His practice had been to remit money a day or two before bills became due. The Court was of opinion that the transaction was not an undue preference within s. 50. It was no doubt a voluntary payment, but it was not shown to be a fraudulent discharge of a debt within the section. A mere voluntary payment of a debt is not within the purview of the section. Such a payment must be fraudulent and must be made with the intent of diminishing the sum to be divided amongst creditors, or of giving an undue preference to any of the creditors. From the mere fact of a voluntary payment, fraud of a penal nature cannot be inferred. Here nothing more was proved than a voluntary payment by a man in insolvent circumstances. The insolvent knew he was in difficulties, but was of so sanguine a nature that he believed he could surmount them, and so £ 5,000 were sent rather with a view to keep up his English connection than with the fraudulent intent of giving an undue preference. Where an undue preference is made penal the Court must be satisfied that the guilty intention necessary to constitute the offence existed in the mind of the insolvent, and ought not to assume it unless the circumstances point to no other probable conclusion.

The release by an insolvent of a debt due to him without receiving payment would undoubtedly fall within the scope of s. 50 of the Indian Insolvent Act (Stat. 11 and 12 Vic., 21). In the matter of HORMASJI A. HORMASJI, 17 B. 313 ... 204

Decree on mortgage for payment of Rs. 1,800 by instalments, and in default execution for whole amount to issue—Default in payment for instalments—Waiver by plaintiff of right to execute decree—Receipt by plaintiff of overdue instalments is no waiver—Practice—Procedure - Different rulings of different High Courts—Judge to follow the ruling of the High Court to which he is subordinate.—By a consent decree passed in a mortgage suit the defendant was ordered to pay to the plaintiff the sum of Rs. 1,800 by yearly instalments of Rs. 50 payable on the 30th April in each year, and in case of default in payment of any instalment the plaintiff was to be at liberty to execute the decree by sale of the mortgage property. The defendants failed to pay the first instalment, which fell due on the 30th April, 1888, and the plaintiff applied for execution and obtained an order for the sale of the property. In order to prevent the sale the defendants on the 13th November, 1888, paid Rs. 60 out of Court, and the application for execution thereupon was allowed to drop The defendants subsequently made the following payments, viz., Rs. 15 on the 5th June, 1889, Rs. 25 on the 12th June, 1889, Rs. 15 on the 1st January, 1890, and Rs. 50 in the Nazir's office on the 2nd June, 1890, which was the day on which the Court opened after the summer vacation, which had begun on the 30th April, 1890. On the 6th June, 1890, the plaintiff again applied for execution of the decree, which was granted by the Subordinate Judge. On appeal, the District Judge reversed the order, holding that the plaintiff by accepting the above payments had waived his right to execute the decree. On appeal to the High Court.

Held that the plaintiff was entitled to execution. The acceptance of the payments did not prove a waiver. They were not accepted on account of the specific instalments in arrears, but on account of the whole decree; and even if they were taken as payments of overdue instalments, they could not by themselves prove a waiver.

Interpleader.

Civ. Pro. Code. (XIV of 1882), ss. 470, 473—Costs of plaintiff—Claims by plaintiff against goods in respect of which suit brought.—In May, 1893, one Sadanand Ramsarmall (defendant No. 4), a resident at Hissar in the Punjab, consigned 600 bags of rapeseed to one Khimji Kanji of Bombay and delivered them to the plaintiffs for carriage to Bombay. While the goods were in transit to Bombay, Sadanand, the consignor, ordered the plaintiffs to deliver them to his agent Ramgopal Fulchand, instead of to the consignee, and on the 18th May, Ramgopal requested delivery from the plaintiffs. Before the goods could be delivered, however, the firm of E. D. Sassoon & Co., (defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3) claimed them, alleging that they had been assigned to them by Khimji Kanji for valuable consideration. The plaintiffs thereupon filed this suit praying that the defendants should be required to interplead, and that they should be restrained from suing them (the plaintiffs) in respect of the said goods. The plaintiffs claimed to charge the goods with payment of freight, wharfage and demurrage and their costs of suit.

Held:—

(1) that the suit was properly instituted by the plaintiffs as an interpleader suit so as to entitle them to their costs;

(2) that the fourth defendant was entitled to the goods, subject to the plaintiff's charge for freight and costs;

(3) that the plaintiffs' charge for wharfage and demurrage could not be allowed. The goods remained in the plaintiffs' possession not by reason of any neglect or default of the owner to take delivery of them, but by the act of the plaintiffs themselves, who kept and refused to deliver them for their own protection and benefit. All that they could presumably be entitled to, was a reasonable warehouse rent, which, however, they had not claimed. BOMBAY, BARODA AND CENTRAL INDIA RAILWAY COMPANY v. The defendant, who was an Acharya of the Vaishnav community, and was head of their institution at Nathdwara in Udepur where he usually resided, was, when this suit was brought, in Bombay for a time. He had in the latter place a treasurer and other servants employed in an establishment for the collection and entry of gifts made by devotees; and there, also, donations, made in like establishments elsewhere, were received for transmission to Nathdwara. The defendant, also, while in Bombay, accepted offerings on ceremonial visits made, or received, by him personally; but no bargain for the amount was made beforehand. Held, that in the above transactions there was no "carrying on business" within cl. 12 of the Letters Patent, 1865. (4) Contract—Performance of contract—Making of contract—Goods to be shipped at Bombay to the plaintiff at Karwar—Contract entered into and intended to be performed at Bombay.—The plaintiff residing at Karwar sent a sum of money to Kemp & Co. (defendant No. 1). a firm at Bombay, asking them to send him certain goods. Kemp & Co. informed the plaintiff that they had not the goods required by him. The plaintiff thereupon telegraphed to them to pay the amount to defendant No. 2, a resident of Bombay, provided he shipped the goods. On the failure of defendant No. 2 to ship the goods, the plaintiff brought a suit against the defendants in the Court at Karwar to recover the amount. He claimed against Kemp & Co. (defendant No. 1) because they had paid the money to the second defendant before the goods were shipped, and against the second defendant because he had not shipped the goooods, although he had received the money. The Court at Karwar was of opinion that Karwar was the place where the contract was to be performed, and that, therefore, it had jurisdiction to entertain the suit, and it passed a decree against defendant No. 2. The claim as against defendant No. 1 was dismissed.

Held, reversing the decree, that the understanding on which the money was paid to defendant No. 2 by Kemp & Co., and which was the agreement on which the plaintiff sued, was that the second defendant would ship the goods at Bombay to the plaintiff at Karwar. The contract, therefore, as between defendant No. 2 and Kemp & Co. acting on behalf of the plaintiff, was both entered into and intended to be performed at Bombay. The cause of action arose, therefore, in Bombay, and the Court at Karwar had no jurisdiction. DADABHAI DAJIBHAI v. DIOGO SALDANHA, 18 B. 43 ... 537

Residence in Bombay merely for a temporary purpose is not to "dwell" there so as to give jurisdiction to the High Court under cl. 12 of the Letters Patent, 1865.

Held, that the mere fact that the defendant had purchased the house which he occupied during a temporary visit to Bombay, afforded no inference of an intention to dwell there.

A defendant who was the Acharya or high priest of the Vaishnava community and the Maharaj Tikait of Shri Nathji at Nathdwara had a pedhi, or place of business, in Bombay, where devotees paid in any presents they intended to offer him.

Held, that this did not amount to "carrying on business" so as to give the High Court jurisdiction under cl. 12 of the Letters Patent, 1865.

The defendant when in Bombay was invited by his devotees and pupils to their houses, where he was treated as an incarnation of the deity, with certain forms and ceremonies, and received presents, and gave his blessing.

Held, that this did not amount to "personally working for gain" within the meaning of cl. 12 of the Letters Patent, 1865. GOSWAMI SHRI 108 SHRI GIRDHARIJI v. SHRI GOVARDHANLALJI GIRDHARIJI, 18 B. 290 701

The second defendant claimed the land as owner, alleging that the mortgagor and mortgagee had failed to pay the assessment on the land to the Native Chief to whom it was due. The latter had accordingly sold it by public auction to realize the assessment, and he (defendant No. 2) had bought it. The Court of first instance rejected the plaintiff's claim on the ground that the suit could not be entertained by a Civil Court under the provisions of the Revenue Jurisdiction Act (X of 1876) and the Land Revenue Code (Bombay Act V of 1879).

On appeal the District Court reversed the decree and remanded the case for trial on the merits.

Held, confirming the order of the District Court, that Government having rendered no assistance in the proceedings for the realization of the revenue by the Native Chief on which the defendant relied, the jurisdiction of the Civil Court was not taken away by s. 4 (c) of the Revenue Jurisdiction Act X of 1876. In execution of the decree the lands were sold to Panachand, who assigned them to the plaintiff. In January, 1878, the defendant as khot, took possession of the lands, alleging that Babsha had no right to mortgage ; that he had left the village and forfeited his occupancy ; that he (the defendant) had thereupon rightfully taken possession of the land in 1878, and that the occupancy had been declared forfeited by the revenue authorities in August, 1887, under ss. 86 and 153 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code, Bombay Act V of 1879. In 1888 the plaintiff brought this suit to recover the lands. The lower Court held that the defendant by accepting rent from the mortgagee was proved to have "consented to the mortgage and its necessary consequences."

On appeal to the High Court,

Held, reversing the decree of lower Court, that the plaintiff on the strength of his purchase from Panachand in 1887 had no right to eject the defendant. PURUSHOTTAM VAMAN SOMAN v. KASHIDAS JEYCHANDSHET, 17 B. 677 444

Act (Bombay Act III of 1874), s. 67—Money grant—Vatan consisting exclusively of cash allowance—Collector's certificate—Pensions Act (XXIII of 1871), s. 4.—In a suit for partition of a kulkarni vatan, for a declaration that the plaintiffs were entitled to officiate as kulkarnis and for a third share in the moiety of the vatan belonging to the parties, it was contended that under the Vatandars Act (Bombay Act III of 1874) the suit was not maintainable in the Civil Court.

Held, that the Vatandars Act does not preclude the Civil Court from declaring the plaintiffs' right to the status of vatandars when the share defined is in respect of a share in the vatan belonging to the branch of the parties, and the declaration does not interfere with the rights of the Collector in any way as given by the Act. In preparing the register, the Collector's duty as determined by s. 67 of the Act is confined to specifying the names of the heads of families and the proportionate part possessed by each head, and is in no way concerned with the rights of the members of a particular branch inter se.

A suit for a declaration that the plaintiffs are vatandars of a share of a moiety of a kulkarni vatan consisting exclusively of a cash allowance from Government is not a suit relating to a "money grant" within the contemplation of s. 4 of the Pension Act (XXIII of 1871). Land Acquisition Act (X of 1870).

S. 19—Assessor—Disqualifications in an assessor—Bias—Objections to assessor's appointment not raised in time—Waiver—Estoppel—Minor—Assessor not competent to act as witness.—Certain land belonging to the applicant, a minor, was taken by the Municipality of Hubli under the Land Acquisition Act (X of 1870). The Mamlatdar of Hubli, who was an ex officio member of the Municipal Committee, took part in the negotiations for the purchase of the land. He also gave evidence as to its value in the inquiry before the Collector. As the price offered by the Collector was not accepted by the applicant, the matter was referred to the District Judge, under s. 15 of the Act, for the purpose of determining the amount of compensation.

On this reference the Mamlatdar acted as an assessor appointed by the Collector, and was also examined as a witness as to the value of the land. But no objection was taken to his acting as an assessor. The District Judge eventually upheld the Collector's award. On an application under s. 622 of the Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882).

Held, that the award was bad. The Mamlatdar had, under the circumstances, a substantial interest in the matter, sufficient to disqualify him from acting as an assessor.

Held, also, that the minor applicant was not estopped from objecting to the competency of the Mamlatdar by the fact that his guardian had not raised any such objection in the Court below, and might, therefore, be taken to have waived it.

Assuming that there was a waiver, it could not bind the minor, as it was not for his benefit.

Held, also, that a person who is appointed an assessor under s. 19 of the Land Acquisition Act (X of 1870) performs quasi-judicial functions, and is, therefore, incompetent to testify as a witness in the same proceedings. SWAMIRAO v. THE COLLECTOR OF DHARWAR, 17 B. 299 ... 195

The lower Courts held that the defendants were permanent tenants, but were bound to pay a reasonable rent. Their decision was not based on evidence given in the case, but on what was termed a "well-known distinction between the sheri or private lands of an inamdar and the khata or rayatwar lands held by recognised tenants." The exercise of certain rights of transfer or inheritance, &c., were regarded as evidence of fixity of tenure at a reasonable rent. On second appeal by the plaintiff to the High Court it was argued that the District Court having found, as a fact, that the defendants were permanent tenants bound to pay a reasonable rent, the High Court in second appeal was bound by that finding.

Held, that the case should be remanded for proper enquiry. No doubt, if the appeal in the District Court were conducted as if all the facts recorded by the Subordinate Judge were admitted, the plaintiff could not in second appeal question these facts. But it did not appear that it was admitted that the distinction drawn between sheri and khata tenants was correct, or that every khata tenant, as such, exercised the rights described by the Subordinate Judge. Under the circumstances it was clear that the decision of the District Judge was based neither on evidence nor admissions, and was, therefore, not binding in second appeal.

In determining the rigts of khata tenants who held under no express contract, the best evidence no doubt, if possible, would be the evidence of custom in the particuiar village in question, but evidence of similar tenants in similar villages would not be excluded.

Mirasdars in an inam village cannot always claim to hold at a fixed rent. An inamdar can enhance their rents within the limits of custom. VISHVANATH BHIKAJI v. DHONDAPPA, 17 B. 475 ... 309

The suit was compromised, and by a consent decree it was declared that the defendants held by mirasi tenure and they were directed to pay rent "as before" or in default the plaintiff should take possession. The plaintiff afterwards applied in execution for possession, alleging that the rent had not been paid.

Landlord and Tenant—(Continued).

The defendants pleaded that it had been paid, and the plaintiff rejoined that, even if it had been paid, the Court could not recognize the payment, as it had not been certified under s. 258 of the Civ. Pro. Code.

Held, that under the circumstances the rent when paid was to be deemed as paid under the mirasi tenure and not under the decree, and, therefore, s. 258 of the Civ. Pro. Code did not apply, and payment need not be certified. KEDARI v. GAJAI, 18 B. 690 ... 969

(8) Non-payment of rent by tenant to landlord—Acquiescence of landlord—Effect of acquiescence—Subsequent suit by landlord for possession—Practice—Finding of fact not accepted in second appeal—Inam land—Sub alience—Wrongful surrender by the village inamdar to Government—Khalsat.—The plaintiff, a sub-alienee from an inamdar of certsin inam, leased it to D. prior to the year 1858. In 1860 the land was wrongfully surrendered by the inamdars of the village to Government as lapsed old service inam and was made khalsat. In 1863, the plaintiff protested against this being done, and the Collector referred him to a Civil suit against the inamdars. From the year 1863 the plaintiff received no rent from D., or after D's death from his heirs, who paid the assessment to Government. In 1889, the plaintiff brought the present suit against the representatives of D. and the village inamdars to recover possession. The District Judge dismissed the suit on the ground that the plaintiff must be held to have acquiesced in the loss of the land, and by his conduct since 1863 must be taken to have designedly abandoned all his interest in the land, and that his suit was barred.

Held, that the plaintiff did not acquiesce in the surrender by the inamdar in 1860, to Government, as he distinctly protested against it in 1863, and that as to his conduct since 1863 nothing had taken place to deprive him of such legal rights as he possessed against the tenant D. in 1863, if they were not barred by the Statute of Limitation; and as to limitation.

Held, that as the District Judge had decided the point under the influence of the view taken by him as to the plaintiff's conduct, the case should be remanded for a fresh finding on that point.

Held, further, that the mere circumstance that D., after the land was treated as khalsat, paid assessment to Government, and had not paid rent to plaintiff, could not affect the relationship of landlord and tenant which admittedly existed between them in 1863. RAMBHAT v. BABABHAT, 18 B. 250 ... 675

(9) Notice to quit—Plea of permanent tenancy.—The plaintiff sued to eject the defendants from certain land. The defendants pleaded that they were permanent tenants under a lease granted to their ancestor by the plaintiff's grandfather in 1805. The Court of first instance awarded the plaintiff's claim. On appeal, the District Judge held that the lease on which the defendants relied was one determinable on the grantee's death, but as the grantee's heirs (the defendants) had continued in possession paying the stipulated rent, they were entitled to a reasonable notice to quit. The District Judge accordingly passed a decree, directing the defendants to vacate the land at the expiry of six months from the date of the decree.

Held, that the District Judge could not, in his judgment, give the notice which the plaintiff was bound to give to his tenants. Plaintiff's suit must fail for want of notice. ABU BAKAR SAIBA v. VENKATRAMANA VISHVESHVAR, 18 B. 107 ... 580

G. held certain lands as a tenant under M., an inamdar. The lands continued in G.'s family for nearly 80 years. It was found that owing to this antiquity of the tenancy, its commencement or duration could not be satisfactorily established by evidence.

Held, that in the absence of any local usage to the contrary, G.'s tenancy must be presumed to be permanent. RAMCHANDRA NARAYAN MANTRI v. ANANT, 18 B. 433 ... 798

(11) Possession—Adverse possession—Lease—Expiry of lease—Continued possession after expiration of lease—Permissive possession—Tenant's heirs continuing in possession after the expiry of tenancy—Limitation.—In 1840 the land in dispute was leased to R. for life. R. died in or about 1871, and after R.'s death, his heirs (the defendants) continued in possession without obtaining a fresh lease or paying any rent to the landlord. In 1888 the landlord sued to eject the defendants. The defence was that the suit was barred by limitation.

Held, that the suit was not barred. After R.'s death the defendants, though not in possession as tenants, were not trespassers. Their possession was permissive, and not adverse until they expressly set up a title of ownership in the property. KRISHNAJI RAMCHANDRA v. ANTAJI PANDURANG, 18 B. 256 ... 679

II of the Limitation Act (IX of 1871).*—One Ramji Chikne, who was the owner of the land in dispute, mortgaged it to Baji in July, 1870. In October, 1876, Bapu, a tenant of the land, obtained an injunction against Ramji restraining him from interfering with his (Bapu's) possession, in a possessory suit which was filed in the Mamlatdar's Court in May, 1876. In July, 1877, Baji obtained a decree on his mortgage, and in execution he got possession of the property from Ramji (the mortgagor) in June, 1879. The plaintiff, who was the assignee of both Baji and Ramji (mortgagee and mortgagor), sued Bapu in ejectment in September, 1888. Both the lower Courts allowed the claim. On second appeal by Bapu, the plaintiff (inter alia) contended that having taken an assignment of the mortgage from the mortgagee, he was not bound by the proceedings in the Mamlatdar's Court in 1876 against the mortgagor. But

Held, that when the plaintiff, having previously taken an assignment of Baji's mortgage, purchased the equity of redemption from Ramji, the mortgage was extinguished, there being no circumstance from which an intention could be presumed to keep it alive. The plaintiff could not stand in a better position than Ramji, and was bound by the proceedings in the Mamlatdar's Court, notwithstanding that he had taken an assignment of Baji's mortgage. In those proceedings the defendant had claimed a right of permanent possession as against the Chikne family, and the effect of the Mamlatdar's order was to continue him in possession until ejected by the decree of a Civil Court. It was, therefore, incumbent upon Ramji to bring a suit within three years from the Mamlatdar's order, as provided by art. 46, sch. II of the Limitation Act (IX of 1871), and that not having been done, the plaintiff, who derived his title from Ramji, could not recover possession from the defendant.

Held, further, that ever since the proceedings in the Mamlatdar's Court commencing with the defendant's suit in May, 1876, the possession of the defendant, whatever may have been its nature originally, was distinctly adverse to Ramji and also to plaintiff, who as assignee might have taken possession at any time under the mortgage, and the present suit not having been brought until September, 1888, was barred by the Limitation Act (XV of 1877). (13) Suit by tenant to recover possession claiming as full owner—Subsequent claim as yearly tenant unjustly dispossessed—Notice to quit—Denial of landlord's title—A plaintiff sued to recover possession of certain fields, &c., alleging that he was a permanent tenant of the defendant, having purchased the right of occupancy from previous occupants of the land. The lower Court held that the plaintiff's vendors were mere yearly tenants and not permanent tenants, but that the sale of their right to the plaintiff was valid, and that the plaintiff had been wrongfully dispossessed by the defendant, no notice to quit having been given. But

Held, that the plaintiff could not recover. For his plaint and the conduct of his case amounted to a denial of his landlord's (defendant's) title. In his suit the plaintiff claimed to be full owner, and he could not afterwards claim to be restored to possession on the ground that he was a yearly tenant entitled to notice to quit, which was not given. LALU GAGAL v. BAI MOTAN BIBI, 17 B. 631 ... 414

(14) Suit for possession—Denial of landlord's title—Plea of permanent tenancy—Notice to quit—Yearly tenant—Practice—Procedure—Second appeal—Point taken for first time on second appeal—Specific performance, suit for—Parties made defendants who were not parties to the agreement.—The plaintiff sued the jaghirdars of a certain village (defendants Nos. 1 to 11) and certain of their tenants (defendants Nos. 12 to 18) for specific performance of an agreement made between the plaintiff and the jaghirdars, by which the jaghirdars agreed to give up to the plaintiff possession of certain lands, which were in possession of the tenants (defendants Nos. 12 to 18). The jaghirdars (defendants Nos. 1 to 11) pleaded that they were unable to give possession, as the tenants (defendants Nos. 12 to 18) were permanent tenants and refused to quit the land. The tenants (defendants Nos. 12 to 18) put in a separate defence, also alleging that they were permanent tenants of the jaghirdars. The lower appellate Court held that the tenants (defendants Nos. 12 to 18) were yearly tenants and did not hold in perpetuity, and that the jaghirdars (defendants Nos. 1 to 11) had power to eject them. That Court, therefore, passed a decree for the plaintiff for specific performance of the agreement as against the jaghirdars (defendants Nos. 1 to 11) and for possession as against the other defendants (Nos. 12 to 18). The latter defendants (the tenants) appealed to the High Court. They there contended that if they were yearly tenants, as held by the decree of the lower Court, they could not be dispossessed without notice to quit, and that no such notice had been given.

Held (1) that the objection was good, and that no decree against the tenants (defendants Nos. 12 to 18) could be made in favour of the plaintiff, and that he was only entitled to a declaration that the said defendants were mere yearly and not permanent tenants.

(2) That the tenants (defendants Nos. 12 to 18) had claimed to be permanent tenants before the suit was filed, and at that time they were not tenants of the plaintiff, but of the jaghirdars (defendants Nos. 1 to 11). Under the circumstances that claim could not be taken to have worked a forfeiture of their tenancy as a denial of their landlord's title, or in any case it must be deemed to have been waived by the jaghirdars (defendants Nos. 1 to 11). The plaintiff, therefore, could not rely upon it as an answer to the defendants' contention that a notice to quit was necessary.

(3) That the objection as to the necessity of notice to quit was one which might be taken in second appeal.

Held, also, that an objection that certain of the defendants should not have been made parties to a suit for specific performance, because they were not parties to the agreement, could not be taken for the first time in second appeal, as it only involved a question of practice. with the permission of the plaintiff, who was the owner, and erected buildings and otherwise expended money upon it. The plaintiff and the defendant were relations and lived near each other. The plaintiff constantly visited the land and knew what the defendant was doing, but made no objection. Subsequently the plaintiff being anxious to obtain from the defendant an acknowledgment of his (the plaintiff's) title, induced (but without misrepresentation or fraud) the defendant to sign a rent-note. The Court found that although this rent-note was, in terms, a lease for one year, yet the intention of the parties was not that the defendant should at the expiration of the year, or on any subsequent demand, hand over to the plaintiff the land with the buildings which had been erected by the defendant with the plaintiff's implied consent, without being recouped for the expenditure thus incurred; that subsequently to the execution of the rent-note the defendant had erected other buildings and that the plaintiff knew of this, and made no objection.

Held, that the plaintiff could not recover possession of the land or require the removal of the buildings, without recouping the defendant the money he had expended. The plaintiff was estopped from denying the claim of defendant. He had stood by in silence while his tenant had spent money on his land. DATTATRAYA RAYAJI PAI v. (18) Terms of tenancy proved orally although contained in a document—Compensation for buildings erected by tenant—Estoppel—Evidence—Practice—Procedure.—The plaintiffs alleged that in 1866 the defendant's father had let land to their predecessor in title in perpetuity on fazendari tenure for building purposes, subject to a certain rent. They complained that the defendant sought to eject them, and they prayed for a declaration that they were entitled to the land in perpetuity subject only to payment of the yearly rent. In the event of its being held that they were not perpetual tenants, they prayed that the defendant might be ordered to pay them Rs. 7,000, the value of the buildings on the land. The plaintiffs made out a prima facie case without showing, or its being shown, that there was any agreement or lease. Before the case had concluded, however, a document was produced which was said to be a counterpart of the agreement of letting made in 1866. It was not registered, and was, therefore, inadmissible in evidence. It was not tendered, but it was shown to the defendant in cross-examination, and he denied that it was a genuine document.

Held, that the plaintiffs, having made out a prima facie case without betraying the existence of a written contract relating to the subject-matter of the suit, were not precluded from obtaining a decree even though it afterwards appeared that a written contract had been made. If the defendant intended to rely upon a written contract it was for him to produce it as part of his evidence. In the present case, as the document was not referred to in the plaint, written statement or issues and was not before the Court, the evidence should be looked at to ascertain the terms of the tenancy by which the plaintiffs and their predecessors in title held the property.

Where a landlord had not objected to buildings erected by his tenant for a period of twenty-five years, and during that time had received rent from the tenant.

Held, that even if the Court were not justified in holding that the land had originally been granted for building purposes, the landlord would be precluded from ejecting the tenant without compensation. YESHWADABAI v. RAMCHANDRA TUKARAM, 18 B. 66 ... 553 and sanad issued under a mistake—Quit-rent paid by inamdars to Government under such settlement—Refund—Void agreement—Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 20 and 65—Sanad—Meaning and effect of.—Under the Bombay Summary Settlement Act, VII of 1863, a settlement in respect of the village of Mankol was effected, in 1864, between the Government and the plaintiffs, who were the inamdars, and a sanad was granted to the plaintiffs, under the terms of which a certain yearly quit-rent was payable by them to Government in respect of the said village. At the time of the settlement the plaintiffs believed that they were the superior holders of all the lands in the village, including certain wanta lands. It subsequently appeared, however, that the wanta lands were the property of certain girasias, who were in possession as owners, and that the plaintiffs were not the holders of these lands within the meaning of s. 32 of Act VII of 1863. The Government, however, required the plaintiffs to pay the entire quit-rent of the village for the Samvat years 1939-40, as fixed by the sanad. The plaintiffs paid under protest and brought this suit to recover the amount (Rs. 400-12-6) paid in respect of the wanta lands.

Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to a refund of the quit-rent paid in respect of the wanta lands.

A settlement under Act VII of 1863 (Bombay) is an agreement effected by proposal and acceptance (see s. 2), and is subject to the ordinary rules applicable to contracts. Here both parties entered into the settlement in the belief that the plaintiffs were the superior holders of all the lands in the village. There was, therefore, a common mistake as to a matter of fact which both parties must have regarded at the time as essential to the agreement, it being made so by the Act itself under which they assumed to contract. Such a mistake under s. 20 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872) renders the agreement void. The settlement as to the wanta lands might be treated as distinct from that which applied to the remaining lands of the village, the former being void, and the plaintiffs being, therefore, entitled to a refund of the quit-rent paid in respect of such lands under s. 65 of the Contract Act.

A sanad issued under Act VII of 1863 merely declares what by s. 6 of the Act is stated to be the effect of the settlement to which both the Government and the holders of the land have consented; but it is by virtue of the settlement itself, as provided by the Act, that Government are entitled to demand payment of such rent. Owing to this suit, the Subordinate Judge stayed execution of the Mamlatdar's decree. The opponents' suit was subsequently dismissed by the Subordinate Judge, whose decree was ultimately confirmed by the High Court in second appeal. The applicant then applied to the Mamlatdar for the execution of his decree in the possessory suit. The Mamlatdar rejected the application, on the ground that the decree of the High Court in the civil suit prevented him from executing his decree.

Held, that the applicant was entitled to obtain from the Mamlatdar an order for the execution of his decree, unless it was barred by limitation. It was not barred, inasmuch as in computing the period of limitation allowance was to be made for the time during which the decree remained in abeyance by reason of the proceedings in the other suit. certain circumstances the presentation of application for review may be considered as sufficient cause for delay in filing an appeal, the appellant is bound to satisfy the Court that such circumstances did exist in his case, and that he had sufficient cause for not presenting the appeal within the prescribed period.

The plaintiff obtained a decree for possession of certain land in the Court of first instance. This decree was reversed by the appellate Court on 29th October, 1890. The plaintiff applied for a review of judgment of the appellate Court on 27th January, 1891. The petition of review was rejected on 18th March, 1891. Thereupon the plaintiff preferred a second appeal to the High Court on 13th April, 1891.

Held, that the second appeal was time-barred. The time taken in prosecuting the application for review could not be deducted in calculating the period of limitation, as the plaintiff had not shown that he had reasonable grounds for asking for a review. PUNDLIK v. ACHUT, 18 B. 84 ... 564

(4) Art. 148—Acknowledgment—Acknowledgment by one of several mortgagees as agent for the others—Acknowledgment by one of several heirs of the mortgagee, not sufficient—Mortgage—Redemption—Limitation.—Under art. 148 of the Limitation Act (IX of 1871), an acknowledgment of the mortgagor's title by one of several mortgagees as agent for the others is wholly ineffectual, and does not bind the rest. So, too, is an acknowledgment by one of several heirs of the original mortgagee without effect. The expression "some person claiming under him" in art. 148 of the Act means some person claiming under him the entirety of the mortgagee's rights.

The property in dispute was mortgaged by Hari Bhagti to the firm of Kasandas Bechardas in 1816. In 1830 Jagjivandas, one of the sons and heirs of Kasandas, who was then manager of the firm, on behalf of the whole family, sub-mortgaged the property in dispute to a third party, under a bond which recited the original mortgage by Hari Bhagti to Kasandas. In 1885 the defendant, who was a descendant of Kasandas, redeemed the sub-mortgage effected by Jagjivandas. In 1887 the plaintiff, having purchased the equity of redemption from Hari Bhagti's descendants, filed the present suit for redemption of the mortgage of 1816. The plaintiff relied on the acknowledgment made by Jagjivandas in 1830 as giving a fresh starting point to limitation.

Held, that the suit was barred by limitation. The acknowledgment by Jagjivandas, whether as manager of the firm or as one of the heirs of the original mortgagee, was not sufficient under art. 148 of the Limitation Act (IX of 1871). BHOGILAL v. AMRITLAL, 17 B. 173 ... 113

Code* (XIV of 1882)—Account.—In order to make limitation operate when a fraud has been committed by one who has obtained property thereby, it is for him to show that the injured complainant has had clear and definite knowledge of the facts, constituting the fraud, at a time which is too remote for the suit to be brought. Suggestion of his having been defrauded does not amount to such knowledge as is required by s. 18 of the Indian Limitation Act (XV of 1877).

In a suit brought by the Official Assignee in 1887 it was established that the defendant receiving in 1859, upon a voluntary transfer, some of the insolvent's assets, joined and assisted him in defrauding his creditors; and that no disclosure of this fraud was made to the Official Assignee, while the defendant did what he could to prevent the latter from seeing the accounts of the assets transferred.

Held, that the burden of proof was on the defendant to show that the plaintiff had clear and definite knowledge of this fraud for more than the period of limitation. This burden had not been discharged by proof of the fact that some hints and clues had reached the Official Assignee which might have led to such knowledge: and held, that the Official Assignee had been kept from knowledge of his right to sue, within the meaning of s. 18 of the Limitation Act. ...

Also, this defendant having been "made a party," but only "for the purpose of discovery," to a prior suit brought by the plaintiff, according to an order in that suit, in which, however, there was no decree against him as a party, and no order as to his costs:

PAGE

(11) S. 19—Limitation—Acknowledgment—Signing, what amounts to.—Certain letters admitting a debt were written by the authority of the debtor, who was a desai. The only words, however, of the letter which were actually in his own handwriting were the words "guru samarth" (the exalted preceptor is strong) at the beginning of each letter and the words "kalave, bahut kay lihine, lobh karava hi vinanti" (let this be known. What more need be written. Keep regard; this is the representation) at the end. It was proved by evidence that this was the usual mode of signing and authenticating letters and informal documents among the class to which the defendant belonged.

Held, that, by analogy, the writing of specified words by desais at the top and bottom of letters, which was shown to be the usual way, amongst persons of that class, of authenticating letters, was a "signing" within s. 19 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) and that the letter was a valid acknowledgment.

The ground upon which it is held that the mark of an illiterate debtor is a sufficient signature, is that the signing in such a manner as is usually adopted by the debtor with the view of showing that he intends to be bound by the document, renders the document effective as an acknowledgment under the section. Whether the circumstance of the debtor not signing his name, is the result of necessity as in the case of an illiterate debtor, or of custom as in the case of a class of debtors having a special status in the community can be of no importance. (24) Sch. II, art. 134—Mortgage—Sub-mortgage—Redemption—Limitation.—In 1864 Ramji mortgaged the property in dispute with possession to Raghu. Raghu and his widow after his death sub-mortgaged various portions of it to Savalaram (defendant No. 3) in 1864, 1866 and 1870. After the death of the mortgagor, Ramji, his grandsons (plaintiffs Nos. 1, 2 and 3) sold their equity of redemption to plaintiffs Nos. 4 and 5, and in 1891 the five plaintiffs sued defendants Nos. 1 and 2, the heirs of Raghu (original mortgagee) and the sub-mortgagee (defendant No. 3) for redemption and possession. The defendants contended that the suit was barred by the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), sch. II, art. 134.

Held, that art. 134 did not apply as the language of the sub-mortgage-deed showed that the transaction was merely a mortgage of the mortgage interest of Raghu and not of the entire property in the land. SAVALARAM v. GENU, 18 B. 387 ... 766

(26) Sch. II, art. 144—Adverse possession—Mortgage—Mortgagee in possession—Dispossession of mortgagee by trespasser—Adverse possession as against mortgagee when effectual also as against the mortgagor—Evidence—Burden of proof.—Land was mortgaged with possession to A, father-in-law of defendant No. 1, in 1828. In 1856 A was ousted from possession by B, a trespasser (defendant No. 2) who subsequently held the land and dealt with it as his own for forty years. The mortgagor sued both A and B for redemption. In appeal, it was contended by B that his possession had been adverse not merely to A (the mortgagee), but also to the plaintiff (the mortgagor), and that the suit was barred by limitation. The plaintiff contended that B's possession was not adverse to him, because he as mortgagor had no right to possession during the term of the mortgage.

Held, that the suit fell under art. 144 of sch. 2 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), and that it lay upon B to prove that his possession for twelve years prior to the suit was adverse to the plaintiff (the mortgagor). There may be a possession adverse to the interest of a mortgagee which nevertheless is not adverse to the interest of the mortgagor. In such a case a suit by the mortgagor, or those claiming under him, will not be barred, although one by the mortgagee may be. The case was remanded for a finding on the question of when B's possession became adverse to the plaintiff. CHINTO v. JANKI, 18 B. 51 ... 542 mosque in Bombay, known as the Juma Masjid, was possessed of considerable property. The administration of the mosque and its property was carried on under rules which had been drawn up and approved in the year 1834 at a special general meeting of the Jamat convened for the purpose in the course of a suit which had been filed in the Supreme Court against the then Mushavirs of the mosque. That suit was referred to the Master to make certain enquiries, and in his report these rules were set out in full. His report was confirmed by the Court. The rules provided that the mosque and its property should be managed by the Kazi of Bombay and ten Mushavirs, and that a Nazir should be appointed by them, and be subject to their control. The rules also prescribed the various duties of the Kazi, Mushavirs and Nazir and declared that the power of filling up vacancies should be exercised by the Kazi and Mushavirs collectively or by the Kazi and an absolute majority of the Mushavirs.

In 1834 and for many years subsequently there was, as there had always been, a "Kazi of Bombay" appointed under a sanad from Government. He held the appointment for life, and the office was not hereditary. In 1866 the then Kazi of Bombay died, but in consequence of the provisions of Act II of 1864 and Bombay Act IV of 1864 the Government made no new appointment, and the office lapsed. One Mahomed Husain Murgay, however, assumed the office and was generally accepted by the community as Kazi of Bombay. He died in 1878, and upon his death, rival claimants sought the office of Kazi of Bombay.

The Mushavirs were then advised that they could not select one of the rival Kazis to fill the office of Kazi of Bombay under the rules, and they, therefore, continued to manage the mosque without a Kazi in violation of the rules of 1834. Two of the Mushavirs (now relators) were of opinion that one of the rival applicants for the position should be appointed Kazi, and as their wishes were not acceded to, they ceased to attend the Board, and as far as possible, while retaining their offices, they thwarted the action of the other Mushavirs. Subsequently in 1878 other vacancies occurred in the Board. In 1888 the number of Mushavirs was reduced to six, and two of them (the relators) as above stated, took no part in the administration, so that the management was left in the hands of the first four defendants. In 1891 four new Mushavirs (defendants Nos. 6 to 9) were elected, and in that year the Advocate-General at the relation of the two dissatisfied Mushavirs filed this suit against the Mushavirs. The former Nazir of the Masjid was also made a defendant (No. 5). He had held the office of Nazir from 1879 to 1891 when he resigned. The plaint set forth the irregularities which had taken place in the management in 1879, and prayed for the removal of the defendants (other than defendant No. 5) from the position of directors or Mushavirs and for an account against all the defendants, and for a scheme, &c. The following were the principal charges made against the defendants in the plaint and at the hearing:—

1. The neglect to take steps to supply the place of the Kazi and the failure to keep up the proper number of the Mushavirs.

Held, as to this, that subsequently to 1878 the Mushavirs had no authority under the rules of 1834 to fill up vacancies as they occurred or to carry on the government of the masjid. Since that year the Mushavirs were a provisional committee of management kept up from time to time by co-operation tacitly permitted by the Jamat to manage the affairs of the masjid until the original constitution could be restored or legally changed, that original constitution being for the time in abeyance.

2. The improper appointment in 1879 of one Mahomed Cassum Curtay (defendant No. 5) as Nazir.

Held, that the Mushavirs incurred no liability and deserved no censure for so doing.

3. The neglect to call for an annual account of the income and expenditure of the mosque under r. 6.

Held, that this charge was not proved.

4. The neglect to purchase properties with the surplus income of the mosque as required by r. 4.

Upon this point it was contended that the defendants should be charged with interest on the uninvested funds, so as to make up for the loss of rents which would have been recovered if properties had been purchased. In answer to this claim it was argued (1st) that, under the circumstances, the Mushavirs had no power to expend the funds of the mosque in purchasing property, and (2) that the claim was barred by limitation.

Held, that the claim fell within art. 120 of the schedule to the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), and was barred except as to six years prior to the filing of the suit, but even as to this period the Court refused to order accounts to be taken against the defendants. There had been no dishonesty or improper dealing with the funds of the mosque. The highest at which the case could be put was that there had been error of judgment. In this the community had acquiesced. Moreover, the position of the parties had changed. Some of the Mushavirs were dead, others had resigned and were not defendants to the suit, and it would be difficult to enforce contribution against them. The Court was further of opinion that, in any case, it was very doubtful whether a provisional committee like the Mushavirs would have been justified in assuming the power of purchasing property. Had the property fallen in value, the purchase might perhaps have been repudiated.

5. Their neglect in not detecting sums appropriated by the bill-collectors of the mosque and getting in the same.

Held, that as a provisional committee who had assumed the management of the masjid, the defendants were bound to protect its interests. Of the money which they actually received, or which was paid in to their account, they were actual trustees, but in addition to this they were officers of the masjid charged with the specific duty of superintending the Nazir and his accounts, and if the masjid had suffered loss by their neglect of duty, they were answerable for it. They neglected to examine the books, a cursory audit of which would have detected the defalcations of the bill-collectors. The Court, therefore, directed an account against them of the rents actually received, or which but for their wilful default or neglect they might have received from the bill-collectors.

6. Their neglect in allowing arrears of rent to accumulate and to be lost to the masjid.

Held, it was not the duty of the Mushavirs to look into the account of each individual tenant. Under the rules the Nazir, and not the Mushavirs, was entrusted with the collection of rents, and it was his duty to see that the rents were not allowed to fall unduly into arrear. It was not shown that, except at an exceptional time when the Nazir was ill, the rents were so much in arrear as to call for the active interference of the Mushavirs, or that the masjid had suffered undue loss under this head. The Court, therefore, refused relief on this charge.

7. The non-payment into the Bank of sums in the hands of the Nazir when they exceeded Rs. 500.

Held, that the spirit of the rules had been complied with and no loss had been shown.

Defendant No. 5, as above stated, had acted as Nazir of the masjid from 1879 to July, 1891, when he resigned. Under the rules (see rr. 2 and 7) he was appointed by the directors and was under their orders and was removable at their pleasure. it was contended at the hearing that he was not a proper party to the suit, being merely the agent or servant of the directors and not a trustee.

Held, that he was properly made a defendant. Both under Mahomedan law and under the rules the Nazir was a public officer in charge of the mosque, and as such liable to account to the community. ADVOCATE-GENERAL OF BOMBAY v. MOULVI ABDUL KADIR JITAKER, 18 B. 401... 776

Math.

Manager—Land appertaining to math—Sale of "miras malki" (ownership of miras tenure)—Miras tenure—Mirasdar on inam estate, position of —Adverse possession—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), s. 28—Right to recover rent—Construction.—In 1860, Krishnaji, the manager of a math, sold to Baxarbhai the "miras malki" (ownership of miras tenure) of certain lands appertaining to the math, subject to the payment of assessment. Krishnaji died in the same year and was succeeded by Ramkrishna as manager. In 1864 Ramkrishna sued Baxarbhai to set aside the sale. The suit was dismissed in 1865, and Baxarbhai's miras right was confirmed. In 1871 one Gopal obtained a decree declaring him to be the legal manager of the math and removing Ramkrishna, who was held to have had no title to the office.

In 1887 the plaintiff, who succeeded Gopal in the management of the math, brought the present suit against the defendant, who was the vendee of Baxarbhai, to recover possession of the lands or to recover assessment for three years previous to the suit. The defendant pleaded that the suit was barred by limitation.

The plaintiff contended that as there was no lawful manager between 1860 and 1875, that period ought to be omitted in computing the period of limitation, and that as under the deed of sale to Baxarbhai the vendee became a tenant, the possession of the vendee and of the defendant could not be adverse.

Held, that if defendant's possession was adverse to the ownership of the math during twelve years after Krishnaji's death, the operation of the law of limitation would not be affected by the fact that there was no legal manager during that time.

Held, further, that in the Bombay Presidency the mirasdar on inam estates is only "a tenant at quit-rent or at a reasonable rent not subject to ejectment so long as he pays it", and as there was nothing in the sale-deed passed by Krishnaji to Baxarbhai which required a different construction to be put on the miras tenure created by it, Baxarbhai's possession under it could not be adverse to the math until there was an assertion by the grantee of his claim to be a permanent tenant, up to which time he would, in the eye of the law, be regarded as a tenant-at-will. But the suit brought by Ramkrishna in 1864 showed that Baxarbhai was then asserting his mirasi right, and as more than twelve years had elapsed between that date and the bringing of the present suit, the plaintiff's right as representing the math to recover immediate possession was barred.

Held, further, that the plaintiff's right to recover three years' arrears of rent as reserved by the mirasi grant was not affected, as the effect of s. 28 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) was to extinguish the plaintiff's right as claimed by him to treat the grant as null and void. In 1886 the plaintiff obtained a money decree against Tikaram, and in execution of his decree he sold the property in dispute and obtained a certificate of sale on the 1st November, 1886.

Mortgage—1.—General—(Concluded). PAGE

On the 13th February, 1888, Tikaram mortgaged the property in dispute along with other property to the defendant and paid off Ganpat's mortgage. Ganpat thereupon returned the mortgage-deed to Tikaram with a receipt for payment endorsed. After payment of Ganpat's mortgage the defendant took possession of the property. In July, 1888, Tikaram executed a further mortgage of the property to the defendant for Rs. 8,000.

On the 30th August, 1888, the plaintiff having attempted to take possession was obstructed by the defendant. Thereupon the plaintiff brought this suit for possession.

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to possession. The mortgage to the defendant was subsequent to the plaintiff's purchase of the equity of redemption. The defendant did not know of that purchase. He took the mortgage from Tikaram, to whom he advanced the money to pay off the previous mortgage to Ganpat. There was nothing to show that there was any intention to keep Ganpat's mortgage alive in favour of the defendant.

Held, also, that as plaintiff was seeking to recover property which but for the defendant's payment to Ganpat would have been burdened with Ganpat's mortgage, and as the defendant when he advanced the money to Tikaram to pay off that mortgage did not know that Tikaram was no longer the owner of the equity of redemption, the plaintiff should give credit to the defendant for the sum paid by him; but as the defendant's mortgage comprised other properties besides the one in dispute, the plaintiff should recover possession on payment to the defendant of a proportionate part of Ganpat's mortgage-debt, having regard to the value of the property in dispute and that of the other mortgaged properties. Held, such subsequent mortgagee had an equity to call for a marshalling of the securities in his favour so as to require the first mortgagee to proceed to realise his security in the first instance out of the property not mortgaged to the second mortgagee. (Jardine, J., Diss.).

Held, that B, as first mortgagee, was entitled to priority. The registration of his mortgage was notice to C, and there was no misrepresentation by B which would relieve C, as subsequent mortgagee, of the duty of inquiry, or destroy the effect of such constructive notice. (2) Suit on registered mortgage—Execution—Sale—Proceeds of sale how applied—Priority—Unregistered mortgage—Money-decree—Priority of holder of unregistered mortgage to holder of money-decree—Incumbrances—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 97.—The plaintiff Padmanabh held a mortgage of certain land belonging to the first defendant. The mortgage was not registered. The second defendant, Marpal, was a mortgagee of the same land under a mortgage which was subsequent in date but was duly registered. Marpal obtained a decree upon this latter mortgage and applied in execution for sale of the land. The plaintiff intervened, but his claim was rejected on the ground that Marpal's mortgage was registered and had priority to his mortgage, which was not registered. The land was sold by auction to Ramchandra (defendant No. 4) and the proceeds of the sale were partly applied in satisfaction of Marpal's claim, and a further sum of Rs. 164 was paid to one Santapa (defendant No. 3), who had obtained a money-decree against the mortgagor (defendant No. 1). A balance of Rs. 103-8-11 was paid into Court and subsequently returned to defendant No. 1 (the mortgagor). The plaintiff Padmanabh now sued for payment of his mortgage-debt out of the proceeds of sale or from the defendants. The lower Court held that defendant No. 3 (Santapa) could not be called upon to refund the money which had been paid to him out of the proceeds, and that the plaintiff had a cause of action only against the mortgagor (defendant No. 1) not merely for the balance of Rs. 103-8-11, but for the whole of his claim. On appeal to the High Court.

Held, that the claim of the plaintiff in virtue of his mortgage although unregistered was prior to that of the third defendant (Santapa) under his money-decree. The plaintiff's earlier mortgage was postponed to that of Marpal, because it was not registered, but the plaintiff had the right of a second mortgagee over the balance in virtue of his mortgage. The proceeds of the sale after satisfying the first incumbrancer (Marpal) became payable first to the other incumbrancers, if any, and then to the mortgagor (defendant No. 1). The judgment-creditor (defendant No. 3) could only take any balance that remained subject to the equitable right of the plaintiff. PADMANABH BOMESHENVI v. KHEMU KOMAR NAIK, 18 B. 684 ... 965

(2) Mortgage to a firm—Subsequent mortgage to one member of the firm for personal loan, with stipulation for payment of new debt before prior mortgage-debt—Right to redeem first mortgage independently of later mortgage.—On the 13th July, 1877, a firm, of which defendants Nos. 1 to 4 were members, lent money to Nathu Narbheram on mortgage of certain property. Subsequently defendant No. 2 personally made a further loan to Nathu, who executed two san mortgage-deeds to him of the same property containing stipulations that these bonds should be paid before the mortgage of July, 1877. Nathu died, and his widow and heir assigned the equity of redemption of the mortgage of July, 1877, to the plaintiff, who sued the defendants to redeem. The defendants contended that the plaintiff was bound to pay off the two later bonds as well as the original mortgage-debt.

Held, that the later loan by defendant No. 2 being a personal loan by him, the firm, as such, had no equity to insist on its being paid before the mortgage was redeemed, whatever right defendant No. 2 in his personal capacity might have. But in this suit, which was one to redeem the mortgage, he was a party as member of the firm, and not in his individual capacity, and he could not, therefore, resist the plaintiff's right to redeem on any ground based on the promise of the two bonds executed to himself. CHHOTALAL GOVINDRAM v. MATHUR KEVALRAM, 18 B. 591 ... 903

(3) Redemption suit—Costs due by mortgagee to mortgagor—Set-off against the mortgage-debt — Balance remaining due to mortgagor—Liability of mortgagee—Civ. Pro. Code (XIV of 1882), s. 221.—The mortgagor is entitled to set-off or deduct the amount of costs payable to him under the decree against or from the mortgage debt payable by him. If the amount of the costs be larger than the mortgage-debt, the mortgagor is entitled to obtain possession at once of the mortgaged property and to recover the balance against the mortgagee. SIDU v. BALI, 17 B. 32 ... 21

(4) Right to redeem made conditional on payment by mortgagor of another debt as well as mortgage-debt—Effect of that other debt becoming barred by limitation—Right to redeem mortgage still subject to condition.—A mortgage bond contained a clause stipulating that the mortgagors were not to redeem the mortgaged property without paying not merely the amount of the mortgage-debt and interest, but also the amount due on a certain bond executed at the same time as the mortgage in respect of money due under a decree, and that "unless the whole was paid off, neither the mortgagor nor any one else should have a claim."

The mortgagee subsequently obtained a decree on the instalment bond and made several attempts to execute it, but failed, his darkhast being eventually rejected as time-barred.

Held, that the right of redemption was made conditional on the payment of what was due on the instalment bond—a condition which was unsatisfied as long as such sum remained unpaid, although in contemplation of law there might be no longer a bond debt stili in existence owing to a decree having been passed on the bond, and that decree having become barred by limitation. (5) Sale by mortgagee—Notice of sale—Subsequent mortgage of same property—Notice of sale to mortgagors—Notice of sale to subsequent mortgagees—Delay in selling—Rescission of notice of sale—Suit by second mortgagee to present sale—Offer to redeem joint mortgage—Right of mortgagee to sell mortgaged property.—Certain property was mortgaged to the defendants in 1885 for Rs. 60,000, and the mortgage-deed contained the usual power of sale on notice to the mortgagors or their assigns. The debt was not paid, and the defendants on the 31st August, 1891, gave notice of sale to the mortgagors, but did not then proceed further in the matter. Three days after this notice, viz., on the 3rd September, 1891, the mortgagors mortgaged the property to the plaintiffs for Rs. 10,000. On the 18th November, 1892, the plaintiffs by letter offered to transfer their mortgage to the defendants or to join with them in selling the property. In the event of their being unwilling to accept either of these proposals the plaintiffs requested the defendants to render an account of the sum due to them in order that they (the plaintiffs) might, if so advised, redeem the defendants' mortgage. On the 3rd December, 1892, the plaintiffs by letter enquired whether the defendants were willing to reconvey the mortgaged property on payment of a certain sum, which was less than the amount the defendants claimed, but they did not positively offer to pay the defendants either that amount or the amount which might be found to be due. In April, 1893 the defendants advertised the property for sale on the 27th of that month without giving notice of sale to the plaintiffs, and on that day the plaintiffs filed a suit and obtained a rule, restraining the defendants from proceeding with the sale. In the argument of the rule it was contended for the plaintiffs, first, that the defendants had no power to sell, because their mortgage-deed required previous notice of sale to be given to the mortgagors or their assigns, and no such notice had been given to the plaintiffs who, as subsequent mortgagees, were assigns of the equity of redemption; secondly that the notice of sale given to the mortgagors on the 31st August, 1891, had been rescinded and a fresh notice was, therefore, required; and thirdly that inasmuch as the plaintiffs were willing to redeem the defendants' mortgage, the sale should be restrained.

Held—(1) that notice to the plaintiffs was not necessary. Proper notice had been given to the mortgagors on the 31st August, 1891, three days before the plaintiffs had acquired any interest in the equity of redemption. No further notice was required to be given to any person who at that time was not an assign, in order to enable the defendants to sell under that notice. An assign must take things in the state in which he finds them, and cannot claim to alter rights which have accrued before he has any authority to interfere;

(2) that the notice of sale of the 31st August, 1891, had not been rescinded by the defendants, who were not bound to give a fresh notice before the sale advertised to be held on the 27th April, 1893. The mere fact of a long delay taking place between the maturing of the notice of sale and the actual sale does not make a fresh notice necessary;

(3) that on the evidence it did not appear that the plaintiffs were able and willing to redeem the defendants' mortgage. The plaintiffs admittedly had not the money in hand, and the Court would not interfere with a mortgagee's right to sell on the mere chance of the plaintiffs' being able to make arrangements to pay the amount due at some uncertain time.

Where a mortgage-deed which gave the mortgagee a power of sale contained also a proviso that the remedies of the mortgagors, their heirs, administrators, and assigns in respect of any breach of the clauses or provisions (relating to such sale) or of any impropriety or irregularity whatever in any such sale should be in damages.

Held, on the authority of Prichard v. Wilson (10 Jur. (N.S.) 330) that the Court would not grant an injunction to restrain the mortgagee from selling the mortgaged property. MUNCHERJI FURDOONJI v. NOOR MAHOMEDBHOY JAIRAJBHOY, 17 B. 711 ... 506

(7) Suit for redemption by purchaser of equity of redemption—Evidence given by defendants of other mortgage than the mortgage in respect of which suit brought—Right of plaintiff to have the question of latter mortgage determined—Practice—Procedure.—The plaintiff as purchaser of the equity of redemption sued for redemption. He alleged a mortgage, dated A.D. 1849 for Rs. 175. The defendants admitted a mortgage, but alleged that it was executed at a different time and for a larger sum. After the evidence was given, but before the judgment was delivered, the plaintiff applied to amend the plaint and to set up the mortgage admitted by the defendants. His application was refused, and the Court dismissed the suit on the ground that he had failed to prove the particular mortgage alleged in the plaint. The District Judge confirmed the decree, but observed that there probably was a mortgage for the larger sum as alleged by the defendants. On second appeal.

Held, reversing the decree and remanding the case, that the plaintiff was entitled to have the question of the mortgage for the larger sum inquired into. CHIMNAJI v. SAKHARAM, 17 B. 365 ... 238

Mortgage—10.—Simple Mortgage, Usufructuary. PAGE

Simple mortgage, usufructuary—Right to have the property sold—Distinct covenant to pay the principal—Possession in lieu of interest—Sale to recover principal only—Construction.—A merely usufructuary mortgage will confer no right to have the mortgaged property sold. But where there is a distinct covenant to pay the principal, and the land is security for the same, the intention of the parties is that the property should be sold. Such a transaction is a simple mortgage usufructuary, and carries with it the right to have the property sold in default of payment of the principal.

A mortgagee, who is entitled to possession in lieu of interest and who does not take possession, loses his right to interest, and cannot ask that the property be sold for default in payment of interest, the property being security for the principal only. MAHADAJI v. JOTI, 17 B. 425 ... 277

Plaintiff thereupon sued the Municipality for damages. The Judge rejected the claim for damages.

Held, that the building of a new wall on the site of the old wall including the old foundations was not an addition to the existing building within the meaning of s. 33 of the District Municipal Act (Bombay VI of 1873). The Municipality was, therefore, liable in damages for any expenses which the plaintiff was put to by their pulling down the wall. KRISHNAJI NARAYAN v. MUNICIPALITY OF TASGAON, 18 B. 547 ... 874

Held, also, that the addition of 15 per cent. could not be allowed.

An appeal lies to the High Court from a decision of the Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court of Bombay, granting compensation to the owner of land taken by the Municipality in case of a set back under the Municipal Act, III of 1888, ss. 298, 299, 301. (4) Suit against Municipality for ejectment—The Bombay District Municipal Act, Amendment Act (Bombay Act II of 1884), s. 48—The Bombay District Municipal Act (Bombay Act VI of 1873), s. 86.—The words "in the case of any such action for damages" in s. 48 of the Bombay District Municipal Act, Amendment Act (Bombay Act II of 1884), clearly show that it was contemplated that there might be actions of another description to which the provisions in the former paragraph would be applicable. The section does not contemplate only "suits to recover monetary compensation for a wrongful act." A suit in ejectment—not being a suit brought to recover damages "for an act done or intended to be done"—was excluded under s. 86 of the Bombay District Municipal Act (Bombay Act VI of 1873), but being an "action for an act done," that act, being the dispossession by the Municipality with a view to being restored to possession, falls under the provisions of the first paragraph of s. 48 of the Bombay Act II of 1884. Negligence.

(1) Easement—Right of support of house by adjoining soil—Principal and agent or contractor—Liability of principal for acts of contractor—Bombay Municipal Act (III of 1888), s. 527—Notice of suit—What is sufficient notice.—The plaintiffs were owners of a house consisting of a ground floor and upper storey and measuring 77 feet in length. On the south side of the house was a gully, 3 feet 6 inches wide, separating it from another upper-storied house. The plaintiffs in this suit complained that in January, 1891, the defendant by his servants dug a trench, 8 feet deep, along the whole length of the gully for the purpose of laying a drain pipe, and that the work was done so negligently that the plaintiffs' house was injured and became in such a dangerous condition that it had to be pulled down. The plaintiffs claimed Rs. 3,996 as damages. The defendant denied the negligence, and alleged that the work was not done by his servants or agents, but by a contractor.

Held, that the defendant was liable for the act of his contractor. The work was necessarily attended with risk, and the defendant could not free himself from liability by employing a contractor. The defendant, as well as the contractor, was liable to the plaintiffs.

For the defendant it was contended that the notice of action given by the plaintiffs under s. 527 of the Bombay Municipal Act (III of 1888) was insufficient. The notice stated "that one S. L., a contractor under you, and as such, being your agent and servant, excavated a trench, &c." It was argued that this was not a good notice, as it only alleged a cause of action arising out of the acts of the defendant's servants and agents, and not out of the acts of contractor.

Held, that the notice was sufficient. The section only required the notice to state with reasonable particularity the cause of action, and this was done. The individual by whom the damage was done was specified, and the acts which caused the damage were clearly set forth. DHONDIBA KRISHNAJI v. The plaintiff was described as "the firm of K. S. by its manager S. S." The defendants objected that one Malamchand was a partner in the firm and should be a party to the suit; he was accordingly joined as a co-plaintiff on the 27th January, 1888. The defendants then contended that the suit was time-barred under s. 22 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877).

Held, that the case was one of misdescription and not of non-joinder, for the action was brought in the name of the firm by its manager. The order of the words in the vernacular plaint showed that Sagarmal, the manager, did not sue in his own name. The defendants were entitled to have the name of the other partner disclosed, but it being found as a fact that Sagarmal was entitled to sue for the firm, the addition of Malamchand's name on the record came within the provisions of s. 27 of the Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882). KASTURCHAND v. SAGARMAL, 17 B. 413 ... 269

On appeal, the District Judge rejected it. The plaintiffs then preferred a second appeal to the High Court, which finally decided in plaintiffs' favour. To this second appeal the defendant A was not made a party. In execution of the High Court's decree, A was dispossessed, but was restored to possession by the Subordinate Judge under s. 332 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882). This order was reversed, on appeal, by the District Judge. A thereupon applied to the High Court, under s. 622 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), to set aside the District Judge's order as ultra vires, on the ground that s. 244 of the Code was not applicable to the case, A not having been a party to the appeal in which the decree under execution was passed, and that, therefore, no appeal lay to the District Judge from the Subordinate Judge's order.

Held, that A being a party to the suit, though not to the appeal in which the final decree was passed, the District Judge had jurisdiction to hear the appeal under s. 244, cl. (c) of the Code of Civil Procedure. GOWRI v. VIGNESHVAR, 17 B. 49 ... 32

The Collector applied to the High Court under its extraordinary jurisdiction for the rectification of the decree. Held, on the authority of 6 B. 590 that no appeal by Government would lie in the case, and that in the exercise of its extraordinary jurisdiction the High Court would rectify the decree by directing the plaintiff to pay the costs of Government. COLLECTOR OF KANARA v. RAMBHAT, 18 B. 454 812

When, however, the accused is guilty of rioting, and is also found to have himself caused the hurt, he may be punished both for rioting and for hurt.

In such a case the total punishment can legally exceed the maximum which the Court might pass for any one of the offences. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. BANA PUNJA, 17 B. 260 (F. B.) ... 170

(4) S. 81—Act likely to cause harm done without a crimnal intent and to prevent other harm.—The accused was a sepoy in a native infantry regiment. On the occasion of a fire in the city of Ahmednagar, he and the rest of his company turned out to assist in extinguishing it. He with other sepoys was stationed by their officer with orders to keep clear a space in front of the burning house, and not to allow any one not in uniform to intrude on that space. The police under the city chief constable were also engaged at the fire, and on some of them coming round from the rear they were warned off by the sentries. A fracas between the soldiers and the police took place, and the chief constable was kicked by the accused. For this he was charged before the Magistrate and fined for voluntarily causing hurt under s. 323 of the Penal Code. In evidence it appeared that the police attempted to force the military guard, which had been posted as above stated, and it was further proved that the chief constable was not in uniform, and that the accused did not know who he was. It was not alleged that the kick was unnecessarily violent.

Held, that the conviction was bad. The Magistrate having found that the chief constable was not in uniform, and that the accused did not know who he was, the kick was justifiable as given in good faith for the purpose of preventing much greater harm under s. 81 of the Indian Penal Code, and as a means of acting up to the military order. (5) Ss. 153, 117—Wantonly giving provocation with intent to cause riot—Abetment of riot by the public—Construction.—In August, 1893, a riot took place in Bombay between Hindus and Mussalmans. The excitement caused by the riot had not entirely subsided, when the accused composed and published a poem, giving an account of the outbreak, and incidentally extolling certain classes of the Hindu community, namely the Ghatis and Kamatis, for the brave resistance which they had offered to the Mahomedan rioters. The poem extolled the Gatis and Kamatis and then followed these lines:—

"May God give glory to you, confer joy on you night and day.
Fight again for your country's good.
Brave, brave are the Kamatis,
Why fear for dying, brother, why fear for dying?
Sooner or later, but only once, a man has to die."

The poem was written in Gujarati, a language not ordinarily spoken by the Ghatis and Kamatis or even by the Mahomedans. It did not appear that any copies of the work were distributed among the people who had taken part in the riot. Nor did any fresh riot take place subsequently to the publication of the work.

The accused were prosecuted and convicted under ss. 117 and 153 of the Indian Penal Code (XLV of 1860) on the ground that the lines quoted above, especially the words "Fight again," were a direct instigation to the Ghatis and Kamatis to renew the disturbances.

Held, that the meaning of the passages complained of was to be gathered from the whole poem. The general spirit of the poem was clearly in favour of peace and reconciliation. It consisted from beginning to end of a lamentation over the riots, and the destruction and death they had caused, and of repeated counsel to peace and harmony between Hindus and Mahomedans. And there was nothing to indicate that the author's intention was to instigate the Hindus or provoke the Mahomedans to renew the disturbances. The words "Fight again" were, no doubt, objectionable, but it would not be a proper construction of the words to allow them to override the whole context of the work.

The composition could not be regarded as an "illegal act," and its publication was not "malignant" or "wanton" within the meaning of s. 153 of the Indian Penal Code. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. KAHANJI, 18 B. 758 ... 1015

XIV of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882), and the other to a Magistrate holding a preliminary inquiry, he cannot be charged, and still less convicted, on an alternative charge.

Held, that, in the absence of any information as to the circumstances under which the coin was lost, and as it was not improbable that the property in the coin had been abandoned by the original owner, the accused could not be convicted of criminal misappropriation under s. 403 of the Indian Penal Code. When the accused sent by post a notice to the complainant, containing certain false imputations, and the complainant thereupon prosecuted the accused on a charge of defamation under s. 500 of the Indian Penal Code.

Held, that the accused was not guilty of defamation. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. SADASHIV ATMARAM, 18 B. 205 ... 644

(1) Adding a defendant in a suit where leave to sue under cl. 12 of the Letters Patent, 1865, was necessary—Alternative liability—Order to add new defendant—Appeal against such order by original defendant.—The plaintiff filed this suit against the defendant Foolibai, alleging that she had a firm and carried on business at Sihore in the territory of Bhopal. Before the suit was filed, leave was duly obtained under cl. 12 of the Letters Patent, 1865. In her written statement Foolibai denied that she was the owner of the Sihore firm, or that she was responsible for any of its dealings with the plaintiffs. She alleged that the Sihore firm had belonged to her son Poonamchand, who died in Samvat 1943, leaving a daughter named Goolibai, a minor, who was still living. The plaintiff then obtained a summons calling on the defendant Foolibai to show cause why the plaint and proceedings should not be amended by adding the name of Goolibai as a party-defendant. The summons was made absolute, and an order was made to add Goolibai as a defendant. The defendant Foolibai appealed, contending that the effect of adding a defendant would be to institute a new suit against Goolibai without obtaining the necessary leave under the Letters Patent. She relied on 15 B. 93.

Held, dismissing the appeal, that the defendant Foolibai could not appeal against the order making Goolibai a party. It might be that Goolibai might object to the order either before or at the hearing, but she only could take the objection. The defendant Foolibai could not take it for her. The case of 15 B. 93 did not apply. In that case the proposed amendment altered the cause of action. Here it was left unaffected. On the cause of action, as set forth in the plaint, leave had been given under cl. 12 of the Letters Patent to sue the defendant Foolibai, and so far as she was concerned, there was no objection to the form of the suit. If her allegation was true, Goolibai and not Foolibai was liable. That question would be decided at the trial. FOOLIBAI v. RAMPRATAB SAMRATRAI, 17 B. 466 ... 303

(3) Appeal—Decree—Amendment of decree—Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 206.—In the lower appeal Court the plaintiff obtained a decree which directed parties to bear their own costs in proportion in both the Courts, while the judgment directed that the parties should bear each other's costs in proportion in both the Courts. The decree was confirmed by the High Court in cross second appeals without writing a judgment. There was no point taken in either of the appeals as to costs. The plaintiff subsequently applied to the High Court for the amendment of the decree under s. 206 of the Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882). It was contended for the defendant that the application should have been made to the lower appeal Court.

Held, that the only decree which existed for the purposes of execution after the High Court confirmed the decree of the Court below was the decree of the High Court into which that of the lower Court became incorporated. The application was, therefore, properly made to the High Court.

Held, further, that that being so, and there having been no appeal by either party against the order as to costs, the Court might properly look at the judgment of the Court below with a view to making the decree as to costs agree with it. SHIVLAL KALIDAS v. JUMAKLAL, 18 B. 542 ... 870

The plaintiff sued to set aside a mortgage made by his uncle (defendant No. 3) to defendants Nos. 1 and 2 alleging that shortly after he (the plaintiff) had attained his majority he had been induced to join in the mortgage by the undue influence and threats of his uncle (defendant No. 3) who represented that the money to be raised by the mortgage was required to pay off the debts of the plaintiff's father. The plaintiff further alleged that he had received none of the money and that no money had been paid by defendants Nos. 1 and 2 to the third defendant in his presence. Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 took out a summons against the third defendant for inspection of certain account books and documents. It was objected that no question was raised in the suit between the third defendant and defendants Nos. 1 and 2, and that consequently under s. 131 of the Civ. Pro. Code (XIV of 1882), the latter were not entitled to inspection.

Held, that inspection must be given. It was possible that not being able to set aside the mortgage as regarded himself, the third defendant was colluding with the plaintiff. Under the circumstances he might be considered a "party opposite" to the first two defendants, although eventually the Court might not be able to make any order between him and them. In his written statement the defendant denied the plaintiff's title and stated that he would rely on certain deeds set forth in a schedule annexed thereto. In his affidavit of documents subsequently filed he objected to produce the deeds for the plaintiff's inspection on the ground that they related solely to his own title to the land in dispute, and did not in any way tend to prove or support the title of the plaintiff thereto.

The defendants contended that all the co-sharers were necessary parties. At the hearing on the 24th January, 1889, the plaintiffs' co-sharers applied to be made co-plaintiffs and to be allowed to adopt what the plaintiffs had done in the suit. The application was rejected, and the suit was dismissed for want of parties. On appeal, the District Court in July, 1890, holding that the lower Court ought to have joined the co-sharers, passed an order making them co-plaintiffs, and then confirmed the lower Court's decree on the ground that at the time (3rd July, 1890) the co-sharers were made plaintiffs the suit was barred by limitation. On appeal to the High Court, Held, remanding the case, that the order of the lower appeal Court of the 3rd July, 1890, allowing the co sharers' application, which had been made on the 24th January, 1889, but had been refused by the Court of first instance, should be treated as operating nunc pro tunc, and that the co-sharers should be regarded as having been made parties to the suit when their application was made. Code* (XIV of 1882), ss. 100, 647—Dismissal of suit for default—Application to restore suit—Notice of application— Service of notice—Negligence—Second application for issue of notice—Costs.—A suit having been dismissed for plaintiff's default, he applied for the restoration of the suit to the file, and a notice was issued to the defendant to show cause why the suit should not be restored. The notice was returned unserved, owing to plaintiff's neglect to point out the defendant to the serving officer. The plaintiff having applied for a fresh notice, the Subordinate Judge rejected the application.

Held, that the Subordinate Judge had no power to reject plaintiff's application for a fresh notice. Section 100 of the Civ. Pro. Code (XIV of 1882), which by s. 647 is made applicable to such a proceeding, only enabled him to order a fresh notice to issue, and, if he thought proper, to order plaintiff to pay the costs occasioned by the necessary postponement. (23) Procedure—Decree—Appeal—Execution—Death of judgment-debtor after appellate decree—Representatives of judgment-debtor—Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 234, 248, 361 to 372, 583.—The Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882) does not contemplate the representatives of the judgment-debtor being placed on the record after the appellate decree has been passed. There is no express provision for it in the sections relating to execution. Sections 361 to 372 relate to changes during suit, and speak only of plaintiffs and defendants—terms which seem to show that they were only intended to apply to proceedings up to final determination by the appellate decree and not to proceedings in execution between the judgment-creditor and judgment-debtor.

A Court of appeal having confirmed the decree of a Second Class Subordinate Judge, the decree was transferred for execution to the First Class Subordinate Judge. After the transfer the judgment-debtor died. The judgment-creditor then applied to the First Class Subordinate Judge to substitute on the record the name of the representative of the deceased. The First Class Subordinate Judge rejected the application and referred the judgment-creditor to the Second Class Subordinate Judge, who also rejected the application on the ground that the decree which was being executed was the appellate decree in which his decree was merged, and, therefore, he had no jurisdiction to entertain the application.

Held, that the course open to the judgment-creditor was by way of application to execute the decree against the legal representative of the deceased as provided by s. 234 of the Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), in which case the application to execute the decree, having regard to s. 583, would be to the Second Class Subordinate Judge, although by s. 248 the notice to the party against whom execution was applied for, would be issued by the First Class Subordinate Judge to whom the decree was transferred for execution. (24) Procedure—Decree—Execution—Execution pending appeal—Landlord and tenant—Enhancement of rent—Decree for enhanced rent, and in default possession to be given—Appeal by defendants—Execution of decree by plaintiffs—Possession taken pending appeal—Decree confirmed on appeal—Time for complying with decree not enlarged by filing appeal—Application by defendants to be restored to possession on payment of amount ordered by appellate decree.—On the 13th February, 1839, the plaintiffs obtained in the District Court of Satara a decree, on appeal, against the defendants who were their tenants, ordering them to pay Rs. 34 as the rent of certain land for the year 1882-83, and Rs. 50 a year as rent from the 5th April, 1883, on which date the plaintiffs had given them notice of enhancement. In default of payment by the defendants the plaintiffs were to take possession of the land. The plaintiffs were to give the defendants credit for any sums which they had paid as rent since the year 1882-83.

Practice—(Continued).

Both parties appealed to the High Court from this decree. While these appeals were still pending, the plaintiffs, on the 13th February, 1890, applied for execution of the decree. They prayed for immediate possession and for Rs. 334, alleged to be the rent due under the decree, viz., Rs. 34 for 1882-83 and Rs. 50 for each of the six years from 1883-84 to 1888-89 inclusive. The application was granted by the Subordinate Judge, and the plaintiffs obtained possession on the 19th February, 1890.

On the 20th March, 1890, the defendants applied to be restored to possession, stating that they had appealed to the High Court against the decree of the District Court, which had fixed their rent at the enhanced rate of Rs. 50, and that their appeal was still pending ; that the sum of Rs. 334 was not due to the plaintiffs, inasmuch as they (the defendants) had continued to pay the rent at the old rate (viz., Rs. 34) to the village officers together with the local fund cess Rs. 2-2-0, being a total of Rs. 36-2-0 for each of the six years. They contended that the plaintiffs were thus entitled only to Rs. 83-4-0 and not Rs. 334, and they claimed to get back the land on the ground that the plaintiffs had obtained possession on an illegal application.

While this application of the 20th March, 1890, was still pending, the appeals against the District Court's decree of the 13th February, 1889, came on for hearing before the High Court, which confirmed that decree on the 17th July, 1890. Thereupon the defendants, on the 1st August, 1890, brought into Court Rs. 98 (being the difference between the old rent which they had paid and the enhanced rent payable under the confirmed decree), and applied to be restored to possession. On the 6th February, 1891, the defendants' application of the 20th March, 1890, came on for hearing, and was rejected by the Subordinate Judge on the ground that the defendants had not obeyed the District Court's decree. The defendants thereupon appealed to the District Court, which reversed that decision, and ordered that possession should be given to the defendants on the ground that the time for payment of the amount due under the decree should be reckoned from the date of the confirmation of the decree by the High Court, viz. 17th July, 1890, and that by their payments made to the village officers and their payment into Court on the 1st August, 1890, the defendants had obeyed the decree, and were entitled to be put back into possession. The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

Held, (reversing the order of the District Court and restoring that of the Subordinate Judge) that the defendants could not recover possession. The fact that they had appealed to the High Court could not prevent the decree of the District Court from being executed, or enlarge the time for payment of the rent as decreed by that Court. No stay of execution was asked for, and all that the Subordinate Judge had to see in February, 1890, was whether payment of rent had been made in accordance with the terms of the decree of the District Court made on the 13th February, 1889. The defendants had not paid that rent when the plaintiffs executed the decree on the 19th February, 1890. The decree was legally executed before the High Court's decree was passed on the 17th July, 1890, and that execution could not be afterwards cancelled, because of the High Court's decree. When the decree of the District Court was passed, the defendants should at once have paid to the village officers the balance of the rent due according to that decree, or on the second appeal to the High Court being made, they should have applied for stay of execution. They followed neither course, and the decree was legally executed. The claim in the plaintiffs' application for execution may have been excessive, but the defendants had never attempted to pay anything beyond the old rent. AMINABI v. SIDU, 17 B. 547 ... 358

(2) Principal and factor—Consignment for sale—Advances by factor on consignment—Right of factor to sell goods consigned to him for sale below the limit of price prescribed by consignor.—In January, 1889, an agreement was made between the plaintiffs and the defendant which provided that the defendant in Bombay was to act for the plaintiffs "in influencing consignments of produce" to the care of the plaintiffs in London. Such produce was to be sold by the plaintiffs in London for a certain commission and brokerage. One of the terms of the agreement was that the business in England was to be worked entirely in the defendant's name and the defendant was to "undertake to guarantee the plaintiffs free of all loss in connection with the said consignments and to guarantee the payment of re-drafts, &c."

Principal and Agent—(Concluded). PAGE

On the 25th January, 1889, the defendant consigned 435 packages of cloves to the plaintiffs in London and drew against the consignment a draft for £ 2,100 on the plaintiffs. In his consignment letter the defendant stated that the consignment was from his constituent Chatturbhuj Khimji, but that as Rs. 30,000 had been advanced to him, the consignment was shipped in the defendant's name. The letter continued : "The cost is 9½*d.* per pound, but he expects more, and not to be sold under the above rate."

The sum drawn against the cloves (£ 2,100) was £ 400 in excess of their value, and on receipt of the consignment letter on the 11th February, 1889, the plaintiffs at once telegraphed to the defendant to remit by cable £ 400 against over draft against cloves. On the next day the defendant replied by telegraph: "I will remit you by outgoing mail." The plaintiffs accepted and paid the draft for £ 2,100 drawn against the cloves.

The price of cloves in the London market fell rapidly. The defendant from time to time lowered the limit of price, but not to such an extent as to allow of a sale being effected. The lowest limit named by him was 6*d.* per pound on the 31st October, 1889. In December, 1889, the market price was only 5*d.* per pound, and the deficit owing to the plaintiffs was £ 1,300. The plaintiffs presented bills to the defendant for this balance, but they were refused.

On the 5th February, 1890, after due notice to the defendant, the 435 bales of cloves were sold, 20 of them at 4¾ d. per pound and 415 at 4⅝*d.* The balance due to the plaintiffs in respect of this consignment after allowing for the proceeds of sale were £ 1,432-15 0. This sum was part of the amount for which the present suit was brought. The defendant contended that the plaintiffs were not justified in selling the cloves below the price limited, viz., 6*d.* per pound, and claimed to be credited with £ 329-1-8, which was the difference between the amount actually realized by the sale and the amount which would have been obtained if the cloves had been sold at the prescribed price.

Held, by Farran, J., and by the Court of Appeal on the evidence,

(1) that the plaintiffs had accepted the consignment and had advanced money against it on condition of being kept in funds in case a deficit should arise, owing to a falling market, and that the defendant acquiesced in that condition ;

(2) that the plaintiffs had throughout claimed right to sell if the condition was not observed, and that the defendant inferentially admitted the right claimed by the plaintiffs. The conclusion to be drawn was that the business was conducted on that basis, and that when the condition was broken the plaintiffs' right to sell arose according to the course of business, notwithstanding the limit of price imposed by the defendant.

Per SARGENT, C. J.—The result of the authorities is to show that where a factor for sale, who has made advances, claims the right to sell, invito domino, the question is whether there was an agreement between the parties, either express or to be inferred, from the general course of business or from the circumstances, attending the particular consignment, that the factor should under any and what circumstance have the power to sell against the wish of the owner of the goods. The onus of proving such agreement lies on the factor who has made the advances.

Per FARRAN, J.—On the whole, the authorities warrant the inference that where goods are consigned to a foreign merchant as security for an advance, albeit he may be a factor entrusted with the sale of goods on commission, and where by reason of the fall in the market or other causes his security is declining in value, and becoming insufficient, such foreign merchant is invested with a power of sale over the goods after due notice to his principal, although the latter may place a limit on their sale, and desire to hold them on if the principal do not put his factor in funds to make up the deficit so caused. The defendants pleaded a special contract signed by the consignor, which, in consideration of their carrying the goods at a special reduced rate instead of the ordinary tariff rate, exempted them from liability for loss or damage to the goods from any cause whatever, before, during and after transit over the railway or other railways working in connection therewith.

Held, that under the contract the defendants were not liable to the plaintiff. TIPPANNA v. THE SOUTHERN MARATHA RAILWAY COMPANY, 17 B. 417 ... 272

The payment of "an increased charge" is not equivalent to insurance.

In January, 1890, a box containing silver specie was delivered by the plaintiffs to the defendant-company in Bombay to be carried to Saugor. At the time of such delivery the contents of the box were declared, and an increased charge above the charge for ordinary parcels was paid. The box was lost during its transmission to Saugor, but no evidence was called by the defendants to show what was done with the box between Itarsi and Saugor. In 1893 the plaintiffs sued the defendants to recover its value.

Held, that the defendants had not discharged the onus which lay upon them of showing that they had fulfilled the duties of a bailee as laid down in s. 151 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872), and that they were liable for the amount claimed.

Held, also, that the suit was not barred by limitation, and that art. 30 of sch. II of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), did not, as was contended, apply to the case. RAISETT CHANDMULL v. G.I.P. RAILWAY COMPANY, 17 B. 723 ... 474

Registration—(Continued).

An instrument which did not require registration under Act XX of 1866 is not inadmissible in evidence by reason of Act III of 1877.

Dues incidental to an office such as that of a desai, which is capable of being held by a person other than a Hindu, were not immoveable property when Registration Act XX of 1866 was enacted. DESAI MOTILAL MANGALJI v. DESAI PARASHOTAM NANDLAL, 18 B. 92 ... 570

(2) Evidence—Lease—Agreement to indemnify contained in lease—Suit for indemnity.—A lease of land for nine years contained a clause by which the lessor agreed to indemnify the lessee in case he should incur any loss in consequence of disputes which might arise as to the land between the lessor and his kinsmen. The lease was not registered. After the lessee had held the land under the lease for two years, a suit for possession was brought against him, and the lessor and he were dispossessed and obliged to pay mesne profits. He then brought this suit against the lessor under the above clause in the lease.

Held, that the lease being unregistered was not admissible in evidence and could not be looked at. The clause on which the plaintiff sued could not be separated from the lease itself, and the plaintiff's claim must, therefore, be rejected. GURUNATH SHRINIVAS v. CHENBASAPPA, 18 B. 745 ... 1006

(3) Indian Registration Act (III of 1877), ss 17 and 49—Decree—Attachment—Execution—Unregistered contract for sale of land subsequently attached in execution.—In execution of a decree against S and P property was attached on the 11th February, 1891, and sold by auction to the plaintiff in July, 1892. The defendants, however, alleged that at the date of attachment the property did not belong to S and P, as they had sold it to them (the defendants) on the 22nd January, 1891, under a contract of sale of that date. Their contract had not been registered.

Held, that by cl. (b) of s. 17 of the Indian Registration Act (III of 1877) the contract needed registration if it was intended that it should affect the land (s. 49). Not being registered it did not operate to transfer the ownership, and could not be received in evidence of any transaction affecting the land, i. e., it could not be used to show that the ownership had passed from the vendor to the purchaser. The property in question was, therefore, at the date of attachment the property of S and P, and under the attachment and sale in execution it passed to the plaintiff.

A contract for the sale of immoveable property recited that, on the date thereof Rs. 100 had been received as earnest-money, and provided that within two months the vendor would execute a proper conveyance, and thereupon receive the balance of the purchase-money and give up possession.

Held, that the document did not pass any right, title or interest in the property to the purchaser, but merely gave him a right against the vendor personally to call for a conveyance and possession on paying the balance of the purchase-money. HORMASJI MANEKJI DADACHANJI v. KESHAV PURSHOTAM, 18 B. 13 ... 518

(4) Mortgage — Priority— Unregistered mortgage with possession and without notice not entitled to priority as against a mortgage earlier in date, but subsequently registered—Bombay Regulation IX of 1827—Act XIX of 1843—Possession—Hindu law.—The plaintiff sued to enforce a mortgage dated 8th June, 1863, which was registered on 15th September, 1864, but was unaccompanied with possession. The defendant relied on a mortgage of the same property dated 9th May, 1864. This mortgage was unregistered, but was accompanied with possession.

Held, that, apart from any special peculiarities of Hindu law, the plaintiff's mortgage of the 8th June, 1863, which was registered on the 15th September, 1864, was entitled to priority over the unregistered mortgage of the 9th May, 1864, although the latter was without notice of the earlier mortgage and was accompanied with possession.

Held, also, that plaintiff's mortgage was not invalid under Hindu law owing to its not being accompanied with possession. TRIKAM MADHAV SHET v. HIRJI HARJIVAN SHET, 18 B 332 ... 729 latter the share of the former in the assets of the firm, including the mortgages, but not mentioning them—Necessity of registering such letters—Evidence—Registration Act III of 1877, ss. 17 and 49—The words "document" and "instrument" in the Registration Act—By two mortgage-bonds, dated, respectively, 25th July, 1866, and 19th September, 1870, certain lands were mortgaged to a firm of money-lenders at Khadkala, carrying on business under the style of Gangaram and Mayaram. There were four partners in the firm, viz, Gangaram, Mayaram, Panji and Sadaram. In 1874 Gangaram retired from the firm, and wrote three letters, the effect of which was to transfer his share in the partnership to Panji and Sadaram. In 1878 the shop was closed, and the partners divided the assets of the firm. The two mortgages fell to the share of Sadaram. Subsequently Sadaram died, and the plaintiff, his son, inherited his property and took possession of the mortgaged lands. These lands were afterwards attached in execution of a money decree against one of the mortgagors (defendant No. 1). The plaintiff objected to the attachment, but his objection was disallowed, and the property was sold in execution and purchased by defendants Nos. 2 and 3. The plaintiff then filed this suit to establish his right under the two mortgage-bonds. The defendants contended that the plaintiff had no interest in the mortgages, and was not entitled to sue. The plaintiff relied (inter alia) in support of his title upon the letters (A, B and C), whereby Gangaram had transferred his share in the assets of the firm to his (the plaintiff's) father Sadaram. These letters were objected to as inadmissible in evidence, not having been registered.

Held, that, independently of the letters, there was evidence to show that the plaintiff's father Sadaram was a partner in the firm, and that as such partner the mortgages in question fell to his share at the final division of assets. The position of Sadaram as a partner being once established, his right to the property followed by operation of law, and no other proof of title was required.

Per JARDINE, J.—"To lay down that the three letters in question, which deal generally with the assets, moveable and immoveable, without specifying any particular mortgage or other interest in real property, required registration, would, I incline to think, in the present state of the authorities, go too far. It may be argued that such letters are not 'instruments of gift of immoveable property,' but rather disposals of a share in a partnership of which the business is money-lending, and the mortgage securities merely incidental thereto."

Per TELANG, J.—"Although a partner's share does not include any specific part of any specific item of the partnership property, still where the partnership is entitled to immoveable property, such share does include an interest in immoveable property, and, therefore, every instrument operating to create or transfer a right to such share requires to be registered under our Registration Act (III of 1877). It is true that the authorities referred to apply, in terms, only to immoveable property owned by a partnership. But I am, on the whole, disposed to hold that the principle of those authorities applies to cases where immoveable property is held by a firm not in full proprietorship, but only by right of mortgage. . . Upon the whole I should, if necessary, have been disposed to hold that the letters in question not being registered were rightly treated by the Court below as being inadmissible in evidence to prove directly a transfer of the share of Gangaram in the partnership to Sadaram"

Per TELANG, J.—A perusal of various sections of the Registration Act seems to show that the Legislature has used the words "document" and "instrument" interchangeably. JOHARMAL v. TEJRAM JAGRUP, 17 B. 235 ... 154

On the same day he leased it to his vendor. In 1878 he obtained a decree for rent against his vendor. On the 23rd May, 1881, the plaintiff purchased the same property from the same vendor under a registered deed of sale. In 1888 the plaintiff sued the defendant to establish his right to the property and to recover possession.

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree, his registered deed taking priority to the prior unregistered deed of the defendant.

S. 50 of the Registration Act (III of 1877) did not give the defendant priority in virtue of the decree which he obtained in the rent suit, for, in that suit the defendant's ownership was not in dispute, and the decree merely adjudicated as to the relationship between the defendant and his vendors created subsequently to the sale. The defendant's title as owner was not merged in the decree, but still rested exclusively on his deed of sale. KESHAV PANDURANG v. VINAYAK HARI, 18 B. 355 (F. B.) ... 745

(11) Vendor and purchaser—Priority—Notice—Possession—Subsequent purchaser with notice obtaining possession and paying off mortgage—Right to recover sum applied in paying off mortgage.—The plaintiff sued to recover land purchased by him in 1886 from the first defendant, and which was in possession of defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4. The conveyance to the plaintiff was duly registered. The third defendant claimed part of the land under a previous sale to him in 1885 by the first defendant, the conveyance to him being also duly registered. The fourth defendant claimed the rest of the land under a sale to him by the first defendant subsequent to the sale to the plaintiff of which he had no notice. He relied upon the fact of his having got possession, and he alleged that the purchase-money which he had paid for the land had been applied by the first defendant in paying off a mortgagee who at the date of his purchase was in possession. He claimed, at all events, the re-payment of this sum.

Held, (1) that the plaintiff was not entitled to the lands in the hands of the third defendant, the latter being a prior purchaser with a deed of conveyance duly registered.

(2) That the plaintiff was entitled to the land in the possession of the fourth defendant, who must be taken to have purchased with notice of the plaintiff's prior purchase, inasmuch as the deed of conveyance to the latter was registered.

(3) That, if the fourth defendant's purchase-money was applied to pay off a mortgage which plaintiff would otherwise have had to pay, the plaintiff could not equitably recover the land without paying the fourth defendant so much of the purchase-money as was so applied. (4) Issue in previous suit—Unnecessary issue—Finding on an unnecessary issue inserted in decree—Appeal—Civ. Pro. Code (XIV of 1882), s. 13.—The plaintiff attached certain property in execution of a decree obtained by him against one Jamna, the widow of one Raichand. The defendant Ghela intervened and claimed the house as having been purchased by him from one Samal Nathu, to whom, he alleged, Jamna had sold it before the date of the decree against her. The plaintiff's attachment was removed, and the plaintiff thereupon brought a suit (No. 670 of 1886) to establish his right to sell the house in execution. The Court found that the house was not Jamna's, and dismissed the suit on that ground, but it also recorded a finding that the sales set up by the defendant were fraudulent and collusive. Subsequently the plaintiff obtained a decree against Mulji, the son of Raichand, and in execution again attached the house. The defendant again intervened, alleging that the house was his, and the attachment was removed. Thereupon the plaintiff filed this suit to establish his right to sell in execution. The defendant again pleaded that he was owner of the house by reason of the sales set up by him in the former suit. It was argued that these sales had been proved to be collusive and fraudulent in an issue raised in that suit, and that the defence in the present suit was, therefore, res judicata.

Held, that the defence was not res judicata. The former suit had been decided on the finding that the property in question was not Jamna's. The finding in that suit on the issue as to the sales to the defendant was not necessary for the determination of the suit.

Where an issue is not necessary for the decision of the suit in which it is raised, the decree couched in general terms does not cover the finding on that issue, nor can the insertion of such finding in the decree give it the force of res judicata. The Civ. Pro. Code does not contemplate findings on issues being inserted in it (see ss. 2 and 6 and sch. IV), and there is no section in the Code which makes it necessary to appeal from the decree, because such finding has been inserted in it. GHELA ICHHARAM v. SANKALCHAND JETHA, 18 B. 597 ... 907

(5) Suit on a mortgage against several defendants—Dismissal of suit as against some of the defendants for want of jurisdiction—Subsequent suit on the mortgage against same defendants in another Court—Civ. Pro. Code (XIV of 1882), ss. 42, 43.—The plaintiff brought a suit in the High Court of Bombay (No. 169 of 1887) against three defendants on a mortgage executed at Surat of certain property situated there. The covenant for repayment was joint and several. The second and third defendants in that suit (the defendants in the present suit), who were inhabitants of Surat, pleaded that as against them the Court had no jurisdiction. The suit was accordingly dismissed as against them for want of jurisdiction, but as against the first defendant, who resided in Bombay, the Court passed a decree for the plaintiff. The plaintiff then brought the present suit against the defendants in the Surat Court to enforce their liability under the mortgage. The defendants pleaded that the claim against them was barred by the dismissal of the former suit.

Held, that the suit was not barred. In the former suit there had been as against these defendants no decision on the merits, and the proceedings against them were a nullity. BHUKHANDAS VIJBHUKANDAS v. LALLUBHAI KASHIDAS, 17 B. 562 ... 36

Resumption.

Resumption by the Government of estates held on political tenure—Mixed estate of saranjam and inam so held—Non-jurisdiction of Civil Courts.—The engagements entered into by treaty between the British Government and the Raja of Satara in 1819, and the terms fixed separately with the several Satara jaghirdars in 1820, did not impart any greater fixity of tenure than had previously belonged to the latter under Maratha rule; and their jaghirs remained liable to resumption at the will of the Government.

The question to whom a saranjam, or jaghir, shall be granted, upon the death of its holder, is one which belongs exclusively to the Government to be determined upon political considerations; and it is not within the competency of any legal tribunal to review the decision.

Inam villages and lands, with the mokasa, included originally in one saranjam granted under the Maratha rule for the support of troops, remained after 1820, when the rule of the Peshwa had ceased, a personal and military jaghir, forming a mixed estate of saranjam and inam. The tenure remained, under British rule, political; and no distinction could be drawn in this respect between the inam lands and the saranjam. The whole estate passed to the person whom the Government at its discretion, for political reasons, recognized as the grantee, without its being competent to any Court of law to question the decision of the executive authority in the matter. Sale of Goods.

(1) Appropriation to vendee—Passing property to vendee—Bankruptcy of agents for purchase—Unpaid vendor—Stoppage in transit—Termination of transit—Goods landed in Dock and held by Dock authorities—Bombay Act VI of 1879, ss. 43 and 62—Port-Trustees of Bombay—Bye-laws of Port—Trust, r. 59.—In August, 1890, the plaintiffs, through Benn, Ashley and Co., of Bombay, ordered from Bevis, Russell and Co., in London, 100 bales of grey shirtings at 7*s.* 10*d.* per piece f.o.b., November-December shipment. In order to carry out this order, Bevis, Russell and Co. purchased goods of the required description from Messrs. Dewhurst and Co., of Manchester. The heading of the invoice of the goods supplied by Dewhurst and Co., contained these words: "Proceeds to be remitted to Messrs, Bevis, Russell and Co., London, specifically for the protection of their acceptances, of Geo. and R. Dewhurst's draft against this or any of these shipments," and the letter addressed by Dewhurst and Co. to Bevis, Russell and Co., forwarding draft contained the following clause:—"It is understood that the proceeds of the goods are to be remitted to be held by you specifically for the protection of the enclosed bill, or any other of your acceptances of our drafts against such shipments, which please confirm." To this letter Bevis, Russell and Co., replied: "We confirm the arrangements between us as to the disposal of remittances and against the shipments." The bales were duly marked with the plaintiffs' mark by direction of Bevis, Russell and Co., and were to be delivered f. o. b at Liverpool. Dewhurst and Co., accordingly despatched the 100 bales to Liverpool, and there Bevis, Russell and Co., had them shipped in eight different vessels, viz., 13 bales in each of the four steamers "Nubia," "Clan Drummond," "Inchulva" and "Roumania," and 12 bales in each of the ships "Hispania," "Eden Hall," "City of Edinburgh" and "Wistow Hall." The 100 bales were consigned to Bombay by Bevis, Russell and Co., in their own name, the bills of lading being made out to "their order or to his or their assigns." Bevis, Russell and Co., paid the freight at Liverpool, and effected insurance on the plaintiffs' behalf. All the shipments were made before the 1st December, 1890, except the twelve bales by the "Wistow Hall," which were shipped on that day. On the several shipments being effected, Bevis, Russell and Co., accepted bills of Dewhurst and Co., payable three months after date. The bills of lading of the bales shipped in the "Nubia," "Clan Drummond" and "Hispania" were endorsed, in blank, by Bevis, Russell and Co., and sent by post to Benn, Ashley and Co., of Bombay. The "Nubia" arrived at Bombay in November, and the plaintiffs received the 13 bales shipped by her, Benn, Ashley and Co., having endorsed the bill of lading to the plaintiffs. No specific payment was made by the plaintiffs in respect of these bales, but at that time they had a sum standing to their credit in the books of Benn, Ashley and Co. The invoices of 25 more bales, viz., 13 bales ex "Clan Drummond" and 12 bales ex "Hispania," arrived in Bombay later in November, and were handed to the plaintiffs. On the first December, 1890, the plaintiffs paid Rs. 25,000 to Benn, Ashley and Co. Neither the "Clan Drummond" nor the "Hispania" had then arrived in Bombay.

On the 4th December, 1890, Bevis, Russell and Co., suspended payment, and on that day a receiving order was made vesting their assets in the first defendant, Wreford; and on the next day Pixley was appointed special manager of the estate under s. 12 of the English Bankruptcy Act

(Stat. 46 and 47 Vic., c. 52). At that time the bills of lading for the remaining 62 bales were still with Bevis, Russell and Co., who then handed them over to Pixley. On the same 5th December, 1890, Benn, Ashley and Co. suspended payment in Bombay. On the 13th December, 1890, Dewhurst and Co. telegraphed to their agents in Bombay, Messrs. Ritchie, Steuart and Co. directing them to stop the goods in transit, including the 25 bales ex "Clan Drummond" and "Hispania." On the 15th December, Ritchie, Steuart and Co. on behalf of Dewhurst and Co., gave notice to the agents of the "Hispania" to stop the 12 bales on board that vessel. Previously to that notice, however, the bales had been landed in the Dock at Bombay. They then gave the Dock authorities notices, but at that time the ships' agents had already given the plaintiffs a delivery order for the goods. On the same day, viz., the 15th December, Ritchie, Steuart and Co. gave notice to the agents of the "Clan Drummond" to stop the 13 bales on board. These bales had not then been landed, and were then still on board.

The other five steamers with the remaining 62 bales duly arrived in Bombay and went into Dock. On the 2nd January, 1891, the "Roumania," the "City of Edinburgh" and the "Wistow Hall" had landed all the bales which they had on board. The "Eden Hall" had landed 9 out of the 12 which she had brought, leaving 3 still to be discharged, and the "Inchulva" had not landed any of her bales, the whole 13 being still on board. On that day (2nd January, 1891) Ritchie, Steuart and Co, on behalf of Dewhurst and Co., wrote to the several agents of the above steamers notices of stoppage in transit of the above bales, except in the case of the "Wistow Hall," in respect of which no notice was sent. These notices were all delivered on the 3rd January, 1891.

Held—

(1) On the evidence, that the payment of the Rs. 25,000 by the plaintiffs, to Benn, Ashley and Co., in Bombay was a payment for and on account of the 100 bales. In respect of transactions before bankruptcy, a payment to Benn, Ashley and Co. was a payment to Bevis, Russell and Co.; but, if that were not so, Benn, Ashley and Co. were agents to receive payment.

(2) That on the goods being shipped at Liverpool, if not at an earlier date, the property in them passed from Dewhurst and Co., to Bevis, Russell and Co., and from the latter, by reason of the plaintiff's contract with Bevis, Russell and Co., to the plaintiffs,—Bevis, Russel and Co. having, by holding the bills of lading, the constructive possession of the goods, and the legal right to their actual possession, and to retain the same until their price was paid by the plaintiffs with the charges.

(3) That the plaintiffs were entitled, as against the representatives of Bevis, Russell and Co., and Benn, Ashley and Co., in bankruptcy, to the bills of lading and the goods represented by them without further payment. Ritchie, Steuart and Co., as agents of the Official Receiver had not, therefore, the right to withhold the bills of lading of any of these bales from the plaintiffs.

(4) On the evidence, that when Dewhurst and Co. forwarded the goods to Bewis, Russell and Co. at Liverpool they really started the goods on their voyage to Bombay, and that the transit lasted until the bales were "at home" in Bombay. Until then the right of Dewhurst and Co. to stop the goods in transit lasted.

(5) That effectual notice on behalf of Dewhurst and Co. to stop in transit was given in respect of the 13 bales ex "Roumania" by the notice sent by Ritchie, Steuart and Co., on the 15th December, 1890. The general notice given on that day to the agents of the "Roumania" not only as to specific bales, but as to any other bales shipped on account of Geo. and R. Dewhurst to Messrs. Benn, Ashley and Co.," although indefinite, covered the shipment by the "Roumania," and was given in time to prevent the bales on board that ship from reaching "home."

(6) That effectual notice by Ritchie, Steuart and Co., on behalf of Dewhurst and Co., to stop in transit was given in respect of the 13 bales ex "Inchulva" and the 3 bales (out of the 12) ex "Eden Hall," which were still in board and undischarged at the date the notice of the 2nd January, 1891.

Small Cause Court.

(1) Presidency Small Cause Courts Act (XV of 1882), ss. 38 and 69—Rehearing—Miscarriage or failure of justice—Case stated for the opinion of the High Court.—In a suit in the Court of Small Causes, in which questions of law and fact were raised, the plaintiffs at first asked the Judge to state a case for the opinion of the High Court under s. 69 of Act XV of 1882. The Judge was willing to do so, but the plaintiffs withdrew their request. The Judge thereupon delivered his judgment and dismissed the suit. The plaintiffs then applied to the High Court for a rehearing under s. 38 of Act XV of 1882. It was contended that the Judge was wrong in his view of the law as applicable to the facts.

Held, that, event if that were the case, there was no "miscarriage or failure of justice" within the meaning of s. 38, and that the plaintiffs were not entitled to a rehearing. VASSONJI TRICUMJI v. THE SOUTHERN MARATHA RAILWAY CO., 17 B. 14 ... 10

Held, that the suit was for money had and received for plaintiff's use, and was cognizable by the Court of Small Causes. It did not fall under cl. (4) of sch. II of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), as it was not a suit for the possession of immoveable property, or for recovery of an interest in such a property. (2) Injunction—Negative agreement—Discretion of Court—Agreement not to work for a rival tradesman—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), ss. 22, 56 and 57.—The plaintiff was a milliner carrying on business in Bombay and the defendant was in his employment up to the year 1890. In that year he left the plaintiff's service, and the plaintiff alleged that at the time he left it he was indebted to the plaintiff for moneys not accounted for and also in respect of loans made to him. The plaintiff instituted criminal proceedings in the Police Court against the defendant for criminal breach of trust, and procured a warrant for his arrest. The defendant surrendered, and at the time of the agreement hereafter mentioned the proceedings in this matter were going on. The defendant was out on bail, and was then in the service of a rival milliner named Bhimji Jivan. On the 1st February, 1893, an agreement, in writing, was made between the plaintiff and the defendant, whereby the defendant agreed as follows:—(1) to pay the plaintiff Rs. 1,950 in full settlement of the plaintiff's claim; (2) to enter plaintiff's service as cutter and to serve him for ten years from the date of agreement; (3) to serve plaintiff honestly. (4) In case plaintiff was obliged to dismiss him for some "fault," then until the expiration of the said period of ten years the defendant should not carry on the business of a cutter or tailor, either directly or indirectly, on his own account or as partner or servant of another, and in case he should do so, the plaintiff should be at liberty to stop him.

On the 15th February, 1893, the charge of criminal breach of trust against the defendant was dismissed, the plaintiff offering no evidence in support of it. The plaintiff subsequently called upon the defendant, to enter his employment in accordance with the agreement, but the defendant refused, and remained in the service of Bhimji Jivan. The plaintiff, therefore, filed this suit praying for an injunction restraining the defendant from carrying on business as a cutter or tailor for ten years from the date of the agreement.

Held, dismissing the suit, that the parties were not really on equal terms, and that in the exercise of the discretion permitted to the Court by s. 22 of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877) the injunction should be refused. CALLIANGI HARJIVAN v. NARSI TRICUM, 18 B. 702 ... 977

(7) Order for payment of money on a person not a banker.—The plaintiff agreed to lend money to the defendant for payment of his trade debts, &c. In pursuance of the agreement the defendant gave his creditors "chits" for certain sums. These "chits" were addressed to the plaintiff, and requested him to pay the amounts mentioned therein. He did so, and now sued for the amount advanced. It was contended by the defendant that the "chits" being cheques or bills of exchange were inadmissible in evidence, because unstamped. The Court found that by the agreement the plaintiff was not constituted the defendant's banker within the meaning of cl. (6), s. 3 of the Stamp Act, 1879.

Held, that the chits did not require a stamp. RATULAL RANGILDAS v. VRIJBHUKHAN PARABHURAM, 17 B. 684 (F B) ... 44

In a suit of the description mentioned in s. 8 of Act VII of 1887, the plaintiff valued his claim at Rs. 664 for the computation of Court fees, and at Rs. 14,000 for purposes of jurisdiction.

Held, that the appeal from the decree of the Court of first instance lay to the District Court, and not to the High Court. BAI VARUNDA LAKSHMI v. BAI MANEGAVRI, 18 B. 207 ... 646

Succession Act (X of 1865).

(1) Ss. 190, 266 — Executor de son tort—Suit by one executor de son tort against another—Letters of administration—Administration suit.—D., a Parsi, died intestate in 1877, leaving him surviving a widow, three daughters and two sons and A and F. On D's death his sons without taking out administration assumed the management of the estate. and each received sums of money on account of it. The widow and daughters of the deceased obtained letters of administration, but limited to the extent of their interest in the estate. In 1888 A brought a suit against his brother F and the other members of the family to recover out of the estate a certain sum of money advanced by him to D.

Held, that the estate being unrepresented, the suit could not be maintained (s. 190 of Act X of 1865). The letters of administration issued to the widow and daughters of the deceased being limited only to the extent of their shares in the estate, were not letters of administration such as are meant by s. 190 of the Indian Succession Act (X of 1865).

Held, also, that the only course open to the plaintiff was to take proceedings for the appointment of an administrator of the estate who would either administer it by the payments of the debts and the distribution of the surplus (if any) amongst the heirs after taking an account of all property already received out of it by the creditors or heirs, or who could be compelled to do so by an administration suit. (1) Landlord and tenant—Suit for rent.—A certain firm mortgaged with possession its immoveable property to two other firms trading jointly, who let out the property to the mortgagor firm. which accrued due after the deaths of the deceased partners. The Judge held that the plaintiffs could not proceed with the suit without a certificate under the Succession Certificate Act (VII of 1889).

Held, reversing the order, that as the rent sued upon became due after the deaths of the deceased partners, it formed no part of their estates at the time of their respective deaths, and no certificate was, therefore, necessary under the Succession Certificate Act (VII of 1889). A will having been held to be genuine in a contest between the parties, and there being no suggestion that the will was one to which the Hindu Wills Act (XXI of 1870) applied. Held, that the Court could not refuse to grant the certificate. DAVE LILADHAR KASHIRAM v. BAI PARVATI, 18 B. 608 ... 914

(3) S. 4 (a)—Preamble—Representative of a deceased person—Person claiming to be entitled to the effects of the deceased—Purchaser at sale in execution of a decree against a deceased person.—A certain debt due to P (deceased) was sold in execution of a decree against him and was purchased by M. In order to enable him to recover the said debt, M applied to the District Judge for a certificate under the Succession Certificate Act (VII of 1889). The Judge rejected the application on the ground that the applicant was not a representative of the deceased.

Held, reversing the decree, that the applicant having purchased at the auction-sale the debt as part of the deceased's effects, which was sold as such by the Court, was entitled to a certificate under s. 4 (a) of the Succession Certificate Act (VII of 1889). Trade-mark.

Infringement—Label—Details different, but general similarity likely to deceive—Injunction.—The plaintiffs sued the defendant for an infringement of their label used on tins of aniline dye, which they imported into Bombay. The label covered the top of the tin, and bore upon it the picture of an elephant in the centre of a curved band ; the rest of the label being a combination in green, red and gold, representations, for the most part, of coins, medals and tracing. The defendant was the agent in Bombay of Cassella & Co., of Frankfort. Prior to 1892, Cassella & Co. had imported aniline dye into Bombay in tins bearing a label, the chief feature of which was an elephant. Of that label, however, the plaintiffs did not complain. But in January, 1892, Cassella & Co. adopted a new label, also bearing the picture of an elephant, different in some respects from the picture on the plaintiff's label and with new surroundings, to none of which, taken separately, did the plaintiffs object, but they complained that in its general effect this new label was so similar to their trade-mark as to amount to a colourable imitation thereof, and to be likely to deceive purchasers.

Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to an injunction against the defendant.

Per SARGENT, C. J.—The question in a case of this description is not what would be the effect on brokers or even dealers in Bombay, but how the label would be likely to strike incautious or unwary purchasers, such as are to be found more particularly in the Mofussil. After a careful examination I cannot feel any doubt that the attention of such purchasers would be arrested by the general effect of the label, and that notwithstanding such differences, as undoubtedly exist in respect to the colour and size of the elephant and in some other respects, they would regard the labels as symbolical of the plaintiffs' goods.

The remarks of Lord Selborne in Johnston v. Orr Ewing (7 Ap. Ca., 219), relied on.

Per STARLING, J.—It is quite possible for a label no part of which is a copy of another label to be a colourable imitation of that other label, and to be so like it in general appearance as to be likely to deceive purchasers. BADISCHE ANILINE, &C., FABRIK v. MANECKJI SHAPURJI KATRAK, ... 382

(1) Watandar—Mortgage of watan property—Adverse possession of watan property—Limitation—Succession—Entry of watan in name of trespasser—Effect of Gordon Settlement effected with trespasser.—Bhujangrav Desai died in 1847, leaving his two widows Kalova and Ramova. The plaintiff Padapa was born to Ramova in 1848, i.e., the year after his death. Bhujangrav Desai's watan had been attached by Government in 1844, but in 1848 or 1849 Government restored a small portion of it, entering it in the name of Kalova and refusing to recognise the infant Padapa. In 1865, the Government restored the rest of the watan, again acknowledging Kalova as the holder, the agreement with her being under "the Gordon Settlement." In 1865 Kalova mortgaged two villages (part of the watan) to one Shrinivas (father of the defendants), who was the watani karkun, for Rs. 9,900, which had been advanced by him to Kalova while the watan was under sequestration. Possession was given to Shrinivas, and the village officers were directed to pay him the revenues. Subsequently Kalova repented for her bargain, and directed the village officers not to pay the revenues to Shrinivas. He accordingly brought a suit against her for the revenues of 1869-70 and obtained a decree, in execution of which he sold the villages and bought them at the sale. In 1878, however, the Collector cancelled the sale under the Watan Act (III of 1874).

Watan—(Concluded).

In 1873 Shrinivas obtained a further decree against Kalova for the revenue of two years (1870-72) and for possession as mortgagee. He got possession through the Court in 1875.

Kalova and Padapa, who had been on good terms, quarrelled, and on 16th March, 1872, Kalova adopted one Balapa as a son to her deceased husband Bhujangrav. In December, 1872, Padapa sued Kalova and Balapa, praying that he might be declared the son of Bhujangrav, and that the adoption of Balapa might be cancelled. In 1879 the High Court held that Padapa was the legitimate son of Bhujangrav, and that Balapa's adoption was invalid. The legitimacy of Padapa being thus established, the Collector, in 1878, entered the watan in his name. At that time and until 1880 Padapa and Shrinivas were on friendly terms, the two having joint possession of the mortgaged villages, Padapa being subsequently to October 1878, the recognised occupant, and Shrinivas taking some, if not all, of the revenues of the two villages. In 1880 Shrinivas died, and his sons, the defendants, quarrelled with Padapa, who in 1881 obtained an order from the Collector directing the village officers to pay the revenues of the two villages to him and not to the defendants. This order was subsequently set aside, and thereupon Padapa in August, 1887, filed the present suit to have the mortgage executed by Kalova to Shrinivas on 15th September, 1865, declared null and void, and to recover possession of the two villages. In the alternative, he prayed for redemption of the mortgage. The defendants pleaded (inter alia) that the villages were not watan ; that they were entitled to the villages by reason of adverse possession ; that the suit was barred by limitation, and that the plaintiff was estopped from disputing the mortgage, &c.

Held, (1), on the evidence, that the property in question was part of a desai watan and as such was held on service tenure.

(2) That the property in question was subject to the rule which was in force in 1865 when the mortgage to Shrinivas was executed, viz., that alienation by way of mortgage of any portion of watan property had no force beyond the life of the watandar who mortgages it.

(3) That the plaintiff having been declared to be the legitimate son of Bhujangrav he was, from the date of his birth in 1848, the rightful watandar, and Kalova, unless she was manager acting on his behalf, was a trespasser. The fact that Government had entered the watan in her name, and that the " Gordon Settlement " was effected with her, would not make her watandar as long as Bhujangrav's son (the plaintiff) was alive.

(4) That if Kalova was a mere trespasser, then the plaintiff's right to recover the lands free from incumbrance, on the ground that he was the watandar, had been lost by limitation, and the property had become Kalova's by adverse possession. The plaintiff, however, as her step-son, was her heir. The mortgage was proved and was binding on him as heir, and as such he had a right to redeem it. SWAMIRAO v. (3) Construction—Gift of income for life with power to appoint—Power of appointment—Invalid power of appointment—Gift over in default of appointment—Gift of residue equally between two sons and then to next of kin—A Parsi by his will devised a certain house to his executors on trust after payment of repairs, &c., out of the income thereof to pay the balance of such income to his daughters Cuverbai and Jerbai in equal moieties and after their death "to the use of such of the issues only of the said Cuverbai and Jerbai as they should respectively appoint, such appointment to affect their own respective moiety only and not that of the other of them," and in default of appointment on trust to sell the house and divide the proceeds as directed in the will.

Held, that each daughter took half the house in question for her life with power to appoint it among her children as she thought fit. Even if the power to appoint had been invalid, the gift over on default should be upheld, on the authority of Peacock v. Frigout (L.R. (1893), 1 Ch. 54).

A Parsi testator by his will bequeathed residue of his moveable property to his executors in trust out of the income thereof to apply the sum of Rs. 50 for the maintenance of his son Ratnagar until he should attain 21 years of age and to invest the surplus of such income in Government securities, which should be added to the original corpus of his moveable property for the benefits of his said son Ratnagar and upon his attaining the age of 21 to pay over to him "the whole of the interest, dividends and produce only of the corpus of the whole of the moveable property" and after the death of Ratnagar in trust to divide the said corpus of the moveable property with all its additions and accumulations among the next of kin of the said Ratnagar. By a codicil subsequently executed the testator directed that the above bequest should extend and be applicable to his son Nusserwanji, and that the executors should divide the income of the moveable property between Ratnagar and Nusserwanji instead of giving the whole to Ratnagar. The Court was of opinion that under the will and codicil Ratnagar and Nusserwanji were each to have a moiety of the income for their respective lives, and that on their death one moiety of the corpus was to go to their next of kin. The Court, however, declined to make a declaration to that effect, as Ratnagar, who at the date of suit was unmarried, might afterwards marry and have children, who would not be bound by a declaration made in this suit. (4) Construction—Gift to a class—One member of such class in existence at date of gift—Will directing deed to be executed—Date of deed is date of gift.—One Ruttonji Rupji Mody died in 1856 leaving a will whereby he directed his widow and executrix Ladcore to purchase an estate worth Rs. 20,000 for his grandson Tricumji, and that this estate should be conveyed to trustees, to be held by them in trust for Tricumji for his life or until his insolvency, and after his death for his son or other male heir. At the time of the testator's death Tricumji had no son. The executrix purchased the estate, but no trust-deed was executed. Tricumji, therefore, brought a suit in 1871 to have the will carried out and trust-deed executed. Tribhuvandas Ruttonji (the plaintiff herein), who was Tricumji's uncle, was made a party to that suit and a consent decree was passed which ordered that the executrix Ladcore and Tribhuvands should execute a trust-deed in accordance with the direction in the will. A deed was accordingly executed in 1876 whereby the property was conveyed to trustees on the trust declared in the will. At the time of the testator's death Tricumji had no son, but at the date of the deed in 1876 he had one son Chunilal; and in 1883 another son Gangadas (the defendant) was born to him. Tricumji died in 1890. Chunilal died childless in 1891. The plaintiffs, who were the son and grandson of the testator, now claimed the property. They contended that as neither of Tricumji's sons were in existence at the date of the testator's death they could not take under his will or under the deed which was afterwards executed to carry out the will; that although at the date of the deed in 1876 one of the sons (Chunilal) was in existence, nevertheless he could only claim as one of a class, and that class was not ascertained or ascertainable at the date of the testator's death, nor at the date of the deed, Gangadas not having been born until 1883. The whole class was, therefore, excluded, and the property after Tricumji's death was undisposed of.

Held, that, in view of the direction of the will that a deed was to be executed which should declare the trusts of the property, it was the date of the deed subsequently executed which should be regarded in order to determine the validity of the limitations of the property bequeathed and not the date of the testator's death, and that under the deed on the death of Tricumji his son Chunilal became entitled to the property.

In the case of a gift to a class, if there is a person in existence at the time of the gift capable of taking and whom undoubtedly the donor intends to benefit, he is entitled to take, although others of the same class subsequently come into existence whom the donor meant the gift also to benefit, but who cannot take because of their non-existence at the date of the gift.
